FOR A WESTERN GIRL.—The average Western cowboy has always been a heroic figure, gallant and brave. Occasionally, however, a black sheep would be found on a ranch, and until he was discovered and routed much mischief would be done. Such a man was Black Jack, whose evil doings were checkmated by Ned, a modest young fellow whose sweetheart, Elsa, became the subject of Black Jack's dishonest attentions. Repulsed by the girl, Black Jack's mean nature asserted itself, and his unscrupulous self-loving employer was discharged by Elsa's uncle. In revenge he starts the persecution of a band of sheep belonging to Ned, and Elsa and Ned, aided by the girl's loving dog, succeed in foiling the villain. Ned writes a note to the home folks of the sheepherder, who, by the attempts on the property of his sweetheart, and wife and child, sends a message to the effect that he will be on hand to protect his property. Upon the receipt of the letter, Black Jack is overcome with chagrin, and the picture ends in a shower of confetti, the gift of heartless interest. Meantime Ned's mount reaches the ranch, the note is read and the boys gallop to Ned's assistance, a lively shoot ensues. Ned is being hard pressed when two faithful dogs arrive, and in the lively mix-up follows Black Jack receives his just deserts and the ladies are completely routed.

LUX FILMS.

A SELFISH MAN'S LESSON. How Thomas Arnold was cured of his great selfishness by a dream is dramatically told in this film. After refusing aid to his nephew, who is in distress, the latter's wife and child needing food and [illegible] enjoys a dream of dinner and falls asleep to dream that [illegible] is in poverty and realizes the pangs of hunger. Awakening to find that it is only a dream he determines to help others and goes [illegible] to those who are in distress.

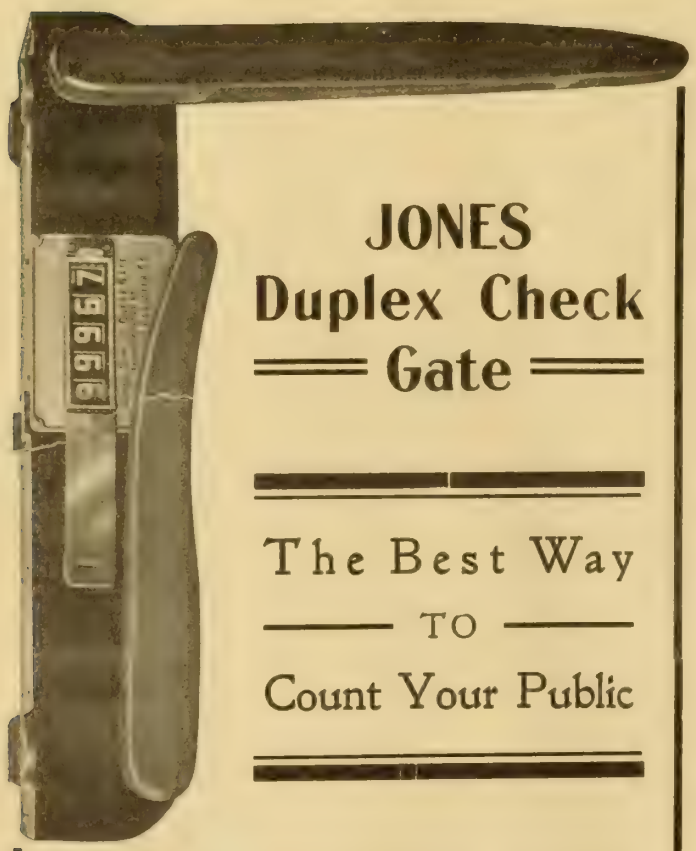
AUNT TABITHA'S MONKEY. Aunt Tabitha has [illegible] and is [illegible] to keep them [illegible] for the [illegible] people who are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

LUCIEN PRÉVOST
MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS : 21 Rue Perdonnet, Paris
WORKS : : : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras
Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)
Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines



JONES
Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way
TO Count Your Public

Manufactured by

JONES
Change Register Co.
INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

Get Y's

They say man is but dust. DUST SETTLES. Be a man and settle on DEFENDER FILMS. And have the golden dust settle in your pockets.

"A Game for Life"

Released Thursday, Sept. 15th

It's a tale of hearts and trumps, in which a royal flush in the hand of a woman saves the life of the desperado lover.
THRILLING? If you bet it is, you win.

On the Same Reel

"An Attempted Elopement"

The Title Speaks for Itself

This advertisement is a good argument, but DEFENDER FILMS are better ones.

Get Them

DEFENDER FILM CO.
WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.
101 East 14th St., New York

Sold only throught the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

a joyous heart the child adorns the sad little grave of his dear mother.

The acrobat, being jealous of the blind man's success, lures his dog away and strangles the little animal, thus destroying the blind man's means of support. The vicious wretch, however, is discovered in his cruel act, and taken to the police station. There he meets the blind man, who has asked if his dog has been brought there, and upon learning that the dog has been strangled and lies lifeless before him, he raises a piteous moan. The entire courtroom is astonished at this moment to behold the dog, considered dead, jump up and rush to his master, with joyful yelp and wag of tail. The clever little dog has used his tricks to good advantage, comprehending the intentions of the acrobat, and has pretended to be dead, so that the man ceased to choke him, but being reassured at the sound of his master's voice, he came quickly back to life, and thus the dog was restored to its poor owner.

THE FALLS OF THE RHINE.—In this film we present to you a most interesting view of the magnificent falls of the world-famous Rhine, at Schaffouse, in all their varying and exceedingly beautiful aspects.

YANKEE

THE WHITE SQUAW.—A good woman's love and a true woman's devotion have formed the themes for countless novels and plays, but these qualities are so worthy that their telling will bear unlimited repetition.

That John Gray is alive to-day and enjoying the loving companionship of his wife is only due to the love and devotion of the Indian squaw who sacrificed her own hopes and love that he might live and be happy.

Gray, an ex-Easterner, has made the West his home for some years. The owner of a prosperous ranch, he was universally liked by employees and neighbors; his generous and sunny disposition made him a host of friends.

He did not save the squaw's life or make love to her he merely protected her from the insults of a worthless greaser. She was a woman and that was sufficient for John Gray.

But, alas! this poor little untutored half-savage viewed it from her point of view—a man only protects the woman he loves—and then and there gave to Gray her uncontrollable affection.

There was no question about her love for Gray. She did not declare it from the housetops, but in a hundred different little ways showed that he was her man.

When the saloon keeper of Broncho Forks was found knifed to death and there was scrawled upon the bar a message that John Gray had committed the act, there was no excuse for doubt in the minds of anyone but that Gray had actually committed the crime. This did not convince the squaw, however.

Gray told her it was not so, and his word was all-sufficient, and the fact that she helped his escape, furnished him with food and shelter in the mountains, was to be expected; but when another woman appeared upon the scene, in the guise of Gray's intended wife, all the savagery in the squaw's nature reared up and she did everything to keep the man for herself, even leading the other girl into the belief that Gray was guilty in the hope of sending her back where she had come from.

The squaw's devotion was brought to the front when Gray was tracked and captured and about to be lynched; then this little savage divulged the fact that she had wormed herself into the confidence of Pedro the greaser and that he had shown her the hiding place of the gold he had stolen from the murdered saloon keeper, and gave Gray's life to the other woman.

ATLAS.

TRAILING THE BLACK HAND.—The depredations committed by, or attributed, to the Black Hand, have been chronicled by the newspapers frequently and at length.

Almost daily some act of this band has filled its threatened victims with terror. Countless prosperous Italian merchants have paid tribute to this mysterious organization, for immunity against its threats, and those who have failed to heed its commands have paid a terrible price.

Scores of lives have been sacrificed in the effort to break up the law-defying Black Hand band.

The concerted action by the police of every city in the United States and Europe has had little if any effect in accomplishing the desired result.

Almost insurmountable difficulties have been encountered in the apparently vain effort to decisively wipe the Black Hand from the face of the earth.

However, such an affront to modern civilization could not be tolerated forever. Determination and persistency will accomplish anything.

How the Black Hand was finally and completely eradicated forms one of the most mysterious and clever detective stories ever shown upon the screen.

POWERS CO.

THE PUGILIST'S CHILD.—John Desmond, a pugilist, leaves his sick wife and infant daughter to fight the middle weight champion. After a game fight, Desmond "knocks out" the champion Murray. Desmond is awarded the prize money and is presented with a sarcastic medal. Elated with victory he goes on to find that his dear wife has just died. Seven years pass and Desmond dies, leaving his little girl Annie, alone in the world. The child goes out into the street and sells newspapers for her livelihood and we see her in some very amusing scenes with the newsboys, who make fun of her dress, which had the girl to don a pair of man's pants. Murray, the retired ex-champion, has all he knows by wants but he and his wife long for a child to cheer their lonesomeness. Murray rescues Little Annie from the clutches of a policeman, takes her home and he and his wife adopt her. The next day the child, not knowing who Murray is, shows him the medal that was presented to her father. The ex-champion exclaims: "Your daddy knocked me out of the ring, get out." The child crying leaves the house. In a pathetic scene with his wife, Murray agrees to take the child back. The wife brings Annie in and the final scene is unique and touching.

A HUSBAND'S SACRIFICE. George Davenport is separated from his sweetheart, Eleanor Holmes, by her father, who wishes her to marry a wealthy man. George goes to Europe and Eleanor gives in to her father's will and marries Le Strange, a wealthy man. Two years later Davenport returns and meets Eleanor and not knowing she is married, tells her that he still loves her. At a dinner party at his home the husband is seized with an attack of heart failure. His physician writes a note to the wife telling her that her husband's condition is serious and that she alone is to administer one of the tablets to the sick man and that an overdose will prove fatal. Le Strange realizes that his wife still loves Davenport and he realizes that in marrying her she sacrificed herself to please her father. He finds the note and determines to leave his wife free to marry the man she really loves. He takes three of the tablets. Eleanor and Davenport enter and the dying husband places their hands together and expires.

AUNT HANNAH.—Jones' wife brings her Aunt Hannah to visit them. Auntie makes Jones' life miserable by interfering with his smoke and his occasional drink and finally caps the climax by breaking up a card party to which he has invited a few friends. Jones goes on a tear and comes home loaded and is surprised by Auntie. In a funny scrap that follows Auntie is knocked out. Jones thinks she is dead and proceeds to dispose of her by putting her into an empty barrel and in his efforts to dispose of the barrel with the body he has the most funny adventures. Finally some toughs put Jones into the barrel and roll it over a precipice. Bang! Smash! Jones thinks he is dead but he wakes up in his own home and discovers that it has all been a dream.

DEFENDER

A GAME FOR A LIFE.—A man's reputation may be as black as the night, but he may appeal to the heart of some woman. An outlaw, although knowing that the sheriff is constantly looking for him, comes boldly into a barroom, where a girl is serving drinks to the sheriff and a crowd of his admirers. He takes a drink then breaks in a game which is in progress. After a couple of hands he accuses one of the players of cheating; the man draws his gun, but the outlaw is quicker and sends a bullet through the arm of the other then dives through the open window.

The sheriff and men all start in pursuit but are held in check by the girl who with leveled pistol keeps the men in the barroom, giving the outlaw a chance to reach his horse. After a while the sheriff and his men start in hot pursuit of the outlaw. The outlaw in endeavoring to escape uses every trick known. He spares neither steed nor self, and leads his pursuers over the mountains and temporarily throws them off his track. He takes refuge in the home of his sweetheart. The posse finally trails him to the home, they enter, but are told by the girl that the outlaw is not there and they leave. The sheriff sends the men back to the town and takes a stand where he can watch the door of the girl's cabin. Finally he sees the outlaw come out with the girl. The outlaw, bidding the girl good-bye, starts away. The sheriff takes careful aim and fires. The outlaw is wounded and staggers back into the house and is hid by the girl. The sheriff comes into the house, but not finding the outlaw again starts to leave. As he opens the door, a drop of blood from the wounded man falls on his hand. Drawing his gun, he demands the outlaw come down from the rafters above. The girl pleads for her sweetheart's life. She plays the sheriff a game of cards, if he wins he gets his man and she will become the sheriff's wife. "The Game for Life" is played. The girl conceals a royal flush in her boot. The sheriff is confident of winning and does not look for treachery in the woman. They play the game, the sheriff is tricked by a woman's wit and loses. He accepts his defeat and departs, leaving the lovers to themselves.

AN ATTEMPTED ELOPEMENT.—Frank Norman, who is in love with the fair belle of Boston, Grace Stafford, has found it necessary to devise means for an elopement in order to win the girl of his choice, whose parents object to this courtship.

Frank makes known to a friend his intention to elope and asks him to deliver a letter to Grace stating the appointed time for the elopement. Frank's friend, instead of delivering the message in Frank's behalf, intends to elope with the girl

[illegible]

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

TANGLED LIVES. A [illegible] the accounts of Joan Hill, a young bank [illegible]. The president of the bank agrees to give [illegible] three days time in which to make good the [illegible] John confides in his young wife May and telling her that he will surely find the [illegible] song which leaves the house. During his absence, Hastings, a young reporter, interviews May about her husband's reported shortage. He is successful in obtaining from her a confession that the matter is true but while doing so, he becomes so interested in the plucky young woman and so sorry for her unhappiness that he decides to suppress the story for her sake.

The husband decides, after failing to raise the money, that he will pretend to have committed suicide and thus evade arrest. He leaves his clothes, with a note telling of his intended suicide on a wharf at the water's edge. Here they are discovered by the young reporter who undertakes to break the news to John's widow.

After five years the young reporter wins May for his bride. On the day of their wedding John, who has now become a tramp, is attracted to the house where the ceremony is to take place. Hearing of the many rich gifts which the bride has received he enters the house through a cellar window, and goes up stairs to the room where the presents are. Here, unseen by them, he witnesses a love scene between the young reporter and his (John's) wife. Stunned by this revelation, and realizing that he is better out of the way, he once more starts to remove himself from their lives, but finding it impossible to escape by the way he entered, he attempts to leave by the second story window, falls to the ground and is killed. Here Hastings, the young reporter, finds him. He has the body quietly carried away and returning, leads May a happy bride to the altar, blissfully ignorant of the tragedy in which she figures.

THE STOLEN INVENTION.—John Deering is a [illegible] been invented living modestly with his wife and only daughter. He has approached Mr. Coldeigh, a capitalist, with a proposition to share the profits of a new invention with him, providing that Coldeigh furnish the capital to swing it. Coldeigh comes to see the model of Deering's invention, and is greatly impressed with it.

Coldeigh offers Deering a small amount of money for the invention but Deering refuses to accept. Later, George, having failed to get the invention by his means, determines to steal it by fraud. He drugs Deering, and in the absence of the latter he inveigles himself into the inventor's home. While in this condition, Coldeigh has Deering transferred to an insane asylum. Then he forges the inventor's name to the bill of sale and thinks that his crime will never be discovered.

Deering's daughter, Grace, is trying to marry her sweetheart, Tom Reynolds, to aid in locating Deering, breaks into the asylum and takes her father out single handed. She conveys him to a cabin in the woods where her brother Dan resides. Dan is to be [illegible] and come to [illegible] and he demands his rights from Coldeigh. The latter defies Dan to obtain Deering's consent, and he determines to go to law. Dan, who acts as his counsel, shows by enlarged photographs views of the two signatures. Dan Coldeigh and traces the one from the other. Coldeigh, confronted by the guilty look of his crime is arrested and the Deering family and faithful Tom are happy.

INTERNATIONAL

FILM TRADERS

INCORPORATED

147-157 Fourth Ave., New York

The Largest Dealers in

SECOND HAND FILMS

in the United States

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 7—The Colonel's Best 670
Aug. 15—The Monkey Showman of Djibah.....330
Aug. 22—Musette's Caprice 660
Aug. 22—The Firemen of Cairo 370
Aug. 29—Fantastic Furniture 503
Aug. 29—Unexpected Servant 437
Sept. 5—The Lost Chance 400
Sept. 5—The Little Blind Girl.....625
Sept. 15—Between Duty and Honor (Dr.).....820
Sept. 15—The Sacking of Rome 800
Sept. 15—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Sept. 19—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic).....440

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July 23—The Elopement (Com.).....466
July 23—Fabian Cleaning Chimney (Dr.).....
July 30—For the Sake of a Child (Dr.).....
July 30—Fabian Arranging Curtain Rods (Com.)
Aug. 6—Magdalene (Dr.).....
Aug. 13—The Stolen Policeman (Com.).....
Aug. 13—The Life Boat.....
Aug. 27—A Society Sinner (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—Fabian's Hollow Tooth (Com.).....
Sept. 3—The Little Drummer Boy (Dr.).....
Sept. 3—Fabian Hunting Rats (Com.).....
Sept. 10—Robinson Crusoe (Dr.) .....
Sept. 17—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....

"IMP."

July 14—Saloon Next Door 1000
July 18—Summertime 993
July 21—The Mistake 996
July 25—Two Maids 1000
July 28—Bear Ye One Another's Burdens.....1000
Aug. 1—Irony of Fate.....995
Aug. 4—Yankeeanna 982
Aug. 8—Once Upon a Time.....984
Aug. 11—Hoodoo Alarm Clock.....994
Aug. 15—Among the Roses (Dr.).....990
Aug. 18—Senator's Double (Dr.).....995
Aug. 22—The Taming of Jane (Com.).....960
Aug. 25—For the Sunday Edition (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—The Widow (Com.) .....app. 1000
Sept. 1—The Right Girl (Dr.) .....app. 1000
Sept. 5—You Saved My Life (Com.).....
Sept. 8—A Sister's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—The Two Daughters (Dr.) 995
Sept. 15—Dixie (Dr.) .....
Sept. 19—The New Butler (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—Debt (Dr.) .....

LUX FILMS.

July 22—A Devoted Little Brother (Dr.).....550
July 22—Ma's New Dog (Com.).....344
Aug. 18—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Aug. 18—That Typist Again (Com.).....380
Aug. 25—The Acrobat's Son (Com.) .....app. 450
Aug. 25—The Chemist's Mistake (Dr.) ....app. 450
Sept. 1—Aunt Tabitha's Monkey (Com.).....350
Sept. 1—A Selfish Man's Lesson (Dr.).....603
Sept. 8—Ma-in-Law as a Statue (Com.).....439
Sept. 8—The Bobby's Dream (Com.).....383
Sept. 15—A Selfish Man's Lesson (Dr.).....603
Sept. 15—Aunt Tabitha's Monkey (Com.).....350

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

July 27—A True Pal (Dr.) 999
Aug. 3—Sons of the West (Dr.).....975
Aug. 10—Hearts of Gold (Dr.).....990
Aug. 17—Why Dad Was Held Up (Com.).....
Aug. 24—In the Black Hills (Dr.) 960
Aug. 31—The Blazed Trail (Dr.).....989
Sept. 7—The Moonshiner's Daughter (Dr.).....960
Sept. 14—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
("Bison.")

July 22—Black Pete's Reformation.....957
July 26—Love in Mexico.....984
July 29—In the Wild West.....995
Aug. 2—A Miner's Sweetheart.....1000
Aug. 5—A Cowboy's Generosity.....988
Aug. 9—A True Country Heart.....1000
Aug. 12—The Prairie Postmistress.....945
Aug. 16—A Woman's Better Nature.....1000
Aug. 19—The Redmen's Persecution 970
Aug. 23—The Mascot of Company D.....961
Aug. 26—Kit Carson 990
Aug. 30—Dan, the Arizona Scout (Dr.).....992
Sept. 2—The Night Rustlers (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 6—Western Justice (Dr.).....
Sept. 9—A True Indian Brave (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Sept. 16—For a Western Girl.....1000

ITALA.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

July 23—A Cannon Duel.....500
July 25—Let Us Die Together.....500
July 30—The Two Bears.....693
July 30—Where Can We Hang this Picture?....307
Aug. 6—Louisa Miller 1000
Aug. 13—A Cloud 700
Aug. 13—Papa's Cane 300
Aug. 20—Agnes Visconti 1000
Aug. 27—Foolshead in the Lion's Cage.....622
Aug. 27—An Enemy of the Dust.....382
Sept. 3—The Nestal 1000
Sept. 10—A Thief Well Received (Com.).....
Sept. 10—Mr. Coward (Com.) .....
Sept. 17—The Falconer 1000

AMBROSIO.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Aug. 3—Fricot Drinks a Bottle of Horse Embrocation 200
Aug. 10—Truth Beyond Reach of Justice.....500
Aug. 10—A Favor Admission to a Play.....500
Aug. 17—The Hump's Secret.....500
Aug. 17—Tweedle Dum Has Missed His Train..500
Aug. 24—A Fatal Vengeance 570
Aug. 24—Fricot's Heling Powder 382
Aug. 31—The Fisherman's Crime (Dr.).....668
Aug. 31—Tweedle Dum's Forged Bank Note....297
Sept. 7—The Caprice of a Dame (Com.).....
Sept. 7—Fricot Has Lost His Collar Stud (Com)
Sept. 14—The Iron Foundry.....900

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Aug. 2—Her Private Secretary (Dr.).....
Aug. 6—His Baby's Shirt (Dr.).....
Aug. 6—Almost a Hero (Com.).....
Aug. 9—A Man's Way (Dr.).....
Aug. 13—Winning a Husband (Dr.).....
Aug. 13—Madame Clairo (Com.).....
Aug. 16—The Sewing Girl (Dr.).....
Aug. 20—A Woman's Power (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—The Gunsmith (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—The Deceivers (Com.).....
Aug. 27—The Mail Carrier (Dr.) .....
Aug. 30—The Burlesque Queen (Com.).....
Aug. 30—The Horse Shoer's Girl (Com. dr.)...
Sept. 3—The Matinee Idol (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—The Girl Next Door (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—The Inconstant (Com.) .....
Sept. 10—For the Girl's Sake (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Tell-Tale Perfume .....
Sept. 13—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Sept. 17—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

July 26—Uncle Tom's Cabin (Dr.))).....1000
July 29—The Mermaid (Com.) 1000
Aug. 2—Jenk's Day Off (Com.).....1000
Aug. 5—The Restoration (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 9—The Mad Hermit (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 12—Lena Rivers (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Girl Reporter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 19—She Stoops to Conquer (Com.).....1000
Aug. 23—A Dainty Politician (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 26—The Latchkey (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 30—An Assisted Elopement (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 2—A Fresh Start (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 13—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000

SALES CO.—FILM D'ART.

July 21—Mateo Falcone 694
July 21—Andromache 356
July 28—The Hidden Place.....900
Aug. 4—The Eagle and the Eaglet.....1000
Aug. 11—Charles Le Temeraire.....518
Aug. 18—Carmen 995
Aug. 25—In the Day of the First Christians..1000
Sept. 1—King of One Day 975
Sept. 8—The Minister's Speech.....500
Sept. 8—The Conscience of a Child.....500
Sept. 15—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.).1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

July 15—Retribution 1024
July 22—Repaid with Interest.....1000
Aug. 6—Indian Squaw's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Aug. 13—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 11—Indian Squaw's Sacrifice.....
Aug. 18—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 25—Hazing a New Scholar (Dr.) .....
Sept. 1—Great Marshall Jewel Case (Dr.).....
Sept. 1—That Letter from Teddy.....
Sept. 8—Cowboy's Courtship (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—An Athletic Instructor (Com.).....
Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....

CHAMPION.

July 13—The Abernathy Kids 1000
July 20—Romance of an Anvil (Dr.) 1000
July 27—Cowboy and the Squaw (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 3—Spitfire (Dr.) 900
Aug. 10—Hermit of the Rockies 900
Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge (Dr.) 900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.) 900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept. 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.) .....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.) 900

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 11—The Pirate's Power.....965
July 18—Right to Labor.....998
July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.) .....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless 1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

July 13—Clergyman and His Ward.....935
July 20—Only a Hobo.....485
—Levi Family at Coney Island.....480
July 27—Prospector's Treasure.....650
—The Kissing Bug.....280
Aug. 3—The Rest Cure.....966
Aug. 10—The Animated Scarecrow.....500
Aug. 10—The Wrong Bag.....500
Aug. 17—Count of Noaccount.....
Aug. 24—The Tale of the Hot Dog.....725
Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.) 450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders 450
Sept. 14—Monkey Shines 500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart.....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, September 12.

Eclair—Between Love and Honor (Dr.).....820
Imp—The Two Daughters (Dr.).....995
Yankee—Captured by Wireless.....1000

Tuesday, September 13.

Bison—A Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Powers—The Telltale Perfume.....
Powers—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Thanhouser—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000

Wednesday, September 14.

Ambrosio—The Iron Foundry.....900
Atlas—Animated Powders.....450
Atlas—Monkey Shines.....500
Champion—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Nestor—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956

Thursday, September 15.

Defender—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Defender—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Film d'Art—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.) 1000
Imp—Dixie (Dr.).....
Lux—A Selfish Man's Lesson (Dr.).....603
Lux—Aunt Tabitha's Monkey (Com.).....350

Friday, September 16.

Bison—For a Western Girl.....1000
Thanhouser—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000

Saturday, September 17.

Great Northern—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.)
Great Northern—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....
Itala—The Falconer.....1000
Powers—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....

New Positive Film.

PARTNER WANTED—To promote method of making moving picture positives of superior quality, and at half the cost of present method. Experimental work all done and capital needed to demonstrate process on a large scale. Address CHEMIST, care Moving Picture World.

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

FOR SALE—No. 5 Power's Cameragraph, like new, low price. L. B. S., care Moving Picture World.

NICE COMEDY fish story and crazy quilt, good condition. KELLY BRANTLEY, Knoxville, Tenn., care Miller Store Co.

WANTED to exchange No. 74 Buffet B flat clarionet, used two months, for Edison one-pin machine, preferred, or other good one-pin machine. ARTHUR POWELL, Powell's Pharmacy, Montezuma, Ind.

WANTED—450 opera chairs. Address, NATHAN GOLDSTEIN, Patchogue, N. Y.

ORTHO FILM CO. re-develops, cleans, restores, tints, tones and colors old or new films, makes film titles. Work done at your own exchange, if desired. Hochstetter's processes. ORTHO FILM CO., 2751 W. Division street, Chicago, Ill.

THE

KINEMACOLOR PROJECTOR

Presents "Natural Color" Pictures
" "Stereoscopic" "

KINEMACOLOR is the last word in Projectors either for black and white or "Color" display.

Every house desiring an uplift into the realm of beauty and permanency needs this

NEW AND MARVELLOUS ATTRACTION

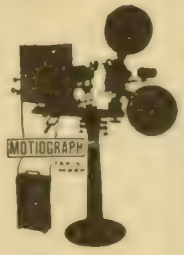
The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

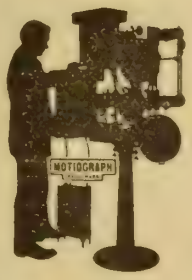
Substantial Evidence of Comparative Quality



Is found in the fact that on the Circuit of ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL THEATRES located in the larger cities of Illinois, owned by the Colonial Theatres Company and controlled by Baker and Moore, they now have NINE EQUIPPED WITH MOTIOGRAPHS.

They installed the first Motiograph nearly three years ago because of the better pictures and other points. They've tried all other makes, some recently, but they say

The Motiograph Is Best



It projects by far the best pictures
It is the most reliable
It is most convenient for the operator
It wears the longest

IT STANDS THE CONTINUOUS HEAVY GRIND better than any other machine

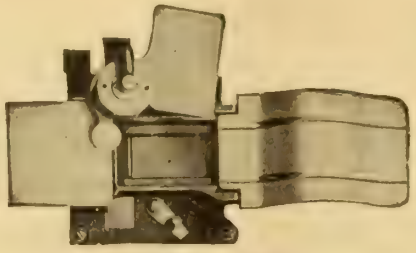
OUR CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. SEND FOR IT

MANUFACTURED AND JOBBED BY

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO, U. S. A.

J. H. HALLBERG, AGENT, New York City J. F. BROCKLISS, London, Paris Berlin

EDISON
Automatic Shutter



(TYPE "B")

The only perfect device of its kind. Its equal cannot be found on any make of Motion Picture Machine but the EDISON.

FEATURES

1 Absolute protection from fire.

2 Automatically locks when open.

3 Eliminates undue wear on gearing.

4 Easier operation of machine.

5 Automatically unlocks and closes when speed is reduced.

6 Light cannot strike film except when in motion.

GUARANTEE

All Edison Projecting Kinetoscopes are guaranteed for one year against defects in manufacture.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

72 Lakeside Avenue, Orange, N. J.
90 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

JOBBERS

P. L. Waters, 41 East 21st St., New York City.
General Film Co., 564 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
General Film Co., 4th and Green Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.
Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., 314 Superior Avenue, N. E., Cleveland, O.
Kleine Optical Co., 52 State Street, Chicago, Ill.
Yale Film Exchange Co., 622 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.
Geo. Breck, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

BIO CARBONS

What They Say About BIO Carbons

G. D. Strong of the Crystal Theatre, Minneapolis, is an operator from away back. He can tell a good carbon as far as a shipwrecked sailor can sight a sail

He asked us for samples of BIO Carbons saying that he was then using the best carbons he had been able to find but was ready to be "shown".

Here is the "come-back"

"In a previous letter I mentioned that the "perfect" carbon had not yet been found. Yes it has and it is the BIO. As a proof of its good qualities let me say that my assistant operator who comes in at 5 P. M after running two shows—not knowing that I had BIO carbon in the lamp called my attention to the fact—"Had I noticed what a beautiful, steady white light we were getting?"

Rest assured I shall boost and recommend your carbons all over the Northwest. They are what every operator should have.

For samples write your name here

Your Name.....

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK - - - - - 39 Cortlandt Street
PITTSBURG - - - - - 421 Frick Building
MILWAUKEE - - - - - 114-116 Huron Street
SAN FRANCISCO - - - 195-197 Fremont Street

UNBREAKABLE SLIDES

Patent applied for

The only manufacturers of non-breakable slides.

WHY: Because we fill all orders promptly. This is no fake ad. We deliver the goods. Try us. Give us your order and see.

Song slides, glass $4.00, unbreakable, $5.00 a set
Announcement slides, glass $30.00 a 100
" " unbreakable 40.00 a 100

All work first-class and work guaranteed.

Send for catalogue of song and announcement slides

THE PARIS SLIDE CO.
932 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.

ACTORS

We want two leading men and a juvenile man for motion picture studio work. Write particulars and send photo which will be returned, or call at nine, one or five o'clock.

J. A. Golden, Vice-Pres.

THE POWERS COMPANY
241st Street and Richardson Avenue
Take Subway to 177th St. then Mount Vernon car

Song Slides For Sale

$1.00 Per Set and up

J. FRISH

138 East 14th St. - New York

Lang's Rewinder No. 2

Price, $5.00 Net
Send for latest catalogue
Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

On Mobile Bay
She got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.
What is the World Without You.
On a Sunday Evening in the Summer Time.
Come Along My Mandy.
Love Sick.
In My Garden.
Sometime in After Years.
Oh! You Spearmint Kiddo, With the Wriggly Eyes.
To-night, Sweetheart, To-night.
I Want Someone to Flirt With Me.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Mirror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock, Tripods, Tilts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply, special lenses and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

MOVING PICTURES

OF REPRODUCTION OF

Johnson-Jeffries Fight

Slightly Used; $150 to $200 for Complete Copy

Will send C. O. D. subject to examination on receipt of deposit to cover express charges

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
46 Jackson Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St.. TOLEDO, O.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS FOR Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest Dealers in the World of New and Second-hand Independent and Association Films—All Makes
New Film, 4c. per foot and upwards Second-hand, $5.00 per reel and upwards Song Slides, $2.00 per set
Power's Machine, like new, $115.00 Complete List sent free upon request

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West Broadway and 17th Street New York City

IMP — BISON — DEFENDER — ATLAS — OWL — AMBROSIO

CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE

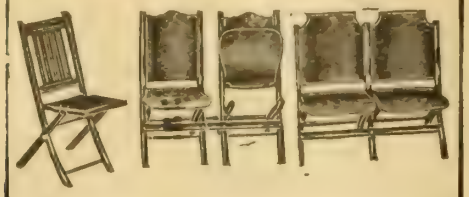
315-317 West Fourth Street, CINCINNATI, O. Long Distance 'Phone, Main 1450.

"THE HOUSE THAT BUYS FILMS"

Connect with a real, live, up-to-date Film Exchange that can give you a real service.
References—MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

ITALA — THANHOUSER — FILM D'ART — YANKEE — OTHERS

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS
ROLL TICKETS

50,000 for $8.75 — Stock Tickets
100 000 for 13.50 — 9c. per 1000
Terms Cash—No C O.D.

Canadian Ticket Press, GANANOQUE ONT.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices — Best Work — DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

Keep your exchange man in hot water till he gives you both "Imps" every week! There's no earthly reason why he shouldn't have them, nor why you shouldn't get the benefit of them. Everybody acknowledges they're by far the best on the market, yet they don't cost you a blessed penny more than any other kind. That's logic. You can't dodge it. See that you get what you ask for. Don't accept substitutes, excuses or bunk. Either get both Imps every week or switch to a good exchange!

WATCH FOR "THE NEW BUTLER!"

One of the most delicious Imp comedies ever produced. Clean-cut, richly humorous from start to finish. It will set your whole house wild and bring them back again for more. Released Thursday, September 22.

AND BE SURE TO GET "DEBT!"

In this film, entitled "Debt," you are going to see some of the finest acting ever done before the eye of a camera. The story is simple and goes straight to the heart. Tell your exchange you want the Imp release of Monday, September 19, sure!

"THE IMP" APOLOGIZES!

While we were preparing to move into our new factory we had much trouble with dirty water and bad lights in our old place. The result was that we have had several complaints about the reels made at that time—the first serious complaints since the "Imp" came into existence. In our new place everything is perfect, so that no one will have cause for even the slightest complaint. Forgive us this time. It was something we couldn't help. It won't happen again.

Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.

CARL LAEMMLE, Pres.

NEW ADDRESS! NEW ADDRESS!

102 West 101st Street, New York

All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

Ladies and Gentlemen

"Permit me to introduce to you the Congress of Rough Riders of the World—"

SAYS

BUFFALO BILL

The only and original—the greatest Western character the world has ever known—

Now on his Positive Farewell Tour of the World

You will never have another chance to see the greatest of them all—Indian Scout and Warrior—Unless you see him in moving pictures—the REAL THING authorized by both he and Major Lillie and every scene taken while on the road this season.

These pictures are not slides—but actual MOTION PICTURES—Life Like and Real—Every action of Col. Cody (Buffalo Bill) clearly shown—so natural you would imagine he is

Talking To You Direct

This is the Greatest Film Taken in Years. Shows every Scene of the Wild West—Far East

IN 3000 FEET OF FILM

Exclusive City and State Rights will be Sold at Once

Bids are invited from responsible parties. Surety bond to exhibit only in the territory contracted, required.

The finest lithograph posters ever used with moving pictures---fifty different styles.

WARNING

Any slides purporting to represent COL. Wm. F. CODY (Buffalo Bill) are unauthorized and will not be licensed and any person buying, selling or exhibiting same will be prosecuted—Save yourself trouble and expense. WAIT for the original and only authorized Pictures of THE GREATEST living American character, BUFFALO BILL.

Buffalo Bill & Pawnee Bill Film Company

c-o Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

111 East 19th Street, New York

A PARAMOUNT SERVICE

Brand New Independent Goods ONLY Positively No Junk

CROWDED HOUSES THOROUGH SATISFACTION FINANCIAL SUCCESS

PARAMOUNT FILM COMPANY

428 9th Street, N. W. WASHINGTON, D.C.

61 West 14th Street NEW YORK

1188 Main Street BRIDGEPORT

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, 61 W. 14th St., NEW YORK CITY

DON'T DELAY!

THE SOONER After You Have Read This Page YOU :: :: ORDER :: ::

THE LAW and THE MAN

LENGTH, 956 FEET

THE BETTER Your Chance of Getting THE REAL FEATURE OF YOUR PRO-:: :: GRAM :: ::

Release Day: WEDNESDAY, September 14, 1910

See Below for Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films. .·. Read It!

GET NESTOR POSTERS
NESTOR BULLETINS
AND
NESTOR FILMS

"The Law and The Man" will Increase the Heart Beats and Your Box-Office Receipts.

Scene from "THE LAW AND THE MAN"

We have labelled "The Law and The Man" a Western subject, the story it tells is one of common occurrence in all parts of the world. It deals with existing conditions which drive a worthy husband and father to steal and who is saved from the Law by the great Heart of Humanity. The story is direct and simple and abounds with pathos; it appeals because of its very simplicity and the lesson it teaches. "The Law and The Man", everything considered, merits to rank with Nestor's best.

EXHIBITORS! Be sure to GET this PICTURE as your PATRONS will want to SEE it; they will be delighted with it and will ADVERTISE it in GLOWING TERMS; they will THINK MORE of YOU, of your theatres and of NESTOR FILMS.

ORDER NOW! GET this uncommon FILM and GET It QUICK!

DON'T put up with DILATORY TACTICS!

ROUGH-HOUSE for "THE LAW AND THE MAN". ROUGH-HOUSE STRENUOUSLY UNTIL YOU GET IT!

Sold through MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY
111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK CITY

LET US ADD YOUR NAME TO OUR WONDROUSLY LARGE MAILING LIST

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO.	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CAPITOL FILM SERVICE	422 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE	602 Dooly Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE	315 West 4th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
DIXIE FILM CO.	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La.
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E.	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO.	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC STATES FILM EXCHANGE	734 S. Main St., Los Angeles, Cal.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO.	200-204 N. 7th St., St. Louis, Mo.
TOLEDO FILM EXCHANGE	319 Superior St., Toledo, Ohio.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO.	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM SUPPLY CO.	Wichita, Kan.

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

NESTOR FILMS are sold through the SALES CO., 111 East 14th St., New York City

BE A MEMBER OF OUR LARGE MAILING LIST FAMILY

VITAGRAPH

"LIFE PORTRAYALS"

FOR RELEASE TUESDAY, SEPT. 20

JEAN THE MATCHMAKER

A Fascinating Love Story in which the wonderful dog, "Jean," again appears, this time as Don Cupid. Approximate length 1,000 feet.

FOR RELEASE FRIDAY, SEPT. 23

A MODERN KNIGHT ERRANT

Strongly Dramatic and Full of Thrilling Interest. How a brutal bully met his Waterloo, and a valiant defender of the weak won a charming bride. Approximate length, 967 feet

FOR RELEASE SATURDAY, SEPT. 24

RENUNCIATION

Intensely Powerful and acted with remarkably effective expression. How a young actress sacrificed her dearest hope, but in the end came out a victor. Approximate length, 999 feet.

If you are not getting our Bulletins, send in your name and address at once. In making revisions a number of names have been dropped by mistake.

USE VITAGRAPH POSTERS—Posters of the "Vitagraph Girl," Posters of the "Vitagraph" Stock Company Players. Posters specially made for each Film Subject. Order from your Exchange, or direct to us.

The Vitagraph Company of America } NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St.
LONDON, 25 Cecil Court
CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St.
PARIS, 15 Rue Sainte-Cecile

Vol. 7., No. 13. September 24, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

★ MÉLIÈS RELEASES ★

The Salt on the Bird's Tail

Novel in conception and excellently performed. A rare treat in natural scenic settings.
Length, 940 Feet.

Released SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

A Lucky American Girl

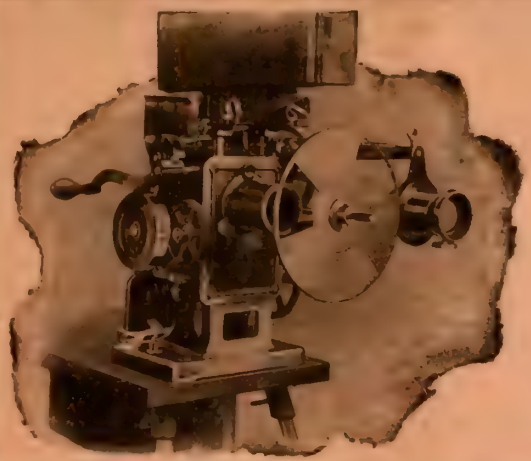
A story of a heroine that makes us wish there were more of them to go around. This picture is full of thrills and throbs. Length, 950 Feet.

Released SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

MÉLIÈS FILMS ARE SURE MONEY GETTERS. TRY THEM YOURSELF AND BE CONVINCED.

G. MÉLIÈS, 204 East 38th Street, New York City

Western Representative: JOHN B. ROCK, 109 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.



Power's Cameragraph No. 6

WRITE TO-DAY FOR CATALOG "G"—JUST OUT.

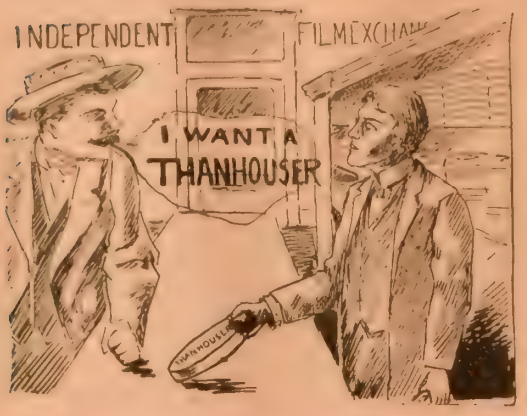
NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY - 115 Nassau Street, New York City

FOR THIRTEEN YEARS THE LEADING MANUFACTURERS OF MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

VITAGRAPH

POCAHONTAS IS COMING!!

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week



Say "THANHOUSER"

To the Exchange Man and You'll Get

"THANHOUSER HIT-FILM," RELEASED TUESDAY, SEPT. 20th
See the Great Clothesline Swing to Liberty!

NOT GUILTY

will pronounce you "NOT GUILTY" of failure to give your patrons a good time. Run this the day your programme seems tame. It will infuse just enough life into the show to send the audience away pleased. It's not a "thriller," but it may thrill you through and through in parts, such as where the man who is "NOT GUILTY" slips into a hay wagon and away from prison walls, and where, cornered in his mother's home by the police, he swings to liberty on a clothesline.

App. length, 1,000 Feet. No. 144. Code Word, Guilty

Scene from
NOT GUILTY

Scene from
THE CONVICT

"THANHOUSER FUNNY-FILM"—2 on 1—RELEASED FRIDAY, SEPT. 23rd

The Most Tremendous "Twist" in Picture-Plot History RIGHT HERE!

THE CONVICT

You have no idea as to how marvelously Thanhouser can twist a story unless you see this gripping dra——. Well, maybe it isn't a drama, at that—or a comedy, even. We hate to tip you off as to WHAT it is. When you see the picture, with its totally un-looked-for climax, you'll know WHY!

——AND THEN——

A HUSBAND'S JEALOUS WIFE

which is so screamingly funny that some of your afternoon patrons will come back for the night show just to see it repeated. In fact, it'll "take" so big that you'll vote the WHOLE REEL the sublimest double-subject all-comedy release that ever blessed your screen.

App. length, 1,000 Feet. No. 145. Code Word, Conhub

ON THE WAY!—GOING TO STRIKE YOU SOON!

POCAHONTAS

The Film That Marks An Epoch In American Historical Productions

Have you dropped us a card for the THANHOUSER NEWS, "The Exhibitors Guide?" It's sent FREE of CHARGE to anyone who can show connection with the moving picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR, THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Thanhouser Company, New Rochelle, N. Y.

The Sales Co., Agents for United States and Canada.

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man!

POCAHONTAS IS COMING!!

PULLING TOGETHER

Are you watching the RACE FOR QUALITY which is being run by our manufacturers? They are all bending their energies to surpass all previous efforts, and no expense is being spared to produce the best motion pictures that can be made. This is the reason our output has improved week by week, and presents to the exhibitors the

FINEST PROGRAM IN THE WORLD

If you have not seen last week's releases, DON'T MISS THEM THIS WEEK. Old-time film men are amazed at the QUALITY and QUANTITY of our subjects, embracing a variety to please any audience.

You take no chances in adopting Independent Service. We are not only maintaining a high standard—collectively and individually—but are RAISING IT.

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
FILM D'ART—Baumann & Laemmle
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, September 7th, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.

CALIFORNIA.

Acme Film Exchange, 14 Larkin St., San Francisco.
California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Sunny South Film Exchange, Rhodes Building, Atlanta, Ga.

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 79 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 236 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1230 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1317 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Buckeye Film & Projection Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Capitol Film Service, 422 N. High St., Columbus.
Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Chicago Film Exchange, 602 Dooly Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

BOOKED SOLID

HILARITY HANK, dispeller of despondency and mixologist of mirth begs to announce his permanent connection with the ATLAS FILM CO. and wishes to thank the Messrs. Weber, Feelds, Klau, Errlangur, Bill Asco and the Shoebirds for the many offers received for the coming season. He will appear in TWO CORKING COMEDY CREATIONS ON ONE REEL EACH WEEK ("House Organs" and other noise makers please copy)

One Big Week, Starting Wednesday, Sept. 28

SCREAM A	SCREAM B
LEVI THE COP	The Laugh's on Father
The First Half	The Other 450 Feet

A Cracking Combination of Furiously Funny Films, built in the Atlas Foolish Factories for the purpose of Spreading Sunshine and the Banishment of Blues.

REPUTABLE EXCHANGES SUPPLY ATLAS COMEDY FILMS REGULARLY

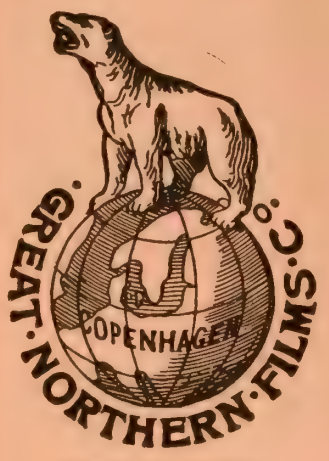
If yours fails to do so on request it is because the man doesn't buy enough to furnish a complete program or because you are not insistent enough. Heavy-buying renters can give you ATLAS Films. It's up to you to see they find a place on your screen.

LISTEN:—We want every exhibitor to write at once for our big lobby display hangers, suitable for use at any time. These hangers will stimulate business and attract attention. A postal card addressed to Desk 20 will do the work.

ATLAS FILM CO. 10 East Fifteenth Street, New York City

SALES COMPANY TICKLED TO DEATH—WIRE YOUR ORDER

GREAT NORTHERN



Stands for Quality!

Release for Saturday, September 17th

FABIAN OUT FOR A PICNIC

Fabian, the great comedian, scores again in this fun-provoking, side-splitting, hilarious film.

DANISH DRAGOONS

Wonderful and stupendous exercises of modern cavalry. A Drill in ocean's briny surf by a body of three hundred horses and men is one of the many superb scenes. Do not fail to get this picture. It will astound your audiences.

Release for Saturday, September 24th

Dr. JEKYLL and Mr. HYDE

OR A STRANGE CASE

This artistic and beautiful film admirably illustrates Stevenson's remarkable and world renowned story. It is a production of genuine and thrilling interest and will hold every audience spellbound to the very finish. Splendidly enacted and reproduced in magnificent photographic sequence.

BOOK THIS HEADLINER AT ONCE!

THE GREAT NORTHERN FILM is the film make of Universal Fame (Pioneer of Independent Makers). No EXHIBITOR'S Weekly Programme is complete without a GREAT NORTHERN Reel.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

HURRY, SEND YOUR BID

BEFORE THE TERRITORY YOU WANT IS SOLD

For the exclusive City or State Rights for the only moving pictures of

BUFFALO BILL'S WILD WEST AND PAWNEE BILL'S FAR EAST

If you want to make big money on an Exclusive Proposition that will stand repeating, get the pictures of the WILD WEST and FAR EAST, Combined.

BUFFALO BILL and PAWNEE BILL draw larger crowds to their exhibition than any show on earth. These pictures will draw larger crowds than any ever made, and they will never lose interest. With the 3000 feet of film you can show in any theatre the complete BUFFALO BILL WILD WEST and PAWNEE BILL FAR EAST exactly as it is exhibited in the open arena. You can give a genuine $1.00 show at a low price of admission.

Not only the Wild West but the Rough Riders of every nation, the Far East—all combined make the 3000 feet of film novel and exciting from start to finish—the Greatest Drawing Card in the World.

50 styles of the finest lithograph posters.

Fine assortment of large size photographs for lobby frames, heralds, cuts, etc. Everything to help you get the money.

The "Moving Picture World" says:
"Buffalo Bill" is a name to conjure with amongst the youth of the land. The very name on the poster at the theatre door would mean a full house. For nearly fifty years Col. Cody has been before the public eye, so that when the pictures of his farewell round-up are announced, not only the youth but the boys of fifty will want to see them.

The "Bill Board" says:
"Never before in all film history has such a hit been made as with the Buffalo Bill Wild West—Pawnee Bill Far East pictures. Exchanges and moving picture men the country over are enthusiastic over the films, which from a standpoint of photography have seldom been equaled.

The "Clipper" says:
"Every scene has been photographed, and every scene is as lifelike as if you joined the sweltering crowd and jammed your way into the sweltering tent on the road."

Buffalo Bill & Pawnee Bill Film Company

care of MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK

FOUR REELS A WEEK

Bison Films

Tuesday; A "Bison" Wednesday; "Ambrosio"
Friday; A "Bison" Saturday; "Itala"

Special Announcement: Owing to the tremendous popularity of Itala Film, beginning October 13th, we will release two reels, the second reel a high class dramatic subject issued every Thursday.
Place your order with your exchange at once

2 WESTERN REELS 2

ASK FOR THEM!

For The Love of Red Wing

The terrible vengeance of an Indian for the death of his sweetheart results in the extermination of a band of settlers after a spectacular battle. Escaping from the whites and facing recapture the girl destroys herself. The finding of her body by her lover is intensely dramatic and pathetic and the weird funeral rites most interesting. The redskins are exhorted to a frenzied pitch, the settlers wiped out and their cabins burned.

Released Tuesday, Sept. 20th

A Cattle Rustler's Daughter

The cattle rustler is saved from his just fate by his pretty daughter who gallops up, severs the rope with a shot, holds the avenging cowboys at bay with her pistol and covers the retreat of her father. In sheer admiration of her pluck the boys permit him to escape. Stealing the herd—the running fight—the capture—bristles with snappy action. After the crisis is passed the girl faints, and Bob, a dashing cowboy, tenderly revives her, wins her hand and plans for future happiness.

Released Friday, Sept. 23rd

GET THEM!

2 WESTERN REELS 2

"AMBROSIO" RELEASE—WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 21st
"THE LAST FRIEND"
"MOLLY AT THE REGIMENT"

"ITALA" RELEASE—SATURDAY, SEPT. 24th
"FOOLSHEAD AS A POLICEMAN"
"THE BAD LUCK OF AN OLD RAKE"

EXHIBITORS: Send your name and address for our mailing list and we will send you weekly a sixteen page book entitled "Film Fancies" giving full synopsis of our films and other interesting matter. Profusely illustrated.

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

New York Motion Picture Co.

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
LINCOLN BUILDING:
1 Union Square, cor. 14th Street, N. Y. City
PHONE 980-1-2 Stuyvesant Cable Address: Nosib

WHO SAYS

"They Never Come Back!"

"CHAMPS" ALWAYS PLAY A RETURN DATE, BECAUSE "CHAMP" QUALITY IS RARE

HERE IS ANOTHER CHAMP THAT WILL COME BACK!!

Because Your House Will Want It Again

"A Western Girl's Sacrifice"

The influence of bad companions, the wayward course, dishonor and disgrace, and a sister's sacrifice that saves the family honor. Tense and Intense.

PAST FEATURE RELEASES

The White Princess of The Tribe.
A Wild Goose Chase.
His Indian Bride.
The Cowboy and The Easterner.
The Sheriff and His Son.
A Cowboy's Pledge.
Hermit of the Rockies
Spitfire.
Cowboy and The Squaw.
Romance of an Anvil.
The Abernathy Kids.

CHAMPION FILM CO.

MARK M. DINTENFASS, General Manager
12 East 15th Street, New York, U. S. A.

Laboratories at Coytesville on the Hudson
Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company
111 East 14th Street, New York City

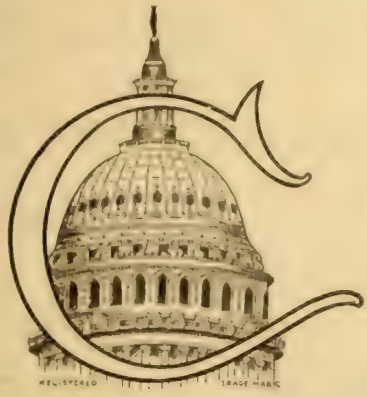
CAPITOL

QUALITY

Round Trip $5.98

A side splitting Comedy showing Uncle Hiram's troubles in his visit to the Nation's Capitol.

Septem ber 17th, 1910



QUALITY

"Bill Mason's Ride"

Most stories begin with a wedding—this begins with one.

A beautiful Railroad Story showing a Young Bride's race with death.

Does she win? Well, see the picture.

September 24th, 1910

SOLD THROUGH

The* Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company

Lithographs, lobby dodgers and synopsis free with every reel

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D. C.

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

Marion, Ind.

The town is going crazy over your pictures. Your plays and photography could not be better.

Royal Theatre.

Saturday, Feature Release, Sept. 24

"His Lordship"

A Western comedy drama that will keep your patrons roaring.

Tuesday Release, Sept. 27

2 ON 1 — The Taming of "Buck" / O You Wives — 2 ON 1

Two comedies that will bring stronger letters than the above.

Our new four colored Lithos, like POWERS PICTURE PLAYS, "The Best." The Real Buying Exchanges receive a "Powers" Tuesday and Saturday. Insist on Both. You need them.

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

Get on our mailing list. We are springing daily surprises to help the exhibitor. Next week we are making a great offer to show houses. You ought to hear about it.

COWBOY and INDIAN
FRONTIER CELEBRATION
HELD AT CHEYENNE, WYOMING

Exclusive Motion Pictures

WILD GLORIES OF THE
VANISHED WESTERN BORDER

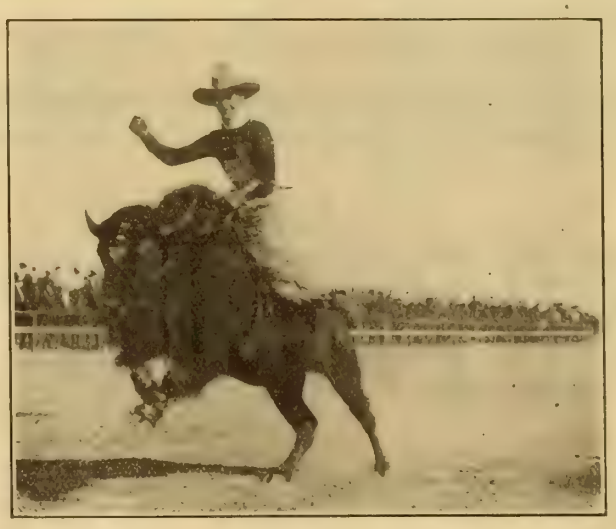
Over 3,000 feet of the greatest money-getting Motion Pictures in the world, showing "the West as it was."

EXHIBITORS—EXCHANGES

This will be a dandy money-maker anywhere and everywhere.

Reviewed and Participated in By

COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT



Get in Line NOW

Exclusive territory for sale

Reasonable price

WRITE OR WIRE TO-DAY

THESE REELS SHOW

World's Champions in Bucking Broncho Riding; Trick and Fancy Roping Contests; Steer Roping and Calf Branding Contests; Fancy Rifle and Pistol Shooting; Bulldoging of Wild Steers; Riding and Driving only Team of Buffaloes ever broken to Harness; Hitching and Driving Wild Horses; Spectacular Galloping Parade of Indians, Cowboys and Cowgirls; Indian War Dances and Ceremonies; Champion Lady Bucking Broncho Rider; Riding Bucking Mules and Buffalo; Squaw Races; Ladies Cowpony Races; Indian Races; Mounted "Potatoe Race," and Teddy Roosevelt through all.

EXCLUSIVE PROPERTY OF

The Tournament Film Co.

TOLEDO, OHIO

Select territory you want and write at once. Exhibitors are going to demand these pictures—Be prepared.

THE MOTIOGRAPH

PROJECTS

THE BEST PICTURES

BECAUSE it has

The Patented Double Cone Shutter
(No other machine has it)

Short Heavy Non-Vibrating Sprocket Shaft

Accurate Star, Cam and Sprocket and many other special features

THE MOTIOGRAPH
WEARS THE BEST

BECAUSE it has

Star and Cam Enclosed in Oil Bath
Gears in Dust Proof Enclosure
Gears Made of Steel
Shafts Made of Tool Steel and for many other reasons

THE MOTIOGRAPH
IS The OPERATOR'S FRIEND

BECAUSE

Its a Simple Machine
Has Patent Rewind
Parts easier to get at than any others
Take apart and assemble in a few minutes
Has only infallible automatic Safety Shutter
Arc Lamp Large and Heavy
Never sticks or slips
Lamp House twice as large as others and many other conveniences

THERE'S 52 REASONS WHY
IT'S THE BEST MACHINE

CATALOG TELLS THE REASONS

Send for it today

Manufactured and Jobbed by

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.

564-572 W. Randolph St, CHICAGO, U. S. A.

J. H. HALLBERG, Agt. New York City

J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt London, Paris, Berlin

DEAD

ARE SOME OF THE FILMS THAT ARE BEING USED BY MOST FILM EXCHANGES

But Our Shipments Contain Live Pictures and all Box Office

BOOSTERS

WRITE TO-DAY FOR PRICES TO STRAIGHTEST AND SQUAREST FILM RENTERS IN THE EAST

JOSLYN CO.

23 LEXINGTON AVENUE

New York City

FILM CO UNITED

Stop Right Here

WHEN YOU SEE THAT SHIELD

Look No Farther It Stands for Quality, Superiority, Promptness and an Efficient Independent Film Service

United Film Company

Bell Phone NINE EIGHT NINE

One First St., TROY, N. Y.

Lynch the Umpire

You are always safe. You need no Umpire in the hard fought game of success. We run your bases for you by supplying first class films, and put you safe over the plate, with success in your Mit for the next inning.

SUNNY SOUTH FILM COMPANY

ARTHUR LUCAS, General Manager

"Rhodes Bld'g" ATLANTA, GA.

OUR

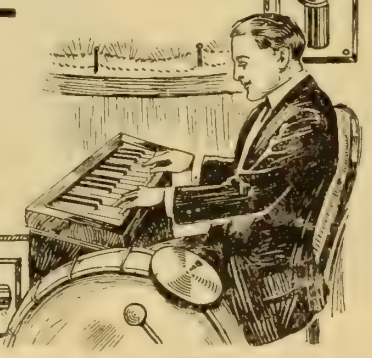
Musical Electrical Bells

(which are played from a Key-board, the bells being mounted in various parts of the house) have been a great success all over the country, and no Picture-house is complete without a set of them. We can supply 25 Bells, 2 octaves chromatic, C to C, correctly tuned to your Piano, complete with Resonators, Keyboard, Magnets, and boards, complete ready to install for $75.00. The only additional expense is about $2.00 for wire and about one days time to mount same.

The above is a special offer and holds good for a limited time only, so ORDER NOW and be the first in your locality.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800 to 3810 North Clark Street
CHICAGO, U. S. A.



HAVE YOU SEEN THE SHOW AT THE GEM — SAY

Buttons
(Celluloid.)
They make a big hit with the children.
We paint any lettering you want and in any size.

BUTTONS and BADGES

That's our business. We make them.
We also make Fobs, Canes and Pennants.
These make good souvenirs. Send for List.
To give full information at first writing, state explicitly what you want and quantity.

AMERICAN BADGE CO.
Factory, 141-143 Michigan St., CHICAGO, ILL.

INTERNATIONAL FILM TRADERS

INCORPORATED

147-157 Fourth Ave., New York

The Largest Dealers in SECOND HAND FILMS
in the United States

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

Use Crystal Screen

Improves the picture 100%. A durable, fireproof, coldwater paint. Easily applied. Washable when once dry. Send $3 00 for carton enough to finish a 12x14 screen. Express paid anywhere in the U. S.

CRYSTAL SCREEN MFG. CO.
26 Gaston Building Dallas, Texas

READY OCTOBER 10th

Operators' and Managers' Handbook

By F. H. RICHARDSON

PRICE $1.50 POSTPAID

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
125 E. 23rd Street, NEW YORK

Ohio State Managers Take Notice

We have the exclusive rights for the State of Ohio

JEFFRIES-JOHNSON FIGHT PICTURES

Playing to phenomenal business wherever shown. We will rent, play on percentage, or sell you the exclusive right to any city or territory.

Write or Wire

A. & J. Co. - - 318-5th Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa.

SPECIAL ROLL TICKETS

The Big Ticket. Any Printing Any Colors.

5,000	- - - -	$1.25	20,000	- - - -	$4.60	50,000	- - - -	$7 50
10,000	- - - -	2.50	25,000	- - - -	5.50	100,000	- - - -	10.00

Get the Samples — Stock Tickets, 6 Cents

NATIONAL TICKET COMPANY - - - Shamokin, Pa.

MME. PILAR-MORIN,
The Queen of the Silent Drama.

(See page 682.)

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands.

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3¼ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building). Telephone, Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 SEPTEMBER 23, 1910 No. 13

Summary of the Week.

The Churches and the Picture 678
The Scenario 679
The Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association 679
Picture Personalities—Miss Trunnelle 680
The Moving Picture and Its Enemies 681
Man-About-Town on Educational Films 683
Lux Graphicus on the Silent Drama 687
Comments on the Films 688
Correspondence.—Why Vaudeville Was Called Upon—The East Side Standard—From An Exhibitor—Advertising Films—San Francisco Operators' Union Parade—

REMOVAL NOTICE.

The Chicago offices of The Moving Picture World are now located at 160 Washington street (Post building), Suite 307. Telephone Main 3145.

The Moving Picture World having recognized that Chicago is the Western center for motion picture interests, decided to enlarge its offices and open them as headquarters to all manufacturers, renters, exhibitors visiting Chicago, where they will find a general bureau of information, desks and stationery to write their letters, catalogues, trade papers, photos, views, samples, etc. Everything free to the friends of The Moving Picture World and a courteous welcome to all.

A Moving Picture Convention.

A NEED OF THE TIMES.

(First Article.)

"Picture Men In Congress" was the title of an editorial which we printed in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD a few weeks ago. We pointed out, on that occasion, that whilst the American moving picture field, since the lamented but not unregretted demise of the F. S. A., possessed absolutely no organization representative of the industry, yet in Brussels this very month there was called the first meeting of an International Congress of those interested in the science and practice of moving picture making. In other words, opportunity was taken to utilize the occasion of the Brussels International Exposition to get together the first really representative gathering of all classes of those interested in the progress of the moving picture. So far as we can charge our memory, this Brussels Congress is the first serious attempt in any country of the world to get together a really representative gathering of all classes of persons—we do not mean the general public—interested in the aggrandizement of the picture. In other words, the Brussels Congress was conceived in the interests of those with whom kinematography, animatography, motography, what you will—the nomenclature of the subject is not yet finally settled—either as a science or a business, is the pre-occupation of their lives.

Here in America there does not exist, as we pointed out a few weeks ago, a representative body empowered to pose before the world as having authority to take charge of and conserve the interests of all departments of the business. There is not, in fact, either a typical or a representative moving picture society, or institution, or organization in existence in this country.

Before we wrote this article we were at some pains to read through the volumes of this journal since its foundation, three and a half years ago, and expressly that part of the publication which deals with the F. S. A., the N. I. M. P. A., The Exhibitors' Associations, and the like. It is melancholy reading. Not one of these bodies seemed to grasp the essential fact that they represented, or sought to represent, a vast industry. The F. S. A. always was a joke and died as a joke. The other bodies, as we view them in retrospect, are only distinguished by inanity and stupidity. They have done nothing at all, and have done it very well.

Writing this at the beginning of the new Fall season, it has struck us as anomalous that an industry like that of the moving picture should be absolutely without any focal point of common interest, any trade organization, any representative body to which all concerned in the picture can turn for purposes of mutual help, co-operation and advantage. The F. S. A. is buried beyond hope of resurrection. The Alliance has been reduced to a condition of speechless futility. There is absolutely nothing doing, nor is there anything likely to be done, in the way of collective organization or co-operation in the moving picture field. The present probabilities of moving picture men getting together anywhere anyhow are about as remote as Sirius is from the earth. (Sirius, we know by astronomical reasoning, is millions of miles from the earth.)

This is the first of two or three articles that we are going to write under this same caption. We shall have achieved our object this week if we bring home to the minds of our thousands of readers, manufacturers, renters, exhibitors and the myriads of others interested in the progress of the picture that at this moment the moving picture industry simply consists of a huge number of isolated and therefore unsegregated atoms without unity, community of purpose or anything else in common. The exhibitor in Maine may on paper have something in common with the exhibitor in Los Angeles, California, but has no opportunity of comparing notes with him, outside of the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Each is sublimely ignorant of the other's existence, and yet their interests are identical. A few manufacturers on the licensed side occasionally meet, but that is about the only visible sign of unity. There are, too, spasmodic outbreaks on the Independent side and the desire to get together, but nothing very serious emanates from this kind of thing. Viewed collectively, the moving picture industry of the United States at this present moment is in an absolutely unorganized state. Having these facts before us, we propose in succeeding articles to point out some means for the periodical getting together of the whole of the industry in order that the moving picture business may be put on the same plane as other businesses which have representative organizations or bodies qualified to speak and act in their behalf. The second article on this subject will appear next week.

The Churches and the Picture.

Early last year, when the clerical antagonists of the moving picture were assailing it with a venom begotten of ignorance and prejudice, we pointed out that, properly regarded, the picture might be made a valuable ally in religious teaching. To our minds there was a perfect parallel between the lantern slide and the moving picture. Ever since the lantern slide became a commercial proposition, nearly fifty years ago, wise clergymen have used it as a means of conveying healthy religious instruction to their congregations and to the attendants at Sunday schools. The fact that lantern slides of unsuitable subjects may have been made has never militated against the use of glass positives in the teaching of religion. In fact, at the present time there is hardly a Christian clergyman throughout the world who does not use the lantern slide for religious purposes, for travel lectures, and, indeed, for all general purposes having for their object the moral, educational, ethical or religious uplift of the people. So the lantern slide early found its place as a weapon in the armory of the religious instructor —a position from which it will probably never be displaced.

In this country the attack on the picture from Christian and other ministers has been of a singularly fanatical nature. Time after time we have read utterances from the pulpit, and in the press, by ministers, who seem to imply that there is no possible good in the picture, which they refer to in no unmeasured terms as a demoralizing agency. We have almost grown weary of pointing out that while occasionally unsuitable pictures may have been made, and that here and there the subjects of some of others may be open to debate, yet, on the whole, for a long time past the picture production of this country has been in a healthy state, and that to a majority of them that are made no possible objection can be taken. In fact, as we know from personal knowledge of and personal experiment on the minds of the young, they deal with themes just as entertaining, elevating and clean as do the majority of books issued from the press.

A feature of the picture business of this country, and other countries, within the last year or two has been the production of a large number of religious subjects, reverently treated. In reference to these we some time ago took the stand that these religious pictures were possibly out of place in picture theaters, which are mainly devoted to the purpose of secular entertainment. We also pointed out that these religious subjects might probably find their most fitting use in the hands of the clergy, who could exhibit them in their churches, Sunday schools and the like. Moreover, if there were evidence of a strong demand from the churches, chapels, and Sunday schools for religious subjects in moving pictures, the manufacturers would probably make special efforts to meet that demand. As it is, a glance through the various film manufacturers' lists will show that there are already numerous religious subjects available.

We are glad to have evidence of a more tolerant attitude towards the picture on the part of some of the religious bodies. Our contemporary, "The Detroit Free Press," in a recent number contained the following editorial:

The Bible in Moving Pictures.

After damning the moving picture shows, the churches are taking them up. This, after all, is the logical thing. There is really no good reason why religion should not be made the means of the salvation of an institution as well as of an individual or a race.

The moving picture business is in its "infancy," or so its promoters say, and by all the rules of evangelism the time to catch a convert is when he is young and his mind and habits pliable.

The Detroit Sunday school men who are making the novel move ought to receive the thanks both of parents and of picture men. The former may feel sure that their children can have all the delights and comforts of the five-cent theater without its dangers, and the manufacturers and distributors will gain much through the moral tone the innovation will give their business.

One of the good features of the project is that it is to be run on "business principles." That gives promise of stability.

What we read in the Detroit paper we would like to read in many other papers, because then we should feel that the clergy, as a body, were disposed to take the same attitude towards the moving picture as they do towards the lantern slide. If they do so, it will be good for the business as well as good for the souls of their congregations. We knew one lantern slide concern across the Atlantic which always had in stock half a million slides, which were constantly in circulation, being loaned to clergymen and Sunday school teachers. Thus, it will be perceived, there is an enormous business to be done in suitable moving pictures amongst the clergy and religious teachers.

We are specially drawing the attention of our religious contemporaries to the attractive means of imparting instruction which the moving picture affords. Every clergyman in the country, for example, should possess Mr. Kleine's educational catalogue. Here he will find a perfect wealth of suitable subjects for Winter teaching. Then again, the Vitagraph Company have put out some good religious subjects. Pathe also occasionally makes a good religious subject, such as "The Prodigal Son." Biograph, too, have essayed religious subjects, or, to be more accurate, Biblical subjects. "The Detroit Free Press" draws a bow at a venture in naming some Biblical film subjects. Our contemporary is probably unaware that the "Lord's Prayer," "The Judgment of Solomon, "The Life of Moses," "The Prodigal Son," are among the subjects that are filmed which might profitably be put before religious audiences. The Bible, in fact, is a rich mine for the film maker if he receives sufficient encouragement from the clergy and others interested in using the moving picture as a medium for religious teaching and instruction.

New use for moving pictures. An operator threw his spot light across the street upon a bridal couple who were trying to escape without having the usual quantity of rice poured down their necks.

The Scenario.

Mr. Punch's advice to those about to marry, was "Don't." This piece of negative wisdom has become classic. It is applicable to so many things in life besides marriage. We feel tempted to lift Mr. Punch's advice in regard to marriage and apply it to the cases of the writers or would-be writers of moving picture scenarios and say "Don't." The path of scenario writing like that of matrimony is beset by many troubles, difficulties and disappointments. A young man once went to Douglas Jerrold, the English humorist, and said he was going to start a shop as an author. "Oh well," says Jerrold, "don't take down the shutters until you have got something in the window." Literature and Journalism are often polite ways of starving yourself to death.

We want, in this article, to talk some plain home truths about the scenario and the market for it. We would like every ambitious would-be scenario writer to obtain a copy of this article and read it. Better still, if we could persuade him to take notice of what appears in the ordinary newspaper on this subject, we feel we would be doing him some negative good. For the ordinary newspaper, we may observe, gives the ordinary reader a very ruinous and inflated idea, of the business side of the moving picture.

Listen, Mr. Scenario writer: there are, roughly, twenty moving-picture manufacturers in this country. We are probably near the mark in saying, that, all told, they release about sixty pictures a week. In the week ending August 20, the licensed manufacturers released thirty-seven subjects. To be generous to the Independents, they released twenty-three, making a total of sixty. From this total of sixty, however, we have to deduct the imported film manufactured abroad. Let us call the number of this ten. So in round numbers, we are confronted by the fact, that in this country there are released just about fifty film stories a week. Fifty!

The meanest capacity will see, therefore, that the field for scenario writers is very limited, so limited, that in the course of a long experience of this kind of work, we do not remember such a case of so much cry and so little wool. But the disappointed scenario writer, is like the disappointed author of other kinds; he makes a great deal of noise about a very small matter; namely the rejection of an unsuitable scenario.

The makers of moving pictures in this country are just plain business men. They buy their scenarios, just as they buy their film stock, their chemicals, their office furniture, their advertising space, because they suit them, or because they want them. We have spoken on this subject, with several prominent film makers, and they tell us that they can only buy about 2 per cent. of the scenarios that are submitted to them. This is the experience of magazine editors. We ourselves in the course of our experience, have had to reject hundreds of stories, novels, sketches, etc.—nay thousands—for the simple reason that the goods didn't suit the market for which we were catering. It was our business to know what the market, otherwise our readers, wanted; similarly it is the business of the film maker to know what the patrons of the moving picture theater want, and knowing that he is compelled to reject 98 per cent. of the scenarios presented to him. It is a case again of law of supply and demand.

It is not our business to teach a man how to write a suitable scenario. We might try but we should not be confident of success, because, as Lux Graphicus pointed out recently, it is a branch of work that cannot be taught. You can't teach a man how to write a short story, a novel, a play, or a book; it must be born in him. He may acquire the technique by close study, but the genius, the inspiration, must come from within and not from without. You have to plug away until it comes; and you only know when it comes by the available signs of acceptance and success.

Nevertheless, we do not want to be understood as writing with the object of discouraging would-be writers of scenarios. On the contrary we desire to encourage them; or rather those amongst them, who have the divine afflatus, in other words those who sincerely feel that they are capable of good original work. It is this feeling that led to the success of Clyde Fitch, Rostand, Augustus Thomas, Pinero, Maughan, and other modern dramatists, whose work is in demand. These people quitted the trammels of conventionality; were fresh, daring and original, and so they succeeded. Nothing hacked or stale comes from their pens. We fear that we cannot say as much for the disappointed 98 per cent. of the writers of moving picture scenarios. This is why they failed. On the whole, probably, it would be found that the proportion of accepted books, plays, magazine articles, etc., is just about the same as that of moving picture scenarios. That is 2 per cent. of the work submitted. Which all goes to prove that, to quote the Biblical saying, "Many are called but few are chosen." In other words, there is a long ratio between that section of the public, which thinks that it can do a certain thing, and the other section, which converts thoughts into performance. It is the apparent case of writing that is, using a pen across paper, which is responsible for so much of this disappointment. The transferrence of really fresh, original brain matter to paper, is, however, another thing. Originality is indeed a rara avis in modern mental work.

The Anti-I. M. P. A.!!!

At the weekly meetings of the various church denominational ministerial associations held in New York each Monday the following resolution is being introduced:

Whereas, While we recognize in the exhibition of moving pictures high possibilities for good both as an educational agency and as a wholesome diversion; and,

Whereas, Certain evils have arisen from their use as kindergarten in vice and crime resulting in the corruption of youth and in incitement to criminal acts; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we hereby record our emphatic declaration in favor of such legislation as shall establish a drastic censorship by the State over all moving picture exhibitions, and shall absolutely prohibit the pictorial exhibition by stereopticon, moving picture, or poster, of anything that is indecent, immoral, or of any acts such as arson, burglary, theft, prize-fighting, or any other acts that are plain violations of the law.

This interesting document deserves both a careful analysis and a thorough acquaintance with the "Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association," of 58 Broadway, New York. The document itself is a singular illustration of the homely question, "Why do you tell me you love me if you kick me downstairs?" For in the preamble the first "whereas" is truthful as to the value of moving pictures and suggests a love for them, while in the second "whereas" a common society misfortune is twisted to apply to moving pictures, in a statement at once untruthful, slanderous and libelous. Strong language in accusation needs strong language in defence, and anyone who says that moving pictures form a "kindergarten in vice and crime," just simply lies. Proceeding further in this "downstairs kick," the statement that they tend to the "corruption of youth and incitement to criminal acts" is a libel upon the upwards of six million adults and children of America who daily visit the moving picture places in all parts of the United States.

The resolution is an insult, carefully studied and most impudently administered. The whole moving picture community is neither an infant, imbecile or criminal, that it needs the appointing of a State guardian; on the contrary, it is to-day one of the standard enterprises of the country. We have already referred to the "common society misfortune" upon which the slanderous preamble was based and are quite ready to admit that "evils" crept into the ranks of the moving picture fraternity even as they do in every form of society, but we are glad to record that they were short lived, and respectfully claim for this paper that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD had a large part in the work of driving out the "undesirable element" and will continue this same policy of "elevation or elimination" without the advice or help of any outsiders, especially unwelcome busybodies and intruders. It may be well at this point to make our readers acquainted with the "Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association." In doing so we will let the chief speaker introduce himself, as he usually does in public, as follows: "I am the man of whom Mayor Gaynor said, 'You are a fool sent by fools.'" Doubtless he expects his hearers to at once become disgusted with Mayor Gaynor, but when anyone reflects that as a Supreme Court Judge, Mayor of New York, and a possible President of the United States, Mayor Gaynor stands high in the estimation of the whole world, our readers will agree that Mr. Gaynor knows what he is talking about and we are ready to take his measure of the Anti-I. M. P. A.

If we were to add our own personal opinion, it would be that judging from his general appearance and attitude, together with the bumptious egotism of the representative of the Anti-I. M. P. A., we cannot dissent from the judgment of Mayor Gaynor. While possessed of further knowledge of the true inworkings of this remarkable upstart company of reformers, we withhold same pending developments of which we shall gladly keep our readers informed.

Picture Personalities.

MISS MABEL TRUNNELLE (MRS. HERBERT PRIOR).

The young lady who is the subject of this week's Picture Personality is, it will be perceived, the possessor of what is termed considerable personal attractions, always a powerful asset to a moving picture actress. She joined the Edison Stock Company in January, 1910. Prior to that date she had done only a little motion picture work, but her stage experience had been considerable and varied. Her husband, Herbert Prior, is also a member of the Edison Stock Company.

Mrs. Prior took very easily to motion picture work, her extreme mobility of facial expression and her ready intelligence making it possible for her to practically score a success at the outset without much preliminary instruction. In the first picture in which she worked her personality stood out prominently. She is of that peculiar and attractive type which can cause a laugh and tear almost at the same time. As an example of what is considered the best piece of work she has done, we refer to "With Bridges Burned." Her part in this was important, running from comedy to pathos, and she handled it superbly. She is valued as a member of the Edison Stock Company not only because of her dramatic ability, but also because of her enthusiasm for the work and general co-operation in doing all within her power to make Edison pictures better and better.

In last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD we referred with great approval to a new series of Canadian pictures just being released by the Edison Company. Mrs. Prior took the leading parts in these picture plays of Canadian life, and ran up and down the gamut of human emotions with such skill and finish, that although we have never had the pleasure of seeing the lady personally, we decided that she must forthwith form one of our Personalities. Hitherto our Picture Personalities have been written from personal interviews with our victims, but in the case of Mrs. Prior, she quite won our hearts in effigy. So if we are not entirely content to write of her from what we saw of her on the screen, at least we are very pleased to do so. She is dramatic, humorous, pathetic, by turns, and all her work is finished and spontaneous. She is really a very active little lady, too. She skips about as occasion demands with great agility. Also she does not mind getting thoroughly wet through on a Canadian snow field in the course of a picture drama. Also she is a very admirable coquette and full of humor, as witness her work in a picture described elsewhere in this week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We are very pleased indeed to have had the opportunity of including this popular and talented young lady in our gallery of Picture Personalities.

THE CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES.

The splendid studio and photographic laboratories at Coney Island which have been growing under the direction of James L. Carlton, are now completed and in active operation. The efficiency of the laboratory equipment is already demonstrated in the improved photographic quality of the Bison films. In the studio the Reliance producers are at work and inside of a month we shall see the new trade-mark on the screen. Some time ago President Carlton and his associates promised the World an exclusive story and illustrations of the plant as soon as completed, but Press Agent Streyckmans has gone us one better and this week the story of the Carlton Laboratories appears in the first issue of "Film Fancies," a dainty little booklet designed to herald every week the qualities of Bison and Reliance films.

The Moving Picture and Its Enemies.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

Everybody, everything has enemies; a study of the enemies or of the enmity leads to a revelation or perhaps exposure of both the despiser and the despised, the hater and the hated. A former President of the United States was singularly praised and honored for "the enemies he had made," so that it is often possible to find it advantageous to incur the displeasure in certain directions.

Personal enmity is often the result of "envy, hatred or malice," while the enmity shown anything useful or material is the result of either ignorance, prejudice or egotism. Sometimes a bitter, non-progressive spirit is the cause for much opposition, but it should be remembered that many of these things are those negations in life which have always poured sand on the hub of the wheels of progress and applied the brake to many an uphill climb.

It is an unfortunate thing that these conditions exist unless their "evil can be turned to good," for as the storm strengthens the trees of the forest, or opposition encourages the hero, so that which is worthy gains strength, courage and purity by the conflict, and as conqueror comes forth from the conquest with laurels which otherwise could not have been earned, making greater the honors of victory besides turning enmity to profitable account and using opposition to bring about the desired results.

It is this spirit that must dominate the progress of the moving picture; already has the kinematograph grown stronger and better as a result of opposition from without, and proper determination within its ranks. Strange to say, however, there are those who still consider (in spite of evidences and experiences to the contrary) that it is a part of their lot in life to be self-appointed critics and guardians of the interests of their fellow-men in the realm of the moving picture. We tolerate them because they are part of that negative adjunct to the human family, narrow by nature, prejudiced by habit, egotistical through self-concentration, that their opinions enlighten us to the extent of making it possible to learn how to avoid them.

We use them because they are really helpful to society in showing us what to avoid. Their very perversity is the evidence of an obliquity in their mental vision which enables those of us who cultivate and practice a clear-sighted, calm judgment to see aright; thus they compel us to use a discrimination which they themselves abhor. This class of people are common to all ages of the world's history; they are given to carping more at the present evil than showing interest in a future good; it is said of them in the Book of Truths, that they would pluck up the weeds at all cost, even if in so doing they destroyed the good; they are filled with zeal, but have little knowledge and know not how to discriminate and help, and as a result they are more destructive than constructive. Again and again these peculiar critics and moralizers are venting their spleen upon the moving picture. What is it that arouses their ire? Are they jealous, envious, prejudiced or mad? They are certainly not reasonable, and it is very certain they are not thoroughly acquainted with the moving picture business in any way. If they read the MOVING PICTURE WORLD they are false to themselves and the public; if they do not read the MOVING PICTURE WORLD they are ignorant, so that in either case their judgment is dishonest. One of their deceitful tactics is to be constantly "harping and carping" upon evils and misfortunes in the early trying days of the moving picture business, many of which have been eradicated and only exist in the mouthings of these moral agitators. "Censorship! censorship!" they cry; "we want censorship!" Upon being reminded that to-day a most thorough and highly respectable censorship exists, they reply: "They are not of our appointing—we want to appoint them." Ah! now we have it—pure selfishness; surely, we are vindicated in our estimate of this class; they must "rule or ruin." Like children, if they can't play they spoil the game; and, like hypocrites, if they can't associate they vilify. Another of the methods of "our friend the enemy" is to be constantly predicting terrible happenings, direful forebodings, fearful prognostications; first everybody will become wicked, and then the whole world will be bad if they are not heeded. Strange to say, however, everything both in and out of the moving picture world refutes these evil prophecies, the kinematograph is daily growing more popular with the people everywhere, and more in favor with the highest authorities in education, religion, art, science and pleasure.

Having thus far dealt with the enemy of the moving picture in a negative sense, the writer now desires to take the positive position and change from defender to accuser, declaring that the enemy of the moving picture is

THE ENEMY OF THE WORKING CLASSES.

Throughout the entire world the moving picture theater has become the standard amusement place of that class of people who are the backbone of every country. Too long have these people suffered for lack of a legitimate enjoyment within range of their limited means; to them the kinematograph is not a twentieth century development, but a twentieth century blessing.

Further still, such a boon has the moving picture proved to the mental and moral powers of the people at large that it has been honored in the title of "the workingman's college." Beneficent characterizations such as these sound noble as compared with the vilifying detractions of the baser minded men whose epithets savor neither of reason or culture. In the next place, the unfair critic of the moving picture is

THE ENEMY OF THE CHILDREN.

Never in the history of the world has anything been given to the public that has so filled the life of the children with true pleasure, profit and instruction. We who are older look back to our delightful stereopticon days and see an advance of hundreds per cent., and, next to ourselves enjoying these privileges, rejoice that the youth of these days have such enlightenment and pleasure. The greatest friend of the human family is he who confers a great and lasting good upon the young people, and the greatest enemy to society is he who would deprive them of that good.

Again, the prejudiced censor is the ENEMY OF EDUCATION AND RELIGION.

The kinematograph is accepted as a necessary part of the equipment of every educational institution in the world; it is the greatest unversal disseminator of knowledge ever admitted in the halls of learning. While this also applies to religious as to secular education, the writer desires to emphasize the amusement sphere of religious training. It is an acknowledged fact that the theater, music hall, and other places have been for centuries a source of worry to religious teachers; in the moving picture place they have now within their own power that which is at once acceptable and satisfying and may be so controlled as to be absolutely free from criticism or other adverse conditions.

Finally, the moving picture is the

FRIEND OF THE IGNORANT AND THE UNFORTUNATE.

Authorities in charitable institutions and labor bureaus have hailed with delight the value of the kinematograph in its power to enlighten people otherwise within the dark clutches of ignorance, to whom the imparting of knowledge had by any other means proved impossible. The unfortunate in life, too, have found a friend in the moving picture, so much so that reform schools, reformatories and even penal institutions are among the first to ask for its benign influence, proving its great value in inspiring to a brighter future those who had found life's pathway hard. In cases of mental affliction where sympathy cannot help or pity assist, our valuable friend has lifted its penetrating light and wrought a cure hitherto impossible. While much more could be written, time and space will not now permit; but fearing lest the enemy in his rapid retreat should still point his evil finger of scorn to the few instances of positive evil laid at the door of the moving pictures, time must be taken to declare that in every case the victims were either possessed of vicious tendencies or surroundings, or they were weak-minded, morbid sentimentalists. We conclude by challenging any form of amusement to produce as proportionate few evil results and also as many positive good results as those derived by an average army of eight million people who daily in all parts of the world receive impressions from the moving picture.

Mme. Pilar-Morin.

We this week present our readers with a portrait of Mme. Pilar-Morin, who successfully produced the silent play of "L'Enfant Prodigue" at the Liberty Theater, West Forty-second street, New York City, on Friday, September 9. The critics of the New York press were unanimous in praising this wordless play, and the artistic manner of its representation. It will be remembered that recently we devoted two articles to the subject of the wordless play and the silent drama. Pilar-Morin's reputation is unique. She is by universal consent the chief living exponent of the silent drama or non-talking play on the ordinary stage; while in the realm of the moving picture her position as the Edison star has won her wide commendation in the pictures in which she appears. The New York success of "L'Enfant Prodigue" is bound to enhance her reputation in both of her fields of work.

MORE GOOD PROJECTION BY NEW YORK MEN.

By F. H. Richardson.

Some days since I, without the management or operator knowing I was present, paid a visit to the Manhattan Theater, Broadway and Thirty-first street, intent on verifying the report that the projection at that house was good.

I found it to be excellent, considering how little chance the operator had to put on a decent picture. The light was good and well handled, the screen free from shadows and the speed very fairly well regulated. I have set the operator, Mr. Norman Ek, down in my books as a good man, willing and able to "deliver the goods."

Really good projection was out of the question, however since there is too much unshaded light in the auditorium. Will theater owners never, never learn that all white light must—absolutely must—be shaded so that the rays will not strike the curtain directly? In the Manhattan there are many ornamental incandescent lights as well as an immense illuminated window which is in itself very beautiful. Yes this window is beautiful, as are the ornamental lights, but the audience does not go to a theater to look at windows however beautiful, nor to gaze on ornamental incandescent globes. It pays its money to see what is on the screen and stage. The Manhattan has up-to-date operating room equipment and good operators, but of what use is all that if its effect be nullified by a light-struck curtain?

Last week I found what at first glance appeared to be a curiosity. Walking along Amsterdam avenue near 150th street I spied an unlighted sign bearing the legend "Motion Pictures." At the entrance, on neat easels, were a few posters, but nary a front light other than the ordinary lights of the stores on either side.

Exploring what appeared to be the entrance to an ordinary office building I rubbered around and discovered a stair, half way up which was a sign relating the fact that children under 16 would not be admitted without accompanying parent. This sounded theatery so we mounted the stair at the head of which, out of sight from below, was the box office. Purchasing a ticket (admission 10 cents) we climbed more stairs and found an immense, absolutely undecorated hall, plain even to ugliness, containing 299 ordinary dining chairs, with room for a thousand. And now comes the surprise. We looked, rubbed our eyes and looked again. Yes, it was a fact all right! Every one of those 299 chairs were filled and many were standing, awaiting their turn for a seat! I sized the whole thing up again, looked at the barn-like room and said to myself, well, there certainly must be a crackerjack of a show here to bring that crowd to such a place as this. Wrong again! The show consisted of four reels, mostly rather old, some of it very old, and that was absolutely everything there was to it. No singing, no vaudeville, no illustrated song and the only music a piano.

What is the answer, you ask? Good projection, plus very careful selection of programs. The picture was quite large and the screen itself very poor. The machine was a Power's 5, the current A. C. through one of the very oldest style economizers made, delivering, both the managers and operator claimed, not to exceed 40 amperes. The picture was brilliant and free from shadows and, considering the size of picture and amount of current, brilliancy was by no means to be expected. The operator, Mr. Bremner, is to be congratulated on the excellence of his work and the owner and manager (I havn't his name, sorry to say) is entitled to great credit in that he has been able to build up a splendid business under such conditions.

The moral is, however, that good projection will always win out. The people like and want the shadow drama but they don't, most decidedly don't, want shadows that don't belong in it or other things equally objectionable. Give them carefully selected, clean programs, properly projected, and they will be there with their dimes every time.

W. W. Bell is now manager of the George K. Spoor Film Exchange. Mr. Bell was formerly with the National Film Renting Company, Spokane, Wash., where he proved himself to be a competent man and possessing a thorough grasp of the business. Mr. Bell was one of the first of the exchange managers to appreciate the value of the Moving Picture World and many were the nice letters he sent us with subscriptions from his customers. We wish him all manner of success in his new sphere.

The Powers Company issue a monthly calendar with a portrait of Miss Pearl White, the Powers Picture Play favorite. These calendars will be furnished in quantity to exhibitors at cost price, with the name of their theater thereon. Quotations from the Powers Company, 241st street and Richardson avenue, New York City.

"HALLBERG" EQUIPS NYACK THEATER.

C. W. Borsdorf, proprietor of the Nyack Theater, Nyack, N. Y., placed order this week with J. H. Hallberg, New York City, for a double dissolving Motiograph moving picture machine, Hallberg Double Lamp Economizer and 24 inch exhaust fan. This is one of the most up-to-date theaters in New York State and Mr. Borsdorf is bound to please his patrons. He also placed order for two 4,000 c. p. flaming arc lamps for the front of the theater, which is a fine advertising medium.

SNOOPING AROUND!

Mr. Edison admitted last night that he has been a frequent visitor at moving picture shows. He declared that the newspapers should get after some of the shows in Newark, where the managers try to economize by giving poor light. According to the inventor it is almost as cheap to give good light and the pictures are greatly improved.—Newark "News."

While visiting a picture show a few nights ago I stumbled into a very interesting argument in which the chief debaters were the manager of the place and a patron. Occasionally I was appealed to as a referee to decide if a point was well taken and that is how I became quite actively involved in the controversy. I decided to give the main points advanced, space in this column.

* * *

It seems the patron was not satisfied with the program of the evening and told the manager so. The latter made some reference to some people never being satisfied, never seeming to get enough for a small investment, and trying to discriminate between good and bad shows without being qualified to do so. The patron retaliated by declaring that the time is fast drawing nigh when the departments of public education will give exhibitions of moving pictures free of charge and the managers of shows will then have ample time to reflect upon the results of failing to give the public its money's worth. This was thrown at the manager in the form of a warning that the public educational authorities contemplate putting the picture shows out of business. There is absolutely no justification for such an assumption. It is not only an erroneous conclusion, but also a very unreasonable one.

* * *

A movement has been on foot for some time to establish a course of free moving picture exhibitions in the public schools, but only along educational lines. Should any attempt be made to deviate from these lines, the project would soon fail. The public schools cannot be transformed into places of amusement and the people will not sanction any movement of that kind, nor will they permit it to be carried out.

* * *

The evening courses in the schools of the large cities and towns embracing stereopticon views have been very popular for years and there is no reason why moving pictures should not become equally so. When that time comes it will be clearly demonstrated that the school exhibitions have in no way injured the picture theaters. It may be conceded that possibly at the start the latter will lose a certain percentage of patronage, but whatever falling off there may be will soon be restored. It will only continue long enough to let the patrons of the free exhibitions learn that they are a part of a course of instruction and not an amusement venture.

* * *

It is noticeable that the public school course of free lectures best patronized are those in which stereopticon slides are used and the themes of the lectures are travels and the customs of people of various countries. When the illustrations partake of the technical the attendances fall off. It is also worthy of note that the stereopticon views become monotonous and hold the interest of only a certain class of people—those who seek knowledge on certain subjects and have not the time or the opportunity to get it from publications. People of this class, as a rule, are not amusement seekers and are not depended upon by the regular exhibitors.

* * *

It was contended that the regular exhibitors claim their shows are educational and that the claim is either a subterfuge or the shows are on a line with the proposed free exhibitions. The point is not well taken. Well regulated, clean-cut picture shows are educational, but not to the extent of the proposed courses. They are not educational in a technical sense. Most people fail to grasp the term "educational." They seem to think it applies only to travel and industrial subjects. A picture story that contains a moral is equally instructive, and a good comedy will frequently place itself in the same rank, and yet neither of the pictures would be appropriate for a public school course.

* * *

There is another distinguishing feature. In a well regulated show "props" are indispensable. In the others, the lecturer will be. There are times, particularly when travel and industrial views are shown, when the lecturer is a very valuable addition to the regular slides. But in order that the real purposes of the free exhibitions may be acquired, there must be a lecturer to convey to the audience the real intent of the display upon the screen. This cannot be adequately done with announcements. Attempts in this direction would result in either the crowding out or curtailing of illustrations, or a tedious dragging out of the subject.

* * *

I have given the proposed public school exhibitions much thought and cannot see any reason for apprehension on the part of the show managers as to serious effect upon their business. I am inclined to the belief that the free exhibitions will benefit the other places. It is an established fact that lectures in the public courses on certain plays have been an incentive to attendance at theaters where the plays were produced. The lectures created a desire to see the plays as staged. Is it not quite natural to assume that the free exhibitions will create a desire on the part of the patrons to see more moving pictures?

* * *

If only certain subjects will be appropriate for the public school exhibitions, where is the supply coming from? Its source will be educational scenarios and the subjects will be made to order. There is a great field for this line of work. The travel views will not be limited to scenes of travel in the various countries and the customs and industries of the inhabitants. The people of New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and other large cities will be shown views taken in their own homes that will be as fully instructive as the best of the others. Subjects bearing upon sanitary conditions, the fire, police and charity departments, will afford a vast quantity of material; and the people of New York will have an opportunity to see how these various municipal departments are conducted in other cities. In a lecture course such subjects will be very popular. In a regular exhibition a few of them will go a long way. They are looked upon as too dry for the amusement field.

* * *

At a most opportune moment the following letter is placed upon my desk:

"Man-About-Town—In visiting the moving picture houses I frequently see views of fire and police departments in action, but all I have seen are views taken in foreign countries. It strikes me as very strange that the people of this country have not the enterprise and pride of those of foreign lands. Why don't we show our friends across the waters what we have and can do?"

* * *

I admire the spirit of the correspondent, but regret that I must say he is behind the times. The field he suggests was adequately covered several years ago by both domestic and foreign picture workers. Parades and drills by fire and police departments, and also the military, army and navy, have been done over and over again. National pride is as strong in this country as it is in others, but it cannot be measured by the popularity of subjects the writer suggests. New York City raves with pride annually over its police parade, but pictures of it do not add anything to the box-office receipts. The taking of moving pictures of such events involves expense which national pride does not defray. Such pictures can only be made successful when the parade, or whatever the event may be, is photographed in its entirety and every man taking part in it can see his portrait reflected upon the screen. It does not sound very nice, but it is nevertheless true that in such matters personal feelings overbalance national pride. If you doubt this, ask some of the manufacturers who have made topical subjects and exhibitors who have paid a bonus for the privilege of getting first chance to exhibit them.

"The Thanhouser News" is the title of a little house organ issued by the Thanhouser Company, of New Rochelle. It is published in the interests of the exhibitor and the exchange man, and it gives the synopsis of the Thanhouser pictures week by week as well as other interesting items.

VITAGRAPH NOTES.

J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, who has been combining business with pleasure on his yacht, has returned to the studio, brown as a berry, with some excellent outdoor and seashore films of rare and brilliant photography.

A wedding in a speed boat going at 25 miles an hour was a subject of much newspaper comment lately. The bride of this startling event was the ever popular Vitagraph girl and she was showered with salt spray instead of rice. The boat belonged to Mr. Albert E. Smith and it was followed or led by the equally speedy boat of Mr. Blackton, in which the camera man stood and turned the handle at the risk of his life. When some of the Vitagraph stunts performed this Summer are thrown on the screen the spectators will rise in their seats and cheer.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Mr. Newsom, proprietor of the Birmingham Film Exchange, Birmingham, Ala., spent several days in Chicago, looking over the "new things" and making arrangements to handle his greatly increasing business.

George Connell is the new "dope" writer in the Essanay offices, and Al. Sties has been promoted to the superintendency of the Essanay plant, succeeding Mr. Hamilton.

A. W. Goff, who had been managing the Kleine Optical Company's office in Denver, passed through Chicago on his way to Vancouver, B. C., where he will assume the management of the Kleine branch in that city.

R. E. Spoor sailed on the Lusitania this week for London, where he has accepted the position of buyer for the Williams Amusement Company, of Australia.

Kennedy & Hamilton, who, we are informed, will operate under the firm name of American Film Manufacturing Company, have leased the Phoenix plant on Orleans street, while the theater of Lincoln J. Carter on Sedgwick street will be used as their studio.

Another uplift in the moving picture business is in sight, in so far as scenarios are concerned, for our versatile friend, Elbert Hubbard, has written a scenario for the Selig Polyscope Company, based on his book, "Justinian and Theodora." Elaborate preparations have been made for the staging and costuming of this production, and we are anxiously awaiting announcement that the "Fra's" first film story is ready for inspection. Someone who knows told us once that the Sage of East Aurora could not be induced to write for less than one dollar per word. So who will say again that film manufacturers do not pay well for scenarios? We venture a bet that the one referred to cost Brother Selig a pretty penny.

NOTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

After the police had prevented the showing of the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures at the Valencia Theater, Manager Alex. Kaiser obtained an injunction against the Board of Censors and Chief of Police Martin from Judge Sturtevant. The writ is made returnable one week from date and in the meantime the Valencia Theater is doing a S. R. O. business. Upon the decision of the court the future showing of the pictures in California will depend, and also the powers of the Board of Censors to prevent the showing of any picture in the city.

The coolness of Operator Woodruff, of the Oriental Theater, on Dupont street, prevented a serious panic on the night of September 8. The theater was packed with Chinese and tourists when two Suey Sing hatchet men slipped into the seat behind Sing Jow of the On Yick Tong and shot him in the back, he falling dead in the aisle. The house was thrown into an uproar and Operator Woodruff immediately threw on the house lights and ordered the exits opened, thus preventing the frightened Chinese from crowding over the seats.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union paraded on Labor Day and, doing things in their usual first-class style, won two silver cups—one for the finest float in the parade and one for the union turning out the largest percentage of members.

The Emporium, the largest department store in the city, has been giving a fashion show. A reel of moving pictures and some 400 slides show the latest Paris fashions. Many thousands of women attended during the week and the exhibition was voted a success.

The Edison Company's agency in this city gave a special performance of their picture, "The Man Who Learned," to the County Medical Society and the City Federation of Women's Clubs and obtained many favorable press notices, the ladies of the California Club (who in the past have been noted for their hostility to motion pictures in all forms) being especially favorable to this one.

Work is going ahead on Nessar Brothers' new theater on Castro street. The building is to cost $7,500. Two Power's No. 6 machines will be installed.

The Congregation Beth Israel obtained a permanent injunction against the Premium Theaters Company preventing them from building their new Class A Theater on Fillmore street. This theater was to cost $55,000 and seat 2,000 people. The foundation work was all done and the steel on its way to this city when an ancient ordinance was uncovered which prevents any theater or place of amusement 100 feet from a church. The back of the temple came within 90 feet of the back of the theater. Hence the injunction.

ATLAS DOINGS.

There are moving picture directors who spend days in search for "spots" and situations, while occasionally we hear of one who literally tumbles headlong into just what he wants, without effort. Director Golden of the Atlas Company is one of the latter variety. One day Golden required a scene representing the exterior of a constable's office. He had arranged for the location, but upon arrival at the place, found the office closed, the officer evidently being away for the time being. Just next door, there was a magistrate's office and, nothing daunted, Golden instructed his people to go through the scene wanted, and the camera man completed his work before anyone in the office in question awoke to the fact. Later on, the picture was shown on a screen. A portion of the story told about a cruel officer of the law who ejected a poor widow and her starving children from their tenement home because the rent was due and unpaid. The magistrate was later invited to see the film, and when he saw the reproduction of his own office flash on the screen, with his name on the windows, denoting, in the story, the cruel man who dispossessed a poor widow, he was astounded. Fortunately, the magistrate took the matter as a joke.

Neatly framed titles is an innovation seen in the latest Great Northern releases. American manufacturers have always led in the taste shown in titles and some of them are really artistic. For ingenuity and artistic originality the Vitagraph film titles and sub-titles are most appropriate and tasteful in design. In some cases they are ornamented with natural flowers and plants and so well arranged they look as though nature had entwined itself in the completeness and harmony of the work. Dissolving, moving and unfolding effects are employed, as seen in "The Love of Chrysanthemum," all of which add very largely to the interest of, without interfering with, the picture.

Scene from "Engineer's Sweetheart" (Kalem).

THE ENGINEER'S SWEETHEART (Kalem).

The above scene is from a Kalem picture that is something out of the ordinary. "Rather expensive props," we remarked to Mr. Sam Long, referring to the engine shown in the picture. "Yes," he replied, "in this particular case we owned that particular railroad branch while the picture was being rehearsed and taken, and all other traffic on the road was held up. They may talk of expensive productions on the living stage, but what are they but stucco and paint and canvas. In the motion picture drama we give the real thing, whether it be a train of cars, a gold mine, a millionaire's yacht or his palace."

Yes, realism stamps the efforts of the motion picture producers of to-day. And they search for their scenes far and near. Mr. Long recently made a trip through Yellowstone Park and the great Northwest. Mr. Frank J. Marion has just returned from the wilds of Canada, where he says he was fishing and of course caught the largest trout of the season. But we opine that Kalem producers will follow up the trail and Kalem dramas and Indian stories will shortly appear, made in the natural settings selected by the two heads of the firm.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE (Great Northern).

All of our preconceived notions of how this drama should be done in moving pictures were set aside very gently, as we witnessed, one day this week, the film production of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" by the Great Northern Film Company.

Very naturally this play suggests to the mind all that is morbid and gruesome, which is a thing picture makers have been trying to keep away from, and it is pleasing, if not actually amusing, to note the manner in which the Great Northern Film Company have sidestepped all the unpleasantness that might be expected under the circumstances. In such a subject as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" one expects crime, and at least one murder in the natural course of the story. On our way to the exhibition we expected to witness several murders by the jovial Mr. Hyde, but we were agreeably surprised to notice the clever way in which the producer of this film managed to dispose of actual crime by his powers of suggestion.

To give the producer full credit for being a sugar-coater of crime, etc., we must mention at the outset, the originality of his idea in making this well-known story represent a dream. In the first scene we have Dr. Jekyll in his laboratory demonstrating to a number of friends a fluid that he hopes to perfect into a potion for revealing the hidden baser nature of man. As we all know from the story, Dr. Jekyll never entertained any party of friends in his laboratory; his concoction was a profound secret known only to himself. We were therefore puzzled at the outset about these visitors in the laboratory; but later on we saw the point, for after demonstrating the fluid, they left him alone and he soon fell asleep in his chair and had this wonderful dream of himself as Mr. Hyde and at the finish he woke up to find it was all a dream, which to our mind is a very ingenious way of putting this drama before the young people and the various "Boards of Censorship." In other words, everything comes out right in the end, and as we see the good doctor embrace his devoted lady love and greet his good friends, we are inclined to think that Robert Louis Stevenson might just as well have done the same thing without hurting his story.

We do not wish to compare the production with that of another firm that did it two years ago, for two years in the matter of picture making is a big handicap when it comes to comparison, especially with American film. The technical qualities of this particular film are quite above criticism. The light is perfect, the detail sharp and clear, the picture has a surprising depth for studio work, and the hand of the artist is visible at all times. The characters are entirely natural. Even Mr. Hyde himself is not so overdrawn that he becomes an impossibility. One can readily imagine the splendid opportunities moving pictures give for the well-known transformation of Dr. Jekyll into Mr. Hyde, and we may say that none of these opportunities have been lost in this picture.

The picture is very true to the story; that is, it follows more the actual book story than the play itself. This is better for the moving picture, as it enables one better to see the inward struggles of Dr. Jekyll against his baser nature. We see more of the life of Dr. Jekyll as it went on between his laboratory and his study, which were separated only by a door, but which was so different on the different sides of the door. In this film we are brought considerably closer to the author's own version than the stage play has ever come. We think it is quite the best representation of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" that we have ever seen, either in moving pictures or on the stage.

David Horsley, the Nestor of American independent film manufacturers, is seriously considering opening up in England, where the Nestor films are meeting with general approval. The ever increasing sales of these films, together with their modest popularity in other parts of the old world, may ultimately cause Mr. Horsley to enter the field there.

EDISON PROJECTING KINETOSCOPES AND FILMS AT BOSTON MECHANICS' EXPOSITION.

An Elaborate and Attractive Display.

At the Boston Mechanics' Exposition, to be held in Mechanics' Building, Boston, Mass., beginning October 3 and running to the 29th, is a big display of Edison Laboratory products. It will not only eclipse any display of its kind ever shown at an industrial exhibit, but it will surpass in size, completeness, novelty and attractiveness of arrangement all other exhibits of the exposition. The exclusive privilege to exhibit the products of the Edison Laboratories, Edison Kinetoscopes, films and accessories, Edison phonographs and records, Edison storage and primary batteries, and Bates automatic numbering machines, was secured early in the present year, and they succeeded in contracting for the choicest and largest space in the Mechanics' Building—the stage of Grand Hall, the largest of the eight halls in the building, with a seating capacity of 10,000. On this mammoth stage, 80 feet long by 40 feet deep, which dominates the entire hall and can be seen from any one of the 2,500 seats in the gallery, the marvels of the Edison Laboratories will be shown to the best possible advantage.

The entire stage will be enclosed by means of an ornamental front with plate glass windows and ends in the manner illustrated in the accompanying cut, which was made from a pen-and-ink sketch and gives but a faint idea of the attractiveness of the scheme. The enclosed floor space immediately in front of the stage has also been reserved and it is in this space that a complete line of Edison Kinetoscopes and accessories will be exhibited.

Over the main stairway to the stage an oil painting of Thomas A. Edison, 25 by 30 inches, the work of a noted Boston artist, will meet the gaze of visitors to the exposition. This entrance will be used for admission only, the two side entrances being reserved for purposes of exit.

Above this main entrance and cleverly concealed in the decorative scheme will be placed a fireproof operator's booth, from which Edison motion pictures will be projected upon a screen at the rear of the stage. The stage, which will accommodate 600 persons, will be transformed into a pretty theater for this purpose, and seats will be provided for the accommodation of the Edison Company's guests. Light will be obtained from an enormous incandescent cluster suspended from the ceiling, and a special ventilation apparatus will be placed in the dome of the stage. Shows will be given at regular intervals daily and will no doubt help to make the Edison exhibit the most popular and frequented point of interest in the exposition.

A platform 28 inches wide and 3 inches high will run around the wall spaces of the stage and back of the plate glass windows and front, upon which the various Edison products will be displayed and demonstrated. A large sum of money is being expended on both the exterior and interior equipment and decoration of the stage, which, when completed, will be the envy of the other exhibitors at the exposition.

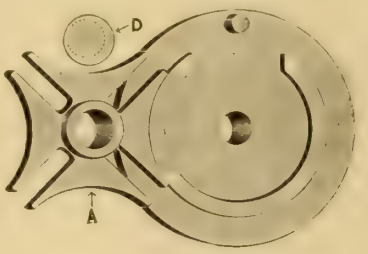
The attendance at this exposition for the past five years has averaged 25,000 daily, more than half a million during the entire exhibit, and these figures are expected to be exceeded this year, as all the roads running into Boston have made especially low excursion rates during the exposition.

Sales Manager John Pelzer will be in immediate charge of the Edison Manufacturing Company exhibit.

LAVEZZI'S SUCCESS.

"This machine is equipped with Lavezzi's Improved Star and Cam." That's the way A. G. Rider, manager of the Lincoln Park Theater, Chicago, advertises in his theater, since Lavezzi has solved the "hooked tooth film and star destroying problem" for the exhibitor. This is only one of the large number of testimonials and letters which Lavezzi has received from every State in the Union, from New York to Texas.

After running sprockets on a machine a few months, hooks begin to form on the side of the teeth where the film bears. These hooks form more on the intermittent, and as the film is fed along, it gets a jerk as it leaves the teeth, which cracks the film between the perforations, spoiling a good film in a very short time. As these hooks do not wear even, the star and pin wheel are also ruined, and a flickering, blurred picture is the result. Lavezzi's improvement, is to supply these teeth at such a reduced cost that all managers may have new teeth on their sprockets all the time, and cost no more than supplying the ordinary sprocket, which is a curse when allowed to run until worn out. Mr. Lavezzi has applied for a patent on his improvement, which should interest everyone who is trying to encourage the betterment of the moving picture business.



The accompanying illustration and explanation shows the most important part of the improvement:

A—Ground on all sides.

B—Eccentric pin.

C—Is hardened and pressed into recess, afterwards being ground, making the entire movement more massive and durable, working similar to the jewels of a watch.

Lavezzi's latest complete combination comprised of ground star, hardened and ground cam band in pin wheel, star arbor, and light improved intermittent sprocket, all ready to be put in Edison, Power's, or Motiograph machines.

ANOTHER NEW INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURER.

The Revier Motion Picture Company is the name of a new concern located in Salt Lake City for the purpose of manufacturing moving picture films. The factory, now nearing completion, is located on a tract of land comprising about fifteen acres in the southeastern part of the city. A studio 90 x 60 feet has been built in the factory, fitted with full glass top and walls that are removable; this studio is so constructed as to allow of handling with ease anything necessary for big productions. The dark room consists of a building 80 x 35 feet, equipped with the necessary appliances for the manufacture of 20,000 feet of film daily. Everything to make their plant and product up-to-date has been purchased by the Revier Company. The members of the producing company are the best that money can procure, and experienced artists have been brought over from France to appear exclusively in Revier film plays. Salt Lake Valley was selected because of the abundance of natural scenery. In this locality every conceivable picture can be taken that requires for its setting natural scenery. We are anxiously awaiting the release of a film taken in the land of Brigham Young.

To Mr. Eugene Bernstein, the renowned Russian pianoforte soloist, I take off my hat. He demonstrated to me the other day that it is practicable for a musician of the highest eminence to enter so thoroughly into the action that takes place on the moving picture screen, that he can sit at his piano by the hour at a stretch and interpret on the instrument all the action portrayed, all the emotions exhibited on the screen, and in such a masterly manner that the effect on the minds and emotions of the audience shall be perfect in its synchronism of musical expression and photographic movement. One of these days, when the moving picture reaches its apotheosis we shall have, besides the picture per se, sound and music working in synchronous harmony.

* * *

Of course, I did not hear Bernstein playing to pictures. No! No! But I would like to. A magnificent instrumentalist and an intuitive artist, I would like him at the piano when, let us say, a Pathe French drama, a Biograph comedy, or a Gaumont pastoral is being shown on the screen. My word! How Bernstein would make us feel the sentiment, the emotions, the actions that are being shown in the picture. It is men of the type of the eminent pianoforte soloist that we want at the piano in moving picture houses—if we could get them. I myself would like to have Caruso come and sing to me in my apartment at night. But I could not afford Enrico any more, I suppose, than the ordinary moving picture theater could afford Eugene Bernstein. Eminence deserves its reward. Look at me! I'm eminent, and see how well I look on eminence. It is a fine thing, believe me.

* * *

Of course I heard Bernstein at the production of "L'Enfant Prodigue" at the Liberty Theater, New York City, on Friday, September 9. "The Prodigal Son," to give it its English title, is, we all know by this, a play without words. As the reader already has been told, it is a French version of the Biblical legend. The play is acted and not spoken. It is also needless to point out that Mme. Pilar-Morin is the "Prodigal Son." Nellie Grant, Regina Weil, J. R. Ardizone, H. Scarborough and J. Kilgoor were in the cast of this famous play, which last week achieved a great triumph before one of the most critical and appreciative audiences ever gathered together in a New York theater. It is enough to say that Pilar-Morin had twenty-eight curtain calls; that there were volumes of applause, heaps of flowers and all the other gratifying marks of popularity. In short, the production was a huge success.

* * *

I was so absorbed in the story that I had no time to look around the large house, but I am told that there were many moving picture actors and actresses present, studying the silent acting on the stage. This is as it should be. Other opportunities of doing so will recur, because I understand that "L'Enfant Prodigue" is to find a fixed place in the regular New York theatrical bill. It will be seen in the country in other large cities during the year. Probably it will go on a world tour. It deserves to, for it is a classic. It seemed last Saturday morning that the New York daily newspapers competed with one another in their laudatory writings over a discovery made by the Moving Picture World many months ago, namely, that Mme. Pilar-Morin was the most renowned pantomimist in the world and that "L'Enfant Prodigue" was the greatest silent play in existence. Dear brethren of the New York press, we, of the Moving Picture World, knew this all along!!

* * *

Aside of the fact that I had a delightful afternoon's entertainment, my interest in the performance consisted of a demonstration of the perfect manner in which voiceless acting could be presented to the public, and then of the equally perfect manner in which instrumental music could supplement the acting. It was a perfect conjunction of action and illustrated music. This is what we all want to see in a moving picture theater. Time after time there have been printed in this paper articles urging the necessity of suiting the music to the picture. But how often is this done in a moving picture theater? Very, very seldom.

* * *

Some of the music served up in moving picture theaters is ludicrous, having no regard to the subjects which are being thrown on the screen. It is not long ago since I witnessed a religious picture to which dance music was played. Then there was the Vitagraph "Elektra." "Elektra" is, in all conscience, a tragic enough theme. But what is to be said of the intelligence of a pianist or the manager who would accompany such a picture with music such as you might hear in a Broadway musical comedy house? The thing, of course, is absurd.

* * *

The picture will never be presented to the public in its highest development unless, like "L'Enfant Prodigue," it has suitable music accompanying every action, every movement, every emotion. To my mind it is better to have no music at all with these pictures than to have unsuitable music. Best of all, however, would it be for moving picture managers, exhibitors and musicians all over the country to profit by the lesson that I am endeavoring to convey this week, namely, that if it is possible to accompany a three-act silent play with perfect illustrative music all the afternoon, it is equally possible to treat individual pictures in a similar manner.

* * *

I shall never forget my last Friday afternoon's experiences. I hope that they may be duplicated in other forms in moving picture theaters of the future. I sat quite near the pianist and quite near enough to the stage to watch every gesture of the actors and actresses. I hardly knew which to admire most: the perfect art of the performers on the stage, or the readiness with which Bernstein anticipated what was coming next and the faultless manner in which he extracted Wormser's beautiful music from the instrument in front of him. The performers on the stage did not talk. All the talking was done by the piano under Bernstein's masterly hands. In all my moving picture experiences I have never had a more delightful, satisfying and satisfactory entertainment.

THE PICTURE IN THE SCHOOL.

Several members of the Board of Education have under consideration the adoption of moving pictures to teach geography in the public schools. The stereopticon lanterns are already used in many of the schools and are considered successful.

"It is only a question of time when we will be using moving pictures in our schools to teach such subjects as geography and history," says Dr. Charles Kuhn, president of the Board of Education and head of the Detroit Child Study Commission.

"We already have many of the schools equipped with stereopticon lanterns and we have a collection of slides that will rank with any in the country.

"It is much easier to impress a thing on a child's mind by letting him see it than it is by reading it to him or having him read it. We have found in the several terms in which we have used the lanterns to teach geography that the subject becomes more real to the pupil and he becomes more interested in it than formerly. The moving picture is but a development of the stereopticon and I think will be even more efficient as an instructor than the stationary views.

"Another valuable use that may be made of the lanterns already in the schools is in connection with the social settlement work in various parts of the city. If a few public-spirited men who are capable of doing it would offer to give a lecture in connection with the pictures one night a week and if someone else would donate some music the poorer people would not find it necessary to patronize the cheap theaters, especially the young people. I intend to do what I can along that line myself this season."—Detroit "Journal."

"Alice in Wonderland" (Edison).—The many thousands who have wandered through Wonderland with Alice and have shared her strange and humorous adventures, will be pleased to see this film. Not only is it a remarkably good bit of mechanical work, but the dramatic features are developed so they seem even more surprising than they do in the book. It is one thing to read a story of wonderful adventures. It is quite another to have these same adventures re-enacted before one and all the salient points illustrated by adequate pictorial work. The Edison Company has been happy in its staging, its actors and in the mechanical work. For instance, the scenes where Alice shrinks are remarkably well done. It is a clever bit of work to reproduce that illusion so graphically. Then, too, there are all the old friends, beginning with the rabbit that had a waistcoat with a pocket and a watch to put in the pocket; the March hare and his entertaining friend, the hatter and the dormouse. They are all shown, and the curious way the hare has of doing things is reproduced so one may see exactly how such strange ways of living would look. Indeed, the main features of the story are brought out so plainly that they cannot be mistaken. The many thousands who have read the story, either when they were children or since, will appreciate the enterprise which prompted such an excellent production. This film should run more than a day. It is worthy a week's showing at the best houses.

"Lucy at Boarding School" (Pathe).—The story of a boarding school escapade which perhaps might just as well not have been told. It is true that these are only stories, yet there are suggestions which might be injurious to weak minds. In this escapade the offender is shown smoking cigarettes which are surreptitiously introduced. To be sure she is discovered and punished, but the effect of the example and the suggestion is there just the same. No punishment can ever efface the influence of that. The one who followed it might feel certain that she would not be discovered and would, therefore, escape punishment.

"The Belgian Army" (Pathe).—An excellent illustration of some of the principal features of Belgian army life. The picture gives an adequate notion of what the army is like and offers some good views of barracks, parades and other features connected with the military establishment. The army consists of about 48,000 men, which can be swelled to 160,000 on a war footing, and the picture here offered shows how effectively it is armed and drilled.

"The Cowpuncher's Sweetheart" (Kalem).—A Western story, the principal feature of which is some daredevil riding performed by real cowboys and real Indians. A girl is stolen and carried away by the Indians, or an Indian, in this picture. Of course, she is rescued and dire punishment is meted out to the Indians, but all the same the disagreeable feature of carrying away a girl is reproduced in this picture. If such a part of the drama could be suggested rather than depicted, it would be much better. The actual occurrence is very disagreeable and much too suggestive to warrant its continuance. To indicate that the girl has disappeared is usually sufficient. The imagination will supply the necessary details.

"How She Won Him" (Vitagraph).—A somewhat melodramatic story of how a rich girl donned working clothes and entered a working girl's place to win the man she loved, a poor young fellow who was too proud to ask her to continue the engagement which had existed before he lost his fortune. Of course, she won him. How else should the story come out? And then she surprises him by explaining that she is the owner of the business which employs him. Such stories are always pleasing. There is a pleasurable thrill accompanies the working out of such a plot. And apparently one never tires of them. They always bring applause. Sometimes they will do this when more meritorious pictures are watched in absolute silence. The drama is worked out with care by the capable Vitagraph company and the picture is satisfactory.

"Little Angels of Luck" (Biograph).—The child is omnipresent. Even magnates with their millions are not proof against them, and while this film is in no sense a true story, it represents what happens when children undertake to set crooked things straight. These two little ones insist upon seeing the president of the trust that ruined their father. The loss of the money was not what worried them, but they couldn't quite understand why their father was so indifferent to them. So when they found out they decided to take matters into their own hands and settle them, which they did in satisfactory fashion. Usually the child wins, and in this instance, while it may seem much overdrawn, it is merely another graphic illustration of the fact which everyone understands is true. When they bear home the letter from the trust president the consternation may be imagined. It is useless to undertake to describe anything like this. The heart interest is all through the film, and in these times anything, even a child, that gets the better of a trust, is a hero.

"Matilda's Winning Ways" (Lubin).—A characteristic comedy, representing what happened to an unfortunate masher who thought to win a former teacher by becoming a boy and attending her school. Her fiance takes her away, leaving a substitute. She discovers the possibility of becoming possessed of a real man, runs an exciting race with him, drives him into the water and then claims the life she saves. There is a combination of incidents which maintain interest at a high pitch throughout. It is acted with all the snap and dash for which the Lubin players have an established reputation and it is funny enough not to become dull.

"Baseball, That's All" (Melies).—If every fan encountered one-half of the difficulties which beset this unfortunate individual, the ball parks would present a deserted appearance. He was an enthusiast and brought a good deal of the trouble on himself, but perhaps that was no excuse for his employer firing him. When, however, his wife reasoned the case during the night with the emphasis of a pitcher of cold water, he becomes amenable to reason and decides that he will never again indulge. The exaggeration is humorous, of course, though the destruction which follows some of the antics of the characters seems scarcely warranted; there is nothing funny in destruction. The peculiarities of baseball fans are well known and this film has gathered the worst of them into one picture and presents them quite as much as a warning, perhaps, as a means for exciting laughter.

"Jim, the Ranchman" (Selig).—A Western rural story of merit, presenting numerous ranch views and offering a number of thrilling situations to maintain the interest. Like all the Selig work of this character this picture ranks high. The acting is well done. The mechanical work is as good as the best, and a careful attention to details does not inflict upon the audience features which are untrue to the life they are supposed to represent and illustrate. As a Western picture in a flood of that sort of work this one will attract favorable attention.

"A Mohawk's Way" (Biograph).—In so far as the peculiar characteristics which control Indians and mark their actions are interesting, this film is interesting. In some scenes it possesses something approaching a Cooper flavor. In others it falls below this standard. It emphasizes the characteristic which declares that the Indian's memory of friend or foe is equally strong. Further, it depicts very graphically how easy it is for the savage mind, which grasps only what it sees, to fall into the error of fetish, or charm, worship. The doctor here received no more than he deserved. Such unnecessary abuse and insults as he heaped upon the Indians quite deserved the punishment which was meted out to him.

"The Greenhorn and the Girl" (Lubin).—He was a greenhorn. Not the slightest doubt of that will exist after one sees the film; but he played the game well, and he got the girl. Perhaps had the boys suspected it was the boss' pretty niece, and not the old maid sister, he would have had rivals. But before they awoke to the fact the engagement was announced and the last chance had disappeared. One is ready to agree that the greenhorn was not as green as he looked. Anyhow, he won the prize they all wanted, and that rather disproves the stigma of greenhorn to which he was subjected.

"A Good Glue" (Pathe).—A picture which offers a new humorous conception of a great invention. This time it is a glue, and everybody gets stuck up. The congregation of the victims, each adhering to some cumbrous article, is very funny. But the unfortunate inventor gets his punishment when they are freed and stuck him above the door of his own house.

"Hunting the Panther" (Pathe).—A scenic film illustrating the methods utilized in hunting this dangerous beast. Probably almost everyone would much prefer to let George do it. But that is no reason why the film shouldn't be enjoyed as an instructive and interesting piece of work. It is safe to assume, however, that seeing this film will scarcely create any especial desire for emulation, no matter how morbid the mind of the individual may be.

"A Little Boy" (Selig).—Whether the cause for the mental distress in the grown man which made his mother's soothing so sweet is or is not common, the fact remains that in this instance, at least, the infidelity of the young wife was sufficient. And, after all, who else but the mother can soothe the fevered brain and calm the rising passions. Who but the mother that kissed away the tears when the little boy's heart was broken can smooth out the tangles of the grown man when his heart is broken? Selig has done well to produce a film of this type. It preaches a sermon upon the strength of the mother-love that ought to exert an influence upon everyone who sees it. It clearly, though simply, illustrates the power of the mother love and the great influence which flows from it through the lives of all.

"An Indian Girl's Awakening" (Essanay).—It is difficult to say whether one likes this picture or not. Some features of it are intensely dramatic. And perhaps when the white man's purpose in releasing the unfortunate girl from her purchaser is clearly understood it makes the picture seem better. Clearly he was not to blame because she became infatuated with him, and he did all he could to cure the infatuation by sending her away each time she followed him. Nevertheless, he could be nothing else but grateful when she saved his life. It is a complication of troubles, each one of which arouses the emotions. The poor girl's grief when she discovers that he has a wife is pathetic. The acting is particularly good in this and the photographer has performed his part to perfection. It makes a satisfactory picture and its representation of how women are bartered among the Indians is sufficient to arouse one's sympathies.

"The Appeal of the Prairie" (Pathe).—Education cannot overcome the influence of generations of breeding, and one is not surprised to see this educated Indian leave the civilization of the East and depart for his home in the Far West when he is thwarted in his desire for the hand of the daughter of the bank president for whom he works. The picture contains this important message: It tells graphically and convincingly the oft repeated story that it is impossible to overcome the tendencies of a race excepting through generations of training. The pictorial work is excellent and some of the scenes are particularly good, representing life and scenery in the West in a way that is not often seen. The dramatic features are also well developed and the story itself is told with discretion and sympathy. The picture of the lone plains is striking and affords a good impression of how they really look. The remainder of the scenery is quite as true to nature.

"The Great Secret" (Edison).—A lively story of an American woman who went abroad seeking the latest models of French corsets and was suspected of being a spy obtaining knowledge of the French military establishment. One of the three men sent to watch her falls in love with her and an interesting complication follows. He almost loses her, but ultimately she relents and accepts him. Perhaps the principal interest in this film is in the fact that its action is almost wholly on board an ocean liner. It gives numerous interesting scenes which represent what goes on on shipboard on the way across the ocean. The love story adds a bit of heart interest which helps hold the attention. The denouement is good where the woman shows her drawings and they prove to be only illustrations of corsets. The consternation of the officers is laughable. Withal it is a good film, and the novelty of illustrating an ocean liner adds to the attractiveness of the picture.

"A Powerful Voice" (Gaumont).—Purporting to reproduce the scenes which ensue when a sweet-voiced man exercises his unusual gift. All things bow subservient to his will, even waiters performing extra service for him. One may understand that buildings could be moved, but the voice that can move a waiter must be powerful indeed.

"An Easy Winner" (Gaumont).—A picture of a duel that is different. It is over a girl. Most duels are; but one of the so-called gentlemen is a coward and hires a substitute. The latter disguises himself to resemble the coward, and wins. But when the girl appears to congratulate him he throws off his disguise and still keeps the girl. Here is something new in duels and if it were general would discourage that type of fighting. The code has about disappeared, but it would have helped in the banishment if such absurdities could have been so graphically presented years ago.

"The Three of Them" (Vitagraph).—A story that will appeal to the heart. It tells of a childless couple and how their longing was satisfied. It is safe to say that there will be few dry eyes in the house where the film is shown. Moreover, it gives the lie to many who complain that children are nuisances. It is well that the yearnings of this couple were satisfied. The picture will go far and carry its message to distant points, and in each place it will spread this gospel of the love of children and will tell what it is to long for them and not have them.

"The Sepoy's Wife" (Vitagraph).—A drama based upon the facts of the Sepoy uprising in India in 1859, and the march of the Scotch Highlanders to the relief of Lucknow. The play is magnificently staged, and the scenes seem to be accurately reproduced. Some of the fighting is altogether too realistic for comfort. The scenes when the fight with the garrison is in progress are about as real as one cares to see on the screen or anywhere else. The Sepoy's wife is a well developed, well played character. Perhaps the English doctor represents a type that really had much to do with that uprising and were indirectly responsible for much of the disturbance of those times. A picture like this often sets one thinking and considering the various impressions and influences which flow from the action of certain men, or a certain type of men. And not infrequently such disturbances are fostered by the arrogant appearance or actions of those in authority.

INDEPENDENT.

"A True Indian Brave" (Bison).—A frontier picture presenting scenes which might easily have occurred in very many places. The most attractive feature of this one is where the Indian and the maiden escape from the hands of the men who would have lynched them. Of course it was all right for white men to insult an Indian girl. What right had an Indian girl to have any feeling about such things anyhow? But when she defended herself, assisted by her lover, then there was trouble and the whole settlement turned out to lynch them. Fortunately they escaped. Perhaps the producer unwittingly gave a truer picture than he intended. He may have shown why some of the difficulties between the whites and Indians began. The scene affords opportunity for the imagination to perform its part and the conclusions will not be wholly flattering to the white men.

"The Doctor's Carriage" (Thanhouser).—A pathetic story of how a blind girl was cured because her sister hid in a doctor's carriage and presented the case to him so graphically that he attended to it. Then after the cure he married the girl. That is about all there is to the story and yet it touches the sympathies because the little sister insists that if she is allowed to visit the doctor he will do something, even though they are poor and friendless. And because her trustfulness was rewarded one feels as though humanity need not yet be given up as hopeless. The really warm hearts in any community are numerous. When occasion demands they respond, as the eminent doctor did in this instance. Such films are helpful because they make nearly despairing men sometimes hopeful, and as long as hope lasts there is opportunity for achievement.

"An Athletic Instructor" (Defender).—A bit of comedy showing what happened to a man who knew nothing about fistic encounters and had the temerity to butt in as an instructor in an athletic club. What the members did to him in fun would have supplied instruction for many an individual for a long time to come.

"The Cowboy's Courtship" (Defender).—It is one thing to lasso a wild steer. It is another to ride a bucking broncho. Both require a certain spirit of daring and a skill which comes with long familiarity with both creatures. A cowboy might do both successfully and still be conquered when a woman entered the case. This one was no exception, but he conceived the brilliant plan of conducting his courtship by book, and succeeded admirably until some of his fellows stole the book, leaving him gaping and mute just at the juncture when he needed his eloquence most. It is a humorous situation and will appeal to whoever has been similarly placed. The thousand or two hands, and the too many of other things, excepting words, are plainly indicated. But like many another woman she came to his rescue, and if they don't tell of it no one will ever know that she proposed to him. It is a racy bit of work and deserves the applause it gets.

"The Minister's Speech" (Film d'Art).—This speaker came near failing because his enthusiastic son utilized his manuscript for a cocked hat for his hobby horse. He discovers when he begins his remarks that his speech is missing; he rushes precipitately home, finds it and returns to the hall in time to deliver it and receive unbounded glory as his reward. It represents how such an insignificant thing as a child's hobby horse nearly ruined a great address.

"The Conscience of a Child" (Film d'Art).—The influence of a child upon a thief is well represented in this film. The simple trustfulness of a little girl not only caused a thief to return the articles he had stolen from her parents, but aroused in him a determination to lead a better life, and it is to be supposed that he did so. The feature of the film is the acting of the child.

"A Sister's Sacrifice" (Imp).—This film is different. Many of the Imp films have been. The girl is to make a sacrifice by marrying an old man who agrees to help her brother out of certain financial difficulties. Meanwhile the old man's son appears and the girl and he fall in love. Somehow the brother finds out that the girl is about to make a sacrifice, but is quite relieved to learn that youth has been given to youth in the world-old way and that there is no sacrifice about it. The story is good, well told, and the subject is made vastly interesting by its quite unexpected denouement.

"Ma-in-Law as a Statue" (Lux).—By an exercise of hypnotism she is transfixed and is placed in the position of a statue which has been broken. The daughter faints, but a douche of cold water brings back mother and daughter as well; then they all proceed on their way together after the angry mother-in-law had done some fighting to repay those responsible for her undignified predicament. A variation of the old joke that makes it seem at least partially new. Maybe if they could always be hypnotized there would be less difficulty, or fancied difficulty, with them.

"The Bobby's Dream" (Lux).—It was only a dream, but it scared the policeman so he determined never to do the same thing over. It was, of course, decidedly unpleasant to be frightened at such simple occurrences, but then he was off duty and didn't understand these features of every-day life. His bravery was enclosed in his uniform. It is not a bad film and supplies opportunity for a good laugh.

"Between Duty and Honor" (Eclair).—One of those films representing the exaggerated notion of honor which obtained during duelling days. This film is sensible in one thing—it represents both men as killed. Such pictures have little meaning in this country, where duelling was banished by the force of public opinion years ago. They do comparatively little harm where both men are killed, as in this instance, because that destroys the glamor of the bravado which goes with a duel, but nevertheless the screen would not be weaker if such films were left out of the programs.

"The Two Daughters" (Imp).—Hearts often grow cold under the influence of wealth, not through intention, but because it is hard for weak human nature to withstand the influences which surround the wealthy. They are apt to crush, if not entirely obliterate, the warmer and tenderer human impulses. The influence of gold is here represented by contrasting the lives of two daughters, one with gold and one without. Happily the cold heart is again warmed and the light of love burns brightly in a reunited family. A dramatic picture, strong in its simple presentation of a domestic condition far too frequent in every-day life.

"Captured by Wireless" (Yankee).—This is Dr. Crippen's case on the films. Its interest lies in its illustration of the fact that wireless telegraphy makes the escape of criminals more difficult than ever before. The criminals themselves do not matter so much. They are unpleasant incidents in the great drama of life. But as each succeeding triumph of civilization makes it more and more difficult for criminals to escape the consequences of their wrongdoing, wireless has proved an invaluable ally. Upon this fact depends the value of this picture.

"Robinson Crusoe" (Great Northern).—In more ways than one this picture is praiseworthy. For example, it would hardly be supposed that tropical scenery could be reproduced in Denmark with such fidelity. Yet there it is and its success is as certain as though it was actually made among the jungles it is supposed to represent. And there is Robinson Crusoe, the friend of every boy who ever read a story, as fresh and perennial as when he first began. There is Friday, too, and other features of the story followed as closely as the great condensation required permits. The producer has done well in placing this upon the films. He has selected those scenes and incidents which form such a considerable part of the story, the pivotal scenes, one may say, and has depicted them with fidelity to the original. The result is an excellent reproduction of the story and a faithful adherence to the traditions with which every boy is familiar. The picture must prove popular. It couldn't well do otherwise. It is worked out with care, with close attention to the details, and represents the best in this sort of work. It was almost an inspiration to reproduce this. It will prove popular with everyone familiar with the story.

"For the Girl's Sake" (Powers).—A story of love and duty, in which love conquers and to save a girl from shame a man allows a much-wanted prisoner to escape. The sheriff, who is in love with the girl, and the prisoner was her own father, agrees with the man who allowed him to escape. It is a heart story, but there is no struggle about justice and love conflicting. The man decides what to do and does it. The father and daughter do not recognize each other.

"The Telltale Perfume" (Powers).—A rather startling picture, dealing with the scheme of a spy to obtain possession of important papers. The scene is laid in Cuba, and a handsome adventuress is the main figure in the drama. Her scheme fails, however, because of a peculiar perfume which tells plainly enough who it was that took the papers from the box. It is a surprising denouement when the major appears just as the papers are to be handed over to the spy.

"A Day of Pleasure" (Powers).—Perhaps this is an exaggerated presentation of a picnic, yet probably a good many who see it will recall one or more similar experiences. Maybe no one had them all, but dogs have chased picknickers, boys have fallen from trees and boats have tipped over. The Jarr family was seriously jarred by having all these things happen, and then to make the situation still worse a tramp appears and disposes of the lunch, and when Pa Jarr remonstrates he makes it extremely interesting for the whole Jarr family.

"Tangled Lives" (Thanhouser).—A dramatic recital of what might occur, provided circumstances were propitious, or otherwise, as the case might be. The tangle in these lives becomes so complicated that only the death of the one chiefly responsible for it can untie the twists which make themselves so conspicuous. Fortunately the innocent woman is spared the horror of her former husband's death, while her lover can at last feel sure that she really belongs to him. It is a graphic illustration of conditions which might arise at almost any time, and develops an intensely dramatic story as it proceeds.

"DIXIE," A DOWN-SOUTH DRAMA (Imp).

Perhaps it may have been because it was "Imp" night that the waiting line in front of the Fourteenth Street Theater extended down the street farther than usual. I'll bet there are times when Bert Rosenquest wishes his roomy theater was twice as big. But then he would be wanting an "Imp" every night. He certainly would if they were all like "Dixie." And "Dixie" is an Imp film. It was the piece de resistance of the evening. From the time that the clever curtain effect announced the title until the Imp tailpiece faded from the screen the audience was all eyes and ears—eyes for the well-acted and stirring scenes and ears for the appropriate music. "Dixie" is a war drama and the pianist softly played patriotic airs and the drummer cleverly simulated the sounds of the battle scenes. And they were good scenes, probably the biggest and most successful thing yet staged by the Imp people.

A novel and very attractive feature of this film is that the sub-titles are composed of bars of music with the words of the song "Dixieland." Probably in some theaters the audience will join in singing these verses. It should be encouraged. But we at the Fourteenth Street Theater were treated to something better. A mixed quartette behind the screen did the singing and did it well. We in the audience simply applauded.

Tell me, why is it that a film that receives unusual applause is not repeated, when a very slight round of applause will bring back some vaudevillian to torture us longer with his wiggly dancing or stale jokes?

"Dixie" was applauded with unusual vigor for a film, and it deserved it, for it is a clever bit of work and the Imp people deserve credit for their originality. A few more of these brilliant ideas, Tom Cochrane, and you will find the new Imp factory as inadequate to turn out the orders as Bert Rosenquest's theater is to contain the crowds.

THE STROLLER.

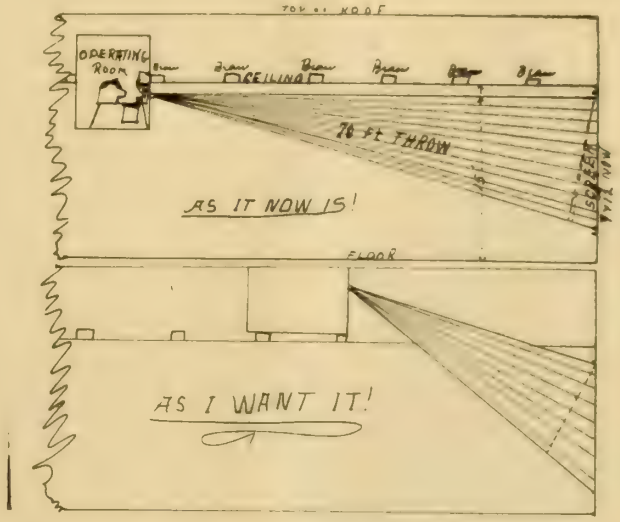
The Optics of the Picture. George M. Pringle, 930 Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn., sends in a communication that will "hold us all for quite a spell," I guess. He writes as follows: "I have been an interested reader of your valuable department and am sometimes amused, but generally benefited. Even though some letters be rather simple they usually show thought and a desire to learn. And now, with your permission, I will break into The Column on the lens question. If I prove to be in the wrong, I shall no doubt be set right; if it chance that I am correct, I shall benefit others. I have a number of catalogues from manufacturers and have seen in letters from others, yourself included, this statement: 'There is an intimate relation between the condensers and the objective which is often disregarded.' Thus far they go, and stop, leaving we poor seekers after knowledge in the position of Mahomet's coffin. I am convinced that the statement as set forth is true and will proceed to give my views on the question. If right, it will help others; if wrong, I cannot learn too much. Washington, D. C.'s little experiment, you notice, upset all the prevailing theories as to lens action. It is generally conceded that the picture is inverted at the point of crossing of the light rays within and between the two factors of the objective. Now, Mr. Richardson, you have been on the road and beyond a doubt have removed the back lens to get a different size picture on a certain throw. You have done this, as have most of the old-timers. Does this one thing not effectively dispose of the contention that the picture inverts within the objective lens? If it does not, then let us take it from another angle: If the objective really inverts the picture it will invert reading matter when looked at through it. Take an objective lens, any focus, and look at this letter through it, holding it any distance, and you will find the writing to be right side up with care, either with the back lens, combination in or out. Now take a pair of condenser lenses, in their mounting. Look at this letter through them, first holding the letter close to the lens. The letters appear right side up. Slowly move the letter away from the lens and at about six or seven inches you will find the letters to be reversed! But, going still further, light your machine lamp, put in a slide and you will find it to have been inverted at about the same distance, viz., six or seven inches, long before it reaches the objective. Now you know, friend Richardson, and I know, that with high-class, finely polished condensing lenses, free from imperfections, we get a much better picture than is possible with the ordinary commercial lenses. Of course, there is an intimate relation between the condensers and the objective! They act in a combination, each having distinct duties to perform. In my opinion, you may, to a great extent, disregard the foci of condenser lenses (I use 7½ for all distances), but you must have the best quality. In conclusion, my opinion is that the condensers condense the light and invert the picture while the objective enlarges it to proper size. Just at present I am not engaged, but even were I, it would not deter me from appending my name and address, for publication, to anything I write."

Friend Pringle, I certainly appreciate your letter, as I have no doubt will many members of The Column family. I imagine there will be some few hundreds of operators peering through lenses next week. Never was the value of The Column for the interchange of ideas better illustrated. But to get down to business: If you will look back through my writings you will find that I said the E. F. (equivalent focus) of the condenser and the E. F. of the objective should, theoretically, be the same. This is impractical, however. Yes, I have removed the back lens; also I have used a single stereo lens such as the Pathe machine is equipped with; also I have seen an excellent stereo picture projected with a single condensing lens used in place of an objective lens. A series of articles dealing with the optics of projection is in preparation and will appear in this paper, dealing fully with this subject.

* * *

Shorter Throw.—Auburn, N. Y., writes: "We desire your opinion on the following: We have all kinds of room, but the ceiling is only 15 feet high. Above the ceiling the roof arches in a semi-circle nearly 15 feet from ceiling beams to roof in the center. There are large beams running across the room at the ceiling line and I have [illegible] the operating booth situated as per attached sketch; the second sketch showing how I wish to have it if it is feasible. We figure that we can cut out enough beams at the front to allow a throw of 39 feet. We could thus have a 12 x 16 ft. large picture instead of 9 x 12 as at present. Also the picture could be raised higher so that those on back seats on level floor could obtain a better view. Is the scheme feasible and what projection difficulties, if any, would we encounter? Can you answer this privately?"

So far as the building end is concerned I cannot, of course, advise you, Auburn. Cutting out the beams might or might not weaken the building too much. You would not get so good a picture, however, and it would be distorted, the top being narrower than the bottom. A lens giving a 16 foot picture at 30 feet would be very short focal length and such lenses usually give poor definition; that is to say, the picture is not sharp.



More than this, you will observe that a line (dotted line) drawn square with the light ray from top edge of the picture is much further from lower edge of picture in lower sketch than in upper. Were the sketches drawn to scale the difference would be even greater. This means that aside from distortion caused by heavy drop on short throw there would likely be some blur due to top of picture being much nearer machine than bottom. I think I would advise, if it be possible, having a competent builder truss the roof up for at least 60 feet, thus allowing you to remove the beams back that far. You could then set the machine up, get an excellent picture and throw it much higher on the wall. Private replies to letters cannot be made unless a fee be enclosed. If I complied with such requests I would not have time to attend to anything else.

* * *

The Right Spirit.—Washington, D. C., writes: "I am a weekly reader of The World and especially devoted to The Column. I am not a bit ashamed to say I took my medicine without a whimper and tried to see if I could not improve my projection. I hardly think any Washington operator should fly off the handle at that two-page slam and the shorter one in The Column, September 3 issue. The thing to do, in my estimation, is improve the work and force the writers to come back in the near future with letters of recommendation instead of criticism.

"I would like to know your idea on the following: There has been considerable complaint that with certain machines in which the intermittent is enclosed in an oil-well, the oil gets out more or less, which is objectionable, of course. I have devised a method of filling the casing with vaseline, or a medium grade of Albany grease. Melt the vaseline or grease and pour it in or else use a syringe (cost 10 cents) and, after melting, squirt it in.

"It is a disgrace the way reels are treated here in Washington. Nine or ten-day subjects are oil-soaked, scratched and misused until they look like thirty-day films. Last evening I had a fifteen-day Independent subject in which were, by actual count, 27 mis-frames!"

That is what I call the right spirit. There is all kinds of hope for the man who can stand criticism like that—admit the corn and get busy pruning it out. I would like to shake hands with you. I certainly would. As to the vaseline or grease proposition it is good and I would by all means advise operators to take note thereof. Twenty-seven mis-frames in one film is pretty near the limit, I believe. It certainly speaks well (?) for the exchange owning it, which is supposed to inspect and repair every film before it goes out. Such a reel is a rank outrage. It is astonishing that your manager would tolerate such treatment on the part of the exchange.

* * *

Water Rheostat.—St. Joseph, Mo., writes: "I read an article on electricity last week, written by a man who claims to be a consulting electrical engineer as well as a manufacturer of electrical devices. Now of course no one may presume to doubt or question the statements of such an one when he writes on matters electric, therefore I have concluded that in the past I have indulged in dreams which have deluded me into thinking I did things I did not.

"This authority says that water has 6,754,000,000 times as much resistance as has copper and that one cannot use a water rheostat without salt is put in the water to lower its resistance!

"Now I thought I had used a barrel of water without salt for resistance time, time, time and again, but of course I must put all this down to sleep walking or dreams. How about it, Friend Richardson?"

I don't know, St. Joseph, but I believe I have read the same article to which you refer. You are mistaken in supposing that the gentleman said copper has that much more resistance than water. He said (if the article be the same) that a glass tube one-half inch in diameter and 10 feet long, filled with water, would offer that much more resistance to current than would a copper rod one-half inch in diameter and of equal length.

The comparison is both unfair and incorrect. Unfair from the reason that such a condition is not in any way analogous to conditions in a water rheostat, and incorrect from the fact that neither the purity of the copper, the purity of the water, or the temperature of either, is stated, though all these factors would have a direct bearing on the result of comparative resistance test. The statement may be true as applied to chemically pure water and chemically pure copper, I do not know, neither do I care—it being a matter of scientific interest only.

As to the necessity of adding salt to a water rheostat, the writer has used a water rheostat without salt many times, but it usually works better with salt since the water does not get so hot and the light can be controlled better. It must be remembered, in this connection, that no water is chemically pure—ordinary water, I mean. There are always foreign substances sufficient to materially lower the resistance of the water, and if it be very dirty, such as, for instance, Mississippi River water when that stream is in flood, salt would be highly undesirable since it would lower the resistance too much. The gentleman's statement would probably be quite correct as applied to a rheostat of chemically pure water.

* * *

Organization.—Last week, in replying to Boston, I said I would have something to say this week in regard to the Boston union, and unions in general.

The writer is a firm believer in organization and it is organization that rules the business world. The old idea that one cannot be forced to do anything in business was long since exploded. In the affairs of life we practically are "forced" at every turn of the game. We pay excessive meat bills because the meat combination (union) compels us. We pay this, that and the other excess because this, that or the other combination (union) obliges us to do so, even the undertakers' union taking a whack at it after we are dead. No man can "run his own business" to-day. He may imagine he is running it, but let him stop to think and he will soon conclude it is only imagination. The individual, except for very rare exceptions, is but a puppet. The only one who runs anything is the combination strong enough to be effective, and even it finds out that it must submit to being bossed to at least some extent by some other powerful "interest."

Why then should not labor also organize to protect its interests? At this late day no sane man denies the right and only those with axes to grind are opposed. Boston operators have perfected a strong union and I am glad to hear it. I hope and trust that, now that the organization is perfected, those who are at the helm of its affairs will be guided by wisdom. In union affairs, as in the other affairs of life, diplomacy is a tremendously potent factor. War should never be resorted to until absolutely all other honorable methods of securing what is desired have been exhausted. War is hell, and strikes are war! One of the gravest dangers ordinarily confronting a union when it becomes powerful through organization is the "exaggerated ego," otherwise a too large idea of its own importance in the affairs of men. Presuming that they are abundantly able to "lick the tar out of the other fellow," with one or both hands tied behind their backs, they proceed to formulate radical demands, go on strike and—go to pieces.

Just remember this, gentlemen: acquiring a fortune by building it up dollar by dollar is slower and more laborious than finding a bonanza, but mighty few bonanzas are found and many fortunes are built. Do you see the application?

Those who try to grab big things all at one swipe usually find their hands empty after the swipe is made, but he who is satisfied with a handful to-day and to-morrow is back after another one, layeth up treasure slowly but surely.

Operators' salaries ought to be and must be increased very materially, not only from the standpoint of justice to the individual, but also for the reason that high class men are needed in the operating room and that kind of men cannot be had at present salaries. Of course there are exceptions, but I speak broadly. To the Boston union I would wish every possible success, while at the same time advising it to proceed with caution, remembering the fable of the tortoise and the hare.

One thing I would seriously suggest to the various unions and that is a course of instruction to its members, the only trouble being in the securing of a really competent instructor. Men experienced in giving instruction in the art of projection, as well as being fully competent, are exceedingly scarce. Still it would seem that something might be done in this direction, even supposing it cost each member a dollar or two a week for a few weeks.

The Column is open to suggestions as to what might be accomplished in this or any other beneficial direction.

* * *

Memphis Men Organize.—From Memphis, Tenn., comes a letter saying that the Memphis operators have organized, the union being headed by James Amos, president; Charles McElravey, financial secretary and treasurer; H. C. Sloan, recording secretary, and James C. Tomlin, business agent. An attempt was made to class the men by means of an examination, but it was not what could be called an unqualified success. The letter says the boys look forward each week to the coming of The World to see what I have to say in The Column.

I managed Mr. Laemmle's exchange in Memphis for a time, and suppose I have a personal acquaintance with some of "the boys," though I'm not good at remembering names. Your business agent was my shipping clerk, however, and I can commend him as a hustler. I am pleased to know the Memphis men like The Column and look forward to it each week. Also I am glad you have organized, since in union are many benefits, always provided you are able to dig them out. There is the benefit of social intercourse, the benefit of mutual interchange of ideas, mutual education in your profession. Also there is the betterment of conditions and increase of salaries. What I have said to Boston, in another part of The Column, applies equally to Memphis. I wish you good fortune and all the good things possible. As to the classification idea: Um, well, I guess that, as a failure you will discover that particular proposition to be a howling success!

* * *

Graphite.—I promised several operators and managers to publish the address where a good grade of graphite could be had. Here it is: Montgomery & Co., 105 Fulton street, New York City, 'phone Beekman 890. Get the powdered, not the flake graphite and get only the best. It costs 35 cents per pound retail.

* * *

I would suggest to managers that a stunt easily pulled off, and one which could not fail to be popular, would be old-time songs—the songs of forty years ago. Songs such as "In the Starlight," "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," "Gathering up the Shells from the Seashore," "Don't You Go, Tommy, Don't Go," and others. The songs were beautiful, both in words and music. To the old they would be as the breath of Springtime; to the young they would be absolutely new.

This is a stunt that would stand much advertising and, unless I mistake, you could pack your house on the two off nights of the week, provided you went about it rightly.

* * *

Another Tension Equalizer.—F. E. Fredericks, manager The Arcade, Port Clinton, Ohio, writes: "I see by The Column there are a couple who think they have a device for equalizing the tension on film at take-up. I do not 'think' that I have it, but know that I have without a doubt. 'The test of the pudding is in the eating thereof' and I have been using the device since the middle of August and find that it works to perfection. I can use it on any make of machine and give any desired tension. The tension is the same when starting as when the film is all wound up, i. e., if you have a one-half pound pull when starting you will have the same pull on the film when at the end of the run. As to the cost: Well, it won't be very much. The exhibitor cannot afford to do without one for the price that will be put on it. We have a small town of 3,000 here along the lake. Our buildings are not as fine as you have in the city, but we can make you blush on pictures. Yes, I have been in the cities and know what I am talking about. Come over, Friend Richardson, and I will show you an absolutely flickerless picture. The drive wheel of my machine runs from 40 to 50 revolutions. I could say more, but this is enough for the first time from 'A pioneer in the business.'"

Glad to hear of your tension equalizer and more than pleased to know it does the work. Hope the various manufacturers will adopt it for, as I said, something of this sort is sadly needed. I have another device coming up, this time by a neighbor down in Pennsylvania. He also asserts that his device does the work and sends sketch, but it was rather a rough drawing and I could not catch the idea. Have written for better data. As to the pictures, I'm not a bit jealous. In fact I wish I might hear the same report from every city in these United States, and that the boast could be backed up in performance. I don't quite understand, though, you say the drive wheel of your machine runs from 40 to 50 revolutions (presumably per minute). You cannot refer to the flywheel and I take it you mean you use a motor and that the same is belted to the crank shaft, which runs at the speed named. Not knowing the make of machine I cannot say whether or no a flickerless picture at that speed is remarkable. In some machines it would be little short of phenomenal, and in others nothing out of the ordinary. There is no longer any excuse for flicker in a picture. Flicker in a picture nowadays denotes out-of-date equipment. To get the best results speed must vary between 40 and 80 revolutions of the crank per minute, according to the action of the film. Come again, neighbor Fredericks. We welcome you to The Column.

* * *

Picture Show.—Portage, Wis., writes: "Do you think a person putting up a first class, clean motion picture show, with nothing but pictures, could make a go of it in New York City? Would $2,000 be sufficient to start on? What are the city regulations as to building, wiring of booth, etc.?"

To answer intelligently would be utterly out of the question, Portage, since so very much depends on the individual. Then, too, your idea of a first class show and my idea of a first class show might be at wide variance.

One man might come here with $2,000, start a show and make a howling success, while another might come, secure an equally good location, building, etc., and make a dismal failure. This might happen to two men of equal knowledge.

But this I will say: The right man could succeed. Good management, good film service and good projection will win out almost anywhere, but for every house combining these three things I will show you at least one hundred in which one or more of them are lacking. My advice is, Portage, come on and look the field over for yourself. I could not and would not advise my own brother in such a matter. There are picture theaters for sale every week.

* * *

Interesting Letter.—Chicago. Albert Rider, Lincoln Park Theater, writes as follows: "I see you concede the banner to Chicago for excellence of projection. People who visit the Lincoln Park Theater say there is no picture in this city equal to mine for clearness and steadiness. Am running a ——— machine, 1908 model, with Lavezzie's improved star and cam. You may endorse without fear all he claims for it, in his ad. in The World.

"I see you recommend ¾-inch carbons. Can you advise where to get them? I have been looking for some for three years. Why is it you never say what make of machine it is you are talking about in your replies? Personally I believe it would be a great aid to all if you did so. Every manufacturer claims to have a perfect machine. The Power's Company was quickly shown the weak points of their new 6 and just as quickly they were made right when pointed out. Now to my point: If you used the maker's name in your replies it would spur them on to remedy defects, also owners of a machine of the same make would understand your reply and be benefited.

"Many of the boys doubtless have trouble with wire terminals burning off. There is no reason why they cannot remedy this as I did. I have the worst lamp there is, it being exceedingly light in all its parts.

"I procured a tap and die to match and with it made all the lamp studs and screws I could of the same size, thus avoiding the annoyance of using several different sized nuts and screws on the lamp. With my tap (size to receive a 20 (?) gauge wire after it is threaded) I tap out and thread the hole the screw that clamps the wire to the carbon arm is in. I then thread a piece of 20 (?) gauge steel wire (14 threads to the inch) with my die. The other end I file down to fit a 6 gauge wire joiner. In one end of the joiner I clamp my cable end and, after screwing the steel wire (3 inches long) into the hole in the carbon arm I bend it into proper position and clamp it into the other end of the joiner."

Your scheme is good, but surely you are twisted on that "20 gauge." That would be very, very small and would not anywhere near carry the current. Moreover, instead of filing it down to fit a 6 gauge joiner, you could double it several times and still stick it in. Maybe the gauge for steel wire is different from the copper gauge, but if so I did not know it.

I am not aware that I have recommended ¾-inch carbons, but I believe you can get them at the Electrical Appliance Company (I think that is the name) on West Jackson boulevard, not far from Green street. Their place is on the southwest corner. As to naming the make of machine, it is a shame that it cannot be done but I would have the manufacturers on me like a ton of brick in less than no time. As you say, such a course would compel certain defects in some machines to be remedied in a hurry, but they apparently don't want these defects even whispered about. If I can't name machines for their obvious faults I won't name them when they are commended and—there you are. In your letter you set forth the defects of a certain lamp. Now that lamp is not put out any more, I believe, but the maker still advertises other articles in The World and were I to name the lamp I would bet dollars to lead nickels that The World would get a letter hot enough to burn holes in asbestos. Foolish policy on the part of manufacturers, you say? It certainly is, but what is one to do? There is one machine, a leading one by the way, which has a defect so bad that never a week passes without complaints on that one thing. It would seem the makers would remedy so exceedingly bad a thing, but they don't and to all appearances don't propose to. Surely they receive many complaints when I get them by the dozens. Why don't I tell them of it? Simply because I would in all probability be told ao mind my own business (it is mine and yours and every other man's who is interested in good projection, but the machine manufacturer wouldn't be able to see that at all). To name the machine would make The Column very much more valuable. For instance: you set forth your method of preventing condenser breakage in your letter. I could not use it because to make it intelligible I would have had to name the machine and that would commend the machine and condemn the lamp. This I could not do. It is small, narrow minded and unfortunate, but it is the condition with which I am confronted.

* * *

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS

Protective Union, Local No. 182, I. A. T. S. E.

OF BOSTON

Headquarters, 724 Washington Street, Room 7

TELEPHONE 2074-3 OXFORD

If you need an Operator do not forget our Tel. number.

The Boston union has mailed this card to every manager in and about the city. The result has been most pleasing.

* * *

Mistaken Ideas.—A New York operator, signing himself "Your Friend Sweeney," sends in a lengthy communication covering several things. I cannot publish the letter because we make it the invariable rule that all communications must be signed with the writer's name—not necessarily for publication, however. In this letter "Sweeney" roasts the operators' school, claiming that its product is not good and that old operators would be wasting money taking a course with Mr. Taylor. He asks why it is that Taylor men get 1910 cards and old operators fail. He says I make a mistake in retaining any connection with a school. He cites one Taylor graduate who was a miserable failure. Says he puts a good deal of faith in most of my articles, but intimates that he suspects my sincerity on the school question. Says too many managers expect to get good men for low salary. Says that some managers are willing to pay for good men but cannot find them. Says the threatening letters I receive must emanate in an ignorant mind. Says the writer belonged to the old New York City union which had headquarters in Union square and was (he says) run by grafters. Says he became utterly disgusted and it is no more union for him never again!

Friend "Sweeney," you write a most interesting letter and I regret it cannot be published in full. But you are wrong, in my humble opinion, in many things, not the least of which is your determination to never again join a union. My advice to you is join the union of your craft and do it now! Because the union you name was (or was not, I know nothing about the matter) run by grafters, that is no evidence that unionism is not good or that you should not belong to one. This Column is not to either boost or knock unionism, but as a plain matter of business it is policy for the workman, no matter in what line, to belong to the union of his craft, even as it is policy and good business for exchanges and exhibitors to combine in organizations; also as per the example of the manufacturers who have combined in the Motion Picture Patents and Sales Company.

As to the school operator you are altogether mistaken. In the first place Mr. Taylor furnishes instruction, but he cannot and does not furnish brains. The students have access at all times to film, to a machine supplied with current, to an Edison Model B, a Power's No. 5 and No. 6, to a Motiograph, to a dissolver, and to other makes of machines at times. They are entitled to attend the school until competent, regardless of how long that may be, but many of them get in too big a hurry and leave before they are through. After the course the student is given from one to three weeks actual operating room experience as helper. If a man leaves too soon that is not the fault of the school.

Now to close this school discussion, I simply hold this, and no more: the average man (man of average brains, I mean) who takes a bona fide, thorough school course will, after he has had three months' practical experience, be far in advance of the average man who has operated for five years. A good many of the Taylor men pass and get cards simply because they are able to give intelligent answers to questions asked and can prove to the examiners that they understand the theory, even though lacking somewhat in practical experience. The school turns out some fearful dubs, but so does the other way. It is natural that there will be some failures, but I will say for Mr. Taylor that the man who takes the course and really wants to learn will have every opportunity given him to do so. This is not intended as an advertisement for Taylor's school, but a flat statement of facts and with this statement I propose to close the discussion.

* * *

Resistance.—Ware, Mass., asks: "On a 550-volt line, with five rheostats connected in series, please tell me how I may find the voltage and amperage of each rheostat. What is the average ohms resistance of rheostats used in motion picture work? If one is drawing 20 amperes at the arc does that mean that one is drawing 10 amperes from each line of the circuit?"

Your ideas of these matters are evidently somewhat twisted and decidedly hazy, Friend Ware. Individual rheostats are built to withstand a given pressure (voltage) and deliver a certain maximum amperage, without overload, when working on that pressure. When a rheostat is made for 110 volts that means it cannot be used on a materially higher voltage. It may be built to deliver almost any number of amperes from a given voltage, however, the usual being 15, 18 or 25. You might hitch up several rheostats of entirely different resistance in series of 550 volts, provided you get the right total to deliver the amperage desired. Thirteen ohms would deliver about 39 amperes. To find the ohms resistance in a rheostat without actual test it is necessary that the voltage, and the delivery (amperage) at that voltage be known. The rule is: The voltage, less 45, divided by the maximum delivery (number of amperes) gives the ohms. The voltage by the amperage (without subtracting 45) gives the combined resistance of the rheostat and the arc. But this is too large a question to handle here. Some week when things are slack I will devote the whole Column to the rheostat problem. The 25-ampere, 110-volt rheostat is most commonly used. This has a resistance of 110—45 divided by 25 equals 2 3-5 ohms. The 18-ampere, 110-volt rheostat is also quite common, especially in the West. It would have 110—45 divided by 18, or 3 11-18 ohms resistance.

No. Ware, you would be drawing the whole amperage from the positive wire. Of course, with alternating each wire is alternately positive and negative. It is not practical to make these matters very clear without taking up a great deal of space—more than can be spared just now, I am sorry to say.

NOVEL ADVERTISING DISPLAY OF YANKEE FILM.

With the co-operation of Manager Kauffman, of the Comedy Theater, Fourteenth street's popular picture playhouse, the Yankee Film Company introduced an original and striking publicity display on Monday last of "Captured by Wireless," by that company. Special Yankee banners and lithographed posters were liberally distributed about the lobby and front of the theater and photographic reproductions were conspicuously placed in large frames near the ticket offices. "Uncle Sam," the company's well-known trade-mark, was represented by two tall members of the Yankee stock company in typical make-up and dress. Needless to say the stunt worked wonders in point of box-office receipts, for at 11 o'clock in the morning every seat in the theater was taken, and crowds congregated on the sidewalk all day in large numbers. Manager Kauffman was loud in his praise of Yankee films. We discussed with him at some length the drawing power of various brands of films and found him a staunch supporter of manufacturers who are careful in the selection of their subject titles. "A strong title," said the young manager, "is as essential to an exhibitor as a good picture. In most cases the first thought of the moving picture producer is the selection of his scenario. He spends a great deal of time on this and other important details, but little, if any, on the selection of a title for the completed picture." When asked what he thought about the future of Independent films, Mr. Kauffman stated he thought great progress had been made in improving quality.

The Comedy is one of the most successful picture houses in New York. It is operated on a continuous policy, two projecting machines being used, thus doing away with waits or delays. The only feature about the theater which we could not commend was the excessive poster display in the lobby and around the front. Manager Kauffman agreed this did not add to the beauty of his house and he would willingly dispense with this method of advertising if he was sure his business would not suffer, but he felt that his receipts were at least thirty-five per cent. due to banners and posters. We presume this is his reason for an exaggerated showing of supposed scenes from the films, yet we believe the business would not suffer were artistic signs and banners used in smaller numbers.

Bids are being received for the State rights to the 3,000 feet of pictures showing the complete Buffalo Bill Wild West and Pawnee Bill Far East. The film shows all the features of the "big show" just as presented on the road by Col. Cody and Maj. Lillie and their Rough Riders. The importance of these pictures cannot be overestimated when the remarkable careers of the two men are taken into consideration. They were identified with and were a part of the history of that great country which lies west of the Rocky Mountains. They perhaps had the most important parts in the changing of that unbroken wilderness from the home of the redskin to the civilization of the white race.

Victorious "Yanks"

It's Worth a Great Deal to Feel One's Efforts for the Common Good are being appreciated. If You Could But Glance through the daily Yankee Budget of Commendatory Correspondence and Read the Glowing Words of Praise voluntarily tendered our Productions, You would Immediately cast off "Rebel" connections and become a LOYAL YANK.

Coming Sure, Monday, September 26

"Our Own" Big Detective Spectacle

The Yankee Girl's Reward

With "Our Own Girl" in the title role supported by the incomparable Yankee Stock in its entirety.

Excitement runs rampant throughout the production. Thrills abound in every scene. The story is a happy combination of Love, pathos and tears, with an undercurrent of treachery and criminal operations, faithfully depicting the just undoing of those who transgress the laws of God and man and the reward given to one who fought for the right and won.

A Massive, Compelling Production made perfect by superb acting, Art-photography, stupendous scenes and striking situations.

EXHIBITORS: You know what a Detective Film will do towards satisfying an exacting audience and just what Yankee Quality means. Put the combination together and You've got the answer. See Your Exchange About it Now.

IMPORTANT: We are publishing an original book of Film Fiction which will be mailed to Exhibitors on request. The publication contains bright, snappy stories on every day life, condensed to allow rapid reading. It comprises upwards of fifty pages and is attractively bound. Address Department "L" for a free copy.

Yankee Film Co.

344 EAST 32d STREET, NEW YORK

TELEPHONE 6170 MADISON SQUARE

Wire Your Orders to the Sales Company

"ON HER DOORSTEP."

A Vitagraph Society Drama.

The old, old story of the lovers' quarrel is given a new twist in this Vitagraph picture. The scenes are adroitly managed and the photographic effect even picturesque in some places. There is not much of a story—in fact, there is no need of a story, as the pictures speak for themselves, but we give a description which the scenario writer suggests might be used as a lecture with the film:

It's a terrible night; the rain is coming down in torrents.

What in the name of common sense is that fellow in the full-dress suit sitting on the doorstep for?

Don't you know? He's had a spat with his girl and he's so mad he doesn't know enough to go into the house when it rains. He wants her to make up, and he'll sit there until doomsday before he will give in. I bet he's destroyed his umbrella so he will get real wet, contract pneumonia and die. It's always that way before marriage, and I'd like to wager dollars to doughnuts he'll want to live for a thousand years after marriage just for spite. Married or single, it's just one darn thing after another, and that's all there is to it.

I wonder how it came about and how it will all end! Let's go in and see the picture and find out for ourselves.

Jack lights a cigarette; Jessie objects to his smoking "white plagues." If he smokes them she will, and suiting her actions to her words, she snatches the subject of discussion from his mouth and begins puffing it herself. He snatches it from her ruby lips and dashes it to the ground. She gets awful mad, gives him back his engagement ring and orders him from the house. He obeys, but gives her to understand he will sit on her doorstep until she asks him to come back.

That is where we saw him in the announcement, on her doorstep. He's a chump; but don't say anything, there are others and always will be.

Watch the girl looking out the window at her gay Lothario taking a free shower bath and holding a reception with the milkman, the policeman, and all the rest of the early birds. She can stand it no longer, tells mama, who gets out of her warm bed and tells Jack to go away—she doesn't want to be his mother-in-law nohow; she can't budge him, and the young man waits on. Jessie is getting restless and troubled. She is feeling convinced that he loves her and is willing to risk his life for her and die on her doorstep. She must rescue him, and, woman-like, she puts on her wraps, goes out to him, and leads him into the house and tells him she is sorry.

Maybe he isn't glad! Who wouldn't be? He looks at his watch and finds that it is 3 a. m., and he hurries home for a change of clothing and a few winks of sleep.

It's a good picture. But, say, isn't it just like it happens? It makes you laugh and think how often you've done the very same thing yourself. It's a life portrayal, all right.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In order to complete our files and a number of bound volumes, the publisher of the Moving Picture World is anxious to obtain at least a dozen numbers of the following issues, and for each number received will give a three months' subscription to the World. Kindly let us hear from you promptly. Vol. I., No. 1; Vol. II., No. 10; Vol. II., No. 11; Vol. III., No. 12; Vol. III., No. 23; Vol. III., No. 25; Vol. IV., No. 1.

Richardson's Handbook.—Our apology is hereby tendered to all our readers who have remitted for and are now waiting for copies of this book. We have been a long time in getting this in shape and ask your further indulgence for the delay. We hope to make deliveries before the end of this month and assure all who have already sent remittances that their books will be mailed at the earliest possible moment.

OHIOAN.

Will party who advertised theater in Ohio under the name of "Ohioan" please send his address, so we can forward replies.

WINONA (Kalem).

Another Indian poem in pictures by the Kalem Company. The illustration is an example of the beautiful photography and the care which tends to characterize and make popular the series of Indian pictures which this firm has been producing. The dime novel class of Indian picture has long since had its day and the public are now quick to detect amateurish attempts of this class. We are aware of the pains taken by the Kalem Company to obtain historically correct data and costumes for their pictures and the great demand for them proves that they are on the right track.

Scene from "A Wild Goose Chase"—Champion Film Co.

Scene from "For the Girl's Sake"—Powers Picture Play.

Powers Picture Plays hold a distinctive position among the Independent releases. The plots are always lively and the action in harmony with the subject. One reason why they are popular with the exhibitor is that the men who are responsible for their production are or have been exhibitors and therefore know what the public want. Powers comedies are not long-drawn-out, and the two-on-one-reel is always a very desirable item on the exhibitor's program.

Correspondence.

"WHY VAUDEVILLE WAS CALLED UPON"—AGAIN.

Concord, N. H., September 4, 1910.

Editors Moving Picture World,

Gentlemen—In your columns of September 3 issue, I note that your Bradlet, of Chicago, Ill., has taken it upon himself to dissect my article, "Why Vaudeville Was Called Upon," which appeared in the issue of August 27.

A reply, or criticism as you might call it, such as Mr. Bradlet has put forth in this case, while perhaps of a little too finely drawn character, is, to say the least, gentlemanly, and bears the marks of an intellectual mind. And while he, in this particular instance, entertains a few wrong conceptions as to my several meanings, nevertheless he has enlightened me on at least one point lacking in my former article, that of sufficiently clear elucidation; and while the contentions set forth in said article were quite clear in my own mind, I now plead guilty for my lack of explanation as to the chief reasons "why vaudeville was called upon."

To place myself above criticism or censure, whether in word, action or writing, would at once brand me as a rank egotist and a fool. No story was ever written or play produced that defied adverse comment, and if such is the case among writers of standing, where would I expect to fit?

Mr. Bradlet, I heartily thank you for your gentlemanly and well meant endeavors to "rip me up the back," and from the conceptions you take of my statements, you are correct in most cases. But your interpretations were wrong, decidedly wrong, as I will proceed to explain to you or anyone else of the same mind, who expects to get anything more than soup money out of this game in the, at present, somewhat obscure future.

First, my friend, I certainly do believe what I write, in every case and at all times, or I should not write, and, furthermore, I would be very narrow and indeed foolish were I to wholly rely on my own conceptions and observations in such cases; but I do not.

My travels in Paris have been limited to Paris, Me., and I have not observed the amusement situation for thirty-five years, because I am only thirty years old; however, such experience is not in the least necessary in sizing up a situation, it were, with depth; yes, about the same depth you will find in any photograph or picture of perspective, that is all—except that the subjects move about and gesticulate. But the pantomimic effect still remains lacking, very much lacking, and that least redeeming feature one sees in pantomime at Drury Lane, London, which you refer to, the flesh-and-blood actors. The picture in its projection on the screen has not even this illusion, let alone the voice, and the stereoscopic effect (or depth).

To support the picture theater the manager must induce his patrons to come and keep coming many, many times a year; he cannot always rely on floating population, particularly in the small towns, where he must have regular customers who will visit his house three, four and perhaps five tion that has been brought to our notice only within the last five years—in which five years things have happened in the picture game, and happened good and fast, too, at a speed practically equivalent to twenty years in other branches of the show world.

Why, Mr. Bradlet, why? I have claimed overproduction, lack of novelty, or sameness, and waning interest. Now, right here is one place where you have taken me wrong. I do not mean that the subjects lack novelty or that they harbor sameness, that is, in the point of material used; neither do I mean that interest is waning in the educational or industrial picture. I am not dealing with the scientific or educational side of this matter; I am dealing with it from the amusement or theatrical side, which side at present mostly concerns the theater owner or showman. The subjects themselves, as you say, do contain novelty and variety, but when it comes to the picture on the screen, the projection, what do we find? Just exactly what I have said time and time again, "a mere reflection," a shadowgraph, as times a week. Tell me, Mr. Bradlet, how would you like to visit Drury Lane Theater four or five times a week and see nothing but pantomime, even though you were to see the real actors in each case? You'd get mighty tired of it, wouldn't you? Well, that is just what the picture house manager is asking of his patrons, and he is going still further than this—he is inducing them to come every day, which makes it still worse and consequently brings us to my other statements, overproduction, also cheapness and commonness.

Mr. Bradlet, I have played this picture game several different ways; have managed and directed motion picture theaters, vaudeville theaters, road picture shows; have produced plays and sketches, played character parts with the best of them, and many a night have I peeped through the wings of a theater or sat in the center of a picture theater audience, watching my patrons' faces for pointers and cues as to their likes and dislikes. Most of all, I have counted the box office receipts and compared them with the expense account often enough to know pretty near what I am talking about, when I say that the picture itself, that is, the reflection on the curtain, in its present form, minus flesh and blood, the voice and stereoscopic effect (or depth), is decidedly found wanting as a form of magnet to fill the moving picture theater in days to come.

Perhaps some bright genius is already at work with these ends in view—Mr. Edison already claims a voice improvement—but until they are practical and put to use we are simply standing still and, if anything, on the ebb. Mind, I am speaking theatrically, not scientifically or educationally. You can't fill your programs with "Fly Pests," "Loggings" or "Bear Hunting" pictures, your modern audience wants reality or the true illusions of such; they want to see the actors themselves; they want to see the real costumes, etc. True, these are only masks and illusionary, but they are, to say the least, impressive, and in most cases the illusions are perfect. You cannot say to your audience, "We know we lack these essentials just now, but keep coming and we will have them some day and you will be amply repaid." You will wake up to the fact that they are waiting, but their waiting will be done outside the theater.

These reasons, together with your own, Mr. Bradlet, "too many picture theaters in one place," are exactly the reasons "why vaudeville was called upon." I will go still further and say forced upon. For these houses, drama was too long and required too many performers; musical comedy, the same; and high-class vaudeville was too expensive, consequently the managers reached for the cheap vaudeville—vaudeville that was called "Specialties Between the Acts" in the "Repertoire" days. The public had already been educated to cheap prices; these could not be raised; therefore the managers had to change their programs, add at least something of what the picture lacked, and keep the whole expense of this within their receipts. Disaster has been the result in many instances, I will admit, due partly to too keen competition; yet in many cases it is a success. How about the Marcus Loew theaters; Keith & Procter's; the Kenyon, the Family and the Empire, in Pittsburg; the William Fox theaters in New York; the dozen and one vaudeville and picture theaters in Boston, Manchester, N. H., Portland and Bangor, Me., Burlington, Montpelier, St. Albans and Barre, Vt., and many other places I might mention? The situation you describe may be the case in Chicago, Mr. Bradlet, but you will find a vast difference theatrically between the East and the West, or even the South. Tastes differ in all parts of the country.

To dwell in detail upon the various other argumental points your letter brings forth would consume several pages and much of this paper's valuable space, which I fully realize is not open for my especial benefit alone. I have endeavored to set you right, Mr. Bradlet, on the most important contentions of my article, or at least to give you a vague idea as to what I am driving at; and, further, cause certain factions in the moving picture field a very deep and serious half-hour of thought and reflection.

I may be accused of knocking and of being a pessimist as to the future of moving pictures; if so, it matters little to me what such thinkers assume or say. What I want to see is better conditions in this great field of amusement and education, and the first step in this rejuvenation is to start some of these "look before you leap" fellows to thinking; after that—well, time will tell.

Messrs. Editors, indeed I thank you for the space you have given this letter; and, Mr. Bradlet, again I thank you for the deep interest you have displayed in these matters; and trusting the readers of this truly unbiased paper have derived some benefit from this sincere but friendly controversy, I beg to remain. Very respectfully,

C. W. LAWFORD.

THE EAST SIDE STANDARD.

New York, September 12, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—The East Side exhibitor has had altogether too much to say in deciding what the public wants and what it does not want. He has practically dictated the policy of film exchanges in New York. The East Side exhibitor is so numerous that he forms a commercial factor too important to be overlooked by the renter. He holds the balance of power in the New York exchange. The renter buys what he calls for and goes short on what he does not like.

This influence is felt far from the city. The New York exchanges supply many out-of-town customers who cater to an intelligent educated trade. These rural exhibitors can obtain only such film as is approved by the East Side exhibitor, because the number of moving picture houses in that district is so great that it outweighs every other section that looks to New York for its film supply.

The East Side exhibitor has placed the ban on educational or scenic stuff. He doesn't tell the renter not to buy it, but he says, "Don't send it to me," which amounts to the same thing. The renter surely isn't going to buy a reel that will go only half around the circuit. Instead of that, he buys all the blood-and-thunder melodrama he can get, because his East Side clientele "eat it up," and rather than lose that good trade, the up-State exhibitor can go hang.

The other night I made an excursion to the vicinity of Essex and Rivington streets, in the very heart and thick of the tenement district. On one screen I saw a scene picture. It must have gotten there by accident. Contrary to report, the audience did not seem to resent it. In fact, they were deeply interested in it, bad as it was, for no one ever saw such a scratched and uninteresting subject as that. If there were any mutterings they could have been for no other reason than the poor condition of the film.

The audience also stood for one or two high-class films without any fuss, although we are sure they didn't understand what they were looking at any more than they would a Chinese opera. The program would have been a fine one for Stamford, Conn., or Rutherford, N. J., or 110th street, Manhattan, but no doubt the Essex street management thought it was ruinous.

I would have been more comfortable on board a cattle train than where I sat. There were five hundred smells combined in one. One young lady fainted and had to be carried out of the theater. I can forgive that, all right, as people with sensitive noses should not go slumming. But what is hardest to swallow is that the tastes of this seething mass of human cattle are the tastes that have dominated, or at least set, the standard of American moving pictures.

A SUBURBAN EXHIBITOR.

FROM AN EXHIBITOR.

Morrilton, Kan., September 11, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Kindly allow me a little space in your valuable paper. I own and operate my own show and machine, put on three reels of three changes per week and read every word in the Moving Picture World. I could not keep house without it. I do not see how we otherwise could make our selection of films, as the exhibitor, as a rule, has to take whatever the exchange chooses to hand out. We have to go through and repair our reels before they are run on the machine. I am supposed to get and am promised good commercial run service, yet it takes from a half to three-quarters of a day to get the films repaired before we can possibly run them through the machine. The release dates of the films I receive range from thirty days to thirteen months old. I think we get entirely too much tragedy and too little comedy in the scenes. If the manufacturers would go after quality they would not get out perhaps over six reels per week, but that number would have more popularity than two dozen of the ordinary sort. Some exhibitors call for sensational subjects just because their own minds run to such. Then they turn around and say that the public calls for them. As a matter of fact, no community in this good old U. S. A. wants such subjects, or want to endanger their children by allowing them to visit places where such are shown. If the children are kept away, papa and mamma will not come, and soon the exhibitor is out of business. This world is too full of grand and noble subjects to not get enough without suggestive and sensational scenes.

Yours for the improvement of the pictures, and with best wishes for the Moving Picture World. E. W. LOGAN.

THOSE ADVERTISING FILMS.

New York, September 12, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—As an exhibitor, we deem it our privilege, not to say duty, to register a "kick" against such films as "The Three Wishes," "Chew Chew Land," etc., those mentioned being the product of one of our foremost manufacturers. The pictures spoken of are, of course, advertisements, and are at once recognized as such by patrons, and we can assure you they do not hesitate, upon leaving the theater, to let you know what they think of the matter.

We do not think it is treating an exhibitor with fairness, and surely it is not a square deal to the patron, to deal out for their amusement and edification a picture embellished with the trade-marks of the certain manufacturer of the goods it is desired to advertise.

If those certain business firms wish to advertise their wares in a motion picture way, why not let them make their arrangements to put it out as such, not "put one over" on the exhibitor by such unfair means as a regular release. Of course, the film manufacturer is the one to be brought to task for this.

In our own particular case we would not knowingly dare display an advertisement on our screen, and we deem it a downright "bunco" for a manufacturer to hand us one as a regular release.

We feel the better class of exhibitors will bear us out in the matter, and endeavor to discourage such practice.

A. L. T.

SAN FRANCISCO OPERATORS' UNION PARADE.

San Francisco, Cal., September 10, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: The Moving Picture Projecting Machine Operators, Local No. 162, I. A. T. S. E., of San Francisco, made a fine showing in the Labor Day parade here.

Moving pictures of the parade were taken by Frank Whitbeld of the moving picture operators, and James Sarony of Miles Bros. They were shown on the screen in several theaters as early as seven o'clock the same evening.

This was the first time, in the West at least, that current events of the day have been flashed on the screen the same night in moving pictures, and suggests that in the future the happenings of the day may be seen on the screen within a few hours, instead of being read about in the papers next morning.

The float of the operators, which was awarded first prize, represented a nickelodeon in full operation—lobby, ticket box, uniformed ushers, etc., and during the march a little comedy was played out, revolving around the presence of three big hats in the audience and the refusal of the ladies to remove them.

I might also add that we received another prize for the largest percentage of membership turnout, which made us the only union in the parade that received two prizes. Pretty good for the first time the operators ever turned out. We would like to hear of some of the other locals doing equally as well next Labor Day. We also wish to congratulate our Boston brothers on their good work and wish them every success and pleasure that we enjoy in "Dear Old 'Frisco," for our conditions are very good here. Just remember always to deliver the goods and do your best; the boss is bound to notice it. I would also like to have some of the boys put on their thinking caps and try to invent a lamp house in which condensers will not crack. While I know that when you start to tell why condensers break you are up against a hard one, and I am somewhat afraid to crow too soon, for fear one will break in the lamp house I am trying, before I started to use it, it was next to impossible for me to keep a whole condenser a week, but I have had it up for nearly three weeks and the pair I have in are still whole. If they stay whole for three weeks more, I will submit a drawing of the lamp house.

Thanking you for past favors and this, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,

MEMBER OF LOCAL NO. 162.

ADVERTISING THE SHOW.

Haverhill, Mass., September 3, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: Several times I have read in your columns articles regarding the value of good advertising in the moving picture field. You have reprinted several good examples but I think there is in the city an advertising manager who has it on the great majority in this particular line. He is W. V. Forbur, manager of the local Keith house, a former newspaper man, which probably explains his knowledge of the advertising line.

A little over two years ago the management of the Nickel Theater was offered him, while the business was practically nothing. In fact, the theater being situated on a side street and some ten minutes walk from the principal street, convinced everybody in this city that the theater could not "get by."

But liberal advertising of the right kind got the public started right and within three months of the day he took charge, the house was doing a tremendous business, which has continued up to the present time. I am enclosing a few of his late advertisements which I think you will agree, are quite original, but to show how his mind is constantly thinking out some scheme to make the Nickel talked about I will tell you of some of the stunts he pulls off to let the public know he is alive: At a recent wedding the telegrams of congratulations to the bride and groom were being read to the guests when a messenger hurried in with a telegram which was opened and read as follows: "May your journey through life be as smooth, your prospects as bright, your success as brilliant as the pictures at the Cosy Nickel." At another time, during the noon hour and just as the workers were getting out of the shoe shops, a man carrying a stool and a boy carrying a banner labelled "Rally at 12 o'clock" made their way to Washington Square where the man stood on the stool for a few minutes, clearing his throat and arranging some papers until a large crowd had collected, when he gave a discourse on a special feature picture being shown at the Nickel Theater. The game was worked several times during the noon hour and each time drew a big crowd.

Does it pay to advertise? I think you would say so if you could see the way the Nickel is packing them in with pictures and songs only, while the other houses are struggling with vaudeville.

Very truly,

G. H. ROOD.

STREET GOSSIP!
"Where is all that laughing and clapping of hands going on?"
"Over in the COSY NICKEL. There is a great program on for tonight—let's go in."
"Rather warm inside, isn't it?"
"No, not at all. You see they leave the ten big windows and doors wide open and the breeze blows right through the theatre."
"Oh, that must make it nice and comfortable. Come on—I'll get the tickets."
And They Both Joined The Happy Throng At
The Cosy Nickel
HA-HA!
LAUGHING DAYS
—Are on at the Theatre of Shaking Sides, and for Tonight and Tomorrow there will be shown—
"Take Me Out to the Ball Game"
—AND—
"The Men Haters' Club"
The first is a Baseball story, with some of that mile-a-minute comedy, that sends you out of the Theatre with your poor sides aching. Doctors say "Laughing will make you grow fat," and if that is true, you will gain some good weight if you see this Picture.
The Second Picture is a Vitagraph Comedy, produced by the same company you saw in "The Boarding House Romance."
SUNDAY.
Don't imagine for a minute that the Cosy Nickel will let you pass through a Sunday without a merry laugh. No indeed! Just try to imagine the fun there will be in—"The Death of Michael Grady"
And as comprehensive as your imagination may be you can never estimate the numbers of hearty roars-tosse will be in it. You'll never see a funnier picture as long as you live.
THE COSY NICKEL
¶ The Management is proud of the program for tonight and tomorrow, which is given below, and if you find an opportunity to witness it, you will surely agree with the rest that it is one of the finest Moving Picture programs you could wish for.
The Cosy Nickel
TONIGHT AND TOMORROW
"WITH BRIDGES BURNED"
A splendid story from the pen of Rex Beach
"THE HOUSE WITH THE CLOSED SHUTTERS"
A Biograph story of the Civil War with a lesson.
"THE TAIL OF TWO COATS"
A comedy that contains but one laugh—a long one.
"EQUAL TO THE EMERGENCY"
"THE ACE OF HEARTS"
"AN ANCIENT MARINER"
To Miss The Above Program Is To Allow One Of The Best Bills Ever Arranged To Pass Unappreciated. The First Two Pictures Alone Are Well Worth Coming Miles To See. Drop In Tonight And See If This Is Not True.

Reduced facsimiles of attractive advertisements inserted by the Nickel Theater, Haverhill, Mass., in a local paper. Originals double column, 8 inches deep.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

A SUMMER TRAGEDY.—Nerve is the most valuable asset of the human animal, for, without it, little may be accomplished in this age. Nerve is the wool from which is woven "bluff" and bluff is raiment covering odious reality. In short, the man pulling a bluff resembles plated wear, all right for a time but the plate inevitably rubs off. Clarence Topfloor is given his week's vacation with pay, and makes great preparations for his stay at the seashore. In pressing his trousers, he badly scorches them, but thanks to a long coat he is able to hide the damage, so off he starts to give the seaside belles a treat.—Adonis II. While Clarence is making these preparations, Mabel is starting off on her vacation. They are, of course, unknown to each other. Mabel vows that she will return from her sojourn with an engagement ring. So you see here are two romantic souls starting out chuck full of determination. Fate is going to be busy. Fortuitously Wavecrest-by-the-Sea Hotel is the destination of both. Mabel arriving first. She is in her room when Clarence arrives. He conceives the idea of playing the part of a millionaire for the week just to see what happens, hence he registers as Reginald Vandergould, Fifth avenue, New York. Well, maybe he don't stor things. Everybody in the hotel is attention. Here the "pipe-dream" begins. Mabel and Clarence meet, and, as she is also fostering an iridescent bluff, that of being an heiress, each thinks the other the real article. Down at the shore he points to a steam yacht at anchor as his, but as things aboard are in such confusion, owing to the crew being at work overhauling the "log-book," he is forced to deny her the pleasure of a visit thereon. He doesn't get it on her for an instant, for pointing to a mansion that graces the distant shore as her summer home, she gives as a reason for stopping at the hotel, the servants being house-cleaning she so disliked the taste of dust. Well, as they look good to each other, he proposes and she accepts. At this point in the romance two things happen, Clarence's time limit is up and his finances are down, so he must tear himself away, but parting is such sweet sorrow, and they leave each other vowing eternal constancy. Once outside the land of Utopia, they awaken. Mabel visits the city drug store to quaff a refreshing flagon of cream soda, when—"discovered!" Who should dole it out but Reginald Vandergould, Fifth avenue, alias Clarence Topfloor. Another case of Cupid working overtime. At lunch time Clarence lies himself to a neighboring "Hamand" emporium to have the festive coffee and sinkers served by the fair hands of Mabel—discovery No. 2. Their bluffs punctured, they both make the best of the worst of it—shake and become friends at least.

THE OATH AND THE MAN.—God's justice is inevitable and unerring and it behooves the short-sighted mortal to wait and reason before he gives rein to intemperate desires for vengeance, no matter how great the grievance. The vengeance meted by the Great Master of all is more terrible in the end, and yet more ethical, for vengeance perpetrated by us, in a measure, reverts. Before the revolution in France the nobility exercised a most despotic rule over the peasants, subjecting them to abject slavery. Not only did they suffer pecuniary oppression, but their humble households were invaded and defiled by the noble profligates. Henri Provost, a perfumer, receives a call from his landlord in quest of some perfume. During his visit this nobleman is attracted by Henri's pretty young wife. Her beauty so enthralls him that he, during her husband's absence, exercises his presumed rights, and invites, or rather commands her to attend his house fete. Here he dresses her in finery and promises to make a great lady of her, so that when her husband, who finding whither she had gone, bursts into the palace, she denies him. The heartbroken perfumer at first would return to the palace and in vengeance murder both his wife and the nobleman, but the old priest stays him, by showing him the crucifix, the emblem of Christian charity and making him swear he would never kill them, indicating that vengeance belonged to God. Henri takes this oath and lives up to it. Some time later the peasants chafing under aristocratic tyranny revolt, with the perfumer a leader. The revolutionists invade the home of the nobleman, the occupants of which flee in panic. The nobleman himself, with the perfumer's wife, who is still with him, make their way to her former home, which she imagines is deserted. The perfumer enters, and upon meeting the guilty pair, sees his chance to wreak vengeance. He is about to run them through when the old priest again appears and shows him the crucifix, reminding him of his oath. He then waves back the mob, who haven't seen the nobleman, with the exclamation "This is my wife." The mob dismissed, he takes the couple to an inner room where they exchange their finery for peasant's attire. Thus they leave to take their chances of evading intemperate revolutionists who are parading outside, devastating everything and destroying everybody aristocratic. What a bitter lesson she has been taught. Her covetousness has brought her only shame, terror, poverty and isolation.

EDISON MFG. CO.

FROM THE ARCTICS TO THE TROPICS.—The Central Railroad of Peru, the most remarkable of all railways, starts at sea level at Callao and runs to the highest point reached by any railway in the world. This is somewhat higher than the summit of Mount Blanc, or, to be exact, it is just sixteen thousand feet above sea level. In the trip which we are privileged to take upon this unique railway, we start at the high point and getting into a gravity car we begin a count of one hundred miles down the slopes of the famous Andes, literally passing in the space of a few minutes from the Arctics to the Tropics, seeing with wondering eyes the gradual change in scenery and experiencing all the sensations of the gradual changes in climate. Upon starting, the country is bleak and barren in appearance, with no living thing in sight and mountains and plateaus covered with snow and ice, and our passengers have taken the precaution to muffle themselves up well for the journey. As we go further and further in our somewhat wild ride through many tunnels, gorges and scenes of the utmost beauty it becomes gradually warmer and warmer until we are almost shocked to find that it is really warm and that necessity exists for taking off first the heavier clothing and then our hats and coats. Finally, just before reaching our destination at Callao, we pass through a real tropical village, thus experiencing probably the quickest change from winter to summer that is possible in the whole world.

BUMPTIOUS AS A FIREMAN.—We see early in the film a small-sized conflagration caused by the cook's burning the beefsteak; and Bumptious, appearing, does what any sensible man would do—throws it incontinently out the window. But the smoke has attracted his friends and neighbors, and his wife and cook have explained the danger to them; consequently, when Mr. Bumptious appears upon the front porch and announces that the fire is out he is hailed as a hero.

The result of the incident is the organization of an amateur or volunteer fire department, and Mr Bumptious is offered the captaincy and presented with a helmet and bugle, which adorn his unctuous personality most comically. And then not long after we see the Volunteer Fire Department called into active service. Of course all of the other members are awakened by the fire bell save Bumptious, their Captain, and passing his house they call upon him loudly to come and lead them in fighting the fire demon. He commands them to lead on and he will follow, which he does as fast as his little fat legs will carry him, but they reach the fire house, get out the hose and start for the fire before he gets there. The result is that several scenes show the fire hose dashing up the street and Bumptious in hot pursuit. When they reach the fire, their struggles to get the hose and water into action are something terrible to behold. Bumptious becomes a regular Laocoon entangled in the hose. And then he suddenly sees a face at a window of the boarding house from which smoke is issuing and which is apparently in flames. Like the hero that he is, he releases himself from the detaining hands of his friends and dashes into the house to the rescue of the maiden. We see him hammering at the hall door but without response, and then shifting to the inside we see the girl whom he is to rescue. When one understands that it is the gum chewing girl, who is reading a novel by a smoky lamp quite ignorant of any danger, the comic side of the situation will be evident.

The door is burst in, Bumptious breaking it through with a hall chair, and he dashes in upon the scene only to be confronted by his particular aversion, the gum chewing girl. His friends follow to succor and aid him in rescuing her, and as soon as they are well into the room the only remaining member of the fire department climbs up the outside of the porch by a ladder, and some one thereupon turns on the water in the hose which he has introduced through the open window. The result is that instead of a conflagration there is a veritable deluge, for the Company is soaked with the unmanageable stream from the hose in the hands of one of their members and everything in the room is reduced to a sad state of desolation which is comparable only with Bumptious' own state of mind.

AN UNSELFISH LOVE.—Our hero, having been refused because of his lack of wealth by the father of the girl whom he loves, determines that he will overcome that difficulty and sets out to make a fortune by farming in Western Canada. He leaves his home carrying the love of the daughter, but no hope is held out to him by the father that he can ultimately succeed. We see him after his arrival at Strathmore, Alberta, where he takes up farming on the advanced scale on which it is carried out in this part of the country.

Among his earliest acquaintances is a lady who while by no means unattractive, is of the type and age popularly designated as "old maid." She immediately takes a great fancy to John and on every occasion of their meeting presents him with a few flowers. At first his kindly nature feels only amusement, but after a while her intentions become quite unwelcome, particularly as visit after visit to the village post-office finds no letter waiting for him from his loved one at home.

Shifting back to the town which he left, we find that Mr. Willmere, the father of the girl, Mabel, now has very ambitious plans for his daughter, because of the fact that a very wealthy suitor Mr. Moore, has entered the field. The old man's determination goes so far that he actually prevents a letter which Mabel has written John from being sent.

We see John in the various stages of his successful farming continually being followed by the spinster lady, Miss Gray. It is evidently a bad case so far as she is concerned. Finally matters come to a climax. Mr. Willmere, being determined that his daughter shall marry the man of wealth, causes to be inserted in the local newspaper an item to the effect that John Martin, having succeeded in Strathmore, has become engaged to a Strathmore belle. The sight of this item temporarily, at least, turns Mabel's love to pique, and the other suitor being coached to make advances at just this time, is accepted by her.

Soon afterwards John, on one of his frequent visits to the village post-office, finds to his great delight a letter, but his joy is turned to the deepest grief when upon reaching the attractive home which he has made for Mabel he opens the envelope and finds that instead of a letter it is a wedding invitation announcing the forthcoming marriage between Miss Mabel Willmere and Mr. Henry B. Moore. In utter despair he sits down and starts a heartbroken letter to her but is interrupted in the middle of it by the approach of Miss Gray. Feeling that his nerves cannot stand the strain of meeting her just at this time, he hastily makes his escape from the room, leaving the half written letter to Mabel with the wedding invitation and Mabel's portrait on the table behind him.

Miss Gray, entering with her customary floral offering and finding the room vacant, soon discovers the articles on the table. In a few moments the whole truth is revealed to her, and here the nobleness of her heart, though it beats under an old-fashioned exterior, becomes evident. It takes her but a few moments to decide that she will try to prevent two lives from being wrecked, and she starts immediately East. Just before the wedding day she reaches Mabel's home and is fortunate enough to find her alone. The meeting is naturally an embarrassing one, but even over this embarrassment her unselfishness and true nobility triumph, and it is not long before she has acquainted Mabel with the fact that John in far off Western Canada is pining for her. At this point Miss Gray urges upon Mabel the necessity of prompt action, and after some argument prevails upon her to immediately start for John's farm. In order to escape observation Mabel leaves surreptitiously by means of a ladder placed against her window.

Going back to Western Canada we find John at the close of the day's work heartbroken, with a vision before him of Mabel being led to the altar by Mr. Moore. He goes to his lonely home and thinking what might have been, bows down in grief under his misfortune. At that moment Miss Gray enters. He greets her politely but coldly and she, not being able even yet to completely repress her fondness for him, offers him a bunch of roses which she has brought. This is too much for his overwrought nerves. Brushing the flowers angrily away, he intimates to her that he is in no condition to talk with her.

Miss Gray, heartbroken herself but ever true to her purpose, goes to the door and beckons, at which Mabel enters and, going to John, lays her hand gently on his shoulder. Thinking that it is Miss Gray he angrily brushes the hand aside, but upon turning discovers the one person whom perhaps he never expected to see again. Thus the two lovers are made happy.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

A FLIRTY AFFLICTION.—Pretty Molly is afflicted with a peculiar nervous disease and after having tried many doctors is finally referred to a certain great specialist, who has had success with cases similar to her own. To briefly describe Molly's ailment would be in stating that the muscles of her throat and neck were uncontrollable, causing her to throw back her head in a way resembling a person beckoning to another.

Molly goes to see the doctor, who expresses himself able to cure the case and prescribes certain medicine. But as Molly turns to go the unruly head is thrown back and the old M.D. is almost convinced the young lady is flirting with him. As Molly passes through the reception room where one or two young gentlemen are waiting to see the doctor, the peculiar nod is again repeated and the young fellows, each believing the nod to be an invitation, rise and precipitately follow her out.

On the street Molly causes more excitement when she appears to solicit the company of a dignified lawyer, who, nevertheless, likes her looks and tags off after her until he is summarily dismissed with the threat of arrest for annoying a perfectly respectable young lady.

An innocent mail man is the next victim, and he is similarly dispensed with.

An old chap in the company of his wife is also beguiled by the unfortunate girl's peculiar nod and receives a sound berating not only from her but from his watchful spouse.

Even Hauss, the little base drummer of the German band, is bewitched by the involuntary Circe and gets his drum smashed for his trouble.

The climax comes when Officer O'Rourke falls a victim to the young lady's nod and is told that his services as a protector are certainly not needed. During the argument the captain, O'Rourke's superior, comes on the scene and orders the patrolman on his way.

The girl has reached home and she thanks the captain for his protection. But as she opens the door those unruly muscles work again and the captain accepts the invitation. This is the last hope, and the poor girl slams the door in the captain's face.

THE TOUT'S REMEMBRANCE.—"Bullets" Brown, the hero of our story, is a race track tout, and a true type of this particular parasite. Our first introduction to him comes when we find him plying his trade upon an unsophisticated country lad who has come into his majority with a good bank roll and a tendency to get rid of it in short order. "Bullets" puts him next to a good thing in the opening scenes in the betting ring and, of course, the young fellow loses. When he encounters the tout again, after learning that he has been buncoed, he makes dire promises of revenge.

"Bullets" is not a tough, and a few days later when he receives a letter from his mother begging him to give up his evil life, he makes a solemn resolve to steer clear of the track, get employment and make a man of himself. Some few days later he wanders into a country store and startles the proprietor by asking for employment. The old man looks his applicant over and then nods his head. "Bullets" and he shake hands and the young fellow, anxious to be at work, pulls on a pair of overalls, picks up a broom and begins setting the place to rights.

He is busily engaged at this when the door opens and Agnes Dudley, his employer's daughter, enters and stares amazedly at the new clerk. "Bullets" is also confused, and the two young people pause hesitatingly until the storekeeper enters and introduces them.

It is not long before Agnes and "Bullets" are in love with each other. On a day a few weeks after the new clerk's arrival he endeavors to pop the question when the young fellow, whom we will recognize as the sport who had been buncoed by "Bullets" at the race track, enters unobserved by the two. "Bullets" finally stammers a proposal and takes the girl in his arms. Then the young man in the doorway turns on his heel and hurries angrily away.

Dick Gleason, who has also been a suitor for the girl's hand, hurries off to find old Dudley, and when he communicates his story of the impudent clerk's love-making, Dudley is enraged and hurries back to the store, where he summarily discharges the unfortunate clerk. But Agnes begs him to wait and as he bids her goodbye she slips a large gold coin into his hand and tells him to let it be the foundation of his fortune.

A few weeks later finds "Bullets" still out of work, hungry and tired of life. It is then that the Tempter visits him when he picks up a telegram, dropped by a noted race track man, with the advice that Gadfly, a 500 to 1 shot, is booked to make a killing that day. Could any one resist so tremendous a hint?

That afternoon finds "Bullets" in the betting ring with a ticket showing that he has played Gadfly with $20 to win $10,000. These scenes are thrilling and tremendously strong. Gadfly gallops in a winner and "Bullets," loaded down with the coin of the realm, leaves the track, hardly able to realize his big rake-off.

The closing scenes show him back to the country store again, his proposal to the girl and his acceptance by the old storekeeper.

HANK AND LANK.—Hank and Lank have experienced a little rough weather since we last saw them and the fact that they are disreputably clothed has not been overlooked by them. They need something new. But how? After some thought Hank's cheerful countenance lightens. He goes on to explain his little scheme in detail. Supposing they find an uncovered coal hole in a sidewalk and accidentally fall into it. Isn't there some law against coal holes left uncovered? Lank believes there is, but where will they find an uncovered coal hole? Hank tells him to leave the matter to his own little process of deduction or invention and advises the tall fellow to just watch him.

Hank pauses in front of a swell apartment building, looks about to see that no one is in sight, then lifts the lid of the coal hole at their feet and lets himself drop down into the uncertain darkness within. A moment later there is heard a howling and wailing and Lank hurries up to the janitor of the building and tells him that some one has fallen into the coal hole. The janitor is easy prey to the scheme, and hurrying down into the basement sympathetically administers to the injured man's ailments. Hank is a sight! During the interim of lonely confinement in the coal hole he has managed to smear coal dust and dirt on his clothes and face and otherwise disfigure his appearance. The janitor is frightened and asks Hank not to take the matter to law, offering a neat roll as a pacifier. Hank is satisfied and pockets the money, much to the relief of the janitor.

Some time later, after Hank is decked out in his new clothes, Lank concludes that it is his turn. The same performance works successfully to a certain point, but when Lank drops down into his manhole a grimy coal heaver grabs him by the seat of his trousers, carries him out of the house and kicks him on his way. The fellow had heard the conversation, had seen the coal hole lid removed, and had waited for his victim.

CURING A MASHER.—Mr. Pest is a certain type of nuisance with whom you are all more or less familiar. A silly egotist with an exaggerated notion of his own importance, he believes that every woman he meets will fall an easy victim to his charms. As our story opens Mr. Pest is seen parading a fashionable drive watching his chance to make a mash with some fair damsel.

An opportunity comes at last, but the young lady is far from won by his smirking smile and walks away with a defiant toss of her head. Mr. Pest makes another attempt but is soundly slapped for his troubles. Not daunted by this the masher approaches a third young woman and makes his annoying advances despite her threats to summon a policeman.

Finally, however, the young lady's eyes light and she turns to the masher with a smile that means acquiescence. Certainly, she will be pleased to have Mr. Pest's company. Then she goes on to explain that she has some shopping to do and would Mr. Pest be so kind as to help her home with her things.

Little knowing what this means, Mr. Pest nods his head, and with an elegant bow takes her arm. The young woman pauses in front of a hardware store and first of all purchases a dozen flatirons and a heavy pail to carry them in. When she goes into her purse, however, the masher waves her aside and pays the little bill himself, not suspecting she may make other more expensive purchases. They visit store after store and Mr. Pest, having spent all his money, is loaded down to the gunwales with all sorts of heavy and cumbersome merchandise. Besides the flat-irons and pail he is now carrying a watermelon, lawn-mower, a garden hose, foot-tub, a large hat box, etc.

The scenes which follow are ridiculously funny. The young lady prefers to walk and her escort is a sorry sight when he finishes the two-mile hike. Up four flights of stairs to the young lady's apartments is the climax of a horrible journey—for Mr. Pest. And when they get inside a strapping big chap in a sweater and boxing gloves is waiting for them. The young and pretty Mrs. Smart introduces her husband.

Mr. Pest does not faint, but he makes haste to remove his cumbersome parcels and to "beat it" out of the house, tripping down the stairs in the tangles of the hose.

And later when he meets a young woman who invites him to flirt with her he shoos her on her way and lifts up his hands solemnly in an attitude which says quite plainly, "Never again!"

KALEM MFG. CO.

THE JAPANESE SPY.—The story opens in the office of the Japanese War Department. It is desired to secure secret information concerning the latest maneuvers of the United States Army and a volunteer is called for, to go to America as a secret service agent. Baron Arai volunteers. A glance at his home life, his parting with his wife and children is given; then we find him in America in the great camp at Pine Plains disguised as a peddler. Here, too, the realism is carried to the limit for the military scenes were all taken in the great instruction camp of last August, at which over thirty thousand of the leading troops of the country were each week engaged in the study of the latest war problems.

The Baron Arai secures his information but comes under the suspicion of the United States Secret Service Department and agents are detailed to apprehend him. He is captured just as he is about to step foot on shipboard, but when confronted with the plain evidence of his guilt he dies like a Samurai, committing hari-kari in the presence of his captors. The final scene of the production is just as unique as the others for we are taken back to the home of Baron Arai, in Japan, where we see a solemn delegation from the War Office conveying to the widow the posthumous honors bestowed by the government to the memory of her late husband.

Like "An English Home," this picture play is bound to be of considerable discussion, for it points out a situation that has been discussed by every well informed officer of the United States Army and Navy and one recognized not only as possible but common.

THE CONSPIRACY OF PONTIAC.—The story, which is well known to every school child, is taken from Parkman's History and is presented without alteration or embellishment, and in the number of people employed and in the character of the scenic mountings is by long odds the greatest Indian production yet offered under the Kalem trade-mark. It will be remembered that Major Gladwynn, Commandant of Fort Detroit in 1763, had declared his love for a young Indian girl and she had become much attached to him. At this period Pontiac was at the height of his power and had sent emissaries about the villages of the Ottawas inciting war against the whites. The final plan involved the entry to the fort of a number of picked warriors, each carrying a sawed-off gun beneath his blanket. The mission was ostensibly to be one of peace, but at a signal from Pontiac the warriors were to drop their blankets and to massacre the whites. However, Major Gladwynn was informed of the plot by the Indian girl and when Pontiac presented himself with his delegation of the treacherous intent, Major Gladwynn was well prepared and the fort was saved.

Throughout this story is woven a love romance involving an Indian girl and Lady Jane Amherst, a young English girl visiting the fort at the time. The Conspiracy of Pontiac" is so accurately and beautifully done that it will stand for a long time as an Indian classic and will unquestionably appeal very strongly to the school authorities as an educational subject worthy of close study.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

POEMS IN PICTURES. The five poems of the series are, in order, "Love," "Bereavement," "Friendship," "Meeting and Parting" and "War" as the subjects. Three of these are pastoral, namely, the first, third and fourth. "Love" is the form of an eclogue; "Friendship" is purely pastoral, while "Meeting and Parting" forms an idyl.

The reader will understand, of course, that a pastoral poem treats of scenes and incidents in rural, or country life, as apart from community, or city life, and that the characters in the earliest forms of this composition were shepherds, due to the fact that the primitive occupation of the dwellers in the country was that of tending to flocks and herds of sheep and cattle. He will understand, too, that an eclogue is a choice, picked selection from pastoral poems, and that an idyl is a short, highly wrought, descriptive pastoral poem, in which the episodes, or circumstances, are of rural simplicity and coloring. And so, with these few words of introduction, let us view the pictures.

All these scenes are beautifully colored and the photography is excellent. The characters, too, are cleverly enacted. The effect produced by seeing the pictures for the first time is likely to be one of regret that they cannot at once be repeated. I believe in this case, that patrons will consider it a boon should exhibitors run the reel off for the second time, say after an appropriate song has been sung to afford a short interlude. The reel is only 400 feet in length, but it has so much of beauty, art and satisfying merit that one cannot grasp its full meaning and worth at one showing.

A DUMMY IN DISGUISE.—A rogue is passing a tailor's shop, when he is suddenly struck with the idea of taking a dummy's place outside the shop—he stands beside the other dummies—closing up time arrives, and he is carried in without being discovered. When everyone has gone home, he steals out, breaks open the safe, till, etc., pocketing all the money he can find—unfortunately, he cannot get out, the door being locked on the outside. When the morning arrives he is put outside the shop again, and many amusing scenes take place, in most of which poor dummy finds himself in a very bad plight. Finally, he is discovered and marched off to the police station, where he receives his just punishment.

TACTICS OF CUPID.—A finely colored film, showing the methods employed by Cupid whilst pursuing his employment. He causes two young people to fall violently in love with each other. The consent of the maiden's father has to be gained, and the young fellow puts the question to him only to be shown the door. But Cupid is at hand with help, and by his magic he conjures up before the father a recollection of his courting days. The old man's heart is softened, and running after the unhappy lover he brings him back and joins the hands of the two young people. Amid great rejoicing the wedding takes place, and the couple drive off to enjoy a brief but quiet honeymoon. Cupid is beautifully played by a child of very small proportions, in fact, so well that one almost fancies it is the real thing.

SUNSET.—In this film some beautiful sunsets have been secured. The tinting throughout is in perfect harmony, and one can almost imagine that the real scenes are being seen, and the only fault to find with the film is its shortness. Similar in finish and artistic value to "Poetry of the Waters."

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

A CORSICAN VENDETTA.—A mother lies ill, and would see her son before she dies. The young man is a member of a conscript band, but in response to the urgent message conveyed to him through a shepherd boy, braves the danger of capture and flies to his mother's side. News that the bandit has left the hills reaches the authorities and the young man hides. The soldiers are about to take summary measures and shoot the father, Matteo, when the young man gives himself up. The father is filled with thoughts of vengeance, and goes to the home of the commander of the

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Released September 19th, 1910

A SUMMER TRAGEDY

Biograph Romance of a Punctured Bluff

Nerve is a most valuable asset, and Clarence had it in abundance. Getting a week's vacation he hies himself to the seashore, where he registers as a millionaire. Here he meets Mabel, who poses as an heiress. He points to his private yacht out at anchor, while she tells of her palace by the sea. Each thinks the other the real article, so he proposes, she accepts. Vacation time up, they must part, but parting is such sweet sorrow, and they swear eternal constancy. Their dream, however, is rudely disturbed, for when next they meet she finds him tending the soda fountain at a drug store, while he finds her doling out "ham-and" in a cheap restaurant.

Approximate Length, 987 Feet

Released September 22nd, 1910

THE OATH AND THE MAN

A Story of the French Revolution

This picture shows the tyranny to which the peasant class of France were subjected. The lord held his tenantry in abject slavery, satisfying his capriciousness to whatever length his whims carried him. Here is shown an instance where he took possession of one of his tenants' wives, brought her to his palace and made a lady of her. The outraged husband would have killed them both but for the old village priest, who made him take an oath he would not, impressing that vengeance belonged to the Divine Master. Later when the revolution breaks out the guilty couple surely get the punishment they justly deserve, and not through violence at that. She learns a bitter lesson, for her covetousness has brought shame, terror, poverty and isolation. The production comprises a series of the most beautiful scenes ever photographed.

Approximate Length, 997 Feet

BIOGRAPH COMPANY

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

MONEY FOR EXHIBITORS

Get It. It's Yours

REWINDERS $1.25

Machine parts sold for less

WHY?

Write, Davis Manufacturing and Supply Company

PREBLE AVENUE - ALLEGHENY, PA.

Drums, Traps and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.
272 Wabash Avenue Chicago

FILMS FOR RENT

New Films High Class Service

The Pioneer House, With 8 Years Experience and $250,000.00 Back Of It

Write To-day for Terms

EUGENE CLINE
57 and 59 Dearborn St., Chicago

To Exchanges and Exhibitors

Send for a 25c. bottle of this NEW CEMENT, and convince yourself of its adhesive qualities.

"AGFA" CEMENT will splice either inflammable or non-inflammable film, with the same rapidity and lasting effects.

2 Oz. Bottle, - 25c. 1 lb. Bottle, $1.50

BERLIN ANILINE WORKS

213 WATER STREET, - - - - - - NEW YORK

soldiers, armed with a knife. An opportunity occurring, he alters his plans and kidnaps the officer's little son. Matteo becomes the leader of the banditti, and the boy is brought up in their haunts. Years pass the banditti' ravages move the government to action, and once more the officer is sent in pursuit. The banditti escape by a rope down the face of the precipice and the soldiers following, are trapped. The boy recognizes his father, and pleads with the bandit chief that his life may be spared. The sight of the father's joy at having found his son softens the old man's heart and he relents.

G. MELIES.

RESOURCEFUL ROBERT. Robert loves a lady and the lady loves him but what her father thinks of Robert would better be left unsaid though it is apparent that the old gentleman is not of the same opinion, for he tells Robert very plainly that he will see him in some remote clime before he consents to take him as a son-in-law. Such a frank expression of opinion might discourage some people, but it never pauses Robert. He wants to marry the girl and no one else is going to be the same to him, and with such a resourceful person wanting is the same as having. The gardener washing the lawn down gives him an idea. He gets the gardener to wet them down with the hose, an impromptu shower bath that drenches both Robert and the girl from head to foot. Then an overturned rowboat and the girl's hat, floating with grim significance on the surface of the water, supply the rest of the little drama. The gardener, mindful of the promised tip, rushes for the father and the latter tears his hair as he thinks of his loved little girl lying cold and still at the bottom of the lake. He is in a mood to be repentant, and when Robert comes staggering through the brush bearing the limp form in his arms the old man experiences a revulsion of feeling and everybody lives happily ever after, even the well-tipped gardener.

THE SALT ON THE BIRD'S TAIL. The saying, "If you want to catch a bird put salt on its tail," is a pleasantry of such long standing it is familiar to every man, woman and child in existence. It furnishes a theme for this well-drawn and lively drama of home life, a tramp's gratitude and the cordiality of the little child who loses through an accident the canary bird which was given her by her father.

A tramp calls at the child's home for a "hand out." The mother gives him something to eat, the child provides him with a loaf of bread and sends him on his way rejoicing.

Shortly after the tramp has taken his departure the little girl tries to hang the cage with the bird in it on a nail on the porch. The cage falls to the ground and the bird escapes. Her mother is provoked and reprimands her for her carelessness.

The child, sobbing on the steps of the porch happens to think of putting salt on the bird's tail and immediately sets out with a box of salt and the bird cage in pursuit of her lost pet. Across fields, through woods we follow the child, through flower-decked pastures and stretches of new-mown hay and gorgeous "snaps" of byways and highways, that make the picture a thing of beauty and the story a panorama of interest.

The mother misses the child and goes in search of her. The girl, grown tired and footsore, lies down at the foot of a tree and falls asleep. The tramp is making his way leisurely through the brush and sees the escaped canary bird in the grass, cautiously approaches it and captures it with his cap, then resumes his stroll petting the bird as he goes along. He comes to where the little girl is sleeping, guesses the meaning of the salt box and the cage, decides to repay her for her kindness to him when he needed food, places the bird in the cage and hides behind a neighboring tree to watch the denouement. He doesn't have long to wait. The distracted mother coming along espies the child sleeping with her bird returned to its cage; she is astonished. The child awakens and can scarcely believe her senses. The lost are found and the smiling face of the grateful tramp adds to the happy ending.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

ZEB, ZEKE AND THE WIDOW.—Zeb keeps the General Store in a little country town and he and Zeke have been lifelong friends. They are a couple of curmudgeonous oldsters but there's a flash of youthful fire in their veins and this is fanned to white heat by the appearance of Mrs. Marion Clayton, a fascinating widow whose physician has prescribed an entire rest from all social duties and retirement to a country town. Mrs. Clayton finds the awkward flirtations of Zeb and Zeke a relief from the monotony of novel reading and accepts Zeke's invitation to go buggy riding. This is a blow to Zeb who hustles to the city and buys a second hand automobile. That wipes Zeke's eye but the stubborn wreck of wheel was once an auto balks. Zeb climbs under the machine in the most approved motor fashion and Zeke sits beside the widow and tinkers with the steering gear. He starts the auto and there commences a wild rush with Zeb pursuing in Zeke's buggy. Zeke wrecks the auto and then drives gleefully home in the buggy, waving fare and Zeb. Zeb threatens to sue Zeke to the tune of the wrecked machine and his damaged feelings and the old friendship bids fair to be broken up when the widow gets word that her fiance is about to arrive from abroad and her physician will permit her return to the city. It's a stunning blow to Zeb and Zeke but Zeb tears up the bill for the auto and over a couple of cigars "Five centers the best in the case" they talk over their love dream. And how the widow was a corker and it was worth while.

LOVE'S OLD, SWEET SONG.—Jack Bryant is one of a party of campers who are roughing it. Each man takes his turn at being cook and when Jack is told off as chef his first duty is to go for eggs. There is a farm-house nearby where he obtains a supply and the farmer's daughter is an attractive girl so attractive indeed that Jack deliberately breaks the eggs that he may have an excuse for returning for more. A third time he makes application and there is but one left. Cherrie is loath to let that go but Jack coaxes it from her for a keepsake. The incident has served to start a friendship that terminates in marriage and Cherrie and Jack start for the city after a rustic wedding. The marriage is a shock to aristocratic Mrs. Bryant and her son's wife is not made welcome, the more especially as it seems impossible to train her to city ways. But the mother and daughter-in-law are drawn closer together as time passes and Jack devotes his time to dissipation. The two women share the nightly vigil for the errant one and the mother comes to realize the sterling qualities that underlie the girl's rough exterior. One night Jack comes home considerably the worse for liquor and his mother's reproaches stir his latent manhood to maudlin self-sympathy. He is about to destroy himself when he is saved by the singing of love's old, sweet song.

PATHE FRERES.

UNCONSCIOUS HEROISM. It is the third month of the siege of Paris by the Germans, and provisions are already very scarce. Gappard, a soldier of the ranks, leaves the ramparts and goes to his home for the dinner his wife has ready for him. His little infant son is crying for milk of which there is none left, but hardened by the horrors and privations of the siege, Gappard is almost callously indifferent to the baby's cries. His elder son is, however, greatly distressed at the infant's cries, and accompanying his father back to duty, slips out of one of the gates unobserved, determined, if possible, to obtain the precious milk. The German sharpshooters seem to be everywhere, but by crawling on his hands and knees, and taking advantage of every bush and tree he manages to progress safely. Once he has a very narrow escape from discovery by a German picket whom he only just manages to elude by covering himself with some bundles of brushwood that were at hand. At last he reaches a farm house, and opening the yard door finds himself in the custody of a German sentry, the farm having been converted into German divisional headquarters. He is led before the German general, who had but a few minutes previous received a letter from his wife and his little son Fritz. The grizzled warrior, with the memory of his own boy still fresh in his mind, is touched by the lad's earnestness and simplicity and believes his story. Admiring his heroism he orders a meal to be provided for him, and after a bottle of milk has been given to him, orders that an orderly see him safely through the German lines. Leaving his guide, the lad makes his way stealthily back to the gate, but just as he is approaching, one of the French soldiers on duty sees him and fires. The youth falls wounded still clasping the bottle, and the French guard seeing him writhing in the roadway rushes out and carries him in. He is recognized in surprise by his father and it is found that he is practically unhurt, the bullet having only grazed him. His bottle of milk is safe, and unconsciously he has performed the part of a hero in order to satisfy the wants of his baby brother.

THE FALSE FRIEND.—John Haven and Will Harver are working on the same job. The former is married and has a little boy, Jack by name. The latter, however, has no family ties, and is in reality in love with his comrade's wife. Working upon a roof one day, Will loses his balance and falls to the ground. He is fatally injured, and amongst his papers John discovers a portrait of his wife, which reveals the truth to him in a flash. He returns home, and after a painful scene with his wife, separates from her, taking little Jack with him. A year passes, and the husband and wife have never met again. The woman works hard for her living and sees little Jack in secret as he goes and comes from school. Jack loves both his mother and father dearly, and says nothing of his meetings with the former to the latter, but one day the inevitable happens, and they both meet at the school door. Anger shows itself plainly in the face of the man, but the little lad slipping between his parents, stands like a connecting link between the two, and for his sake John stops to listen to his wife's pleadings, and consents to forget and forgive.

TRIP TO THE ISLE OF JERSEY. Disembarking at St. Helier, we proceed down King street and Queen street, watching the various merchandise, and then take our seats in a clear-a bus. On the road we pass some charming bungalows and also obtain a good view of a field of fine potatoes. Jersey cabbages, which are specially cultivated for the manufacture of walking sticks. Perhaps one of the most beautiful points on the island is Mont Orgueil [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

KALEM FILMS

"The Japanese Spy"

ISSUED WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 21st. LENGTH. 975 FEET

This 20th Century war story is a real novelty with genuine Japs. A Japanese Baron has been detailed to secure information regarding the American Army. His narrow escapes and final capture are incidents that add several thrills to this strong production.

"The Conspiracy of Pontiac"

OR

AT FORT DETROIT IN 1763

ISSUED FRIDAY, SEPT. 23rd. LENGTH, 975 FEET

This spectacular and very interesting story is an exact reproduction of the incidents as they transpired leading up to the attack on the little settlement of Detroit in the year 1763. "The Conspiracy of Pontiac" is without doubt one of the strongest and most realistic stories of early pioneer days ever presented to the American public. The costuming is absolutely correct and the scenic surroundings beautiful and true to the period.

Exceptionally fine four-color posters for both these headliners by the A. B. C, Co. of Cleveland, Ohio

KALEM CO., Inc.

Eastman Kodak Building

235-237-239 West 23rd St.

NEW YORK CITY

Lantern Slide

MATS AND BINDING STRIPS

WE manufacture a full line of these goods. Have you tried our GUMMED PAPER LETTERS for making up slides? If not, do so at once and save time and money.

CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES ON REQUEST

The Tablet & Ticket Co.

Chicago, New York, San Francisco

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.

ASHLAND, OHIO

EDISON FILMS

RELEASED SEPT. 27th

Over Mountain Passes

A most interesting, scenic and educational picture showing the curious ways in which copper ore is carried over the mountains in a section of Peru. The beasts of burden are Llamas and they are undoubtedly the most curious animals on the globe. Their actions alone are sufficient to make an interesting picture.

The Footlights or the Farm

A quiet story showing a young country girl's ambition to go on the stage and how the attempt met with failure, making her only too glad to go back to the farm and her old sweetheart. A view of dramatic life is shown which is new to most of us and decidedly interesting.

On One Reel—Approximate Length, 1,000 Feet

RELEASED SEPT. 30th

Ononko's Vow

A story of the famous Indian massacres at Deerfield, Mass. in 1675 and 1704. All exterior scenes were taken at Deerfield and show the beauties of that part of the country in both Summer and Winter. The picture throughout is handled on a most elaborate scale and makes altogether a big feature subject.

Approximate Length, 1,000 Feet

"Don't Fail to Book the Second of the Canadian Series—"MORE THAN HIS DUTY."

Get on Our Mailing List for the "KINETOGRAM"—Use A. B. C. Posters

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO. 72 Lakeside Ave., ORANGE, N. J. 90 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

the officer out of the second floor window. The express wagon arriving at this time with his trunk, Hallate, with the connivance of the express driver, empties its contents on the pavement and locks himself in the trunk and is carried up in it. Meantime, Augustus has had to take refuge under the sofa. What the final denouement is when Hallate comes out of the trunk, and Augustus from the sofa, you will have to see the picture to find out. How Officer O'Brien felt when he ascertained who it was he had so misused is also not going to be divulged here.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE SERGEANT.—A story laid in the Great Yosemite Valley during the eighties. Col. Westley has an only daughter who is the one softening influence in his rugged nature. She is fond of taking morning rides over the trails, and is usually accompanied by Robt. Adams, a sergeant at the post, and who is detailed by the father to look after her safety.

The companionship of these young people soon ripens into love, and despite the disparity of the rank of Adams and his sweetheart's father, they plight their troth. At the opening of the story we see them riding away from the post. Upon arriving at Nevada Falls, a favorite spot, they leave their horses and proceed on foot in order that they may ascend to a more advantageous height from which to view the gorgeous scenery that surrounds the grand historical Yosemite Valley.

While engaged in this pastime, an Indian renegade steals their horses, leaving them afoot many miles from the post. The evening is stealing upon them when they discover their loss and in their effort to follow the footprints of their horses they lose their way and are compelled to spend the night in the wilderness.

The Colonel becoming alarmed, sends out a searching party that finally succeeds in finding the missing couple. Upon returning to the post the sergeant is placed under arrest, despite the pleading of his unhappy sweetheart.

Now a lapse of a month occurs and we see a thrilling battle with the Indians, in which the Colonel, accompanied by his daughter, is cut off from the men and about to be taken by the redskins. It is at this time that Adams, only a private, shows his heroism by making a desperate dash through the lines of the enemy, rescuing the Colonel and his daughter from the murderous savages, though wounded almost to death. His recovery and promotion to 1st Lieutenant soon follow, and with the consent of the Colonel to his marriage with the lady of his choice, ends a pretty story of love, heroism and devotion to duty.

BERTIE'S ELOPEMENT.—"Love laughs at locksmiths" to say nothing about irate papas. Bertie the cherished son of indulgent parents finds some obstacles in the path, when he seeks the hand of fair Gladys, and is graciously ruffled, when his fiancee's father is so rude as to send him a note with the assurance that his request for his daughter's hand is declined with scorn—a hurried marshalling of Bertie's diplomatic forces to declare a line of action—in order that they may execute a flank movement on the stern old parent of the demure Gladys.

An exchange of notes between the lovers—a new use found for old shoes—and Bertie leads the invading forces ably supported by one ladder and a bundle of nerve—the fair queen of his dreams is rescued from her castle. The eloping twain outdistance the pursuing father and his arrival at the parson's house is just too late to be on time. He had been out-generated at all strategic points—and the day was won—and two was one.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

TWO WAIFS AND A STRAY.—"The puzzling problem" of caring for his two motherless children and getting in his ten hours of labor each day without neglecting either his responsibility as a father and his duties as a bread winner the poor man is absorbed with a mental conflict which might well tax a stronger and better equipped mind. In this subconscious state he leaves his little ones to get through the day as best they can, and while on his way to work is struck down by an automobile. His injuries are not apparent, and he refuses assistance; but the accident produces a concussion of the brain, abberation, and he loses consciousness of all preceding events. In this blank state of mind as to his individual identity he wanders from place to place until he reaches a farmhouse in the country, where he asks for food, secures employment and finds a home.

His children have been waiting for their father's return until, exhausted and hungry, they appeal to a kind neighbor, who helps them from her scanty means, giving them a dollar to buy food until they hear from their father, or are taken care of by the children's society, an officer of which has called to look into their case.

The boy, Dick, a bright youngster, decides to go into business with the dollar and take care of his sister, rather than be separated from her in the care of the society. They start out to make their way in life, after establishing themselves in the back yard of a piano factory, transforming an unused packing box into a shelter. Grace purchases a stock of newspapers and disposes of them to the passengers and passers-by at the railroad station, while Dick starts as a bootblack. They manage to keep themselves in food and under cover in their improvised apartment.

The good farmer and his wife, where the father of the two waifs is living, have a little girl whom the mother takes to town on a shopping tour. While in the city she loses the child and returns home heartbroken. The child wanders about, is picked up by the two waifs, who take her to their retreat and care for her.

The Children's Aid Society announce their excursions and vacations for poor children. The farmer and his wife read about them, decide to visit the society's country home in search of their little one. They go and find their daughter, who tells them how she was cared for by Grace and Dick, and by them brought to the excursion. The man and his wife meet the little protectors of their child and invite them to their home for a vacation. They accept, and when they reach the farmhouse they meet their father, whose mind is restored at sight of his children. They are given a home with the good people under the same roof and direct care of their father, who has made himself a valuable and faithful employee.

A LUNATIC AT LARGE.—A college professor, named Tuttle, instructor of zoology and "bugology," becomes insane and is committed to an asylum for the insane.

A Mr. Ward, living near the asylum, receives word from a friend that an eminent scientist, Professor Burling, specialist in entomology, will visit America and will call on him.

Professor Tuttle escapes from the asylum and wanders off into the woods in search of rare specimens of insect life. Professor Burling, passing through the same wood on his way to visit Mr. Ward, sits down to rest and incidentally finds some interesting species of life. He carefully examines them with his magnifying glass, which he puts back into his satchel, then falls asleep. The escaped lunatic comes along, finds the eminent scientist enjoying his nap, takes his satchel and goes in further search of the animalcular kingdom.

He saunters along until he comes to the home of Mr. Ward, enters and proceeds to make himself at home by removing his shoes and coat, seating himself at the table and examining things with the magnifying glass. The maid comes in. He hops around like a frog, examines her hair and plucks the bow from her cap, which he investigates very carefully, thinking it some rare species of butterfly. The girl runs from the room and summons her employer. Mr. Ward looks at the foolish professor, who jumps onto the table and does other surprising capers which sets his host guessing until he sees the satchel with the name "John Burling" on it. He tries to make his guest at ease, and while he is talking the lunatic jerks the buttons from Mr. Ward's vest as if they were beetles or some other living thing that might escape him. Humoring his eccentric friend, Mr. Ward induces him to retire.

While all this is going on the guards at the asylum discover the escape of Professor Tuttle and start out to find him. They call at Mr. Ward's, who informs them he has no tidings of Professor Tuttle. They hasten away. They have no sooner gone when the real Professor Burling comes to visit Mr. Ward, who mistakes him for the escaped lunatic, ties him to a chair and calls up the asylum to come get him at once. They get there in a buggy, but fail to recognize the captive as the lunatic, whom they describe and whom Mr. Ward identifies as the man he is entertaining. They release Burling, rush into the bedroom and find the "bird" has flown through the window.

They all start in pursuit; the chase is exciting, and the daffy professor proves himself to be a regular "cut-up," jumping up into the trees and doing some extraordinary stunts from the lamppost and anything else that gets in his way, until he is captured in a lake, into which he makes an Annette Kellerman dive.

Professor John Burling is disgusted with his experience and the whole blooming business, and decides to get away from it all. Mr. Ward seems to be in wrong with his distinguished guest, but after much explanation and reconsideration of the matter they look at the whole affair as a huge joke, and have a jolly good laugh over a social glass and a friendly cigar.

JEAN THE MATCH-MAKER.—Bent on having a summer's vacation, two working girls hire a tent and pitch their camp on the shore of a beautiful lake amid rural and quiet surroundings. As fate would have it, two farmer lads, living with their widowed mother not far distant from the camp, are making their way through brush and lanes until they unexpectedly come onto the bivouac of the girls, mutual embarrassments are shown, and the boys, who are bashful swains, stand not on the manner of their going, making a hasty and awkward retreat.

The boys tell their mother about the two "peachy" girls, and she decides to send them some freshly cooked doughnuts, and employs the faithful dog, "Jean," as a messenger, and the dog at once carries them to the girls, much to their surprise. The boys make another venture to the camp, but meet with little encouragement; they are not assertive, and their natural timidity and boorishness amuse the girls exceedingly.

The young fellows are not discouraged in their advancements, and find "Jean" a ready emissary in their embarrassment. She makes many visits [illegible] camp with tokens of their respect and [illegible] The girls are puzzled by these frequent visits [illegible] dog and decide to discover the reason of her happiness and the place from whence she comes. They [illegible] high, and in going encounter a cow, which stands at bay very [illegible] frightened that [illegible] by only being the two boys and their dog [illegible] to the rescue. The boys now [illegible] courage and when the girls tell them about the dog and start [illegible] to [illegible] where she came from, the boys offer their escort and invite them to their home. The girls accept, the boys introduce them to their mother, they are invited to take dinner, and things progress very satisfactorily and happily to all concerned.

The young people go out for a stroll, leaving the mother and "Jean" alone. The mother begins to think that her boys are hopelessly smitten with the girls and gives way to a goodly foreboding of a double marriage. The innocent and good old dog trying to prove herself her comforter and that she did not know she was being used as a match-maker.

A MODERN KNIGHT ERRANT.—Cyril, a young college student, starts out to find employment during the summer vacation to enable him to more comfortably pursue his studies during the Fall and Winter.

He secures work with a farmer and turns in with the rest of the hands. Living in the neighborhood is a sweet young girl named Mary, whose mother, a widow, and a lame brother make up the household. She becomes acquainted with Cyril and soon they are the best of friends, which arouses the jealousy of Tom, a big bully of a fellow who prides himself on his ability to rub it into everybody else, and does not fail to do so whenever he gets a chance, not even sparing Mary's poor crippled brother, upon whom he wreaks the wrath of his pent-up jealousy.

He tries to bully Mary into cutting off her friendship for Cyril and accepting his attentions. Cyril sees Tom grasp Mary's arm and threaten her, learns the reason and challenges the bully to fight him. Cyril asks Mary to retire, and the two men have a fist fight, which is very exciting and strenuous, in which Cyril proves himself the master completely to the overthrow of Tom, who sullenly slinks away with the jeers and ridicule of all the boys in town.

Mary is nervously waiting to hear the issue of the battle and hoping anxiously for Cyril to win. Her brother comes, tells her Tom is completely vanquished. Mary runs to Cyril, who is nursing a sprained wrist. He is trying to bind his handkerchief around it. She offers to do it for him, and just as their hands touch their hearts respond. She throws her arms around his neck, while he enfolds her in his arms; then she breaks away and runs for the house, frightened at her impulsiveness. Cyril—well, he just looks as if he were the luckiest and happiest man in all Christendom.

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS.

Los Angeles, Cal.—E. I. Kennedy has leased the property at 312 East Fifth street, where he will erect a new moving picture and vaudeville theater.

Lowell, Mass.—The New Scenic Theater on Paige street was opened on Labor Day.

Port Lavaca, Tex.—Wilson & Best are having erected an iron building on North street to accommodate a moving picture show which will be operated by Mrs. J. W. Thomas. The McKamey Brothers are also having a building on Guadalupe street fitted up for another moving picture theater which will be conducted by Nicholson Brothers.

Tilton, N. H.—The Pastime Theater has been opened by Herbert A. Mann.

Franklinville, N. Y.—The new $8,000 amusement house here has been completed and is doing a fine business.

Fitchburg, Mass.—The Cumings Theater will reopen in a short time and will be devoted to moving pictures and vaudeville.

Harrisburg, Penn.—Major John T. Ensminger will open a moving picture theater at 1205 North Third street.

Providence, R. I.—Extensive changes and improvements are being made at Bullock's Theater on Richmonds street. A new lobby is being built and the interior redecorated.

Peabody, Mass.—The Olympic Theater is now being operated as a moving picture theater.

Lemont, Ill.—Edward Masks and Charles Brown have rented Klein Hall on Stephen street.

Wheeling, W. Va.—Arthur Snodgrass will open his moving picture palace in the R. P. Miller building, on South Fourth street.

Le Mars, Iowa.—G. M. Solon has bought from Van Dalfsen & Fowler the White Theater.

Bellefontaine, Ohio.—Percy Volk has sold the Volk Theater on West Columbus avenue to Frank E. Rutter, who is now in charge. The popular theater has been closed until August 25. The stage will be torn out and rebuilt. The interior will be redecorated, the front will be remodeled and a new picture machine will be installed. The theater re-opened on August 25 under the new name of "The Royal."

Philadelphia, Penn.—The J. D. Allen Company has completed plans for a $10,000 moving picture theater, which D. S. Bader will erect at Forty-ninth and Yocum streets.

Brown, Kan.—Dick Fields and William Campbell have opened a picture show in the Campbell building.

George Kleine Importations

Featuring the Best European Films

GAUMONT AND

Scene from A CORSICAN VENDETTA
A STIRRING MOUNTAIN DRAMA
To Be Released September 21, 1910

No

Motion Picture Theatre

has a well rounded booking for the week unless it has included the George Kleine Films—Gaumont and Urban-Eclipse.

They give a variety which cannot but please your audience.

Remember many of your patrons are foreigners and many are lovers of travel and some like to learn a little that is worth while each day. The people who enjoy our films are not the noisy types of people, so you don't hear so much talk from them. But the steady, studious patron likes variety. We produce that very thing.

URBAN - ECLIPSE

THE ENTIRE RELEASES FOR THE CURRENT WEEK CAREFULLY DESCRIBED ON ANOTHER PAGE

BULLETINS Issued Regularly Free to our Friends | 52 State Street George Kleine Chicago, Illinois | POSTERS Now Made in Four Colors

WATCH FOR IT

AN ARIZONA ROMANCE

To Be Released September 21st

A Western Drama of great interest that will thrill all. Something different from the usual run

NEW YORK 41 West 25th Street PATHÉ FRÈRES CHICAGO 35 Randolph St.

Tulaire, Cal. The Parr Theater Company has leased the new concrete building on South J. street and will operate same as picture and vaudeville house.

Vincennes, Ind. The Colonial Theater is now showing moving pictures and vaudeville. The admission price is five cents.

Williamsport, Penn. L. C. Wright has taken the management of the Orpheum Theater and will in the future conduct it as a moving picture and illustrated song theater.

Morristown, N. J. David Conkling has opened a moving picture and vaudeville show to be known as the Morris Plains Casino. The performance will be given in open air.

Philadelphia, Penn. Daniel Humphries, formerly manager of the Lyceum, later the Avenue Theater in the city, has opened a fine new amusement house at Seventy-third street and Woodland avenue. He will run all of the latest and best films.

St. Louis, Mo. The Olesy Amusement Company applied for a permit to erect a $20,000 one-story moving picture theater at 3131-33 South Grand avenue.

Putman, Conn. Samuel Morrell has assumed the management of the Bradley Theater.

Duluth, Minn. Crockett Brown, manager of the Unique Theater is about to start a branch show at Keewatin.

New York City. A new moving picture theater is being erected at the northwest corner of Amsterdam avenue and Eighty-ninth street.

St. Louis, Mo. Another fireproof moving picture and vaudeville theater is being erected on the property just east of the Suburban tracks on Easton avenue, which will have a seating capacity of about 1,650.

Newark, N. J. A new moving picture theater is being planned to be erected at the corner of Clinton and Jelliff avenues which will cost about $5,000.

Brooklyn, N. Y. At the northeast corner of Bushwick avenue and Cooper street a new moving picture show is being established for Theress. Hentsel.

Springfield, Mass. The New Plaza Theater at 12-16 Taylor street opened last week and met with great success, the doors being crowded from the time they opened till they closed.

Bay City, Mich. Manager Leuby has opened his enlarged moving picture theater and is doing an excellent business.

Harrisburg, Penn. Peter Settino will break ground for the erection of a moving picture theater on South Front street.

Harrisburg, Penn. A new moving picture theater is being erected at No. 1205 North Third street.

Newburyport, Mass. Manager Thayer of the Orpheum Theater is to open a new picture palace which will be run under the same style as the others.

New Incorporations.

Houston, Tex. The Lone Star Amusement Company. Capital $4,500. Directors: E. N. Burns, L. M. Mitchell and W. D. Reynolds.

Chicago, Ill. Central Boulevard Theater Company. Capital $5,000. Directors: Samuel W. Newman, George S. Stemer and Rebecca Sobotoff.

St. Louis, Mo. Eastern Amusement Company. Capital $10,500. Directors: Harry V. Harkins and William F. Harkins.

Chicago, Ill. The Vestra Theater Company. Capital $2,000. Directors: Albert E. Campion, Henry H. Peedon and Edward F. Barnard.

Indianapolis, Ind. The Crystal Amusement Company. Capital $5,000. Directors: C. E. Harmon, Edward Arganbright and Agnes V. Harmon.

Chicago, Ill. The Starlight Amusement Company. Capital $2,000. Directors: Fred Lowenthal, M. A. Haney and G. W. Kunstman.

Chicago, Ill. Orpheo Film Company. Capital $3,000. Fred W. Heerstetter, F. A. Woodrevke and Arthur Mullberger.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

The following films have been released week of September 5, by the Empire Film Company, 150 East Fourteenth street, cor. Third avenue, New York, N. Y.:

Sept.	5—You Saved My Life (Imp.)	995
Sept.	5—The Little Blind Girl (Eclair)	972
Sept.	5—Lost Chance (Eclair)	442
Sept.	5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Yankee)	1000
Sept.	6—Western Justice (Bison)	990
Sept.	6—The Girl Next Door (Powers)	500
Sept.	6—The Inconstant (Powers)	500
Sept.	6—Mother (Thanhouser)	975
Sept.	7—Troubles of a Snorer (Atlas)	915
Sept.	7—Caprice of a Dame (Ambrosio)	730
Sept.	7—Friedt Has Lost His Collar Stud (Ambrosio)	230
Sept.	7—His Indian Bride (Champion)	940
Sept.	7—Moonshiner's Daughter (Nestor)	962
Sept.	8—A Sister's Sacrifice (Imp.)	990
Sept.	8—Cowboy's Courtship (Def.)	247
Sept.	8—An Athletic Instructor (Def.)	688
Sept.	8—The Minister's Speech (Film d'Art)	400
Sept.	8—Conscience of a Child (Film d'Art)	482
Sept.	9—Doctor's Carriage (Thanhouser)	1000
Sept.	9—True Indian Brave (Bison)	1000
Sept.	10—For the Sake of a Girl (Powers)	975
Sept.	10—Robinson Crusoe (Great Northern)
Sept.	10—A Fleet Well Received (Italia)	500
Sept.	12—Mt. Cowgal (Italia)	500

American Moving Picture Machine Company

Manufacturers of the STANDARD

AUTOMATIC MOVING PICTURE MACHINE

Telephone 4517 4518 Beekman

101-102 Beekman Street - - New York

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS

1402 Broadway

Fort Wayne, Indiana

Send TODAY for our FREE descriptive booklet

THE ENTERPRISE MODEL B

Portable Calcium Gas Outfit

Is the only Substitute for Electricity for projecting Motion Picture or Stereopticon views and is the

Only Satisfactory Portable Outfit

because it operates by WATER PRESSURE, IS CONSTANT, REGULAR AND RELIABLE and has no complicated spring valves to corrode, choke up and otherwise get out of order. Is patented.

"OXONE" in SQUARE CAKES is most Satisfactory for the production of Oxygen Gas. Send for particulars.

For Sale by Dealers

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. MANUFACTURERS AND SALES AGENTS 564 and 572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO

LICENSED RELEASES.

BIOGRAPH.

Aug. 15—The Usurer (Dr.).....994
Aug. 18—When We Were in Our 'Teens.....475
Aug. 18—An Old Story With a New Ending....512
Aug. 22—The Sorrows of the Unfaithful (Dr.) 994
Aug. 25—Wilful Peggy (Dr.) 997
Aug. 29—The Modern Prodigal (Dr.).....992
Sept. 1—The Affair of an Egg (Dr.).....995
Sept. 1—Muggsy Becomes a Hero (Dr.).....693
Sept. 5—A Summer Idyl (Dr.) 991
Sept. 8—Little Angels of Luck (Dr.).....998
Sept. 12—A Mohawk's Way (Dr.).....991
Sept. 15—In Life's Cycle (Dr.).....997
Sept. 19—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.).....987
Sept. 22—The Oath and the Man (Dr.).....997

EDISON CO.

Aug. 30—From Tyranny to Liberty (Dr.) 975
Sept. 2—The Man Who Learned (Dr.).....990
Sept. 6—The Big Scoop (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 9—Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (Co).995
Sept. 13—The Great Secret (Com.).....990
Sept. 16—Bumptious as a Fireman (Com.).....
Sept. 16—From the Arctics to the Tropics (Scenic) .....
Sept. 20—An Unselfish Love (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Jar of Cranberry Sauce (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Almost a Hero.....980

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 10—An Indian Girl's Awakening (Dr.)....854
Sept. 14—Whist (Com.) 545
Sept. 14—He Met the Champion (Com.).....455
Sept. 17—Hank and Lank—Joy Riding (Com.).233
Sept. 17—The Pony Express Rider (Dr.).....750
Sept. 21—A Close Shave (Com.).....553
Sept. 21—A Flirty Affliction (Com.).....416
Sept. 24—The Tout's Remembrance (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some (Com.) 307
Sept. 28—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660

KALEM CO.

Aug. 10—The Borrowed Baby (Com.).....905
Aug. 31—A Game with Fame (Dr.).....975
Sept. 2—White Man's Money the Indian's Curse (Dr.) 980
Aug. 12—The Call of the Blood (Dr.).....940
Aug. 17—The Perversity of Fate (Dr.).....970
Aug. 19—True to His Trust (Dr.).....822
Aug. 19—Running Fire (Com.).....175
Aug. 24—The Romany Wife (Dr.) 980
Aug. 26—The Canadian Moonshiners (Dr.) 975
Aug. 31—A Game with Fame (Dr.).....975
Sept. 2—White Man's Money (Dr.).....980
Sept. 7—Mama's Birthday Present (Com.).....985
Sept. 9—The Cow Puncher's Sweetheart (Dr.).972
Sept. 14—The Little Mother (Dr.).....980
Sept. 16—A Leap for Life (Dr.).....985
Sept. 21—The Japanese Spy (Dr.).....975
Sept. 23—The Conspiracy of Pontiac (Dr.).....975

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Aug. 22—Cowboy Chivalry 990
Aug. 25—The Anarchist's Grip (Dr.) 500
Aug. 25—The Dream Pill (Com.) 480
Aug. 29—The Stronger Sex (Dr.).....990
Sept. 1—The Man Who Died (Dr.).....990
Sept. 5—The Healing Faith (Dr.).....990
Sept. 8—Matilda's Winning Ways (Com.)....900
Sept. 12—The Greenhorn and the Girl (Com.)..990
Sept. 15—Mrs. Rivington's Pride (Dr.).....500
Sept. 15—Resourceful Robert (Com.).....450
Sept. 19—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.)....990
Sept. 22—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.).....990

GAUMONT.

G. Kleine.

Aug. 30—Ancient Castles of Austria (Sc.).....299
Sept. 8—Unrequited Love (Dr.).....584
Sept. 3—Calino Takes New Lodgings (Com.)...427
Sept. 6—The Way of the Transgressor is Hard (Dr.) 952
Sept. 10—Robert, the Devil 998
Sept. 13—An Easy Winner 463
Sept. 13—A Powerful Voice (Com.).....486
Sept. 17—Poems in Pictures 391
Sept. 17—A Dummy in Disguise (Com.).....581
Sept. 20—Tactics of Cupid (Dr.) 896
Sept. 20—Sunset (Scenic) 102
Sept. 24—The Reserved Shot (Dr.).....741
Sept. 24—The Times Art Out of Joint (Com.)..252
Sept. 27—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Sept. 27—Too Much Water (Com.).....351

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

G. Kleine.

Aug. 17—The Rival Serenaders (Com.).....575
Aug. 17—Paris, Viewed from the Eiffel Tower (Scenic) 375
Aug. 24—Shipbuilding of Toulson, France (Educ.) 296
Aug. 24—Escape of the Royalists (Dr.) 670
Aug. 31—Buying a Beard (Com.).....495
Aug. 31—A Cruise in the Mediterranean (Sc.)..420
Sept. 7—Ingratitude (Dr.) 749
Sept. 7—Military Kite Flying at Rheims (Sc.)..256
Sept. 14—The Artisan (Dr.) 457
Sept. 14—The Tramps (Com.) 525
Sept. 21—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.).....699
Sept. 21—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.)..269

G. MELIES.

Aug. 11—The Return of To-wa-wa (Dr.).....950
Aug. 18—Her Winning Way (Com.).....950
Aug. 25—The Romance of Circle Ranch (Dr.)..950
Sept. 1—Won in the Fifth 950
Sept. 8—Baseball; That's All (Com.).....950
Sept. 15—In the Mission Shadows (Dr.).....950
Sept. 22—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950

PATHE FRERES.

Sept. 9—Lucy at Boarding School (Com.).....528
Sept. 9—The Belgian Army (Ed.) 472
Sept. 10—The Appeal of the Prairie (Dr.).....990
Sept. 12—A Good Glue (Com.).....449
Sept. 12—Hunting the Panther (Scenic).....459
Sept. 14—The Two Sisters (Dr.).....975
Sept. 16—Unconscious Heroism (Dr.).....951
Sept. 17—The Vagaries of Love (Com.).....950
Sept. 19—The False Friend (Dr.).....558
Sept. 19—Trip to the Isle of Jersey (Scenic)....397
Sept. 21—An Arizona Romance (Dr.).....990
Sept. 23—Max in a Dilemma (Com.).....446
Sept. 23—The Mexican Tumblers.....476
Sept. 24—A Simple Mistake (Com.).....950

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

Aug. 29—The Emigrant 995
Sept. 1—The Road to Richmond (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—Led by Little Hands (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—Jim the Ranchman (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—Little Boy (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 15—The Schoolmaster of Mariposa (Dr.).1000
Sept. 19—Bertie's Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—Big Medicine (Com.).....
Sept. 22—The Sergeant (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 25—The Old Swimming Hole.....1000
Sept. 29—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 23—The Three Cherry Pits (Dr.).....995
Aug. 26—The Men Haters' Club (Com.).....985
Aug. 27—Rose Leaves (Dr.).....995
Aug. 30—Jean and the Calico Doll (Dr.).....970
Sept. 2—A Life for a Life (Dr.).....995
Sept. 3—The Wrong Box (Com.).....985
Sept. 6—Chew Chew Land (Com.).....600
Sept. 6—A Rough Weather Courtship (Com.)..400
Sept. 9—How She Won Him (Dr.).....980
Sept. 10—The Three of Them (Dr.).....985
Sept. 13—The Sepoy's Wife (Dr.) 990
Sept. 16—Two Waifs and a Stray (Dr.).....985
Sept. 17—A Lunatic at Large (Com.).....997
Sept. 20—Jean, the Match-Maker (Com.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Modern Knight Errant (Dr.).....967
Sept. 24—Renunciation (Dr.) 999
Sept. 30—A Home Melody (Dr.).....907

If It Were Possible

for you, a prospective purchaser to visit our factory, see and follow the methods used in the making and assembling of the various parts of the

EDENGRAPH

from the raw material to the perfectly built and smooth running projection apparatus, you would fully appreciate quality.

The 1911 MODEL EDENGRAPH is made for men who want their money's worth.

Write to

THE EDENGRAPH MANUFACTURING CO.

GEORGE KLEINE, Pres.

135 West Third Street, New York, N. Y.

The Elgin National Trophy Road Races

WERE AN AUTHORIZED NATIONAL EVENT WITNESSED BY HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF SPECTATORS

The reproduction of same was secured exclusively by us

The race was 305 miles over a course 8 1-2 miles long, full of dangerous turns and hills on which the record speed of 62 1-2 miles per hour was maintained throughout.

From 5,000 feet of negative we have condensed a film 1,030 feet long containing all the sensational features. Photography unexcelled. Three-color posters.

If your exchange does not carry this best racing film ever produced you can book it direct from us

American Motor Racing Picture Co.

330 EAST 35th STREET · · CHICAGO, ILL.

THE WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

Monday, September 19.

Biograph—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.) 987
Lubin—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.) 990
Pathe—The False Friend (Dr.) 558
Pathe—Trip to the Isle of Jersey (Scenic) 397
Selig—Bertie's Elopement (Dr.) .....
Selig—Big Medicine (Com.) .....

Tuesday, September 20.

Edison—An Unselfish Love (Dr.) .....
Gaumont—Tactics of Cupid (Dr.) 896
Gaumont—Sunset (Scenic) 102
Vitagraph—Jean, the Match-Maker (Com.) 1000

Wednesday, September 21.

Essanay—A Close Shave (Com.) 553
Essanay—A Flirty Affliction (Com.) 416
Kalem—The Japanese Spy (Dr.) 975
Pathe—An Arizona Romance (Dr.) 990
Urban—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.) 699
Urban—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.) 269

Thursday, September 22.

Biograph—The Oath and the Man (Dr.) 997
Lubin—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.) 990
Melies—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950
Selig—The Sergeant (Dr.) 1000

Friday, September 23.

Edison—A Jar of Cranberry Sauce (Com.) .....
Edison—Almost a Hero (Com.) 980
Pathe—Max in a Dilemma (Com.) 446
Pathe—The Mexican Tumblers 476
Kalem—The Conspiracy of Pontiac (Dr.) 975
Vitagraph—A Modern Knight Errant (Dr.) 967

Saturday, September 24.

Essanay—The Tout's Remembrance (Dr.) 1000
Gaumont—The Reserved Shot (Dr.) 741
Gaumont—The Times Are Out of Joint (Com.) 252
Pathe—A Simple Mistake (Com.) 950
Vitagraph—Renunciation (Dr.) 999

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING.

ORTHO FILM CO. re-develops, cleans, restores, tints, tones and colors old or new films, makes film titles. Work done at your own exchange, if desired. Hochstetter's processes. ORTHO FILM CO., 2751 W. Division street, Chicago, Ill.

FOR SALE—Edison Underwriters' Model "B," complete; latest model; good rheostat; extra quality lenses; in actual service 30 days. Cash, $160. MODEL "B," care Moving Picture World.

WANTED—150 opera chairs, moving picture machine, asbestos booth and alternating rheostat. HOOVER & BOLLINGER, Mount Union, Pa.

FOR SALE—250 Opera Chairs, cheap. Apply POWELL, Powell's Pharmacy, Montezuma, Ind.

WANTED to exchange 74 Buffet B flat clarionet, used two months, for Edison one-pin machine, preferred, or other good one-pin machine. ARTHUR DREAMLAND THEATER, Syracuse, N. Y.

FOR SALE—$35 takes new Edison Oxygen Generator and Saturator, dynamic burner and two boxes of oxone. DR. A. O'NEILL, Ridgewood, N. J.

FOR LEASE—Picture theater, new, might sell. Box 471, Sutton, Neb.

TO LET—Loft or part, 124 East 14th St. Low rent. Apply in Cigar Store.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—Effect workers for moving picture shows. Write, SPRAGG AMUSEMENT CO., Bellaire, Ohio.

WANTED—Operator; must be practical mechanical electrician; 7½ hours a day, six-day week; permanent position. A. ESPOSITO, Morristown, N. J.

ESSANAY FILMS

A GREAT RACING PLAY! A FEATURE PICTURE!

Scene from "The Tout's Remembrance."

Release of Saturday, September 24

"THE TOUT'S REMEMBRANCE"

(Length, approx. 1000 ft.)

This picture is a decided feature in our list of Western releases. It is a story of the race track with lively action, deep heart interest and touches of sparkling comedy. The racing scenes are actual and were obtained expressly for this picture at Jaurez, Mexico. The photography is fine and the cast, including Miss Ethel Clayton, is excellent.

Get the Poster

If It's an Essanay Comedy It's Good Comedy

Release of Wednesday, September 21

A CLOSE SHAVE (Length, approx. 553 ft.) and A FLIRTY AFFLICTION (Length, approx. 416 ft.)

A reel of roaring good comedy. Good stories, clever and full of wit, effectively produced, and of excellent laughing qualities. Read the descriptions and book quick.

The Essanay Indian Head Poster

They are going fast. We must have your order immediately. The Essanay Indian Head poster placard, a fine art lithograph poster, mounted on heavy card board, made in seven colors and many tints, will lend added charm to your lobby and increase your box office receipts. Price 25 Cents, express collect.

Address, Poster Dept., B, Essanay Film Mfg. Co., 435 N. Clark St., Chicago.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

LONDON 5 Wardour St. W | 435 N. Clark Street CHICAGO | BERLIN 35 Friederich Str.

In answering advertisers, kindly mention the Moving Picture World.

SELIG'S Great Western Military Romance

"THE SERGEANT" A STORY TOLD IN THE "YOSEMITE VALLEY"

Length About 1000 Ft. Code Word Sergeant.

RELEASED SEPT. 22nd

"THE OLE SWIMMIN HOLE"

An Out of the Ordinary Drama.

RELEASED SEPT. 25th

Length About 990 Ft. Code Word Swimmin.

Selig Polyscope Co. CHICAGO, U.S.A. 45-47-49 Randolph Street

THE KENTUCKY PIONEER

A Dramatic Story of the Early Settlers of Kentucky, intense in situations and pleasing in theme.

RELEASED SEPT. 29th

Length About 1000 Ft. Code Word Kentucky.

2 ON 1. Start October Right and Book a Live One

"A COLD STORAGE ROMANCE" (Comedy Drama) AND "MY FRIEND, THE DOCTOR" (A Comedy)

Combined Length About 1000 Ft.

RELEASED OCT. 3. Code Words Storage and Friend.

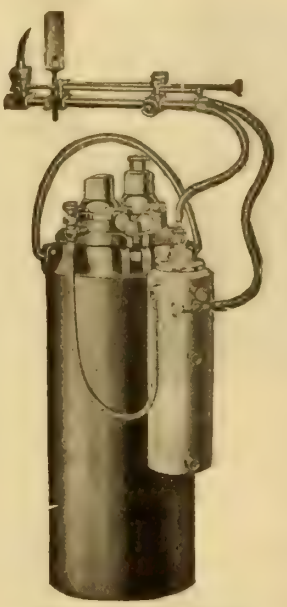
"JUSTINIAN AND THEODORA"

EDISON
Oxygen Generator and Saturator

Important Reduction in Price

$37.50



(Goodyear Patent)

This Portable Gas Making Outfit has been designed to produce a complete generating outfit to take the place of Oxygen and Hydrogen gas sold in cylinders.

In reducing the price, we have retained the same high efficiency, safety, artistic appearance and excellent results.

SEND FOR DESCRIPTIVE CIRCULAR No. 415

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

72 Lakeside Avenue, Orange, N. J.
90 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

JOBBERS OF EDISON PROJECTING KINETOSCOPES

P. L. Waters, 41 East 21st St., New York City.
General Film Co., 564 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
General Film Co., 4th and Green Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.
Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., 314 Superior Avenue, N. E., Cleveland, O.
Kleine Optical Co., 52 State Street, Chicago, Ill.
Yale Film Exchange Co., 622 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.
Geo. Breck, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

BIO CARBONS

What They Say About Bio Carbons

W. S. Milliken, President of the United Film Exchange, Troy, N. Y. says

"I have been so convinced by our customers' reports that the BIO Carbon is far and away ahead of any other carbon, that we shall handle the BIO exclusively hereafter."

If you want to know how good a carbon can be pin your check for $1.50 to this "ad" for a prepaid sample of 50 5/8 in. x 6 in. Cored BIO Carbons. (for A. C. or D. C.)

For samples write your name here

Your Name .....

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK - - - - - 39 Cortlandt Street
PITTSBURG - - - - - 421 Frick Building
MILWAUKEE - - - - - 114-116 Huron Street
SAN FRANCISCO - - - 195-197 Fremont Street

Independent Film Stories.

IMP

PRESSED ROSES.—Roses and trousers have little in common and pressed roses presage something wrong in the scheme of things. When roses are pressed instead of a pair of trousers, chaos and confusion should be the result, and is the result, until in the end the mystery is unravelled and doubt, vanquished, vanishes. A young man pawns his time-piece in order to obtain money with which to procure flowers and ticket for the theater for his girl. He sends for a messenger to deliver the flowers with a note, at the same time sending his trousers to be pressed. The messenger boy confuses both boxes, and as a result, chaos ensues. The young man, after patiently waiting for the return of his unreturning trousers, decides to go in search of them. Arriving at the tailor shop, he finds the tailor pressing the roses, and when the shock is over and he feels better, he realizes the mistake. Immediately he rushes to his lady friend's home, and finds her with his trousers in her hands, reading the note intended to accompany the roses, "Wear These To-night." Long and hard he attempts to straighten out the unfortunate coil of blunder and mishap, but the girl is obdurate and will not listen to his explanation or heed his entreaties. At last, despairing of the task, he is leaving the house when the girl's sister calls him back, and he enters the house and discovers the girl pressing the misdirected mischief-causing trousers. Then, of course, they kiss and make up.

ANNIE.—A son's choice of a wife is not always his parents' choice, and if the son be determined, the results are generally unpleasant—unpleasant for all concerned. A young military student, just graduated, returns home and meets a little country girl with whom he falls in love. There are objections on both sides of the families, and the path is very tough. He is suddenly called away for duty in the Philippine Islands, and decides in spite of the double opposition to marry her before he leaves. Her brother follows them to the court house and destroys the marriage record. With no record of her marriage to their son, after his departure, his parents disown the young wife. One year later, destitute and desperate, she leaves the baby on its grandmother's steps, where it is found and reared. Then word is received of the son's death. Two years speed by and the mother comes back to claim the child. She is taken in by her mother-in-law, and into their midst suddenly walks the soldier-son, and refutes with his presence the story of his death. After the reunion has been fittingly celebrated, a justice of peace enters and shows the reverse side of the marriage license on a blotter, which settles all disputes and doubt.

LUX FILMS.

ONLY A BUNCH OF FLOWERS.—His watched for opportunity has come, Jack who has followed her, notices the admiring glance at a small bunch of flowers, in the hands of a flower seller. Quickly Jack buys the bunch and presents them, a chat follows, the friendship ripens, and we next see them in their home, where a little one has come to share their happiness, but, alas, the mother's health is failing her, poor Jack spends his all in an endeavor to keep, but all in vain, and she is at last taken to the hospital, whilst their child is placed in a temporary home.

Trouble follows trouble. Jack has to leave the home where such happiness has reigned, and on arriving to pay his usual visit to the hospital, he learns that his wife has died. In despair he sits on a bench on the roadside. A flower seller also sits down. Jack wishes to buy a posey but, alas, his pockets are empty. The temptation to steal a bunch comes but a young lady passing buys a bunch which Jack pleads for.

With joy he goes for his little Dot and together they go to the grave where he hands the child the little posey which she puts on her mother's last resting place.

THAT TYPIST AGAIN.—Mr. Johnson starts for the office leaving his better half in anything but a pleasant mood, and is refreshed to have a pleasant word with the typist who certainly appears to be more amiable than Mrs. Johnson just now.

That lady has made up her mind to pay hubbie a surprised visit "On Mischief Bent." She is announced. Poor Mr. Johnson has never dared to mention the need of a typist and to avoid a scene she is sent to a different room, but a pair of lady's gloves catch Mrs. Johnson's gaze and an altercation commences. Clerks and typist set to work to play a joke on the lady, disguising himself as a girl, one of the clerks takes the place of the typewriter, in rushes Mrs. Johnson to find that there is no cause for jealousy with such a countenance as that typist possesses.

ECLAIR.

JULIE COLONNA.—At the time in which the Orsini were holding the Gottaferrata Fortress, Prince Filippo of that powerful house fell in love with Julie the beautiful sister of Prince Colonna.

The confident Filippo makes demand for the hand of Julie, but being disdainfully refused, he swears to take revenge upon her house. He therefore plans a raid upon the Castle of Colonna, and in the midst of the confusion which ensues Filippo carries off the struggling Julie to his own fortress. There he pleads with her to return his affection, but she angrily and persistently resists him, until at last he becomes desperate, and casts her into a dungeon of the Gottaferra'n Castle, where he vows she shall remain until she has overcome her obstinacy and is ready to yield to his wishes.

In the meantime, however, Prince Colonna is roused to a spirit of terrible revenge; he hastily summons his followers, and makes a terrific dash toward the Castle of Filippo storms the fortress' gains entrance, and in his intense rage seeks out Filippo Orsini, whom he comes upon in the very cloisters of the fortified abbey. A hand to hand fight ensues, and for a few moments the lives of both men hang in the balance. The Pope's Legate endeavors to stop the combat, but Colonna hastily orders some of his men who have come up, to seize and blind the man. The terrible conflict continues, till at last Filippo lies dead. Colonna, triumphant, sets free his sister Julie, and departs, carrying with him his prisoner, the Pope's Legate. Thus ends the tragic story of this lover of Julie Colonna.

TONTOLINI AS A BALLET DANCER.—Our humorous friend, Tontolini, again makes his appearance before our pleased eyes; this time, he secures a position as a menial in the house of one of the famous ballet dancers.

He is ordered to tidy up the room of his mistress, while she takes her afternoon airing. In the performance of his duties, Tontolini comes across the professional attire of his mistress, and after some hesitation and embarrassments, succeeds in arraying himself in the costume of the ballet.

Poor Tontolini, indeed he seems to be related in some manner to our well-known friend "Happy Hooligan" the very mode and style of manufacture of his newly acquired apparel, proves to be his undoing, to the endless enjoyment of all the spectators, and serious discomfort to poor Tontolini, and others "In his train!"

YANKEE

THE YANKEE GIRL'S REWARD.—What a price pride has paid in this world of ours. Had only young Mrs. Druce frankly told her husband, the only part of her family history with which he was not familiar, there would have been no family skeleton to rattle its bones in their household.

Her only brother had been a wayward and dissolute boy, and as a man committed a crime for which he was sentenced to prison under an assumed name. Being one of several convicts to successfully escape from prison, he obtained shelter in the home of a poor hardworking brother and sister, gaining their sympathy in the guise of a workingman who had been injured by a fall and temporarily unable to labor.

According to the demands of her convict brother for funds necessary to his flight from the country—this weak sister took to him her pearl necklace—a recent present from her husband. All might have been well, had her husband been less proud of the personal appearance of his handsome young wife, for when he requested, the insisted, that she wear the necklace at a function they were to attend, the aid of the police was solicited to unravel the supposed theft.

The convict did not want pearls—he needed money and not being well enough to attend to the matter, his young benefactor gladly conveyed a note and an innocent little package to a friend of the sick workingman.

Now the police happened to have the addresses of all the connoisseurs of pearls, who were not out of town, and one of the first visits they paid was to the saloon in which our convict's pal made his headquarters. They arrived in time to get the pearls but they were still in the pocket of the convict's messenger.

Silly little wife—your husband loves you—he didn't marry your family, he married you, why don't you make a clean breast of it? But no—she must revisit her brother and demand back her necklace—perhaps she thought he would loan it to her for just a day or two. That is how she happened to be in the room with her brother when the police brought back the messenger to identify the poor sick workingman, who had sent him on an errand—that's why she left the room so unceremoniously with her convict brother by way of the ladder to the roof—and that was the cause of her descending to the street by means of the fire-escape, and that's how she arrived home and kept her terrible secret from her husband.

For when the boy could not produce the poor sick man—the police had the thief who stole Mrs. Druce's pearl necklace. Nor did his little sister's story enlist any consideration until later on. This poor, little sister was a different kind of a sister—her wits had not been dulled by sitting on a family skeleton—but had been sharpened by fighting the wolf of hunger from the door, so she took a hasty trip to the roof and not fancying the view, sought the street via the fire escape, and being interested in the poor, injured workingman, found the one she wanted and when he was comfortably settled in one of his haunts she lost no time in making a call on the nearby police station.

There she found a man in blue, they are not all alike—this one had some gray matter under his [illegible] that's why he wore a gold braid on his [illegible] and [illegible] on his cap and that's why they call him a chief to-day.

He listened to the little sister's story, he took several officers with him, and he captured an escaped convict for whom the State had offered $1,000 reward dead or alive.

You know who deserved the reward and, of course, she got it, but how it all, she and brother gained a friend—for brother a new private secretary to the chief.

Young Mrs. Druce?—why she locked her family skeleton. The convict had no reason to tell who he was.

CHAMPION.

A WESTERN GIRL'S SACRIFICE. Bad companions! Alas! They are the bane of many a fine fellow and incidentally they are the ruin of John Stanley.

John is the only son of Sacred Stanley, and he is worshipped by his old dad, his doting mother, and is the especial favorite of his sister Bess.

It is with many misgivings and those peculiar little tightenings of the heart strings that always sound the alarm, when those we love are in danger, that Bess and her mother notice the hard looking cowboys who call at the ranch at most unusual hours. Whispered conversations, nervous start's on the young fellow's part, his hasty endeavors to stop his companions and turn the trend of conversation on the approach of any of the family, all these serve to cause deep distress to both mother and sister. Only the father is oblivious to it all. His faith and trust in his only son does not permit him to question his son's actions for even a moment.

Bess's sweetheart, Martin Winston, mentioned on several occasions that John is not keeping in the straight road as he has already noticed it. The truth is, that the boy has fallen among horse thieves and led on by them has already been guilty of stealing many horses.

He has a violent quarrel over stolen horses with one of them, and worsting his opponent, that wretch, in revenge, hurries to the sheriff's home. Finding only Bess in the house he tells her that her brother is a horse-thief.

Her father and the posse are at that moment scouring the vicinity for the daring horse thieves. It takes the girl but a moment to decide that no matter what the cost may be, she must save her brother in the attempt to preserve the honor of the family.

Getting into a suit of her brother's clothes she hurries with her informant to where her brother is in hiding. She implores him to save himself by following a circuitous route to join the posse. The boy is terror stricken and jumping on his sister's horse escapes just as the father and the cowboys dash upon the rendezvous.

A bitter fight ensues between the cowboys and the horse thieves and in the melee Bess has been struck down and mortally wounded. Whose bullet struck her none can tell. Whether horse thief or cowboy none knew until her father sees her lying face downward, turns her over in order to discover who it is. With a cry of horror he seizes her in his arms, and with her dying breath she tells him why she was there, and implores him to bury her as his son, and to never divulge the truth, for the sake of the family's honor.

The broken-hearted father promises and telling the boys that his son had fallen by a horse thief's bullet, he carries the child home and buries her as his son.

He had another duty to perform. Drawing the blinds of his ranch so that light could no more enter, he keeps his cowardly and renegade son confined to a room. To those who call, and to Bess's sweetheart, the mother tells that grief for her brother's death had driven Bess insane.

Thus is unfolded a tale of a stanch attitude toward family honor at the same time bearing with it a mortal sacrifice. Thus do Western folk as well as Easterners, for that matter, too, hold life secondary to honor.

DEFENDER

THE CATTLE THIEF'S REVENGE.—This thrilling Western drama depicts the life of a cattle thief on the southwest border, Arizona Joe.

The picture opens with a scene showing Arizona Joe bidding his sweetheart Rosita good-bye, preparatory to leaving his hiding place in the mountains, on another cattle stealing expedition. We next see Arizona Joe driving some cattle he has stolen from the X. Y. Ranch across the lake.

The foreman of X. Y. Ranch, catching Joe in the act, fires upon him from the opposite shore. A pistol battle follows in which the foreman of the ranch falls wounded. Joe escapes. Colonel Dodge at the army post is notified of the shooting and immediately issues an order to Lieut. Wainwright to capture Arizona Joe dead or alive. Lieut Wainwright and a squad start in pursuit.

Rosita, Joe's sweetheart, after bidding him goodbye, sits down to mend a coat for him, and discovers a photo in the inside pocket, but not knowing that the picture is that of Joe's sister, swears revenge.

Lieut. Wainwright, searching for Joe, meets Rosita carrying a jug of water, and attracted by her beauty, he insists upon carrying the jug for

OPERA CHAIRS

That Stand the TEST

The hard usage accorded opera chairs makes the selection of a chair of PROVEN QUALITIES essential. Our Opera Chairs are conceded to be the IDEAL seating, as they are comfortable, permanently noiseless and combined with a distinctive style and excellence that is unequalled.

HIGHEST QUALITY
LOWEST PRICES

Write for Catalogs

AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY

Dept. V.
215 Wabash Ave.
CHICAGO

NEW YORK
BOSTON
PHILADELPHIA

Andrews OPERA CHAIRS

Over 75 per cent. of the finest theaters in the United States and Canada are furnished with them. They are used in 318 of the 406 moving picture theaters in Chicago.

To meet the growing demands for
LOW PRICED OPERA CHAIRS
we have originated a number of styles which, though inexpensive, are characteristic of
ANDREWS QUALITY

Write to Department K for our large Catalogue No. 31, illustrated in colors, which will guide you when contemplating the purchase of opera chairs.

THE A. H. Andrews Co.
CHICAGO ESTABLISHED 1885
NEW YORK ST LOUIS SAN FRANCISCO SEATTLE
174-176 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

MAKE YOUR OWN ALUMINUM OR SILVERED SCREEN
Small cost; we tell you how for $5.00
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED
DAVIS SCENIC CO., Corry, Pa.
ART PANELS SCENERY

INFORMATION
Upon all Matters Pertaining to the Motion-Picture Business
CHARGES MODERATE
ALAN J. BACHRACH
P. O. Box 88 Washington, D. C.

Old Fort Film Exchange
INDEPENDENT
721½ CLINTON STREET
Phone 2987
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

CHEAP
Steel Frame Theatre Chairs
ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs
Also seating for Out-of-Door Use.
Address Dept. W.

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York Office: 150 Fifth Avenue
Boston Office: 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

BLANK LEADERS
In Black, Red, Green or Any Color
$15 PER 1000 FEET
Guaranteed Against Brittleness
WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
442 E. 166th St. NEW YORK

For Rent—6 reels films with signs and slides, $12. For Sale—50 reels perfect condition films, $10 to $16.50 per reel. Perfect song slides $1.50 per set. Steel Slide Carriers, can't burn, won't break, 75c. Tickets, 9c. per 1,000.
LIBERTY FILM RENTING CO.,
105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

Correspondence Course. Special rates to the trade, send for free illustrated catalogue.

School class meets every morning and afternoon, with F. H. Richardson of Chicago, as chief instructor. Evening classes meet every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We positively guarantee you a $15 position.

We are selling agents for the Powers' Cameragraph and Motiograph Moving Picture Machines.

We carry a large line of electrical supplies and furnish everything for the theatre.

F. C. TAYLOR
49 West 28th Street New York City
Phone 1405 Madison Square

EXCHANGES!

Have you tried our process for renewing your old films

IF NOT

Send us a reel and see what we can do

IF

Your second run reel is in good condition it will help rent your new film

Shipments of fifteen reels returned same day received

Old Reliable Film Renovating Co.
22 Randolph St. :: Chicago, Ills.

Write for References from 75 Exchanges

Canadian Exhibitors

Looking for a first-class film service, write the Crystal Palace Film Exchange for particulars. We handle both Licensed and Independent films and can give you a right up-to-date service. We own and operate the most successful Moving Picture Theaters in Canada.

Located at
141 Yonge Street, Toronto
331 St. Lawrence Blvd., Mont.
27 King Street East, Hamilton

Agents for Powers and Edison Machines

Crystal Palace Film Exchange
141 Yonge Street Toronto, Can.
269 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, Can.

For Sale—1,000 ft. reels film, $5 to $25; Edison, Lubin Power's, machines, $35 to $60; new, $100; model B gas outfits, $25; odd slides 5c; sets, $1 to $2.50, Professional Stereopticon, $20.00. Paying moving picture theatres cheap.
For Rent—6,000 ft. film, $6; 12,000 ft $12; one shipment. Will buy, model B machines, film.

H. DAVIS - - - Watertown, Wis.

Classified Advertisements

WANTED—Position as manager; 12 years' experience in moving pictures and vaudeville; good houses only. W. E. C., 234 Sixth Ave., Long Island City.

MANAGER, LECTURER, SINGER—Always busy. Guarantee to double attendance. Best houses only. A. D. LAFAYETTE, National Hotel, Washington, D. C.

AT LIBERTY—First class Moving Picture Operator or Manager. All-round man; four years' experience; best reference; not afraid to hustle. Electrician, repairman. Sober and steady. Address, OPERATOR, 44 So. East St., Carlisle, Pa.

AT LIBERTY—Experienced operator and wife, A-1 pianist. Best references. Address, G. L. PALMER, Box 307, Sidney, N. Y.

EXPERT CAMERA MAN, experienced, on the road or in studio. Sober and reliable man. References. Address, KINEMATOGRAPHER, care of Moving Picture World.

WANTED—Position as manager of moving picture or vaudeville theater, with a view to buying. Can furnish ample security and references. G. D. B., care Moving Picture World.

WANTED—A PARTNER with money to take half-interest in vaudeville house, seating now 275, to enlarge to seat 650; or will sell. Rent only $18 per month. City 12,000. ERNEST BROWN, Plattsburgh, N. Y.

her. She permits him to carry it part of the way and then refuses to let him go further. He asks to meet her the next day, to which she consents.

Joe unexpectedly returns and spying Rosita with the Lieutenant leaves the scene with a troubled mind. He waits until Rosita has entered the house before him, and then he goes in. They are both anxious for vengeance. Very few words are spoken. Rosita leaves on horseback to inform Lieut. Wainwright of Joe's return.

Joe sees her leaving, suspects the purpose and sends a Spaniard on horseback through a short cut with a note to Wainwright, stating that Joe had left dressed in Rosita's clothes to escape through pass. The note is signed Rosita. Wainwright gets the note, lays in wait, and when Rosita appears on horseback, he shoots, only to discover his mistake, too late.

NESTOR

STRAYED FROM THE RANGE.—At last the hopes of Col. Anderson and Major Carlisle, to unite their fortunes, seemed to be realized.

Dick, the colonel's son, was still heart whole and fancy free; while the major's daughter, Leona, had just finished school.

Accordingly, the major despatched a letter to his friend stating that he and Leona would start for the colonel's ranch without delay.

The major was in high spirits, and his daughter delighted at the prospect of a western trip; but after reaching the little hotel, where the blunt old gentleman enlightened her upon the object of their visit, her delight turned to indignation.

The major threatened, pleaded and stormed—all to no avail—Leona stubbornly refused to consider her father's choice, and determined to even avoid meeting him if possible.

At the Anderson Ranch things had not gone much better; Dick declared he was quite capable of selecting his own wife; then, shouldering his rifle, he had stalked majestically away.

But ere long a heavy shower compelled him to seek shelter in a deserted shack, where, to his amusement, he soon beheld a bedraggled, woe-begone young lady paddling through the rain.

Being reassured by his appearance and lured by the promise of a fire in the tumbled down stove, Leona gladly accepted his hospitality, and, before the rain ceased, they had become fast friends.

The major met the young people at the hotel, and, as was his wont, without waiting for an explanation, at once ordered Dick from the place.

From then on, stolen meetings became the order of the day—both son and daughter determined to outwit their stern parents, and it was not until the colonel and the major were almost beside themselves with rage that they accidentally stumbled upon the young lovers, and, when the truth was borne in upon them, they fell into each other's arms for joy—then stole quietly away to drink a toast to the little god of chance.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

BISON.

FOR THE LOVE OF REDWING.—Many of the early Indian massacres were due to the fact that the whites failed to penetrate the stoical mask behind which the red man hid, and unconsciously trampled upon customs held sacred by the savage, or failed to understand that the red man's heart was susceptible to the god of love. Blue Feather's sweetheart was the daughter of a chief, and the twain no doubt were as happy in their love as youths and maidens of the white race. An emigrant party in prairie schooners comes upon the scene, leading a handsome pony which excites the admiration of the chief, and failing to trade various articles for the animal he gives his daughter in exchange. The train moves on and is seen camping for the night. The lover returning is informed of what has occurred and is plunged in despair. The girl is then seen escaping from the settlers, hotly pursued. Perceiving that capture is unavoidable, she stabs herself, falls into a gully, and is passed by the whites. The next day Blue Feather and his dog are in the woods and the canine discovers the dead girl. The scene is intensely dramatic and pathetic as he sorrows over his sweetheart, and at the obsequies he exhorts his followers to vengeance. An attack on the whites follows in which they are exterminated, and the trophies of war are laid upon the grave of the Indian girl.

A CATTLE RUSTLER'S DAUGHTER.—The plucky girl not only saves the life of her father, but wins a handsome cowboy for a husband. Bob is smitten with the charms of this dashing western girl, and takes advantage of the opportunity Fate presents to gain her affection. Excellent scenes are shown of grazing herds, the cowboys at work and play, the rustling of a bunch of cattle and the pursuit by the cowboys. After a running fight in which the rustler is wounded he takes refuge in his cabin, where he is captured. Stoically he goes to meet his fate, and is about to be swung into eternity when the girl gallops up and with a well-directed shot severs the rope. Holding the astonished cowboys at bay with her revolver she covers the retreat of her father, who mounts his horse and is soon lost to sight. The crisis passed the girl faints and is caught by Bob as she falls. Their hearts touched by her devotion to her wayward father, the cowboys permit him to escape.

AMBROSIO.

THE LAST FRIEND.—This is a pathetic subject showing the devotion of a dumb animal for its mistress. A young girl is living in the country in an endeavor to regain her fast failing health, and makes a pet of a little lamb. The two become inseparable, and one day when the girl falls in a swoon the intelligent animal runs home and by its frantic actions attracts attention and leads assistance to its mistress. The condition of the girl getting worse, she goes back to town, and to her amazement discovers her faithful pet has run along behind the carriage all the way. The girl finally passes away, and as she breathes her last in an arm chair her four-footed companion is seen with its head in her lap looking up with almost human comprehension.

MOLLY AT THE REGIMENT.—Bob Trelawny, a private in the 16th Lancers, is confined to the barracks for a breach of discipline. He longs for his sweetheart, and writes her a note with instructions to call and enter by a back door. She complies, and the lovers are interrupted by the arrival of the captain. Bob quickly disguises the girl as a soldier and she is called out to drill with the regiment, and her awkwardness creates much mirth. The captain finally discovers her sex, and again restored to petticoats she presents such an attractive appearance that his anger is smothered, and he sends Bob to the guardhouse while he makes love to the coquettish girl.

GREAT NORTHERN.

JEKYLL AND HYDE.—Jekyll is a rich young man, fond of the study of occult science. In the course of his studies in his laboratory, he discovers a medicine that has the power of completely changing both the mental, moral and physical makeup of a man. He experiments with this medicine and discovers that he at once becomes another personality, Hyde. In his new form he is hideous physically and debased morally. He also discovers an antidote to the medicine that brings about these changes.

While in the Hyde form he commits all manner of horrible outrages so that the whole city of London rings with the news thereof. Dr. Jekyll, while in his natural form, that of a cultured, charming young man, is horror-stricken by the brutalities which he commits in the other form. Ere long the medicine at last begins to have an extraordinary effect, the changes taking place without the volition of Jekyll. In order to protect himself from being seen by any one in his beastial form, he locks himself in his room, when he feels the change about to take place, and with the aid of an old servant sends for the antidote to bring him back to his original form. He is engaged to a charming young lady, Maud, who is terribly grieved at his extraordinary conduct in the way of disappearance. Whilst in the form of Jekyll, he goes to his solicitor and makes arrangements that Hyde shall be his heir. So soon as the transformation again takes place he presents himself in his Hyde form to his solicitor. He is guilty of terrible outrages, becomes a fugitive from justice after which he is caught and attempts to make peace by the giving of a large check. Unfortunately the signature is not that of Hyde but of Jekyll. Whilst in his Jekyll form his fiancee and friends are horrified by seeing him change before their eyes into the murderer Hyde.

The last scene shows Dr. Jekyll struggling with nightmare in his chair and awakening in the presence of Maud, thank God it was all a dream.

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

THE CONVICT.—The convict is discovered stealing along a country road, glancing about for signs of danger. His stripes are discernible on that portion of his breast and on that portion of his trousers' leg not covered by the long coat he wears—which cannot conceal the stripes that tell all; hence his keen watch for passersby. Still, he does not spy a nearby farmer until too late; the cry "prisoner loose" is raised and a dozen rustics make after the unfortunate.

Convict meets accomplice who is waiting with carriage; jumps into carriage and pair drive off. Baffled pursuers come up, sight a wagon, all pile in and resume pursuit. Convict jumps from carriage and drops behind boulder, accomplice driving straight on with the wagon hot after him; when the wagon has passed him by, convict comes from behind boulder, crosses road and disappears on other side—but he has been seen crossing the road by a small girl who kept out of sight until the convict had disappeared, but who now rushes off to tell of her discovery.

Put back on the trail by the little girl, pursuers follow their quarry to the waterside, where a second accomplice awaits the convict with a rowboat, into which he jumps and pulls for other side. Another rowboat sets out in pursuit. One of the pursuers telephones constables on other side of water to catch convict when he tries to land.

Race of the rowboats. Nearing shore the convict finds himself hemmed in—pursuers on water and constables on land. Luckily for him, pursuers in their efforts to grab his boat overturn their own; he gets to shore, where accomplice is caught though he himself escapes. Constable and pursuers chase him to town-road where third accomplice [illegible] with auto, they speed off. An automobile [illegible] appeals along all the pursuers to use his auto to chase convicts, and all enter except constable who rushes off to [illegible] of convicts coming. Receiving the message, chief of police covers with experts [illegible] and of road, between they stretch rope and await convict's arrival.

As the convict dashes down Main street now pursued [illegible] up at every step. Yet when he reaches Opry House he calmly walks to the entrance and facing his pursuers takes a cigarette stand beside the billboard on which is pasted

Latest Moving Pictures To-day's Feature

STUNG!

Or the Convicts Escape. A Roaring Comedy Now Showing.

A HUSBAND'S JEALOUS WIFE.—John Boden, a young business man has a very jealous wife. If he pays the slightest attention to any other woman it arouses her anger. Boden, while not at all gallant, and finds that his life is rapidly becoming a burden. He is particularly upset when his wife discharges his pretty stenographer, and hires a woman who is principally remarkable for her homeliness.

On several occasions, Boden proves that he is of the stuff of which heroes are made, but each time his jealous wife spoils things for him. Much to his surprise he discovers that the homely Susie is his friend, and believes that he is ill-treated. Finally Boden decides that life at home is impossible and he elopes with Susie, much to the horror and surprise of Mrs. Boden, who had regarded Susie as her natural ally.

NOT GUILTY. Joinville, a rogue, commits a robbery. Fearing capture he decides to part with the stolen valuables, knowing that they will incriminate him if found on his person. Moreover, he decides to place them in someone else's possession, thus turning all suspicion from him.

He selects a young clerk, Harry Martin, as his victim, and slips the valuables into the youth's pockets. The police find the stuff there. Harry is brought to trial.

He is convicted and sentenced. Committed to prison to serve his time, he leaves behind him two persons who are full of faith in him and who know he is not guilty of the crime of which he is charged—his blind mother and his pretty sweetheart.

Convinced that all chance for a correction of the gigantic error of which he is victim, has fled, he determines to take matters into his own hands and force his way to the stricken home.

While breaking stone outside the prison walls, he spys a passing hay wagon and feels his chance has come. Eluding the guard, he gains the wagon, and crawls into the hay. He reaches his failing mother in time to buoy her up with a white lie—he has been "freed." His sweetheart keeps up the imposture until the truth is made clear by—the arrival of the police. They surround the house but the boy hazards a thrilling clothesline ride to an opposite roof and safety. In the meantime, the rogue Joinville's conscience asserts itself. Long dormant, it now cries out to him and will not down. He obeys its call and—surrenders himself to the law. His confession makes clear he who is "Not Guilty," and the boy is restored to mother and sweetheart for all earthly time.

CAPITOL FILM CO.

ROUND TRIP $5.98.—It was a balmy day in June; things were progressing very nicely at the farm, and as Hiram Scraggs sat down to a comfortable smoke, and incidentally to read the weekly Bugle, he suddenly came to the conclusion that the farm didn't need him for the present and that he believed he needed a change; and, with this thought uppermost in his mind, what should stare at him from the front page of the Bugle but the following notice:

"Round Trip $5.98.
WASHINGTON AND RETURN.
Last Train Leaves Bingville 5.15."

"By gum! and it's 4.30 now; well, guess with Mandy's help I can make it," and soliloquizing thus, he calls his faithful spouse, and in the very limited time, they prepare for his trip to the Capital. He even takes a pig to give to the President to raise, and makes off gleefully.

His trip and funny happenings in 'the Capital' are most amusing; he takes a sight-seeing trip in the rubber-neck car and gets into serious difficulty; he wades through the flowers in the gardens at the Agriculture grounds, only to be waylaid by one of the sturdy officers of the law doing duty near-by; he fishes in the White House fountain, and is again held in the grasp of the law; he sees the Capitol from start to finish, he never misses one object that appeals to sightseers, and at every turn he commits unconsciously some misdemeanor that lays him open to an accounting before a blue-coated policeman, and finally, with all his money gone, he decides that there is no place like home, and goes back to Bingville, to Mandy and the farm, only to dream of his eventful trip and to be rudely awakened unceremoniously by his somewhat alarmed spouse—and Hiram opening his eyes, draws a sigh of relief, when he finds out that it's Mandy, and not one of those "pertickular fellers" that patrol Washington's streets.

LUCIEN PRÉVOST

MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS : 21 Rue Perdonnet, Paris
WORKS : : : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras
Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)
Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines

JONES
Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way
TO Count Your Public

Manufactured by

JONES
Change Register Co.
INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

STOP!
WAIT A MINUTE!!
READ THIS!!!

You've heard of, read of and seen many Western pictures. They have all been branded as tense, live, vital. List to this chatter; if they WERE all of these things, our next Release, "The Cattle Thief's Revenge," is a volcano in comparison; if they WERE NOT, this one is.

The Cattle Thief's Revenge

Released Thursday, Sept. 22d

is a case of a double misunderstanding to which is due the death of the fair Rosita, and because of which Lieut. Wainwright forfeits his prisoner and loses his sweetheart.

TYPE IS TOO COLD to convey even partially the warm interest this story will lend. Gee! Its too bad type can't whistle.

DEFENDER FILM CO.

WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 East 14th St., New York

Sold only throught the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 5—The Lost Chance 400
Sept. 5—The Little Blind Girl.....625
Sept. 15—Between Duty and Honor (Dr.).....820
Sept. 16—The Sacking of Rome 800
Sept. 19—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Sept. 19—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic).....440
Sept. 23—Julie Colonna (Dr.).....760
Sept. 23—Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer (Com.)..236

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 27—A Society Sinner (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—Fabian's Hollow Tooth (Com.).....
Sept. 3—The Little Drummer Boy (Dr.).....
Sept. 3—Fabian Hunting Rats (Com.).....
Sept. 10—Robinson Crusoe (Dr.) .....
Sept. 17—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....
Sept. 24—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Dr.).....

"IMP."

Aug. 29—The Widow (Com.) .....app. 1000
Sept. 1—The Right Girl (Dr.) .....app. 1000
Sept. 5—You Saved My Life (Com.).....
Sept. 8—A Sister's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—The Two Daughters (Dr.) 995
Sept. 15—Dixie (Dr.) .....
Sept. 19—The New Butler (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—Debt (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—Pressed Roses (Dr.).....
Sept. 29—Annie (Dr.) .....

LUX FILMS.

Sept. 8—Ma in Law as a Statue (Com.).....439
Sept. 8—The Bobby's Dream (Com.).....383
Sept. 15—Aunt Tabitha's Monkey (Com.).....350
Sept. 15—A Selfish Man's Lesson (Dr.).....603
Sept. 22—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Sept. 22—That Typist Again (Com.).....380

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

July 27—A True Pal (Dr.) 999
Aug. 3—Sons of the West (Dr.).....975
Aug. 10—Hearts of Gold (Dr.).....990
Aug. 17—Why Dad Was Held Up (Com.).....
Aug. 24—In the Black Hills (Dr.) 960
Aug. 31—The Blazed Trail (Dr.).....989
Sept. 7—The Moonshiner's Daughter (Dr.).....960
Sept. 14—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956
Sept. 21—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
("Bison.")

Aug. 26—Kit Carson 990
Aug. 30—Dan, the Arizona Scout (Dr.).....992
Sept. 2—The Night Rustlers (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 6—Western Justice (Dr.).....900
Sept. 9—A True Indian Brave (Dr.).....988
Sept. 13—Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Sept. 16—For a Western Girl.....915
Sept. 20—For the Love of Red Wing.....957
Sept. 23—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000

ITALA.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Aug. 13—Papa's Cane 300
Aug. 20—Agnes Visconti 1000
Aug. 27—Foolshead in the Lion's Cage.....622
Aug. 27—An Enemy of the Dust.....382
Sept. 3—The Nestal 1000
Sept. 10—A Thief Well Received (Com.).....578
Sept. 10—Mr. Coward (Com.).....345
Sept. 17—The Falconer 818
Sept. 24—Foolshead as a Policeman.....500
Sept. 24—The Bad Luck of an Old Rake.....500

AMBROSIO.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Aug. 24—Fricot's Itching Powder 382
Aug. 31—The Fisherman's Crime (Dr.).....668
Aug. 31—Tweedle Dum's Forged Bank Note....297
Sept. 7—The Caprice of a Dame (Com.).....
Sept. 7—Fricot Has Lost His Collar Stud (Com)
Sept. 14—The Iron Foundry.....900
Sept. 21—The Last Friend.....500
Sept. 21—Molly at the Regiment—Her Adventures 500

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Aug. 30—The Burlesque Queen (Com.).....
Aug. 30—The Horse Shoer's Girl (Com. dr.)...
Sept. 3—The Matinee Idol (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—The Girl Next Door (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—The Inconstant (Com.) .....
Sept. 10—For the Girl's Sake (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Tell-Tale Perfume .....
Sept. 13—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Sept. 17—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....
Sept. 24—His Lordship (Dr.) .....
Sept. 27—The Taming of "Buck" (Com.).....
Sept. 27—O! You Wives (Com.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Aug. 26—The Latchkey (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 30—An Assisted Elopement (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 2—A Fresh Start (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 13—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Not Guilty (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—The Convict .....
Sept. 23—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.)...

SALES CO.—FILM D'ART.

July 21—Mateo Falcone 694
July 21—Andromache 356
July 28—The Hidden Place.....900
Aug. 4—The Eagle and the Eaglet.....1000
Aug. 11—Charles Le Temeraire.....518
Aug. 18—Carmen 995
Aug. 25—In the Day of the First Christians..1000
Sept. 1—King of One Day 975
Sept. 8—The Minister's Speech.....500
Sept. 8—The Conscience of a Child.....500
Sept. 15—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.).1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

Aug. 11—Indian Squaw's Sacrifice.....
Aug. 18—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 25—Hazing a New Scholar (Dr.) .....
Sept. 1—Great Marshall Jewel Case (Dr.).....
Sept. 1—That Letter from Teddy.....
Sept. 8—Cowboy's Courtship (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—An Athletic Instructor (Com.).....
Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.)....

CHAMPION.

July 13—The Abernathy Kids 1000
July 20—Romance of an Anvil (Dr.) 1000
July 27—Cowboy and the Squaw (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 3—Spitfire (Dr.) 900
Aug. 10—Hermit of the Rockies 900
Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge (Dr.) 900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.) 900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.) .....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.) 900
Sept. 28—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....900

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 11—The Pirate's Dower.....985
July 18—Right to Labor.....998
July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.) .....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless 1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 10—The Wrong Bag.....500
Aug. 17—Count of Noaccount.....
Aug. 24—The Tale of the Hot Dog.....725
Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.) 450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders 450
Sept. 14—Monkey Sense 500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Sept. 28—Lux, the Cop Chaser .....
Sept. 28—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, September 19.

Eclair—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Eclair—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic)....440
Imp—The New Butler (Dr.) .....
Yankee—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000

Tuesday, September 20.

Bison—For the Love of Red Wing (Dr.)....957
Powers—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.) .....
Powers—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....
Thanhouser—Not Guilty (Dr.).....1000

Wednesday, September 21.

Ambrosio—The Last Friend.....500
Ambrosio—Molly at the Regiment—Her Adventures 500
Atlas—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Champion—The White Princess of the Tribe (D.).900
Nestor—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963

Thursday, September 22.

Defender—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.)....
Imp—Debt (Dr.) .....
Lux—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Lux—That Typist Again (Com.).....380

Friday, September 23.

Bison—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000
Thanhouser—The Convict .....
Thanhouser—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.).

Saturday, September 24.

Great Northern—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Dr.).
Itala—Foolshead as a Policeman.....500
Itala—The Bad Luck of an Old Rake (Com.)....500
Powers—His Lordship (Dr.).....

ADVERTISING : ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES

Genre Transparency Company
507 N. Clark Street : : : Chicago

Moving Picture Machines
Repaired by skilled mechanics at short notice and reasonable prices. Work guaranteed.
CHAS. E. DRESSLER, 388 2nd Avenue
Near 23rd Street Take Elevator

STOP THIEF!!

STOLEN:—A list of our customers has fallen into the hands of competitors, dishonestly of course. They have sent boys out to solicit our trade. In most cases they offer high grade service for the price of ordinary commercial. You know they cannot make good. Don't let them insult your intelligence, throw the thieves out, they did not come by that list honestly. We have secured affidavits from several of our friends to whom we have been slandered. We will gladly pay all expenses for additional ones from those who want to see fair play.

Swaab Film Service Co., Inc.
338 Spruce Street : : Philadelphia, Pa.

ATTENTION, MR. EXHIBITOR, did you ever stop to consider how much your film cement costs you by buying it in bottles. "Why not make your own."

I will send the formula for making the strongest and best cement on earth. Can be used for both kinds of film. A gallon of mine costs $3.68 a gallon, can you beat that, making

128 oz. bottles which would cost $32.00 at retail; or,
256 ½ oz. bottles which would cost $38.40 at retail

Are you interested? If so send $1.00 to-day for formula to

JOHN H. HEINZ
TENN THEATRE, 714-16 E. BALTO. ST., BALTO., MD.

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

Beloved.
There's a Girl up in the Moon.
On Mobile Bay
He got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.
What is the World Without You.
On a Sunday Evening in the Summer Time.
Come Along My Mandy.
Love Sick.
In My Garden.
Sometime in After Years.
Oh! You Spearmint Kiddo, With the Wriggly Eyes.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the
Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St., TOLEDO, O.

Want Chairs Quick?

Stafford chairs excell all others. We use no three-ply veneers. Why? Not good enough! Five ply is best, and that is why we use them.

Chairs like cut
IN STOCK and GUARANTEED

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO. ILLINOIS

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Miror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock; Tripods, Tilts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply. special lenses, films and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS FOR Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

FRANK H. CRANE
Leading Man

THANHOUSER COMPANY

FOR SALE—Paying Theater, centrally located in Syracuse. Owner going to California. Address, SYRACUSE, care Moving Picture World.

Lang's Rewinder No. 2
Price, $5.00 Net
Send for latest catalogue
Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest Dealers in the World of New and Second-hand Independent and Association Films—All Makes
New Film, 4c. per foot and upwards Second-hand, $5.00 per reel and upwards Song Slides, $2.00 per set
Power's Machine, like new, $115.00 Complete List sent free upon request

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West Broadway and 17th Street New York City

IMP—BISON—DEFENDER—ATLAS—OWL—AMBROSIO

CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE
315-317 West Fourth Street, CINCINNATI, O. Long Distance 'Phone, Main 1450.
"THE HOUSE THAT BUYS FILMS"
Connect with a real, live, up-to-date Film Exchange that can give you a real service.
References—MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.
ITALA—THANHOUSER—FILM D'ART—YANKEE—OTHERS

The glories of NATURE permanently recorded by the action of light only

KINEMACOLOR

The leading attraction for High-class Motion Picture Theatres

We are still booking orders for KINEMACOLOR Projectors which present both color and black and white subjects.

Orders filled in the order of acceptance.

The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

HALLBERG

ELECTRIC ECONOMIZER

SAVES ⅔ ON ELECTRIC BILL
GIVES 50% BETTER LIGHT

Come, let us get together. If you already have a current saver, I will make a liberal allowance for it in trade for a "HALLBERG" Economizer. Besides the wonderful "HALLBERG" Economizer, I make 4000 Candle Power Flaming Arc Lamps and Economizers for incandescent lighting, and sell all high grade moving picture machines which I will gladly demonstrate; opera chairs, lenses and all kinds of supplies. Send $1.50 for a set of "HALLBERG" Terminal Connectors. They stop burning out of lamp leads, and my "Spec-Oil" at 35c. a can by mail, postpaid, saves 25 per cent. on the wear of your machine and over one-half on oil bill.

Send for FREE catalogue
No. W-45

J. H. HALLBERG
36 East 23d Street, New York

No More Dull Days

USE OUR SOUVENIRS AND

Keep Your Theatre Crowded

NOTHING like a nice Souvenir to boom business. The crowd always comes, and then keeps coming, and that's what's wanted.

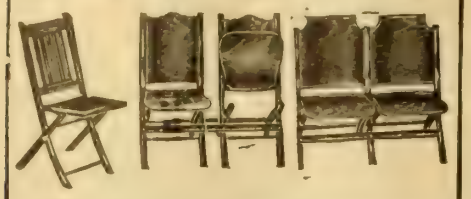
Our Beautiful Souvenir Goods are unequalled and always bring big and quick results. Enamelled Pendant Brooch (like cut) $3.00 per gross; gold plated Beauty Pins (like cut) $3.00 per gross, pairs; fine Scarf Pins $3.00 per gross; many other fine items at low prices. Send 10 cents for samples. Quick action means quick returns.

UNITED STATES FACTORIES CO.

40 DEARBORN STREET :: :: CHICAGO

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS
ROLL TICKETS

50,000 for $8.75 — Stock Tickets
100,000 for 13.50 — 9c. per 1000
Terms Cash—No C.O.D.

Canadian Ticket Press, GANANOQUE ONT.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices—Best Work—DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

"I Want TWO Imps EVERY Week!"

IMP FILMS EXCHANGE
TWO 'IMPS' FOR ME THIS WEEK
MAKE A NOTE ONT-2 'IMPS'
TWO 'IMPS' PER WEEK-REMEMBER
AGAIN I SAY-TWO 'IMPS' EACH WEEK
DON'T FORGET-TWO 'IMPS' EVERY WEEK
MAKE MY STANDING ORDER TWO 'IMPS'
HEY-THERE-TWO 'IMPS'

Say it every week to your exchange man. Pester the life out of him, if necessary, to get TWO IMPS EVERY WEEK! Get what you're entitled to, what you're paying for, what you need above everything else to boost your receipts—TWO IMPS EVERY WEEK! Now that we are in our glorious new factory, we are producing films which are incomparable in photography, steadiness, clearness, staging and acting. If you don't get TWO IMPS EVERY WEEK, you are not getting all the money out of your business that you COULD GET!

"PRESSED ROSES"

A screaming Imp comedy which will bring tears of laughter to your own eyes, you hardened film man! It is about 990 feet long and every foot is a real laugh. Released September 26th. Fight for it—but get it.

"ANNIE"

Once more the Imp scores a dramatic triumph in this picture. It is a powerful love story which turns out happily after keeping the onlooker in just the proper amount of suspense. Released September 29th. Begin asking your exchange NOW!

Don't forget our "DIXIE" release with its astonishing battle scenes. If you miss this, you miss one terrific money-maker.

Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.

CARL LAEMMLE, Pres.

102 West 101st Street, New York

All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

Texas Exhibitors Attention!

Good film service with lithographs Song Slides and Records

UNIQUE FILM SERVICE

1013 Texas Avenue, Houston, Texas

ACTORS

We want two leading men and a juvenile man for motion picture studio work. Write particulars and send photo which will be returned, or call at nine, one or five o'clock.

J. A. Golden, Vice-Pres.

THE POWERS COMPANY
241st Street and Richardson Avenue
Take Subway to 177th St. then Mount Vernon car

LUX FILMS

The World's Best—Bar None

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES

Another Split Reel
The kind YOU WANT

Only a Bunch of Flowers

Length 596 Feet—Drama

That Typist Again

Length 380 Feet—Comedy

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 22, 1910

A pathetic reel of heart interest and a rollicking bit of comedy, just the thing to give variety to your program. Order it NOW.

Do not Forget the Free Colored Lithos.

R. PRIEUR

10 E. 15th Street, New York City

Telephone Call, 3124 Stuyvesant

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

Eclair Films

FINEST ON THE MARKET

For September 26th

"The Street Arab of Paris"

820 FEET

A delightful comedy-drama, amusing, vivacious, thoroughly well executed, and alive with interest to all.

Cines Films

For September 23d

"Julie Colonna"

760 FEET

A pathetically interesting film, marvelously soul-stirring and carrying with it a thrill every second of its production.

Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer

236 FEET

One of the laughable features of the season; a film that will be an acquisition to any exchange.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.
CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST.

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

WIRE WRITE CALL

Michigan Film & Supply Co.

1106-7 Union Trust Building
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

FOR A GOOD Independent Service

The Largest Independent Exchange between New York and Chicago

SONG SLIDES

L I D E — NON-BREAKABLE — NON-INFLAMABLE — L I D E

Colored Song and Announcement Slides

Patent Applied For

Just the kind of a slide you have all been waiting for. Guaranteed against breaking from heat or the careless operator. Send for list. Made and sold only by the original inventors. None others genuine.

NORTH AMERICAN SLIDE CO., 143 North 8th Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SONG SLIDES

My improved STARS, CAMS and SPROCKETS last so long and give such good satisfaction that some supply houses don't like to handle them. They want something that wears out quick, more money in it for them. GET WISE. Write direct to me.

E. N. LAVEZZI,
3042 N. Ashland Ave., CHICAGO.

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, 61 W. 14th St., NEW YORK CITY

NATHAN HALE regretted having but ONE life to give to his country, and PROGRESSIVE EXHIBITORS from all parts of the UNION UNANIMOUSLY REGRET there's but

ONE NESTOR RELEASE A WEEK

The GREAT DEMAND for NESTOR FILMS makes it IMPERATIVE for you to BE UP and DOING if you would not miss them

FOR RELEASE WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1910

STRAYED FROM THE RANGE

LENGTH, 963 FEET

An Exceptional Film of Exceptional Interest and Exceptional Worth

FREE!!!

Beautiful Posters

FREE!!!

Nestor Bulletins

Geo. E. Chamberlain, of Portland, Ore., writes:

"I always feature NESTOR FILMS; they are superb and the best box-office stimulants I have ever used. People want Western subjects, and you certainly know how to please them."

Scene from "STRAYED FROM THE RANGE"

"Strayed from the Range" is one of those sweet, delightful love stories that everybody falls in love with. The well-meaning friend and the self-appointed Sir Critic may well exclaim: "An old story!" TRUE! An old story, indeed—the old, old story is even older than the proverbial hills. It is the NESTOR of all the old stories; but a story, THE story, which, like NESTOR FILMS, is forever NEW, forever FRESH, forever BUDDING, forever BLOSSOMING, forever WAFTING FRAGRANCE, forever CHARMING, forever INTERESTING and FOREVER IN DEMAND.

Announce "Strayed from the Range" and lovers, married couples, paterfamilias, materfamilias and their hopefuls will STRAY into your theatre—even grandpa and grandma will polish up their "specs" and hasten to see this NESTOR PICTURE-POEM OF LOVE.

Read the list of EXCHANGES BUYING NESTOR FILMS and PLACE your ORDER NOW with the one nearest to you. A Film you can't afford to miss. GET IT, if you have to ROUGH-HOUSE FOR IT!

Sold through MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CO.
111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK CITY

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO.	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CAPITOL FILM SERVICE	422 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE	602 Dooly Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE	315 West 4th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
DIXIE FILM CO.	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La.
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E.	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO.	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC STATES FILM EXCHANGE	734 S. Main St., Los Angeles, Cal.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO.	723-34 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
TOLEDO FILM EXCHANGE	319 Superior St., Toledo, Ohio.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO.	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM & SUPPLY CO.	112 N. Market St., Wichita, Kan.

THIS WEEK'S ADDITION:

EMPIRE FILM EXCHANGE	120 E. 14th St., New York City

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

BE A MEMBER OF OUR LARGE MAILING LIST FAMILY

LOVE'S OLD, SWEET SONG

Released Thursday, Sept. 22nd

A simple, compelling little story of a wedding that was the result of a camping trip. The little country girl brought to the city home of fashion was not welcomed by the haughty society leader, but when the husband grew neglectful the two women were drawn together and it was the little country girl who at last led the husband into the path of right.

Length about 990 Feet

Released Monday, Sept. 26th

The Sheriff's Capture

The sheriff's deputies captured the outlaws after the sheriff was shot, but it was the sheriff who captured the girl and that was far more important. A well planned story told with spirit.

Length about 990 Feet

Send for Free Catalogue of Our 1910 Machine

LUBIN MF'G CO. 926 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO: 22 Fifth Avenue LONDON: 45 Gerrard Street, W

BERLIN: 35 Friederich Strasse

W. E. Greene Film Exchange

The Oldest and Largest Independent Film Exchange in New England

Buying the Product of All the Independent Manufacturers

We also own and control the exclusive rights for the NEW ENGLAND STATES

The Great Military Tournament of the U.S. Army

HELD AT TOLEDO, OHIO

and a Number of Other Special Feature Films

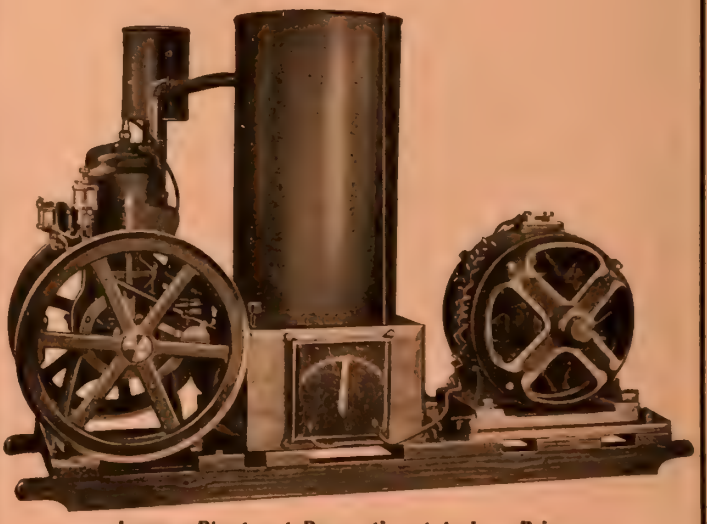
If you are unable to call drop us a line for full particulars

W. E. Greene Film Exchange

228 Tremont St. (Opposite Majestic Theatre) Boston, Mass

Electric Light Plant Complete

$167.16



Larger Plants at Proportionately Low Prices

Including the celebrated DETROIT KEROSENE ENGINE and DYNAMO OF SUFFICIENT CAPACITY TO FURNISH CURRENT FOR YOUR ARC AND EIGHTY 4 c. p. lamps for illumination.

Total cost of operation from 5 to 25 cents per day. Gives you better light than you can buy. Gives you the same light in the afternoon as at night. Can be operated by a ten year old child.

Can Make Immediate Shipment

DETROIT ENGINE WORKS 406 Bellevue Avenue Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Just a Word Mr. Exhibitor!

We know positively as much as anyone about your requirements. Our work is modeled on the lines of your needs. High class in everything that pertains to a film production. In

Rip Van Winkle

RELEASED OCTOBER 1st

We are releasing a film which will establish a position by itself.

This pretty American classic has hungered for expression in film, and we have given it expression.

ASK YOUR EXCHANGE MAN

WEEK OF OCTOBER 8th

Jealousy

A Picturesque Drama

WEEK OF OCTOBER 16th

Tracked Across the Sea

WEEK OF OCTOBER 24th

Breaking Home Ties

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Sold Through The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

VITAGRAPH

"LIFE PORTRAYALS"

FOR RELEASE TUESDAY, SEPT. 27

HER ADOPTED PARENTS

A Novel and Appealing Theme, teaching a wholesome and uplifting sentiment. The joy of doing good is illustrated with powerful effect. Approximate length, 988 feet.

Scene from "A HOME MELODY."

FOR RELEASE FRIDAY, SEPT. 30

A HOME MELODY

Deep in Heart Interest—A mother's reason restored when she hears the old melody that had once been her favorite. Superb acting. Approximate length 907 feet

FOR RELEASE SATURDAY, OCT. 1

THE BACHELOR AND THE BABY

A Society Drama of Great Power—Misleading appearances cause the breaking off of an engagement, but lead later to a happier marriage. Approximate length, 995 feet.

The Vitagraph Company of America } NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St.
LONDON, 25 Cecil Court
CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St.
PARIS, 15 Rue Sainte-Cecile

Vol. 7., No. 14. October 1, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

THE
MOVING PICTURE WORLD
WHICH IS INCORP
THE EXHIBIT
ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

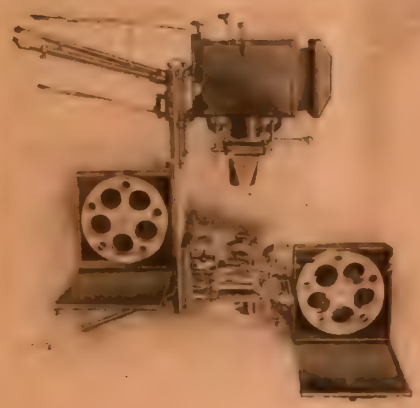
★ MÉLIÈS RELEASES ★

A Plucky American Girl
A story of a heroine that makes us wish there were more of them to go around. This picture is full of thrills and throbs. Length, 950 Feet.
Released SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

BILL'S SISTER
This is the swiftest and most dramatic of Western dramas. Length, 950 Feet
Released OCTOBER, 6, 1910

MÉLIÈS FILMS ARE SURE MONEY GETTERS. TRY THEM YOURSELF AND BE CONVINCED.

★ G. MÉLIÈS, 204 East 38th Street, New York City ★
Western Representative: JOHN B. ROCK, 109 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.



Power's
Cameragraph No. 5

was the best motion picture machine on the market until the advent of of our No. 6 model. Over 10,000 are in daily use all over the world. What better proof can we offer of their excellence. Orders can be filled from stock.

Power's Cameragraph No. 5 Style B. Automatic Fire Shutter, $195 Complete
Power's Cameragraph No. 5 Style A. Automatic Fire Shutter, $185 Complete Power's Cameragraph No. 5 without Automatic Fire Shutter, $175 Complete

ALL TYPES FULLY DESCRIBED IN CATALOGUE "G"—JUST OUT

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY - 115 Nassau Street, New York City

VITAGRAPH

Important Announcement!

I am pleased to announce to the Trade that we now have ready for release the FINEST MOVING PICTURES IN THE WORLD, which will be issued under the name of "RELIANCE" films, produced in the most complete and modern laboratories ever constructed, interpreted by talented actors of reputation, with magnificent costumes and artistic stage settings.

"RELIANCE" films are the culmination of two years of study and effort toward perfection in motography. When I became identified with the industry I was astonished at the opportunities which had been neglected. The popularity of moving pictures with the public convinced me that the producer who WOULD SPARE NO EXPENSE IN EVERY BRANCH OF THE ART OF FILM MAKING, would receive the loyal patronage of theater owners. We have carried the idea into effect, and now offer a line of moving picture films which are without question the most elaborate productions ever conceived, and which will establish a new era.

Our SCENARIOS are written by Stanner E. V. Taylor, the well known author, foremost among the world's motographic playwrights. The plots are comprehensive and interesting, and adapted to pantomimic depiction, making the subjects thoroughly understandable to the average audience.

THESE STORIES ARE INTERPRETED BY OUR STOCK COMPANY

including actors of ability, whose excellent work is well known to the public. In this aggregation many familiar faces will be recognized, among them such popular artists as Marion Leonard, James Kirkwood, Arthur Johnson, Henry Walthall, Phillips Smalley, Anthony O. Sullivan, Frankie Burns, Gertrude Robinson, Edward Morrisey and Eugene Sanger, the latter acting as director. Max Schneider, the photographic expert, has charge of the camera. Other film companies may be content with one woman or man to play leading roles, but the "RELIANCE" company is an ALL STAR CAST, and the principals in our subjects will be ably supported. Dramatic talent, versatility and personality are the requisites, and while our company today is without doubt the STRONGEST ASSEMBLAGE OF MOTION PICTURE ACTORS ON THE GLOBE, it will be further increased and strengthened.

The COSTUMING is superb. Positively no expense has been spared in this direction, and the garments of our characters are elegant and appropriate in every respect.

The STAGE SETTINGS are massive, and artistically constructed, and the minutest details in all scenes are faithfully carried out.

MARION LEONARD

LEADING WOMAN

Our LABORATORIES were built at enormous cost, occupy 15,000 square feet of floor space, and are a model of perfection, embodying the most modern photographic appliances obtainable, to which were added the ideas and apparatus of our own experts. Our Perforators are absolutely perfect, giving a rock-steady picture on the screen. Our facilities for developing and printing are unequalled, and the exquisite toning and beautiful tinting of "RELIANCE" films will cause a furore. Filtered air is utilized, pumped through the floor and drawn out by suction fans in the ceiling, obviating the possibility of dust particles, and producing photography of crystal clearness.

The STUDIO is 100 x 75 ft., and the stage 40 x 36, with the entire roof and sides of specially constructed prism glass. The capacity of the plant is 500,000 feet of film weekly, which can be increased.

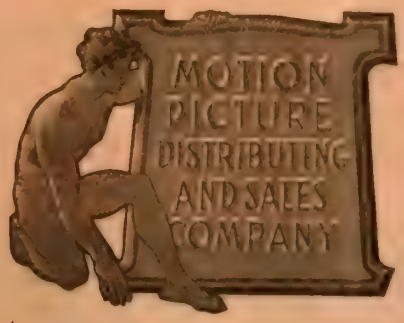
The FIRST RELEASE will be made on Saturday, October 22nd and thereafter a reel will be issued every Saturday. As soon as Exhibitors are familiar with the high quality of "RELIANCE" films we will add another reel per week. I pledge you my word that every reel of "RELIANCE" films will mean dramatic subjects of the highest quality, splendidly acted and of beautiful photography.

EXHIBITORS; To secure the advantages of our first release you should place your order now with your Exchange. If your Exchange will not buy "RELIANCE" films for you communicate with us and we will tell you where to get them. You should also get on our mailing list for "FILM FANCIES,"—a 16 page booklet issued weekly, containing our synopses and other interesting matter, which will be sent free of charge to all Exhibitors.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. O. BAUMANN, Treasurer,
CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES.

"Reliance" Films are sold exclusively through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.



Stronger and Stronger

Grows the Independent Organization. Glance at the list of Film Exchanges that are buying our product—look at the number of Manufacturers releasing film subjects weekly of such Quality and in such Quantities that the Independent Exhibitor has at his disposal the

FINEST PROGRAM IN THE WORLD

And you will understand why Exhibitors are flocking to our standard. The good ship—"INDEPENDENCE"—is sailing in smooth waters, bound for the harbor of SUCCESS and PROSPERITY. The flag of QUALITY is nailed to the mast. Get aboard—there is room for you.

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.
RELIANCE—Carlton Laboratories.

1st. Release, October 22.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, September 21st, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.

CALIFORNIA.

California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

COLORADO.

W. H. Swanson Film Exchange, 301 Railroad Bldg., Denver.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Consolidated Film Exchange, Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta.
Sunny South Film Exchange, Rhodes Building, Atlanta

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 70 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.
Standard Film Exchange, 155 E. Washington St., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 256 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1230 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1517 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Buckeye Film & Projection Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Capitol Film Service, 422 N. High St., Columbus.
Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Co-operative Film Exchange, 320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

POCAHONTAS IS COMING—OCT. 11TH

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week

SAY "THANHOUSER"

TO THE EXCHANGE MAN
FOR THE THANHOUSER 2-A-WEEK

Released This Week

Tuesday, Sept. 27th

AND STILL IT COMES!—"THANHOUSER FUNNYFILM"

Home Made Mince Pie

is a Thanhouser-Made pie that you'll get a slice of if your exchange man is honestly looking after your interests, or if you've got nerve enough to "INSIST!" You really need comedy like this in your business. Try to be at your exchange when they put this on the screen for inspection. Then see if you don't agree with us that it's EXACTLY the kind of picture THE PATRON likes best. Please THE PATRON! Please THE PATRON! Please THE PATRON!

Approx. Length, 1000 Ft. No. 146. Code Word, Mince.

Scene from HOME MADE MINCE PIE

Friday, Sept. 30th

THE MOST INGENIOUS STORY IN A LONG TIME!

Dots and Dashes

will dot your seats with breathless, thrilled, APPLAUDING spectators and dash its novelty deep into your jaded self. YES, YOU'LL CLAP HANDS WITH THE REST! The synopsis on another page portends that NOW! Read it. And rest convinced that, since a good picture is ever better than the mere printed description of it, THIS PICTURE is worth boosting in advance—and worth boosting HARD. Announce it as "coming" right now.

Approx. Length, 1000 Ft. No. 147. Code Word, Dots.

Scene from DOTS AND DASHES

RELEASED NEXT WEEK

TUESDAY, OCT. 4th

COMEDY OF THE POPULAR KIND!

LEON OF THE TABLE D'HOTE

is one of the funniest characters that ever frolicked through a thousand feet of film. You'll wish it were TWO thousand, when you see him! He's SUBLIME! His fun is as infectious in the cheap little restaurant where we find him at his true vocation of waiter as it is in the classy summer resort where, claiming he is a Count, he becomes all the rage. His adventures are too numerous to amply describe—be sure you follow them WITH YOUR EYE, Approx. Length 1000 Ft. No. 148. Code Word, Leon.

FRIDAY, OCT. 7th

DRAMA OF THE POPULAR KIND!

AVENGED

is a heart interest subject of the variety your patrons so like. It is one of those gripping playlets that go their thrilling distance without so much as an inch of bloodshed, but which hold the spectator's interest just the same, and leave a pleasant taste in the mouth instead of a sour one. The "Thanhouser Twist" sticks out at the end as usual.

App. Length, 1000 Ft. 149. Code Word, Avenged.

COMING: Tuesday, Oct. 11th, Pocahontas. Friday, Oct. 14th, Delightful Dolly

Have you dropped us a card for the THANHOUSER NEWS, "The Exhibitors Guide?" It's sent FREE of CHARGE to anyone who can show connection with the moving picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR, THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Thanhouser Company, New Rochelle, N. Y.

The Sales Co., Agents for United States and Canada.

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man!

POCAHONTAS IS COMING—OCT. 11TH

COWBOY and INDIAN
FRONTIER CELEBRATION
HELD AT
CHEYENNE, WYOMING

Reviewed and Participated in By COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Exclusive Motion Pictures

WILD GLORIES OF THE
VANISHED WESTERN BORDER

Over 3,000 feet of the greatest money-getting Motion Pictures in the world, showing "the West as it was."

EXHIBITORS—EXCHANGES

This will be a dandy money-maker anywhere and everywhere.

THESE REELS SHOW

World's Champions in Bucking Broncho Riding; Trick and Fancy Roping Contests; Steer Roping and Calf Branding Contests; Fancy Rifle and Pistol Shooting; Bulldoging of Wild Steers; Riding and Driving only Team of Buffaloes ever broken to Harness; Hitching and Driving Wild Horses; Spectacular Galloping Parade of Indians, Cowboys and Cowgirls; Indian War Dances and Ceremonies; Champion Lady Bucking Broncho Rider; Riding Bucking Mules and Buffalo; Squaw Races; Ladies Cowpony Races; Indian Races; Mounted "Potatoe Race," and Teddy Roosevelt through all.

Said The Wyoming Tribune

"The presentation of the so-called "Cowboy Carnivals" as seen in various travelling exhibitions, put on in stereotyped form by tired performers, gives one but a shallow insight into the excitement that pervades the atmosphere of these wonderful motion pictures, and those judging the "West as it Was" by these poor presentations cannot even imagine the feats of daring and recklessness displayed by these Real Actors in these Realistic Motion Pictures of the Wild and Wooly West."

EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY FOR SALE. PRICES VERY REASONABLE. WRITE OR WIRE AT ONCE

EXCLUSIVE PROPERTY OF

THE TOURNAMENT FILM COMPANY

TOLEDO, OHIO

Select territory you want and write at once. Exhibitors are going to demand these pictures—Be prepared.

FOUR REELS A WEEK

Bison Films

Tuesday; A "Bison" Wednesday; "Ambrosio"
Friday; A "Bison" Saturday; "Itala"

Special Announcement: Owing to the tremendous popularity of Itala Film, beginning October 15th, we will release two reels, the second reel a high class dramatic subject issued every Thursday.

Place your order with your exchange at once

2 WESTERN REELS 2

ASK FOR THEM!

A COWBOY FOR LOVE

Thrown from the back of a swiftly galloping horse the son of a rich rancher is found by the lovely daughter of Mexican peasants and ministered to. The attempt of the youth's proud father to break the attachment which springs up results in an elopement, and the lovers start out in life alone. In a delightful manner is shown how the lonely and morose old man has his heart melted by the baby fingers of his grandchild, resulting in a happy reunion.

Released Tuesday, Sept. 27th

THE RANCH RAIDERS

Driving the herd of stolen cattle before them, the ranch raiders ride for their lives, and the avenging cowboys, sparing neither whip nor spur, hold to the chase. As the posse comes within rifle range a running fight takes place and several of the raiders are tumbled from their horses. The last desperate stand is taken in a shack, but the besiegers finally manage to set fire to the hut, and choking with the fumes of the dense smoke the miscreants are forced into the open where they receive swift justice.

Released Friday, Sept. 30th

GET THEM!

2 WESTERN REELS 2

"AMBROSIO" RELEASE—WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 28th

THE VIRGIN OF BABYLON

"ITALA" RELEASE—SATURDAY, OCT. 1st

FOOLSHEAD EMPLOYED IN A BANK

EXHIBITORS: Send your name and address for our mailing list and we will send you weekly a sixteen page book entitled "Film Fancies" giving full synopsis of our films and other interesting matter. Profusely illustrated.

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

New York Motion Picture Co.

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures

LINCOLN BUILDING:

1 Union Square, cor. 14th Street, N. Y. City

PHONE 980-1-2 Stuyvesant Cable Address: Nosib

Tell Us!!

Did Mabel Act Wrong

when she dismissed her lover from her presence forever, because he was drunk? AND DON'T YOU THINK she was fortunate in later saving his life, their reunion restoring happiness to both?

The Metropolitan Tower is High,
The Hudson River is Deep,
Modern Film Possibilities are Great,

But no Western drama yet produced is higher in merit, deeper in interest and greater as a refined portrayal of Western life than our release for

Thursday, Sept. 29th

"A School-Marm's Ride for Life!"

(We put an exclamation point after "life" because it's full of life and because you are going to exclaim some after seeing it.)

FOR THE LOVE OF MONEY, get next to our next release! Insist on, persist for, Defender Fill-ems.

DEFENDER FILM CO.

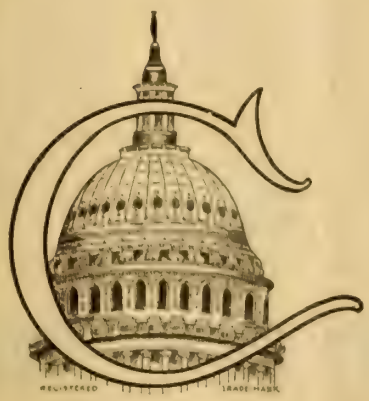
WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 East 14th St., New York

Sold only throught the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

We Told You So Before

WHAT?



Quality! Quality! Quality!

However, don't take our word for it—Order

The Adoption of Helen

RELEASED OCTOBER 1, 1910

And be convinced. Little Audrey does some perfect acting, and moves her audience first to laughter, and then to tears.

A capital story and a Capitol Film. Capitol Films will just make your programme right—Order to-day.

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D. C.

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

THE MUSIC TEACHER

RELEASED SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1910. A wonderful, soul-stirring, awe-inspiring drama, beautifully staged and photographically perfect. This is Positively the Greatest Feature Reel Ever Produced.

Don't Forget—October 1, 1910, is the Day

RELEASED TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1910

WAR

A beautiful drama, showing the master-hand of the Powers Company rom beginning to end.

THE BEECHWOOD GHOST

Is a rip-roaring comedy, and bound to send your patrons home with a laughing pain.

This Is One of Our FEATURE Two-Subject Reels

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

Get on Our Mailing List Send for One of Our Great Lobby Displays

CAUGHT REDHANDED!

"The God of Love" went to sleep at the Switch and a trainload of loving hearts was hurled through a Blind siding to almost destruction. The wounded and bleeding represented all ages and classes. Then some one awoke the Winged Archer and apprised him of the desolation wrought by his neglect. The way he ministered to the maimed and dying is told in our film;—Released October 5th.

WHEN CUPID SLEEPS

(A Full Reel This Time)

A delicious comedy creation as clean and wholesome as December's snows. So delightful in thought and theme you will wonder why in Goodness name we didn't make such a subject before.

WE'RE COMING OUT STRONG

Here's a list of Coming Sure Crack Releases. List them in your diary NOW and arrange bookings accordingly.

WEDNESDAY

October 12, CURING A GROUCH
THE S. S. MAURETANIA
October 19, THE CAT CAME BACK
IMPERFECT PERFECTOS
October 26, A TOUCHING MYSTERY
November 2, TURNING OF THE WORM
THAT DOG-GONE-DOG

YOUR EXCHANGE really wants to please you and will give you ATLAS FILMS if you make your demand Imperative. Now-a-days it pays to insist.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

ATLAS FILM CO.

10 East Fifteenth Street, New York City

SALES COMPANY TICKLED TO DEATH—WIRE YOUR ORDER

GREAT NORTHERN

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Stands for Quality!

Release for Saturday, September 24th

SEASON'S BIGGEST HEADLINER

BOOK IT AT ONCE!

Dr. JEKYLL and Mr. HYDE

OR A STRANGE CASE

This artistic and beautiful film admirably illustrates Stevenson's remarkable and world renowned story. It is a production of genuine and thrilling interest and will hold every audience spellbound to the very finish. Splendidly enacted and reproduced in magnificent photographic sequence.

"We think it is quite the best representation of 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' that we have ever seen, either in moving pictures or on the stage."—Moving Picture World.

Release for Saturday October 1, 1910 — The Flight Across the Atlantic — A sensational and thrilling feature production

THE GREAT NORTHERN FILM is the film make of Universal Fame (Pioneer of Independent Makers). No EXHIBITOR'S Weekly Programme is complete without a GREAT NORTHERN Reel.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

There's Only One Way
To Bring

MORE MONEY

To the Box Office, and that is

Show Better Pictures

than Your Competitor

Motiograph Pictures

are SO MUCH BETTER than those projected by other machines, that wherever a Motiograph is installed in a locality where it was not previously known, it's sure to be

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

AS SHOWN BY THE FOLLOWING EXAMPLES:

Warren & Jones, Greenville, Me., say:
"We get crowds with the Motiograph. Other machines failed."

J. V. Lopaze, Trinidad, Colo., says:
"Best results and best pictures in town."

J. E. Benton, Hiteman Opera House, Hiteman, Iowa, says:
"I show pictures that make them sit up and take notice."

Pendry & Kingsbury, Mgrs. Opera House, St. Anthony, Idaho, say:
"We show much better pictures than our competitors."

J. O. Cass, Laredo, Texas, says:
"My patrons say my pictures excel all others."

The Colonial Circuit of Eleven Beautiful Theatres use Nine Motiographs.

THE MOTIOGRAPH

Shows Far Better Pictures
Wears Far Better than Others

YET COSTS NO MORE

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE
and 52 REASONS why you should use it

Manufactured and Jobbed by

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.

564-572 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

J. H. HALLBERG, Agt. New York City

J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt London, Paris, Berlin

ON THE WAY!!!

Due Wednesday, October 5th

"THE COWBOYS TO THE RESCUE"

Western? Yes. and more than that! 900 feet of art, prairie, action, and photography that will stun—just stun you.

WHAT DID YOU THINK of that pipin we released on the Twenty-eighth of September (Wednesday, of course) entitled:

"A Western Girl's Sacrifice"

Listen: On the strength of "The White Princess of the Tribe," the sales of Champion film jumped up. Going some—eh?

Pipe these Toots for Champ Films. Got a Bushel of 'em.

"Most beautiful pictures I ever saw."
DEMPSEY BRUCE,
244 Fisk Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

"Champ films are there with the goods."
E. D. HOLMES,
Patchogue, N. Y.

"Your Western pictures are great. Turned them away when I ran, "Cowboy and the Squaw."
W. G. SPURRIER,
Seattle, Wash.

PAST FEATURE RELEASES

The White Princess of The Tribe.
A Wild Goose Chase.
His Indian Bride.
The Cowboy and The Easterner.
The Sheriff and His Son.
A Cowboy's Pledge.
Hermit of the Rockies
Spitfire.
Cowboy and The Squaw.
Romance of an Anvil.
The Abernathy Kids.

CHAMPION FILM CO.

MARK M. DINTENFASS, General Manager

12 East 15th Street, New York, U. S. A.

Laboratories at Coytesville on the Hudson

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company
111 East 14th Street, New York City

Adaptability of Kinemacolor

TO EVERY CLASS OF SUBJECTS

All Public Functions, Pageants, Races, General Sports, Regattas, Dramas and Comedies, which are daily produced in black-and-white pictures, can with equal facility and promptness, be recorded in the Actual Colors of Nature by the KINEMACOLOR Process.

EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS FOR SALE

The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

A Personal Examination of an "ELECTRA" Pink Label CARBON shows the symmetry and accuracy with which it is made.

BREAK IT IN TWO

Note the smooth, even grain of its composition, its freedom from grit and foreign substance, then you will know the reason for its steady even white light, free from flickering, and its complete consumption.

Back Up Your High Grade Equipment With High Grade Carbons

ELECTRA

·TRADE MARK·

HUGO REISINGER

SOLE IMPORTER

11 Broadway :: New York City

ELECTRA

·TRADE MARK·

I AM GOING SOUTH

TO ACQUAINT EXHIBITORS

WITH A

NEW FILM PROPOSITION

AND TO

Prove that an EXCHANGE buying the choice of the WORLD'S BEST MAKES

Equipped with BEST booking systems and facilities for handling business on a large scale must certainly obtain BEST results with least expense to Owners and Managers

WRITE NOW

For information and appointment. I will be in your town soon.

TOM MOORE

OF

MOORE'S FILM EXCHANGE

434 Ninth Street, Northwest :: WASHINGTON, D. C.

PHONE, MAIN 3492

LICENSED BY MOTION PICTURE PATENTS CO.

Yours ever faithfully
Cherry Kearton

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands.

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3⅜ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building, Chicago). Telephone Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 OCTOBER 1, 1910 No. 14

Summary of the Week.

A Moving Picture Convention....737
The Usual Thing....738
More Light on the Anti-I. M. P. A....739
Cherry Kearton....739
A Motion Picture Marvel. By L. R. Harrison....740
The Moving Picture vs. the Reformers....741
"Lux Graphicus" Discovers Bohemia....743
"Man-About-Town" Praises Some Eclair Films....746
Comments on the Films....747
The Lecturer and the Picture....750
Operators' Column. By F. H. Richardson....751
Chicago Notes....751
New England Notes....751
A Visit to Fort Wayne, Ind....752
"Camera Chats"—A Series of Illustrated Lectures....757
Correspondence.—"Why Vaudeville Is Discarded"—"The Hearst Pictures"—"Putting One Over on Us"....
Hints on the Pathe Professional Machine....758
Licensed Release Dates....768
Independent Release Dates....774

REMOVAL NOTICE.

The Chicago offices of The Moving Picture World are now located at 160 Washington street (Post building), Suite 307. Telephone Main 3145.

A Moving Picture Convention.

SECOND ARTICLE.

Taking up the thread of the subject which we initiated last week, we may premise that conventions are no new things in the moving picture field. There was the F. S. A., the Alliance, and the other minor gatherings which have petered out. Broadly, therefore, we lay no claim to novelty of idea in the suggestion we are making; we want to improve on what has already been done.

The careful reader of the WORLD—and we are pleased to find that we enjoy the attention of a very large body of readers who follow us week by week in our policy—will bear us out when we say that in January last we thought we perceived in what proved to be the last real meeting of the F. S. A., the germ of a really national Moving Picture Convention. There were one or two features about that gathering which we were sorry to see, under present conditions, stood very little chance of being repeated, for even in January the death knell of the F. S. A. had been sounded. As a matter of fact, it sounded in January, 1909.

We want to give the reader in the moving picture field, a parallel idea drawn from our own experience of conventions—experience gained in the stationary photographic field. Here, in the United States, the photographers of each State meet yearly in convention. They hold exhibitions of photographs and apparatus; they listen to papers and addresses bearing on the practical and artistic aspects of professional photography; they exchange and interchange ideas; they have a banquet, and many social functions, and the end of it all is that each attendant at the convention goes back to his store or studio, refreshed and enlightened with new ideas as to the conduct of his business and his relationship with the paying public.

Similarly there is a National Photographic Convention which meets in a different State each year. Last year, for example, this national convention, which was attended by several thousands of photographers from all over the country, met at Rochester, N. Y. This year it met at Milwaukee, Wis.; next year it is to meet at St. Paul, Minn., etc. This convention may be regarded as representative of the whole of the photographic craft of the United States. It is of considerable importance, in the business sense, when it is borne in mind that there are, roughly, about twenty thousand professional photographers—that is, studio men—in the country; whilst the ramifications of what used to be known as the "black art" extend in all directions. Photography, in short, is a very considerable business.

This National Photographic Convention is the means of bringing photographers together from all parts of the United States. There is a great exhibition of photographs; prizes are awarded, consisting of gold medals, or money prizes and the like. There are presidential and other addresses and practical demonstrations. Then, there is a great trade exhibit, the printing paper makers, the chemical makers, the photographic dealers and others taking space to fill a large exhibition hall. Many hundreds, and sometimes many thousands, of photographers and traders attend the national convention. We heard with pleasure that this year's meeting at Milwaukee was singularly successful.

There are so many of the readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD interested in stationary photography that they, at least, will perceive the practical utility of a convention run on lines similar to those of the National Photographic Convention. The thing is so obvious that it hardly needs discussion. We might point out that the American photographic field, like most other industrial fields in this country, is split into trust and anti-trust; that is to say, on the one side there is the huge business of the Eastman Kodak Company, which operates against the smaller manufacturers. Still in these photographic conventions the lion lies down with the lamb. All sections of the industry support the conventions; Trust and Independent mingle freely, and, after it is all over, they go their respective ways, no doubt improved in mind and outlook by the opportunity of fraternizing at a business meeting once a year.

We shall write a third article on this subject next week. Meanwhile, we want every reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to bear this suggestion of ours in mind, namely, that he is a possible, nay, a probable, moving picture conventioner. The moving picture business is a firmly fixed and staple business. It has passed out of the domain of the experimental and the faddish. It has not merely come to stay, if we may use that very much hackneyed phrase; it is staying, and it will stay. As we have said over and over again, it will go on just like any other well-established business at present in existence; therefore, it has a right to be considered and treated as a fixed commercial institution with its own relative and comparative importance in the eyes of the community at large. Can it be wondered at, therefore, that we, who have the success of this business so much at heart, should especially apply ourselves, in the interests of the picture men, to the danger of disintegration and the advantages of union. Firmly established as the moving picture business is, we nevertheless incline to the opinion that unless there is union amongst all those interested in it, its longevity is not absolutely certain. They must get together and hang together for community of interest. Disunion means disruption, decay and disappearance. Union means strength, solidarity of purpose, and permanent success. These are some of the reasons why we are advocating the formation of a moving picture convention.

The Usual Thing.

"We want to know just how far we may go towards satisfying the demand for ——— ——— films without being attacked by your publication."

The above is an extract from a letter which we received this week from an established firm of film makers. The blanks refer to the nature of the film. It would not be fair to indicate either the firm or the nature of the film towards which our friends are in doubt as to our attitude. The letter, or rather the extract from it, that we give, is, however, of such general interest that we think a few comments upon it may be profitably printed here. The extract shows a state of mind not uncommon in the moving picture making field.

What is the usual thing? Whence does the phrase originate? What does it mean? Let us explain. Many of our readers both in this country and abroad will recall the name of Mr. H. P. Robinson, a very successful English photographer whose work is still known in this country, whose books are sold, and whose influence is still felt. Robinson was a man who sought to make pictures by photography, instead of merely photographs without any pictorial quality. Had Robinson been living now, he would have preached the gospel of pictorialism in the moving picture. He coined the phrase, "The usual thing," to indicate a common photograph of a commonplace sitter or commonplace subject, treated in a commonplace manner. A glance through any number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and the criticisms on moving pictures that are released every week will show that the usual thing is rife in the moving picture field. Old plots worn threadbare supply the stories. The acting in too many cases is amateurish. The producing treatment is also commonplace and unimaginative. The exposure, the printing and development are also commonplace; that is, they do not rise above the dead level of mediocrity. It is the usual thing again and again.

Of course, there are conspicuous exceptions to this state of things. Many firms for the last year or two have lifted themselves out of the rut of the usual thing. They find it is possible to obtain freshness and originality of theme, or, at least, of treatment; whilst as to the photographic end of matters, the technique and the pictorialism of some of these pictures are advancing by leaps and bounds. Still, much, far too much, of the usual thing is prevalent.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD was the first publication in the world to preach the doctrine of quality; quality of scenario, quality of acting, quality of scenery, and quality of photography. We are pleased to learn that our preachings have not been in vain, and that we have a large body of sympathetic adherents in this gospel, which they are carrying out in practice. There has been an enormous uplift in the quality of the moving picture since last year. The extract which prefaces this article shows, however, that there are still manufacturers content to experiment with the usual thing.

It is of the usual thing in the way of pictures that our friends write us. Just the ordinary thing that has been done times out of number. Now, it cannot be too emphatically stated, once and for all, that the public is tired of the usual thing. They have found it out. The subjects which were tolerated in picture houses two years ago are passé to-day. In the ordinary theatrical field, people no longer stand for the cheap melodrama or the pointless musical comedy. They want the best that can be produced. It is the same in the moving picture field.

The chase, the melodrama, criminality, yea, even the most applauded Western subjects, are out of date. A "Becket," "Alice in Wonderland," "A Winter's Tale" and "Elektra," a "Comedy and Tragedy," a "Carmen"; a Selig ranch subject, a Biograph comedy—all these, and many more, have rendered the usual thing obsolete. Can it be wondered at, therefore, that we do not view with favor any reversion to the old order of things. There is, in our opinion, amongst certain sections of the trade, too much pandering to the inferior mind of a certain section of New York City, where people, in the large majority of cases, are content with very ordinary subjects. We want the manufacturers to take a leaf out of the book of the late Richard Mansfield, and play up to the highest form of intelligence, rather than down to a comparatively low one. "Excelsior!" should be their motto; and progression, not retrogression, the order of to-day. The standard of quality of moving pictures is rapidly advancing. Those manufacturers who are content to make the usual thing, will surely be judged by their own standard. They will fall out of the race. On the other hand, those who constantly keep a lofty ideal in front of them, will reap profit and honor.

Just as we go to press we are informed by Joseph Hopp, of the Standard Film Exchange, Chicago, that he has allied himself with the Sales Company.

More Light on the Anti I. M. P. A.

A Discredited Organization.

Further to our statement of last week we have to record that the Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association's representative failed to keep his plan of having the Ministerial Association endorse the proposed plan of "Legislative drastic censorship of moving pictures." It would not surprise us if our article of last week had something to do with their failure, as no doubt they were surprised at our knowledge of their tactics which were evidently intended to be secret, and we firmly believe they belong to that order of workers of whom it is said "publicity kills."

In addition to this failure, astonishing developments have been made during the last few days, confirming the suspicions registered in these pages a few weeks ago, that these people were subsidized by the immoral tactics of a well-known dishonorable New York daily. In spite of all our knowledge of these things, we never anticipated such an exposure as that made by Mayor Gaynor in his letter recounting incidents which he believes had much to do with that wicked spirit which brought about his attempted murder. The Mayor distinctly gives the lie to these people in their statements of what they report he said when they called upon him to stop the prize-fight pictures. Moreover the Mayor makes public the fact that the religious organizations these people professed to represent had written to him, denying their sponsorship. The astonishment grows with increased details, for it now appears that the man we denounced last week for his attitude and had previously criticized as having no standing in the community, is no other than a process-server for lawyers. This man personally boasted to the writer of this article, of that which Mayor Gaynor describes as false, besides which he further boasted that he had "spent three thousand dollars fighting the fight pictures" and "other immoral scenes." As his statements have proved false in one instance, they are just as likely to be false in another; there is only one chance of truth in the statement of this large expenditure and that is that the newspaper under whose auspices they worked, may have gone to this expense, not only for the supposed purpose of stopping the fight pictures, but to use the agitation as a weapon for their foul onslaught on the Mayor, and which he has just exposed to an indignant public. What a strange world of newspaper tactics this is! To think of the moving pictures being made the means of a covert attack upon an eminent man; and, failing that, to organize an association claiming anti-immoral desires, to carry on an immoral campaign. It is well the truth is out, and further to the exposure of this duplicity there stands this glaring fact—that these people who assumed such a virtuous title under which to carry on their persecution of the moving pictures, are themselves more immoral than ever the moving pictures could be at their worst, for it is an acknowledged fact that lying and misrepresentation are two of the most immoral acts known to the moral law, not only because of their inherent evil but also because of the far-reaching nature of their mischievous effects, even as proved in this case where Mayor Gaynor became so terrible a victim. We feel vindicated in everything we have written during these weeks since this agitation commenced, always knowing that truth would triumph. We never expected such a victory, but the victory is made greater because of the depth of this infamy. It only remains now for the Anti-I. M. P. A. to pass into their well-deserved oblivion and there study the moral law of which they proved very efficient anti's.

Cherry Kearton.

In the Moving Picture World of September 10, we devoted an article to Cherry Kearton and his work. This week we reproduce a portrait of Mr. Kearton which we are sure that our readers will be glad to have, as a picture of one who leads the strenuous life in the use of the moving picture camera amongst the animal kingdom.

During Mr. Kearton's stay in New York City, he has met with the greatest possible success. First of all, personally and socially; then, in demonstrating to the American public and the principal leaders of the moving picture field, his remarkable devotion to the photography both with the ordinary camera and the moving picture camera of the rarer members of the animal kingdom. On Friday evening, September 10, he was a guest, with Colonel Roosevelt, of the New York Press Club. The newspaper men of the city had enveigled the ex-President of the United States into talking politics to them at the festive board as well as participating in a Bohemian entertainment. Amongst the attractions of the evening, were Kearton's pictures of lion spearing, hippopotamii hunting, bird life, insect life, and the Buffalo Jones series, secured in Africa for exhibition in this country. Some of these pictures are to be released at a future date by the licensed manufacturers, and thus will become generally known to the moving picture public of this country. Mr. Kearton's plans for the future embrace many, many picture enterprises of which it would be premature to speak. This one fact, however, seems certain—that when his wanderings with the camera are over, he may probably settle down to the business side of the picture in Great Britain, where the practical knowledge that he has gained will be of great assistance to him.

Following the exhibition of Mr. Kearton's pictures in the reception room of the Press Club, at which the editors of the Moving Picture World were invited guests, ex-President Roosevelt paid the following very high compliment to the progress of cinematography and the prowess and skill of his friend, Mr. Kearton:

"Gentlemen, this has been such a really noteworthy ambition that I think it is due to Mr. Kearton that I should say a few words not only as a guarantee of good faith, but for publication. I think I can say that I am acquainted with all notable lion hunts from the days of Tiglath Pileser to the present time, and I speak with absolute accuracy when I say that in all that period there has been no such feat as that the portrayal of which we have witnessed to-night, and, above all, no such feat as the portrayal itself. To tackle these beasts with the rifle is one thing, but to tackle them with the rope the way that Buffalo Jones and those two cowpunchers—those two New Mexican cowpunchers—did it, is a perfectly marvelous feat.

"I was out in Africa when word was brought to us that Buffalo Jones and the two cowpunchers were coming out there to rope the animals. Everybody laughed at the thought. They didn't believe that there was any seriousness in the proposal. I said, 'You don't know those cowpunchers, and there is nothing they will not try to rope.' I did not believe they could accomplish the feat. I didn't believe it possible to rope a lion or a rhinoceros as they did, and to have caught their pictures with a cinematograph is a thing that has never before been to be approached. You have witnessed a really phenomenal record of a really phenomenal feat, and I congratulate Mr. Kearton with all my heart on what he has done, and I congratulate Buffalo Jones and the cowpunchers."

Just as we learn that many boards of health are going to use the moving picture to educate the masses in sanitary living, we also get word that some lady reformers induced a mayor to stop the "Fly Pest" picture, on the grounds that the daily life of a nasty fly is too nauseating for the public to witness. All of which goes to show that kickers are born and notmade.

A Motion Picture Marvel.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

In the city where nobody cares, we had almost ceased to hope for an exhibition of the silent drama which would compare with those of smaller cities, but there was a surprise in store when the "Sans Souci" sent out a modest announcement, with complimentary tickets for the pencil pushers.

Who wants to deadhead at a picture show?

I accepted a bunch of admissions with an outward show of resignation and a bosom full of disgust, but my suppressed scorn and ill-concealed sneer were modified when I saw that the enterprising exhibitors had selected a location on Seventh avenue, near Forty-second street, in the heart of the theater district, just off Lobster Square, near the junction of two White Ways.

I went in the afternoon.

Press representatives had not been the only ones invited. An opera car filled with pretty children in white muslin and pink ribbons arrived as I turned down the avenue, and there were more in the lobby, children, and mammas ,and maids, it was like a Sunday school festival. It was a clever move on the part of the management to secure the participation of the home-loving contingent, and to reserve the entire first balcony for them. In the first two tiers of this balcony are open boxes for six, which may be reserved for a dollar. The other seats are ten cents, first come first served. But in the afternoon this part of the theater is an Adam-less Eden.

Just think of it! A theater for children!

To the rear of the balcony is a tea room. I was not permitted to enter, but was informed that both gentlemen and ladies were admitted in the evening. Below is a smoking den, not as ornate as that of the Fifth Avenue Theater, but as large and comfortable.

The greatest attraction of the "Sans Souci" became audible before I was ushered to a seat.

I heard the soft tremolo of an orgue du salon, a handsome organ of moderate size, set in at one side of the stage. At the other side was a piano.

A small percentage of people do not like fine music, and an equally small percentage are illiterate, but they are to be pitied, not blamed, though they do not know what they miss. A great majority of our population are music lovers, and a large percentage of these appreciate high quality of musical performance. To the more cultivated portion, the music given at the ordinary picture shows is worse than none at all. It would be a relief to have it left out. It is only fit to make a small dog howl, or is so completely out of harmony with the pictures shown as to eliminate thousands of desirable patrons. If 50 per cent. of the money spent for cheap variety acts was devoted to the very form of entertainment used to attract patrons to restaurants of the better class there would be an improvement in quality and number of attendance. One has only to watch the silent throngs at the free, park concerts to realize how all-pervading and deep-seated is the love of good music.

A professional organist, perhaps one accustomed to an edifice more sacred, was improvising when I was ushered to a seat, and I felt a sense of rest. Another contribution to this sense of relief was the stage arrangement. In place of the tawdry old side scenes and a curtain of white, swinging like a sheet on a clothes line, a gilded frame filled the proscenium, within it an adjustable mat, then the white canvas on which the pictures were to be portrayed. At the right first entrance, where the piano stood, were some potted plants and flowers.

The pictures shown were not above the average.

The usual indiscriminate mixture of inharmonious ingredients, the hotch-potch of the picture show, was in evidence, but whatever was good was vastly improved by the artistic framing, and the music helped towards blending the shrill overtones with the deep harmonies. One could imagine what the silent drama would be with all the conditions in nice adjustment. It might be made the little opera of the people with results at once delightful and broadly educational. There exists no reason why the graphic art, with its especial fitness for some forms of the drama should not become a low-priced substitute for grand opera when set to appropriate music. The words are of no consequence in either. Both would give us figures for the eyes, in a plot that we can see, with the music acting as a stimulus to the imagination. It is thus that we are given impressions, in themselves artistic pleasures of the purest kind. If we are unpleasantly affected, or nowise affected, we might as well stay at home.

Those in my neighborhood seemed to be greatly pleased, and a satisfied customer is the best kind of an advertisement. The man next to me was so delighted that he became sporty and said:

"I am going to spend my rebate."

His rebate!

Here was something important.

I asked him to explain, and he did.

He showed me the half of a coupon ticket that he had bought at the box window. It had cost him double the regular price, permitting him to see the exhibition twice if he desired, but it had a time stamp on it and was redeemable for half the amount paid at the office within two and a half hours after he had made his purchase.

This may have been done elsewhere, but it was new to me.

If it is practicable, and I can see no reason why it is not capable of being used, this rebate system solves the much-vexed problem of how to place a time limit on attendance. It seems entirely suitable and highly desirable where a first-class, continuous performance is given. As a means to this end, there was an illuminated clock in the center of the proscenium arch.

Everything was modern.

It is no longer necessary to visit a cast-off theater to see motion pictures. How delightful!

These were my thoughts as I went out into the lobby.

Another surprise.

A poster stating that a certain leading motion picture house was offering prizes aggregating as much as those given by the New York World for original scenarios. It stated that, in order to call forth the superior efforts of professional writers, one prize of $500, one of $300 and, two of $100 each would be given for the four best scenarios submitted. I studied this until I grew dizzy. The whole world seemed to be slipping away from beneath my feet. Plays were to be paid for in proportion to their merit. It was too much excitement for one day. I fainted. When the morning letter carrier sounded his shrill whistle, and the merry little flies buzzed their morning songlets, I woke up and swore I would never smoke any more of the editor's colorado-madura-Havana-perfectos. Never, never again.

The Moving Picture vs. the Reformers.

By C. W. Lawford.

First, what is a Moving Picture? For the sake of brevity we will merely say it is an exact photographic reproduction (in mechanical form) of anything real or of a natural state, in fact it is an exact copy of an original.

Second, what is a reformer? Again to the point of brevity, it is usually a person, either independently or affiliated with a narrow minded sect, who hasn't enough business of his own to look after but must have his nose in someone else's affairs, believing that the entire world is all wrong unless it thinks his way and using at times very inconsistent efforts toward making the world think as he does, and also afflicted with an insane desire to play to the grand stand in the piercing rays of a very strong spot light.

Now, with these brief definitions before you it ought to be a simple matter for the broad minded reader to catch my drift from here on and easily digest my several points without the aid of a dyspepsia tablet.

A little over four years ago the country awoke one morning to the fact that a new craze was in the air, that a discovery of some sixteen years previous had at last forged to the front and would bid fair to completely revolutionize the many sided amusement world. Stores were leased, buildings remodeled, and other buildings constructed for the purpose of what? To house and cater to a vast multitude of frenzied amusement loving people whose uppermost desire was a chance, and then many other chances, to see, at bargain prices, this most mysterious and wonderful of modern discoveries, or inventions, the Moving Picture. They saw it and were fascinated, bewildered, yea, mystified, and they are seeing it to-day, to-morrow, every day, in fact they have seen it too much, too often; it has commonized and is becoming more so, as I have previously explained in another article, unless, as I have also previously pointed out, drastic measures are resorted to from now on. No, I am not getting away from the subject in hand, rather I am gently leading you, by the bridle, as it were, to the truth, wherein lies the watery spot light artist, this twentieth century grand stand player, "The reformer." I want to basically educate you up to the point where this lime-light actor appears upon the scene. I want to illustrate to you and impress upon your minds what was, in its early infancy, and should be now, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, exponents of amusement and variety, an educational factor, a method of deep scientific research so far brought to light, but which, through petty methods and too sharp practice of ignorant showmen (?) or theater owners, has cheapened this great invention almost to the point of degradation and obscurity giving the narrow minded and watery blooded fools a chance to bring forth their many "hammers" and again bring "Mr. Reformer" to the center of the stage with a scroll of protests a mile long.

Now you may by my words and phrases, be led to believe that the reformer, and his reforms are, at least in my eyes, nothing short of evil origin and intention and works of his Satanic Majesty. Nothing of the sort, dear reader, far be it from thus; reforms and reformers, like everything else, are all right in their place and as long as they keep in their place, which covers and deals with the suppression of rank graft, vice, obscenity and immorality, they are a decided help and necessary quantity and not in any way a detriment to mankind. But they do not, will not, and have not in the past kept in their places, or within their bounds of broad reasoning. They persist in meddling where they have no justifiable excuse to meddle, exercising such an amount of discrimination, in some cases, that any intelligent person capable of sound reasoning might easily set them down as grafters and hypocrites themselves.

One would think, and with good reason, too, that with corrupt legislatures, city governments, sporting houses and rank, raw, licentious and ill-influencing public dance halls, Chinese opium joints, penny arcades, etc., etc., Mr. Reformer, and his noble followers, would just about have their hands full, but they haven't, oh, dear no, they have lots and lots of time left, and lately they have been putting it in on the poor, innocent under dog, the Moving Picture. Why, for the life of me I cannot see. They stand on soap boxes in the parks conducting reform meetings, call indignation meetings in some public hall, wait upon the mayor with blood in their eyes and with the firm conviction that he must feel as they do and bend to their wishes, they fill the newspapers with loud acclamations of the Moving Picture's evil influence, particularly on the young, its portrayals of vice, obscenity and brutality, till the narrow minded and unthinking contingent begin to imagine our country far and deep in the throes of degeneracy.

Legal authorities in any state will inform you that many decisions have been handed down classing a Moving Picture as in the same category and amenable to the same laws, as the original. If this is the case, why are the original performances of our many condemned Pictures allowed to go on and the Pictures stopped, and why does Mr. Reformer discriminate? Read question No. 1 at the head of this article again and tell me, dear reader, why, if the Pictures, and exhibitions of them, are criminal, why, oh, why, are not the originals of these same Pictures five times more criminal? Yet you rarely, if ever, hear of any cheap, suggestive or brutal melodrama being stopped, and I have never heard of an actor, actress, producer or manager of these "Brutal and Immoral" Motion Picture plays being arrested.

Jeffries and Johnson were allowed to fight on July 4, and the only apparent antagonism displayed against the illegality was by the Governor of California; even the newspapers boosted it and gave it a lot of free advertising. But, when the pictures of this fight were to be shown, my! what a terrible crime somebody discovered it to be. One brave mayor denounced these pictures and every other fool official followed suit, with one exception, Mayor Gaynor of New York, a man so far above his brother officials that there is little comparison. And now, after this country, and other countries, have arisen in their might and loudly proclaimed their attitude against these productions, analyzing every statute in an effort to find some loophole to back up their attitude, it gradually developes that these same fight pictures were not as bad as supposed and a hasty retreat is in evidence leaving the air still stenched and the Moving Picture with another black eye to heal.

Defensive remarks can be heard on all sides of this "butt in" aggregation, for instance "somebody was mistaken," and any way, "it was only done to protect the younger generation," others will say "we did not know the pictures were to be exhibited at advanced prices, thus keeping them away from the children," "we supposed they were to be shown in the regular 5c and 10c houses, which prices would attract the little ones." Like some politicians, these ignorant and would-be protectors of other people's business evidently believe that poor excuses are sometimes better than no excuses at all. If these same people would devote as much energy in acquainting themselves with the basic facts in such cases as they devote to analyzing the statute books for loopholes or Puritanical laws, and show less partiality and discrimination between the innocent photographic reproduction and its original, they would be more reticent about starting something they do not in nine times out of ten back up.

If one feels the germ of "Reforming" tending towards development in their system and one feels that it is their chosen duty in life to go out and "Reform something," getting long columns in the yellow newspapers accompanied by pretty half-tone cuts and nice big headlines, go after the barrooms, the liquor traffic, that are doing more to degrade the young and old and pave the road to degeneracy than anything else. This will keep such parties so busy that they will very soon forget the poor Moving Picture and its "terribly immoral and licentious influences" and once more give it, at least a fighting chance, to work out its own beneficial future.

What is a Nickelodeon?

The first time I saw the word Nickelodeon I did not know what it meant, and, strange to say, the word was immediately so unattractive to me that it looked like Nickelodious; little did I think how truly the latter word was nearer a proper definition of that for which it stood than the word Nickelodeon itself. Studying the word etymologically I found it half slang—"Nickel," a slang name for a five-cent piece ,and "odeon" of Greek origin relative to music. The word therefore may be interpreted as meaning a five-cent musical; a strangely manufactured word, and only half representing that for which it is supposed to stand, i. e., "A five-cent motion picture with illustrated song and music theater," which, according to the idea of this namemaker, should be Nickelcinematographodeon.

Having understood this new name I sought to understand that for which it stood, and found Nickelodeon to be really a five-cent moving picture and song show—a veritable misnomer.

It is a splendid thing to have something good made cheap, especially when cheapness means "within the reach of all," thus giving the poor and the children an opportunity to enjoy it, whatever it may be; but it becomes a hardship when the "cheap" means an opening for those with "cheap" minds and cheaper morals to become the controllers or dispensers of an otherwise good thing. Under such circumstances the cheap soon becomes the vulgar, and vulgarity is the parent of obscenity.

Human vultures everywhere are waiting to seize as their prey those poor vicitms caught by the alluring "odeons" or "Will o' the Wisp" lights of any place, no matter to what purpose dedicated, if only they can feed their avaricious appetites. To such it did not take long to make the "nickel" the bait, and the "odeon" the trap; so completing the Nickelodeon which soon became the subject of scorn and contempt to all responsible bodies. Grand juries described them as "hotbeds of vice"; magistrates called them "dens of iniquity"; priests named them "Hell holes," and thus pulpit, platform and courtrooms were most scathing in their denunciations. Truly, indeed, does the "Vaudeville vitiate the moving pictures."

The beauty and value of the kinematograph demand a higher level than that of associating it with a five-cent music hall, and causing it to bear the blame and the shame not belonging to it. W. H. J.

ESSANAY COMPANY IN FLOURISHING CONDITION.

A Malicious Rumor Denied.

The Chicago correspondent of our esteemed contemporary "Variety," seems to be a member of that ilk who pander mere gossip as news. Under the heading "Partners disagree," the "Variety" man argues that as Mr. Anderson left Chicago last week with a new company for the Essanay Western headquarters that "the final break between Spoor and Anderson is at hand." He goes on to say that because Mr. Spoor was in New York attending a meeting of the Patents Company, these rumors could not be confirmed. Therefore he prints a canard—a species of sensational journalism which is to be deprecated. As a matter of fact, Mr. George K. Spoor was not in New York and he could be found in his office at any time if the "Variety" man wanted facts and not gossip. To a World representative, Mr. Spoor very emphatically said, when the article was brought to his attention: "The statement in 'Variety' to the effect that strained business relations exist between G. M. Anderson and myself is absolutely untrue and the rumor has probably been circulated by discharged employees for a purpose. Mr. Anderson is now in the West with a large and well-equipped company where he is producing our Western subjects."

Mr. Spoor also asked the World to deny the canard that the sudden departure of several Essanay employees and the summary dismissal of others had in any way crippled the factory resources. On the contrary, he said, there had been a pruning of dead wood immediately replaced by talented people whose work would soon be visible in the greatly improved quality of Essanay pictures. In any well organized business the resignation or dismissal of any individual is never a hazard but more often a benefit to the organization. Essanay comedies and society dramas are being made as usual at the Argyle studio and, as we have stated above, Mr. Anderson is staging the Western dramas in California.

"THE ANIMALS WALKED IN TWO BY TWO, THE ELEPHANT AND THE KANGAROO."

—Old ditty.

Residents in the neighborhood of the Vitagraph village have been treated all the week to a series of moving pictures of animal life. Mr. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, is busily engaged in directing a reproduction of "The Deluge," a stupendous undertaking which has been a cherished idea of his. A substantial "ark" has been built at the edge of the Vitagraph lake. This and the costuming of Noah and his family was an easy matter, but the procuring of the animals was a problem. However, Bostock's menagerie at Coney Island was pressed into service, also the Hippodrome and the Bronx Zoo, and the small boy of the neighborhood, perched on the tops of fences and in trees, has been in such a state of constant excitement that it is a wonder we have not had to report cases of broken limbs.

We have reason to believe that "The Deluge" will be a worthy follower of that recent Vitagraph Biblical success, "The Life of Moses."

In another studio on the grounds Mr. Blackton is superintending another spectacular production, "Francesca di Rimini." This was successfully staged some time ago, also by the Vitagraph Company, but the present rendering will far eclipse the previous effort in magnificence of setting and costuming. It is a wholesome evidence of the confidence any concern has in their advancement when they essay to improve upon their own work. We believe that the picture-loving public would like to see other popular films of days gone by re-staged by their former producers.

The Russian Government, always on the lookout for Nihilists, Anarchists and Socialists, recently placed the Selig Polyscope Company in a bad predicament by seizing the well-known trade-mark of the S in a diamond. The Selig Polyscope Company mailed to their European agents a number of small electros of their trade-mark, and when they reached the Russian border, they were seized by the zealous officers, who imagined that these innocent electros were socialistic emblems, sent by the United States to a new revolutionist organization. The Russian Government committed a grave blunder, as, if Mr. Selig is guilty of anything, it is in trying to educate and elevate the nations by means of decent, clean and moral motion pictures, and our friend, the Colonel, would be the last man on earth to enter into such plots as the ones feared by the Russian Government. We hope that the letter S, the cause of the blunder, will teach the Russians the story taught to the Americans, that the letter S in a diamond stands for good and clean pictures.

The City of Prague is the capital of Bohemia. Bohemia, according to Shakespeare, has a coast line. If you look at the map of Europe, you will see that Shakespeare was wrong. Bohemia, geographically regarded, is a central European country, surrounded by other countries. Its capital is Prague. But there is another and a wider Bohemia than this; and there is another city of Prague, which is the capital of this other Bohemia. It was the late W. Jeffrey Prowse who immortalized this Bohemia and this city of Prague, in a set of verses which sings the delights of Bohemian life. Bohemia, as the reader knows, is the greatest country in the world; and the city of Prague the greatest capital in the world. For Bohemia is, of course, just the great republic of art, letters, literature, music, acting and those things which go to make up the sweetening influences of life. Residents in this country are Bohemians.

* * *

I am a Bohemian and of course a vagabond. The life of the Bohemian in London is delightful. So it is in Paris. Kearton, who was here the other day, tells me that even in British East Africa, the republic of Bohemia has its habitat amongst the Somali. Go to the North Pole: there is Bohemia. Go to the South Pole: Bohemia will also be found there. There is no republic on earth so great, so fascinating, so delightful to live in, as the great republic of Bohemia. Its laws are universal. They are simple. They are unwritten. The code is a small one: Just good-fellowship. That is all.

* * *

For a long time I wondered where the Bohemian atmosphere and environment was in New York. Now and again I tasted it. But they were little tastes. I suppose this, however, is because of my natural clam-like habits. Some people are always unreserved: others have to be dragged out of their reserve. I fear I am one of the latter kind. Still, it has fallen that within the last few weeks I have penetrated into the New York branch of the great republic of Bohemia. A very delightful, a very fascinating branch of Bohemia it is.

* * *

Behold me, then, the other night a guest at the Quaint Club, whereat there gathered Bohemians from all parts of the world: A Japanese orator; Loie Fuller; an eloquent Syrian poet; Mr. W. J. Lampton of verse-writing fame; Charles Edmund Russell and quite a long list of other good fellows and Bohemians. Miss Fuller did not dance: but one of her pupils did. The songs and the speeches were such as I might have listened to in a London Bohemian Club—quite as delightful a club of its kind as you could wish to attend.

* * *

Forty-eight hours later, the same happy accident which introduced me into Quaintness took me to the whimsically named Hungry Club, which is presided over by the incomparable Miss Sheridan, who said nice things to me and made me feel quite at home amongst a gathering, not less distinguished than that of which I formed part forty-eight hours before. Here again, art, music, literature, journalism were represented and the atmosphere was that of good fellowship, and refined enjoyment. Evidently, then, the republic of Bohemia is worthily represented in New York, and I am rather a stupid chap for not having discovered this before—for not having discovered that even in Cosmopolis, with all its strife, hustle, bustle, strenuousness and remorseless fight for the dollar, the gentle, graceful republic of Bohemia stands ready to welcome those who are qualified to "take out their letters of naturalization." Like the poor, in fact, Bohemia is always with us, to file off the sharp edges of daily life and make us content, even in the trials of existence.

* * *

Why do I talk Bohemianism this week? Partly, of course, for personal reasons; partly because I like talking this way; partly because I am conceited enough to think that my readers are interested in knowing of the doings and movements of their Lux Graphicus week by week. Chief of all my reasons, however, for making this reference, lies in the interest I take in knowing just how the picture is regarded by those whose business takes them in close daily and nightly touch with the world of entertainment and literature. We know to our cost what many clergymen, lawyers, and other publicists think of the picture. The pages of the "World" for a long time past have borne witness to the attacks which these people have made and are making on the picture.

How, then, is the picture treated in Bohemia? Is it welcomed? Tolerated? Despised? Looked down on? Is the picture regarded as an Ishmaelite by Bohemia? Not at all, the picture is welcomed in Bohemia just as cordially as a great opera, a great play, a great book, a great painting. It is accepted for what it is: a mighty factor in the entertainment life of the people. It is given place amongst pictorial and dramatic art. It is welcomed. It is praised. The picture, in short, has "arrived."

* * *

It is not so very long ago that I myself, my very own self, was not any too well pleased to be identified with the picture, either in its making, its selling or in its representation in the press. But all that has passed away. Not so very long ago to be a picture man involved the necessity of looking somewhat apologetic when the picture was mentioned. Now all that too has passed away. Upon my word, I walk up and down Broadway just as proudly as any great theatrical magnate, successful star, popular author or gifted dramatist. I begin to think no small beer of myself. Especially after my recent welcome into the beautiful City of Prague.

* * *

I remember how, when working in the stationary photographic field, there was a tendency to keep a man who professed photography "below the salt," i.e., he was only grudgingly allowed to be a true Bohemian. This was in my own, my native London, where, to a very large extent, class distinctions still prevail. Class distinctions, the intelligent reader knows, are unavoidable, in fact, inevitable under a monarchical regime. But, thank the Lord, there are no monarchical regimes in little ole New York, where Bohemia is a republic in a republic. It is said that New Yorkers do not know how to live or enjoy themselves, or relax, or behave like any other self-respecting, self-pleasing community. This does not apply to my Bohemia, which is bounded on the north by Fifty-ninth street and on the south by Madison Square. That is the City of Prague, where Bohemianism, vagabondage and good-fellowship are visible to the practiced eye. *Ainsi soit il.

* This is French for Amen.

SELIG'S SURPRISE.

The relegating to the rear of the time worn threads of the common place themes and accessories of motion photography has entered upon its duty. New and novel features are demanded by the clamoring public and all picturedom will salute with uplifted hands the advent of a novel realization, the pinnacle of photographic achievements. The day and date of this epoch making success will be announced later. Suffice to say the picture will be in greater demand—if such a thing is possible—than was the "Ranch Life in the Great Southwest," and the phenomenal success of that subject is still in its ascendancy.

PLAYS AND PICTURES CHILDREN LIKE.

By way of finding out what the young people care for in the theater, Mr. Charles Darnton has been looking over the papers that public school children have sent in to the Child Welfare Committee, which has in preparation an extensive public exhibit.

The motion pictures, of course, loom large on the child's amusement horizon—but this is as much a matter of economy as of taste. Boys and girls go to these shows, not particularly to see "The Boy Who Ate Garlic," or "The Drunken Bum," or "Held-up by Western Bandits," but because the price of admission is ten cents, or perhaps only a nickel. The real plays they like are sometimes away up in the Shakespearian class, and very often include "Peter Pan," "Rip Van Winkle," "The Two Orphans" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Well up in the list of East Side favorites are "Broken Hearts," "Custer's Last Fight," "The White Slave," "Billy the Kid," and "The Jewish Soul" (spelled variously sole and soib). A lad of twelve names "A Doll's House," "Hamlet" and "The Merchant of Venice," while another advanced playgoer of the same age prefers "Romeo and Joliet," "Mike Beth" and "The Comedy of Terrors."—Editorial in New York "Evening World."

A Reply to Some Enemies of the Motion Picture.

"Cinematography" of to-day looks to me much like "Reformation" of a few centuries ago. At one time we had a powerful church, who by bigotry wanted to control everything on earth, not only with an absolute power over the soul but wanted an absolute temporal power. When some intelligent men came forward with an open Bible, to show that the said church was abusing its power over mankind, the heads of the church stopped at nothing to kill this new movement. Men, women and children were tortured, massacred and burned by men representing themselves the envoys of God, for the mere purpose of keeping mankind in ignorance and for the sole benefit of a few monks, who were then living on the fat of the land. Despite all the massacres, reformation won and forced the mother church to be more liberal in its doctrines, to save itself from total ruin.

To-day we have, on the part of the ministers, the same intolerance shown on the part of the inquisitors and it is safe to predict that cinematography will win in the long run, same as did reformation. The bloodshed under the atrocities of the inquisition made the success of the reformation, and the lashings that we have to endure from the reformers will make the success of the moving pictures and place cinematography as the greatest educator of future generations.

The reformers have spies engaged in this work same as the inquisitors had spies to fasten alleged crimes on innocent persons.

The inquisitors had spies that would approach the innocent ones, talk to them as if they themselves were heretics, and consequently force the victims to speak a few words, just enough to bring a charge of heresy against them.

The enemies of the picture have another tactic. They teach the children to blame everything on moving pictures and promise them a sort of immunity for testifying against the pictures. When a boy wants to enjoy a clandestine smoke, take a drink or have what he calls a good time with his friends, he steals to have the necessary coin, and, if caught, he is taught to say in court that his morals were ruined by the moving pictures.

I will not argue with the hypocrites who pose as reformers. I will allow them to bring all the children they want, claiming that they have been corrupted by moving pictures, on the understanding that we take a census of our prisons and see if we have not more victims ruined by hypocrisy than victims ruined by the motion pictures.

Down with hypocrisy. Purify your homes ye would-be reformers—purify your parsonages—purify your churches—purify your morals before you try to purify the motion pictures. Give us the example of a clean, honest, Christian life before you dare to accuse others. Show us the spirit of tolerance. Guide but do not condemn, then you will get us to believe in your doctrines; but do not try to force us to also become hypocrites by hammering all the time on motion pictures.

The manufacturers are doing their best to create a demand for moral and educational pictures. They have produced the Life of Christ—The Life of Moses—The Lord's Prayer—The Prodigal Son— etc., etc. What can the manufacturers say and do after spending vast sums of money on these beautiful pictures when you discourage all persons willing to see them. If you would-be reformers had encouraged the manufacturers, they would be busy to-day making high class pictures for church and educational work and would have no time and no desire to make questionable or prize-fight pictures. Your constant hostility combined with the great hostility on the part of the daily papers are forcing the manufacturers to practically abandon their idea of high class work for the kind that appeals to the amusement loving public.

I doubt if any ministers of the Gospel ever preached a more powerful sermon than the admirable production of the Vitagraph Co., called "Nellie's Farm." Even in the Bible there is not a more beautiful or so well told a story. The Bible is a hard book to understand. Let me illustrate: I remember of a Salvation Army lass who tried to preach, taking for her text the words of Christ, when He said that it was harder for a rich man to enter heaven than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. The poor girl did her best but as she had no idea that the "Needle" of the Bible was a reference to a small side door provided in the walls of a fortified city, for the accommodation of travelers coming in after the big doors had been closed for the night. She took a common sewing needle and asked her audience if a camel could go through the small hole of the needle. She concluded that as no camel could go through such a small hole, that no rich man would ever enter heaven. The meaning of the Bible is that as a camel had to be unloaded to pass through the small door, the rich man must unload his sins before he can enter heaven.

In "Nellie's Farm" we have no double meaning. We have one of the simplest of stories going right to the heart of everyone; a story that will give you the satisfaction of knowing that this supposed wicked world is not so bad after all.

A poor boy is sent to a farm. He is very poor; he has not even a decent suit of clothes to go on his vacation and he is sent by the Fresh Air Fund. If poor in the goods of this world, he has a rich tender little heart. He knows that he is going to have a good time yet he has room to think of others. He remembers Nellie, his crippled little friend, and he cannot go away before seeing her. This scene is alone enough to teach our children that they should not be selfish but should remember others, less fortunate.

Our boy is on the farm, he has a good old time; everything is new to him, he delights in feeding the cows and chickens, he is a thankful lad and gains the love of the old farmer. Although the conduct of the boy is a great example to be shown on the screen, let us peep under his little overalls to see what is agitating this noble little heart. He is happy, yet while enjoying the time of his life, he remembers that his little friend Nellie is on a sick bed, he knows that she cannot see nor enjoy the life of a farm and his greatest pleasure is to collect things to bring home to his invalid friend. The boy has not been told to do so, he does it from his own impulse and watch how careful he is, he wants some of this fine green grass to show her the natural carpet of the earth.

What have the ministers and newspapers to say? Well many ministers would not like to see this simple picture, as the actions of the boy would force them to wipe tears from their eyes and say: "If my boys had followed the example of this little chap, I would have a happy home and would not worry to know where are my wandering boys." Come right to the point, acknowledge that your own sons and your own daughters did not give such a good moral example to the world as does this bright little boy of the Vitagraph Company. If your children in their young days had been taught to think of others, they would to-day think of you and help you to pass your declining years in happiness.

Our little hero returns home, his little heart bursting with joy at the anticipation of the pleasure he is going to bring to his dear mother, when he will unload in her lap the good things provided by the kindhearted farmer. He quickly inquires of Nellie. She is worse. What a sad blow to this little heart. He runs up the fire escape to try to bring a little cheer to his friend. No, he does not run the streets to brag to the other boys of how he scared the pigs and chickens while on the farm, or of what tricks he played on the farmer. We see him preparing a surprise for his little friend. He greatly enjoys this work, because he feels that it is going to bring some sunshine in the soul of the poor invalid.

His work has not been in vain, he gets a big reward, he does not get gold and silver, he gets something better, the self satisfaction to know that he has brought a new spark of life to this dying little girl; that he has made some one happy. There is no doubt of his sentiments as his great sorrow at the final scene, shows his true disposition.

No matter how hard a man can be, he cannot witness this production without finding a little tear in the corner of his eye. Yet the authorities and newspapers tell us that motion pictures are degrading! Stop hypocrites! Show us in your lives and in your books such a good moral lesson and we will have nothing more to say, we will praise your work instead of praising the efforts of the Vitagraph Company.

Do you want to tell me that any boy after witnessing this admirable Vitagraph picture, will suffer therefrom. Nay, the lesson is too powerful, the lesson goes to the heart and although many boys and girls will profit by it, will try to imitate their little friend, let me tell you that even men and women will change their ways and will in the future be less selfish and think a little more of others.

The film manufacturer should be encouraged in this work. "Nellie's Farm" should be shown in every school and should be known all over the world as the correct illustration of the great commandment: "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Only lately Pathe Freres gave us another remarkable production, something on the same order: "Love Ye One Another." Will the ministers say that the Pathes are wrong in showing how hard we are on the poor unfortunate, how little we think of our fellow-man, how we turn them down and refuse to help them. If we have some professional beggars it is no reason for us to turn down every poor fellow. Let us judge of the cases, but to do the right thing we must be trained and if films like "Love Ye One Another" and "Nellie's Farm" can be made a daily exhibition in our schools, we will teach our future generations the true religion.

For instance: In our public schools, the rich, the well to do, the moderate and the poor elbow each other. Some of these pupils, having a comfortable home, come to school with either lunch baskets well filled with delicacies or with money to buy a good lunch. Other children, the unfortunate, come with nothing, perhaps not even a crust of bread. If in the morning we would show the Vitagraph film I have mentioned, most of the well-to-do children would understand the meaning of the picture and at the recess hour they would try to imitate the good little heart of "Nellie's Farm" by dividing with the poor ones the good things contained in their lunch baskets. Yes, and when the parents would find out the generosity of their children, they would gladly add more delicacies, to be sure that every one is provided.

It would be a good thing for the enemies of the motion picture to read the history of the Inquisition as it would be well for them to come back to their proper senses and realize they cannot win their fight and that their opposition against moving pictures will fall as flat as the Inquisition. The will of the people is supreme and the will of the people will save cinematography and make it the greatest educator of the world.

J. M. BRADLET.

FLICKERS.

Here's the latest: Joe Cantillon, of the Washington ball team, is quoted as saying that moving pictures by their effect on people's eyes have injured the batting eyes of some of his players. And to think what a long time Joe was in finding it out. No wonder the team has been hugging last place these ten long years. Now you Washington folks know the reason: Moving pictures.

* * *

"We, of course," says the "New Orleans States, "shall never again see and hear Booth, Forrest, Jefferson, Barrett and Mansfield, but the great actors now on the stage will be seen and heard in the moving pictures many years after they have been gathered to their fathers." Just waking up in New Orleans.

* * *

"Moving pictures representing 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' were suppressed in Richmond. Race feeling may have something to do with it, but poor art is the probable cause."—Waterbury (Conn.) "American."

Race prejudice, dear Waterbury. Uncle Tom and Art have not been on speaking terms these fifty years.

NOTICE.

The new Western offices of the Moving Picture World, Rooms 307-309, Post building, 160 Washington street, Chicago, are now ready to receive World readers visiting Chicago. Mr. John M. Bradlet, Western representative of the World, will extend to every one a cordial welcome. They will find a complete file of manufacturers' catalogues and a bureau of information on films, theater construction, materials and supplies. They will also find desks and stationery for their correspondence, the services of a lady stenographer and a polite messenger boy to act as their guide or go their errands. We invite every exhibitor or person interested in motion pictures to make our Western office their headquarters when visiting Chicago.

FULL DRESS AND KINEMATOGRAPH IN GERMANY.

Specially contributed to the Moving Picture World.

There is scarcely any large city in every cultured country where there are not a few theaters exclusively devoted to moving pictures. But until very recently these led a simple, obscure life in quiet sidestreets always in rooms which happened to be empty and rented only for a limited period. Since several months Berlin, however, owns a moving picture theater expressly built for that purpose with more commodious rooms, better furniture and general equipment. The prices are higher and the visitors of the better classes. Newspaper reporters were present at each change of program exactly like a real theater. But since September the German capital can boast of having a distinctly aristocratic kino or Kientopp (the vulgar expression for a moving picture theater). It is located in the Mozarthall, formerly a concert house for the highest class of music and being in the fashionable part of Berlin. When it was opened, invitations were sent out to the smart set with a request to come in evening dress. Now for the first time the once despised kino has become a social factor, at least in Germany. The only thing missed was the absence of some royal person but such will be invited on the very next time. In the meantime moving pictures have been shown to the emperor in his castle in the presence of an invited party.

When I cast a glance into the Mozarthall I found that it looked like one of the fashionable restaurants. There are small stalls containing a little table each with an electric table lamp. The other seats are well cushioned and the whole furniture, the walls, ceiling, lamps, etc., of excellent taste and modern design. A performance is opened by first-class music which continues during the evening. Of the films those of a military character were prevailing at least during the first week. We saw parades of the world's most famous army, Prussian cavalry, the troops of the Guard, German war vessels, the Imperial manoeuvres on land and water. At the opening there was an abridged performance of Sardou's "La Tosca," of which we had even more pleasure than in a real theater as we could admire the principal actors of the French stage. Many people were killed which is much easier to show on the cloth than in reality. "La Tosca" shown by a kinematograph was one of the best productions we have ever seen.

Who of us has ever been on the Mekong in India? Who hopes to go there? Not one among thousands. Well, Pathe Freres take us there for a few pennies and allows us to admire one of the best performances of human power and beauty: a regatta of the natives on the Mekong. How simple looks a modern motorboat or sailship regatta? What a phenomenal artist's and sportsman's work show these long, narrow boats upon which two rows of standing men chase the vessel like a furious sea monster. An impression never to be forgotten! To show foreign countries, their people, their manners and at remote places where we have never been and will not be, is the great work of the kinematograph the value of which is understood more and more every day. Again we have a chance to watch distinguished persons whom we would very rarely see in reality or never at certain places and occupations. Thus we saw moving pictures of the German emperor on his yacht Hohenzollern during the Nordland cruises or on the sailyacht Meteor talking with sportsmen or his suite, playing with his dogs.

SIG. CARLO SCIAMENGO.

One of the recent Italian visitors to the United States was Signor Carlo Sciamengo, Director of the "Itala" films, which are so favorably known in this country. The "Itala" films were formerly made by Carlo Rossi, one of the oldest European manufacturers. Signor Sciamengo enjoys a high reputation as a good man of business as well as for the artistic qualities of the "Itala" films

Is there a real objection, or antipathy amongst the moving picture public of this country to the foreign-made film? We are told that there is, over and over again, especially on the Independent side. People are quoted as saying that they do not understand French, Italian, German or English subjects. Yet the other night as we walked up Broadway through the center of the amusement district of New York City, we were struck by the number of foreign-made entertainments which are provided there for the amusement of the great American public. A study of the bills of these places, from the opera house down, reveals the fact that a large percentage of the operas, plays, vaudeville acts and other kinds of entertainment are made abroad. They are exceedingly popular, and they please the public—so much so that they are repeated from year to year. It is only recently that all the great American impresari returned from Europe with foreign attractions for their houses.

* * *

Why should not the same rule apply to the moving picture? Why should not the foreign-made moving picture, if the subject and the treatment are judiciously chosen, be popular with the moving picture public, which, after all, bears a very strong resemblance to the theatergoing public—with this exception, of course, that there are not so many children going to the ordinary theater? I have given this matter very serious consideration for some time past, and in order to do justice to the foreign-made film, I have been at some pains to collect evidence on the point. Let us premise, that foreign-made films need not deal with subjects of an unsuitable nature; that is necessarily so. The same emotions, the same sentiments, the same motives that guide American people in their conduct, usually guide other people. Here I am writing, of course, without reference to those infractions of the Ten Commandments or moral codes of the community which sometimes form the themes of foreign pictures, and, let it be said, occasionally of American pictures or plays—the latter in particular. Really, European people, the reader might like to know, do not spend the greater part of their time running away with each other's wives, committing murders, robberies, and indulging in personal vices which are unfit for treatment on the moving picture screen. The majority of them are just plain, clean-living people, like the majority of Americans.

* * *

I thought these things while I was watching, one day this week, a series of imminent releases by the Eclair Company. To these pictures no possible objection can be taken on the score of unsuitability of subject. They are beautiful, artistic photographs, produced with faultless technique—such a degree of technique that does not distinguish all American-made films. Then as to the themes: One of the pictures is "The Gamin" (in other words, the street Arab) of Paris. A young officer falls in love with a girl, conceals his identity and then deserts the girl. The girl's young brother, however, a bright, acrobatic boy, tracks the officer down and finds out who he really is. When the officer's father discovers how he has behaved, the old man is inclined to be angry. However, he forgives him, when he finds that his intentions are strictly honorable. The young couple are united and a happy ending closes the film with joy all round. This simple theme is worked out in a series of very beautiful pictures in which the acting is natural, the costumes, decorations and the scenery beautiful. It is one of those stories that is understood even without the aid of subtitles. Such a picture as this is bound to be popular in any theater where it is shown.

* * *

Next I was shown a picture possessing considerable novelty of interest, showing an exploring party in the ruins of Carthage. A plan of those ruins is stolen from an old professor. The theme deals with the tracking down of the thief and the recovery of the plans. You see the explorers and investigators at work, and around this apparently dry-as-dust subject a very human story is told. Here again no possible objection can be taken to this film, which surely will be understood by any moving picture audience.

The third picture was exceptionally interesting. This showed life behind the scenes of a moving picture stage. You see the rehearsals; producers and photographers at work. Trick films are produced, small figures are converted into large ones, and vice versa. There is a peep into the dressing rooms of the actors and actresses. The producer is directing the work. It is all true to life, for I have seen many moving picture companies at work, and can testify as to the fidelity of this picture. A further novelty is shown. The artists gather in front of a screen and they are shown a moving picture of themselves in the performance they have just gone through. It is a film within a film. This picture, I am sure, will delight many thousands. We all like to know how stage plays are produced. We like to peep behind the scenes and see the artists while they are at work. This pretty film draws aside the curtain of a moving picture making plant and shows the actual production of a film in so far as the stage work is concerned. Altogether, then, I felt exceptionally pleased with the Eclair releases that are just being issued. As I have said, they are faultless in photographic technique. They are clean, refined and attractive. They should do much to dispel what I think is a delusion, namely, that foreign films are unsuitable for presentation on the American moving picture screen.

KINEMATOGRAPHY BY X-RAYS.

From Germany, the country of science, comes the somewhat sensational report that we are now able to photograph by means of Roentgen rays internal organs, especially those which are in motion. Up to now we mostly took pictures of the skeleton and single bones, the flash and other organs having been penetrated by the X-rays so that they did not appear on the photographic plate. But if any organ not containing bones got out of order we were not able to get an insight except by operation. Especially we never had a chance to observe the workings of them within the body during some kind of process say digestion, breathing, beating of the heart and so on.

Now, through a German invention, all such obstacles have been removed. The Munich physicians ,Dr. Kaestle and Professor Rieder, have co-operated with the civil engineer, Dr. Rosental, and have taken with a highly ingenious apparatus, moving pictures of the stomach during the digesting process. They call this novel branch of kinematography "Bionroentgenography." The prints obtained show details which do not appear by the ordinary X-ray process. Certain human processes which we could only guess at are now disclosed and the diagnostic medicine science has been very much furthered by this novel method. As regards the stomach, we have hitherto assumed that a portion of it is completely compressed so that it is divided into two parts. The bionroentgenograms, however, have proved that such a separation does not take place, but a mere contraction as if a ring of smaller diameter than the stomach passes along its whole length and pushes the contents forward and backward. We may compare the process with a moneybag around which a metal ring is placed dividing the bag into an empty and a full part. If you move the ring you will push the coins too. When the contents have reached the exit a portion returns and repeats the movement until it is completely digested. Such a motion takes 22 seconds and during it 12 or 13 photographs are taken by a cleverly designed kinematograph. The exposure takes only a fraction of a second. They take place during an interval when the person is not breathing as the pictures should be very clear and not affected by the movements caused by breathing. It must be understood that pictures are wanted showing the exterior of the stomach, not the interior, consequently it must be rendered impenetrable to the X rays. This is done by adding zircon oxide to the food which is quite harmless.

We are thus able not only to observe the process of a correctly working stomach but also any deviation from the normal form, such as sickness, and also to take pictures of other important organs such as the heart, lungs, etc. This excellent kinematographic method will cause somewhat a revolution in certain lines of medicine science.

"Whist" (Essanay).—A comedy which will make you first sit up and next indulge in a moderate degree of laughter, to be followed later by an immoderate crescendo of mirth. Blinks' method of exterminating musical disturbances worked well until he reached the Scotchman, but the combination of whiskey and musical exhilaration was too much, and it is apparently no surprise to Mrs. Blinks to find her husband leading the newly organized orchestra. It is but pertinent to add, however, that when she finishes her vigorous admonitions he is not exactly in condition to lead an orchestra, or anything else for that matter. A description of what happened to him would be superfluous. The imagination cannot go far astray in picturing it.

"He Met the Champion" (Essanay).—One of the comedies which is lively enough to keep one interested and funny enough to keep one laughing. But it bears a moral plainly enough—to let professional wrestlers alone, no matter what valuable instructions can be obtained from a book. The series of adventures along the way, which are mere training incidents, are amusing, but when the actual test comes it is funnier than all the rest. And when the wrestler picks Willie up, and after handling him like a rubber ball, deposits him flat on his back on the mat, the finale is worthy what has preceded it. No wonder, after all his misadventures, that Willie firmly resolves not to attempt any more easy money with wrestlers again. He is wise in knowing when he has had enough.

"The Little Mother" (Kalem).—A pretty love story founded on a fresh air group sent into the country. The pictures of the New York tenements are as accurate as anything of the kind ever presented and the sharp contrast afforded by the pictures of the farm emphasizes the difference between the two methods of living. When the little mother goes back to the tenement heartbroken one's sympathies go out to her, and one can scarcely help feeling exultant when the sturdy young farmer goes to the tenement and takes the little mother and the children back to the farm to stay.

"The Artisan" (Urban-Eclipse).—A dramatic story that goes direct to the heart since it displays the heroism and self-sacrifice which are so often exhibited by the folk in the humble walks of life. Comrades once, then rivals, but when one discovers the other going into the quarry where a blast will shortly explode, he rushes in and saves the rival's life at the expense of his own. The dramatic strength of the film lies in its simplicity and the natural acting of the different characters. Photographically it is attractive, showing a quarry and its surroundings so clearly that one unfamiliar with quarrying operations can obtain a reasonably accurate knowledge of the various operations required to obtain stone.

"The Tramps" (Urban-Eclipse).—A comedy based upon the mistake of an innkeeper who gives some tramps vitriol for liquor. Their similated contrition is a good bit of acting. But when the tramps, after being supplied with the best wines the inn affords, ask for more of the other consternation is rife. Nevertheless they drink it and the only effect is further intoxication.

"Bumptious as a Fireman" (Edison).—This highly amusing individual makes his appearance in a new role, quite as funny as any that have preceded. Having escaped all the dangers of his previous misadventures he appears here as fresh and as ready to assert himself as though he had never met with any difficulty in past performances. If ever any self-assertive fireman in some country company considered his work essential to the success of the department he must have served as a precursor to this individual.

"From the Arctic to the Tropics" (Edison).—A title literally carried out. It is one of a series of pictures made among the Andes in South America, and represents a journey from the snow capped top of the mountain, through all the changes of vegetation and scene to the tropical verdure at the foot of the mountain. It is a novelty in travel and scenic pictures which will rank with the best. The operator performed his part to perfection, selecting viewpoints which emphasize the characteristics in each portraying, and at the same time retaining their picturesque qualities. The company and all those interested deserve hearty commendation not only for the conception of this novel film, but on the admirable way in which that conception was worked out.

"Two Waifs and a Stray" (Vitagraph).—An appealing child story, introducing again the Vitagraph children who have pleased so many thousands in the past. The story is one that holds the attention throughout, presenting the children in a remarkably appealing and highly dramatic situation. It will satisfy the most exacting critic.

"Hank and Lank—Joy Riding" (Essanay).—A lively comedy, representing the means taken by these two individuals to secure a joy ride. They manage by throwing fits to induce sympathetic chauffeurs to take them to the hospital. Hank succeeds, but when Lank throws his fit he unwittingly selects a doctor's machine and his troubles begin. It is a safe proposition that he won't undertake the same thing again. The dosing he got and the threatened operation frightened him so he will never attempt any trick of that character in the future. These two succeed in performing some very funny stunts, not the least of which is this joy riding.

"The Pony Express Rider" (Essanay).—An echo of the long ago when no railroads spanned the continent and the mail was carried across the plains by men mounted on ponies who made relays at certain points. It seems like a story to hear about it, but this picture makes it seem real again. The setting is admirable, imparting a sense of reality to the film which is impressive. The love tale which is told affords heart interest, and the sight of the girl's picture brings about a novel denouement. It is not often that a photograph leads a man to reform, yet here it does not seem out of place. The desert scenery, the defiles in the mountains and the rendezvous of the bandits are all excellent bits of photographic work. The picture is better than the ordinary and should interest a large number of people.

"Poems in Pictures" (Gaumont).—Some beautiful photographic work, bearing the stamp of originality which this house so often imparts to its work. Even though this is the first time they have used the title it is by new means they have put a poem into their pictures. In this instance they state it as a fact, and the pictures are developed with that idea uppermost.

"A Dummy in Disguise" (Gaumont).—A bit of comedy depicting the antics of a dummy and showing what befell him under some laughable conditions. The picture is funny and develops a number of novel situations.

"The Vagaries of Love" (Pathe).—A domestic episode which came near being a tragedy, when there were displays of apparent fickleness on the part of both husband and wife. The picture is interesting because it shows how unreasonable jealousy often is, and how easy persons with jealous dispositions can be mistaken. Finally, however, after a series of disturbances and difficulties, the husband and wife decide they have had enough and fall on each other's neck in an ecstacy of weeping.

"A Lunatic at Large" (Vitagraph).—A funny story of mistaken identity, which represents what happens to one who is mistaken for a lunatic. Some of the difficulties which beset the unfortunate are as laughable as anything put on the screen for some time. The situations in which the individual finds himself would cause the most morose individual imaginable to laugh. And they do. This test has been tried and works. Anything that makes a New York audience laugh will create a storm anywhere else.

"An Unselfish Love" (Edison).—It is the old familiar story of broken lives because an ambitious father objects to a suitor for his daughter's hand who has no money. Through a marvelous display of unselfish devotion on the part of a woman whose heart is breaking, this difficulty is abrogated and the lovers re-united. While the dramatic qualities have seldom been surpassed, there are other notable features. The picture is partly made in Northwestern Canada, among the farmers who are developing a country based upon the new agriculture. These views afford a clear impression of the region, the manner of living and the marvelous agricultural development now in progress there. Therefore the educational value of the picture must not be overlooked. It adds materially to the attraction of the film. The love story is commonplace at the opening, but the unselfishness of Miss Grey makes it an extraordinary production, deserving of an indefinite run.

"Tactics of Cupid" (Gaumont).—A beautifully colored film, purporting to portray Cupid at work. What he does and how he does it constitutes the main portion of the picture. The character of Cupid is played by a child of small size, and so well is it done that the figure on the screen seems actually endowed with life. The pictures will attract unusual attention, not alone for its mechanical excellence, but because of the excellent acting of all the characters engaged in the development of the story.

"Sunset" (Gaumont).—One of those marvelous products of the motion picture camera which defy description. Here are a number of sunset scenes so accurately reproduced that one can imagine one's self watching a real sunset. The only objection to the film is it is far too short. Such indescribable beauties as these are too fleeting in such a short film. It ought to be many times as long. Here are all the fleeting beauties of sunset preserved so they may be reproduced at pleasure. Here are all those fleeting lights and shadows so faithfully produced that one forgets the audience, forgets the machine, forgets, in fact, that it is only a white screen with mechanically produced effects upon it, and for the moment drinks in all the glories of these magnificent sunset scenes. Such artistic results by mere mechancial means deserves more than ordinary credit. It would be impossible to say too much in its favor.

"Jean, the Match Maker" (Vitagraph).—Whether it is quite fair to force an innocent and unsuspecting dog to become a match maker is a question which must be left for each individual to decide for himself. But, in this instance, it must be admitted that the dog performs her part to perfection and actually succeeds in performing her mission. The novelty of bringing the young people together finally through the medium of a cow, of which the girls were afraid, is a touch of fun which is different from the ordinary run. The picture is pleasantly diverting.

"A Summer Tragedy" (Biograph).—Where people are accustomed to going on vacations and watching the bluffs at the different Summer hotels this film will appear for exactly what it is, an excellent bit of humor; but in those parts of the country where vacations are unknown it will be a good deal like a Greek play—the acting will seem pretty, but it will scarcely be intelligible. The so-called bluffs are unknown to a vast proportion of motion picture patrons and the principal point of the story will be lost. However this may be, the story, the picture and the acting constitute a consummate bit of work which contains a plentiful proportion of genuine humor.

"Zeb, Zeke and the Widow" (Lubin).—Two old ones whose sporting blood was not entirely dried up, and when the dashing widow appeared they both proceeded to make love in the most approved style. They put out a good deal of money for the entertainment of the widow, and the blow is severe when she leaves them. However, as they smoke a couple of cigars, worth 5 cents each, and tear up the bills which are concrete evidence of the expense, they both decide it was well worth while, and probably this conclusion will be concurred in by every man who enjoys a dash of the exhilaration connected with the companionship of a woman. No matter if they did lose; they gained, too, and have no complaint to make. Neither would any other man who had red blood in his veins.

"Trip to the Isle of Jersey" (Pathe).—An excellent outdoor picture, giving a succession of charming views in this picturesque island. Perhaps the most interesting are the rocky coasts, where the waves are dashing in foam over the high promontories or are beating against the high rocks savagely. The glimpses through the island are attractive, and the entire picture is one that will linger long in the memory. The view points were selected by an artist, and the mechanical work on the films was of the sort that does justice to the subject, reproducing faithfully its most salient characteristics.

"Bertie's Elopement" (Selig).—Here is a genuine elopement, the ladder placed against the castle wall, the emergence of the maid from the casement, the hurried flight with the irate and objecting parent in hot pursuit, the arrival at the parson's, a hasty tying of the knot, and the appearance of the aforesaid irate father just too late to be of service. The fight was won, and two was one, an apparent contradiction of terms, but in reality no different from what might have been expected, and so they lived happily ever after.

"Big Medicine" (Selig).—An exhilarating comedy overflowing with the snap and dash usually present in a Selig funny film. It is, perhaps, as lively as anything put out in a considerable time, by the firm, and embodies some fresh features in comedy production.

"A Flirty Affliction" (Essanay).—Representing the difficulties into which a comely young woman is plunged when she nods her head in a certain way that is beyond her control. Every man who sees it accepts it as an invitation, and dire consequences follow the involuntary movement of these unruly muscles. The consternation of the men who are caught is remarkable. It is one of those lively comedies from the Essanay studio that carries with it many a good laugh. .

"An Arizona Romance" (Pathe).—Almost a tragedy of two hearts, based upon a mistake due to two costumes at a fancy dress ball that looked alike. It takes some months to untangle the snarl, but it is done successfully, even though it costs the life of a faithful Indian girl. There is a happy reunion, confession of error and an ultimate wedding. Some of the Arizona scenery is excellent and the acting could scarcely be better.

"A Corsican Vendetta" (Urban-Eclipse).—An excellently photographed story of a vendetta in which noted bandits figure. A thrilling escape by means of a rope down the face of a cliff has the effect of setting one's nerves tingling. Some dramatic situations are included, notably where the soldiers are going to shoot the father unless he discloses the son's hiding place, and later when the boy brought up among the bandits recognizes his father with the soldiers and begs that he be spared. Not often is so much genuine emotion compressed into two situations, and the effect is correspondingly strong. Acted with skill and discretion and clearly photographed, the film is satisfactory.

"Scenes in the Celestial Empire" (Urban-Eclipse).—A series of excellent views made in the Celestial Empire which illustrate typical phases of its life. The scenes selected are attractive and the mechanical work has been well done.

"In Life's Cycle" (Biograph).—The story of two partially orphaned children, brought up by their father, after the death of their mother. The boy turns out all right, but the girl, not knowing the machinations of men, elopes with a city man and for ten long years suffers the consequence of her folly. At last, the tempter being dead, she returns to her mother's grave, where she is found by her brother, and they are all once more united in their father's arms. It is not a pleasant story, yet it undoubtedly presents a phase of life which, in modifications, is more or less common. One doesn't care to dwell upon it, yet so well is it acted and so strongly does it appeal to one, that its influence cannot be shaken off. It lingers, regardless of the knowledge that it is only a picture. Perhaps it will teach its lesson. It is strong enough to do it without any question.

"Mrs. Rivington's Pride" (Lubin).—A picture showing a domestic tragedy which is based upon a misunderstanding. A young married woman helps her brother and is wrongfully accused by her husband; but long after she has left the house and is living as a seamstress the husband discovers his mistake through the return of the loan by the brother. Then he attempts to make up and get his wife back, which ultimately he does. And all doubt being removed, they live happily ever afterward. The scenes may possess some interest as representing the difficulties which sometimes arise in a family, but the cause is somewhat exaggerated. Few men are so unreasonable as this one is represented to be, though under provocation all men are more or less unreasonable.

"Resourceful Robert" (Lubin).—He clearly showed his original resources when the father of his girl refused him and added numerous other unpleasant remarks which probably aroused Robert's ire. However, he arranged a fake rescue and succeeded in winning the girl without further difficulty. Of course, fake rescues are not new, but this has a touch of originality and sincerity to it which makes it seem a good deal like the real thing. At any rate, Robert gets the girl, and that is the main feature of the situation.

"In the Shadow of the Mission" (Melies).—A love story which begins and ends in the shadow of a picturesque old mission at San Antonio. Suspected of unfaithfulness, the young husband almost despairs, but when visiting the grave of his child, his wife discovers him and there is a reconciliation. The interest will center in the excellent acting and the picturesque pictorial work. The picture has two deaths, both of which increase its dramatic force, though they rather increase the feeling of depression which the unfortunate quarrel begins. However, inasmuch as the ending is good, one need scarcely complain about the remainder of the picture. It is, on the whole, an excellent bit of motion picture work.

"The Schoolmaster of Mariposa" (Selig).—A love story in the West centering around a schoolmaster. Of course, there is jealousy and the schoolmaster is badly beaten, but he succeeds in winning the girl, and after years see him a successful artist. Some interest will attach to the smoking out of the school by the youngsters who pour sulphur down the chimney and cover the top with a sack. This sort of deviltry was common enough some years ago, but, like many other coarse and crude attempts at fun, this has disappeared. As a bit of history, however, it is interesting, and represents what teachers were formerly subjected to in numerous instances. The real interest of the film will undoubtedly center around the pranks of these two boys.

"A Leap for Life" (Kalem).—Another film in the excellent Canadian series this company is releasing. The pictorial merits of this series would make them popular without the interesting stories they tell. They bring reproductions of little known scenery to one's door, and permit one to wander among those Northern wilds without leaving one's fireside. This story of a trapper's leap from high rocks to escape from the Indians is thrilling and is based on an actual incident in the early history of that region.

INDEPENDENT.

"The Iron Foundry" (Ambrosio).—A diabolical scheme to murder a page is frustrated by the impatience of the knight who plotted his death. The page is to be thrown into the furnace of an iron foundry, but the knight who plotted his death is seized instead and then the count discovers that the page is innocent of the accusations made against him, and the countess is allowed her favorite page with the deep contrition of her husband, the count, added. The furnaces afford a sufficiently realistic scene to disturb the nerves of the steadiest.

"Monkey Shines" (Atlas).—A realistic picture, depicting the results of the escape of a chimpanzee from Bostock's, at Coney Island, and the chase through the crowds, the hold-up of all vehicles, including street cars, and the numerous incidents and accidents by the way. The picture is realistic. There is not the slightest question of that fact, and it is illustrative of the lengths to which producers go in an effort to get a picture out of the ordinary.

"A Wild Goose Chase" (Champion).—Here is a mixup that presents real novel features. When a young couple manage things so adroitly there is no reason why they shouldn't marry, and they did. But the way all the persons interested in one way or another are sent in different directions, including the old maid sister, is sufficient to satisfy the risibles of the most solemn persons. At the close the young people are married and the maiden of uncertain age gets a husband, too. What more could anyone want? It is a funny picture and does not fail to keep the audience in excellent humor throughout.

"The Law and the Man" (Nestor).—The law knows no difference between the man who steals to save others or himself from starving, but human sympathy sometimes does. And here, after the man had been run down and it is brought home very forcibly to the wounded sheriff why the desperate miner held up the men in the gambling house, he calls the men together and dramatically explains the situation. The result is that the unfortunate miner is released and a liberal purse of gold is sent to his wife and baby. Sympathy, a desire to help those in misfortune, will influence men to overlook many things which, should the law prevail, would send them to prison.

"For a Western Girl" (Bison).—A cowboy story with a girl carried away by a ruffian, assisted by Indians. Of course she is rescued and the villain gets his punishment in the battle that follows, while the Indians are driven away. It is of the melodramatic class which appeals to the lovers of exciting chases and the rough work required in reproducing Indian characteristics.

"The Stolen Invention" (Thanhouser).—An interesting domestic story, representing the machinations of a capitalist to secure a poor man's invention. But he is circumvented by the inventor's daughter and her sweetheart. A novel feature is the introduction of stereopticon views, to show how a signature has been forged by tracing. And then, all difficulties being settled, they live happily ever after on the rightful gains of the invention.

"Fabian Out for a Picnic" (Great Northern).—This comedian gets into more trouble, so much that he has some difficulty in extricating himself. Fabian has become a popular character in the motion picture world who will be watched for by audiences everywhere. His work is so genuinely comical and the acting seems so natural it is small wonder that the audience is laughing uproariously while the film runs.

"Danish Dragoons" (Great Northern).—A beautiful reproduction of this famous military organization. The photographic work was done with care, the operator being neither too near nor too far away. The result is a well balanced picture, which is remarkably clear, considering the movement of the horses and men.

"The Pugilist's Child" (Powers).—The human touch is very strong here. When the ex-prizefighter discovers the identity of the little girl he has adopted and orders her from the house because her father once knocked him out, one's heart softens for the unfortunate. When the woman at last persuades her husband to take the little girl back the scene is unique and touching. Few eyes are dry in the audience as the film ends.

"The Last Friend" (Ambrosio).—A pathetic story of the affection of a lamb. The lamb's faithfulness is quite characteristic, and the scene where the girl dies is unusually touching. The picture is novel in that it depicts a lamb instead of a dog or horse exhibiting a high degree of intelligence and affection.

"Molly at the Regiment" (Ambrosio).—Molly's adventures were amusing. Arrayed in men's garments, she presents a humorous appearance when she undertakes to drill. The captain, discovering the deception, has her put on skirts, sends her lover to the guard-house, and makes love to the coquettish girl himself.

"Strayed from the Range" (Nestor).—The young couple declared they would have nothing to do with each other, but the little god of chance got busy, and without either knowing it they had fallen in love with each other. When the two fathers discovered it, their joy knew no bounds, but they discreetly drew away and left the lovers to their own enjoyment. It is only another illustration of the fact that chance often plays a more important part in every-day affairs than most persons realize.

"A Game for Life" (Defender).—A love story with an outlaw, much wanted by the sheriff, as the principal figure. Tracked down, the man is discovered by a drop of blood falling from the rafters where he is hidden. This realistic touch is exceedingly effective and represents one of the subtlest moves in moving picture making in some time.

"Animation Powders" (Atlas).—While this is not a new subject it is quite as well done by the actors in this company as it ever has been. To scatter powder, with magical powers, upon persons to make them do curious stunts has been tried in numerous ways before; but perhaps this one is as funny as any. At any rate, it will be admitted that the mischievous boy stirs them up, and what he gets when the victims gather him in is sufficient to satisfy the most earnest advocate of proper punishment.

"An Attempted Elopement" (Defender).—It would have worked all satisfactorily only one man suspected the other of infidelity, and watches. The result is he discovers the two just as they are about to elope, and even though the father had objected to him, because he informs him of this fact he gets the girl. It is sometimes difficult to understand why such stories are selected. This one is improbable. It shows marriage as a mere matter of whim with the father. Apparently the girl had nothing to do with it. At any rate, she is shown eloping with one man and immediately after marries another. The only explanation that lends any degree of plausibility to the situation is that she was deceived and supposed she was eloping with the man of her choice.

"The White Princess of the Tribe" (Champion).—The photographic quality in this picture should be made a subject of study and emulation by some other Independent manufacturers. It indeed could hardly be improved upon. There is a full rendering of tonal values throughout that is a welcome change from the soot and whitewash too often seen upon the screen. The placing of the figures has also been handled judiciously, being not too close to and not too far from the camera. As to the story itself, it is no better and no worse than the average, but the film does not closely follow the published synopsis. Continuity and probability should be more closely observed by Champion as well as other producers. The acting throughout was good, in some scenes excellent, though in the final scene which departed from the synopsis, the director failed to get the strong climax that was within his reach. But the spectators closely followed, has appreciated the film and pronounced it "fine," the only critical remark voiced being that the periods [illegible] are not carefully delineated by some of the characters.

"Aunt Hannah" (Powers).—Not a case of mother-in-law, but auntie. Jones goes even by putting auntie in a barrel. The [illegible] changes and he is in the barrel, but the crash which follows plunges him over a precipice and he wakes up to find he had been dreaming, and auntie was a myth after all.

"Not Guilty" (Thanhouser).—A rather engaging and dramatic story of a young man wrongfully convicted of a crime he did not commit. The circumstances of his escape from prison, and then his escape from the police are told with a rush. And then in a dramatic scene the real thief confesses and the falsely accused young man is restored to his friends. The heart interest in the story will maintain its interest, while there is sufficient action to prevent dullness.

"The Blind Man's Dog" (Eclair).—A clever story of a trick dog. He saved his own life by pretending to be dead when a jealous acrobat choked him. The interest of the film is in this exhibition of intelligence on the part of the dog. At the sound of his master's voice he suddenly comes to life, proving that he has only been shamming.

"The Falls of the Rhine" (Eclair).—An interesting and artistic view of the falls of the Rhine at Schaffousen, in all their varying and exceedingly beautiful aspects. One never tires of such pictures. They are as variable and attractive as the scenes they depict and they bring to the very doors of those who could never see them otherwise the numerous wonders of nature as they are seen in their pristine beauty. The work on this film has been well done and the picture is exceptionally attractive for that reason.

"The New Butler" (Imp).—A rather humorous picture, graphically depicting the results of undertaking to navigate a certain variety of schooner along Broadway. Those who have had experience will realize the exceptional difficulties of the situation and will appreciate the necessity of obtaining a conveyance to get one of the party safely home. They will not, however, understand the complications that may follow an escapade of this sort. No one could foresee that a young woman would hail the cab, nor could they expect the clubman to hire out as butler to be near the girl. But ultimately all the snarls are untangled and the situation clears with a genuine love match. All because it was difficult to navigate schooners on Broadway.

"The White Squaw" (Yankee).—An intensely dramatic picture based upon the devotion of a woman who had a copper skin, but a white heart, and though she at first tried to turn back Grey's wife with untrue tales, ultimately, when Grey was captured, she gave the true statement of the murder and gave the life she saved to the wife. There is a mystical something about this film which gives a strong impression. It is almost impossible to describe it, the feeling is so subtle, and yet it is there, and as one scene follows another becomes more and more pronounced. Perhaps it is the humanity of it. Perhaps it is the apparent fact that here is a poor Indian squaw, exhibiting traits as heroic as were ever displayed upon the battlefield. One need not attempt to analyze the impressions. It is, perhaps, sufficient to acknowledge their existence and thereby admit the dramatic strength of the picture.

"For the Love of Red Wing" (Bison).—Perhaps this picture illustrates what sometimes happened preceding a massacre of whites by Indians. Where the whites, unwittingly, or otherwise, trampled upon the customs of the Indians, or when they trifled with their affections substantially the same thing followed as would have followed similar occurrences on the part of the whites. When this chief sold his daughter to the whites he violated the troth of herself and her lover, and when she was pursued by the whites she killed herself rather than fall into their hands. In vengeance the young brave wipes out the company of settlers and lays the trophies upon his sweetheart's grave. While an element of sadness pervades this type of picture it is educational since it illustrates certain racial traits which were no doubt influential in the times when massacres and reprisals were common.

"A Husband's Sacrifice" (Powers).—A story which does well as a flight of imagination, but can scarcely be said to rest upon any substantial foundation of fact. It is an extraordinary husband, indeed, who will admit that his wife has a right to love another man and actually commits suicide so she can do it. But here is the situation which is developed with considerable wealth of detail.

THE LECTURER AND THE PICTURE.

A Distinguished Lady Lecturer Enters the Moving Picture Field.

It has ever been the policy of The Moving Picture World to advocate the employment, as an adjunct to the picture, of the highest type of lecturing ability it is possible to obtain. We have many reasons for this. While the picture per se pleases us and a great many other people by its intrinsic qualities, the fact nevertheless remains that in an enormous number of instances it requires to be supplemented by something else in order to satisfy particular sections of the public to which it appeals. Thus: Here you have travelogues interjected into the moving picture entertainments. There: vaudeville. There: song slides. In other places the lecture is attempted. We say attempted, because it is never successfully done. Then: we have performers talking behind the picture in unison with the action of the characters. There is, in short, a widespread desire to supplement the picture, and not merely a widespread desire, but, varying with local conditions, an absolute necessity.

Our present concern is with the lecturing end of matters. Here in New York, and from what we can learn of other large cities of the union, the short lecture illustrated by lantern slides is popular in many picture houses. But, Oh! how rarely do we find that the lecturer is either an elocutionist or a literary person in sympathy with his or her subject—such a subject as "Faust," "Moses," or any other great classic theme which is known to all that the lecturer is turned on to lecture to, or with. How rarely do we find that the lecturer is aware of the possibilities and the infinite charm of the human voice as a supplement to, or a complement of, the picture! Seldom, indeed.

Last week at one or two artistic functions in New York City, we had the pleasure of hearing Mme. Bona, a distinguished dramatic reader, reciter and teacher of elocution, giving selections from her repertoire before the highest class of audiences in New York City. We were pleased to learn from Mme. Bona that she was desirous of entering the moving picture field with her work, and we encouraged her to do so, in virtue of the fact that, in our opinion, the unquestionable ability of which she is mistress would be welcomed at many of the best classes of moving picture theaters. Mme. Bona, we might say, is a finished and most expressive elocutionist, who is prepared to give descriptive dramatic readings either in connection with the moving picture or the lantern slide. Her repertoire is an extensive one. For example: She can give "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Light of Asia," "An Evening With Longfellow," "An Evening With Tennyson," a short scene from "The Rivals," and a miscellaneous program made up of serious, dramatic and humorous selections. She can lecture with, or to, any set of lantern slides and with any high class moving picture that is shown on the screen.

The lady has a personality that appeals to high class, intellectual and cultured audiences. She would be popular anywhere and everywhere. She has a voice of unusual range and power, enabling her to give many characters, changing instantly from one to the other. In her work, which has extended over some years, she has covered a broad field, both entertaining, humorous and instructive. In New York and other cities of the world she is well and favorably known for her splendid dramatic, descriptive and elocutionary work before all classes of society.

We welcome Mme. Bona to the moving picture field, feeling assured that there are wide opportunities before her. We want to see women of her refined intellectual type assisting in the uplift of the moving picture, because we think such personalities as hers would be instrumental in attracting the better classes of the community to the picture house.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

It is most encouraging to notice the steadily increasing tendency on the part of the managers of motion picture theaters to appreciate the wisdom of giving their patrons the best service practicable.

The day is past when "any old thing goes," and the managers are to be commended for meeting the needs of the day fairly and squarely by studying the conditions and endeavoring to make their entertainments attractive.

More care is used than formerly in providing little conveniences for the patrons and in seeing that decorations are in good taste and restful in effect. The operators employed are of a higher average class and know better how to handle a machine to good advantage and thus project more satisfactory pictures.

More Concerning Salt Lake City.—Mt. Pleasant, Utah, writes: "I was pleased to see Bob Worthen's defense of Salt Lake City moving picture shows in September 3 issue of The Column. I am afraid, however, there are a few more punk shows than he is inclined to admit. I know of two that are very bad and I speak with knowledge since I visited them nightly for two weeks.

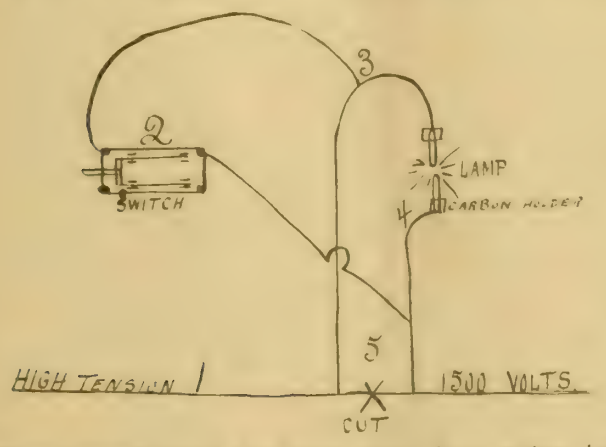
"There may be some first class men, as Mr. Worthen says, who do their own installing and make ordinary repairs. I do not think one who is not able to do this can by any stretch of the imagination call himself a competent operator.

"I would like to see all the Salt Lake City shows have first class projection, which means first class operators. I am sure a little roasting once in a while will wake them up. In the interests of the business as a whole, I think it is but right they should be awakened. We all realize that this is the crucial stage for motion pictures, as such, and unless they are properly projected the fight for permanent existence in larger fields will be an up-hill one. With careless, untrained, or partially trained operators, high class projection is an utter impossibility. Let us all strive, therefore, to do our best and to help each other to the extent of our ability.

"I trust Mr. Worthen will not take offense at what has been said in The Column concerning Salt Lake City operators, but that he will rather accept it as a necessary and beneficial shaking up of some who need prodding."

Mt. Pleasant is eminently correct and his letter is timely. I believe it is an admitted fact that, taken as a whole, Salt Lake City operators can improve their work very materially. If the letters have served the purpose of drawing pointed attention to this fact and have caused an improvement, surely Salt Lake men themselves should be the first to approve—and I think they will when they have thought it over.

A Correction (?).—Chicago, Ill., sends the following: "Editor Operators' Column—In one of your issues you state that it is impossible to use a moving picture arc lamp on direct current high tension series circuits. I wish to correct you in regard to this statement and enclose herewith a diagram and instructions how to connect up and use this current on a moving picture machine. Would also advise that unless the operator has had previous experience on high tension circuits it would be well for him to leave it alone, or if he must use it, to call for the assistance of the local electrician in the town or village he is playing in. There are several one nighters in Kansas where the opera house has no incandescent circuit and in order not to disappoint a large audience it is necessary to use the series high tension circuit. In doing so one must be sure to get the copper plated carbons from the lighting plant which are used on these circuits.

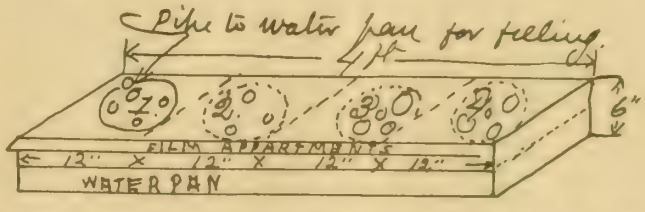


"Directions—Connect two wires direct from carbon holders to high tension circuit (1). Lamp arms must be thoroughly insulated to carry this current. Use one blade of switch as a shunt (2) or short circuit, connect from one side of switch to wire going to top carbon holder (3). Connect [illegible] wire from the other side of switch to bottom carbon holder (4). Make sure switch is open [illegible] high tension circuit between the poles at [illegible] copper plated carbons in lamp and make sure they are [illegible] open switch, then open switch and you have the high tension at the street and the fire burning through your machine. Use no rheostats on this current at all as the arc lamps on the current furnish enough resistance. To put arc off, throw on switch which shunts the current around the lamp."

Friend Cameron, I cannot accept your correction. I said a projection lamp cannot be operated from a series arc system and I repeat it. Theoretically the connection shown would work, but practically it would not for the following reasons: (a) I much doubt if there is a light company in the world that would allow you to cut into a series arc system and make their entire circuit dependent on the proper handling of your lamp. (b) The Board of Fire Underwriters would not allow high tension wires to be taken inside a building. (c) The police department would stop you did you attempt to take high tension wires inside any enclosure where it was intended an audience would presently gather. (d) Unless one be an expert electrician it would be extremely dangerous to handle such a proposition. (e) There is no projection lamp made with insulation capable of taking care of high tension current. (f) The series arc system carries only about 10 amperes of current and the projection of any but a very diminutive motion picture would be impractical with 10 amperes. (g) With the hard, coppered carbons, such as are used in series arc lamps, the crater would be almost anywhere except where you wanted it.

There are other reasons, but these are enough to demonstrate that hitching to a series arc system would be highly impractical. But even were it possible to use high tension current in a projection lamp I would be very careful about publishing the fact, not caring to be responsible for some man being killed making the attempt. I publish the sketch submitted. Such a connection would work, of course. That is to say, there is nothing out of the way with the connection, as such.

Film Moistener.—Mr. M. L. May, president Orpheum Amusement Company, Kenosha, Wis., writes: "Enclosed find sketch of my idea of the correct way to preserve film in good condition in the operating room. Have already installed several and they have proven very satisfactory. Am now making one for our new theater, which will open in this city, September 24."



Myself and The Column readers are indebted to you, Neighbor May, for the idea so excellently shown in the accompanying sketch. Such a box should be in every operating room. It would add very materially to the useful life of a film. Call again, Friend May.

A Suggestion.—Bradford, S. D., Mr. E. H. Ebert, proprietor Idle Hour Theater, writes: "I have read a great deal in The World about appropriate music with the picture. Now this is a pretty stiff proposition, particularly in the smaller towns where high class piano players are by no means available.

"In thinking the matter over, I have evolved an idea which may or may not be of value. If you think it is of value do with it as you please. It is just this: Let some music house have appropriate music composed for each film, the same to be sold to the film exchange, who in turn supply it to the exhibitor. Personally I would be willing to pay more for film service if such music were included for each subject."

friend Elliott, it would for several reasons be highly impractical to compose music for each film. Your suggestion is of distinct value, however, in that it calls attention to the failure of film manufacturers to provide musical schemes for practically any films at all. Some subjects need no special musical program, but others gain an amazingly added effect if the musical program is carefully selected and played to fit.

Take the film "Where is My Wandering Boy To-night" for instance. When the old mother lay dying the pianist in my house played "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night" and there was not, I believe, a dry eye in all that theater. I had gone carefully over the film with my piano player and selected—very carefully selected—a musical program. I ran the film three evenings to packed houses, some people coming all three nights solely on account of that one film. I have not the least hesitation in saying that half the success of the film in my house was directly due to the music.

And so it is with very many films. It would be no great hardship or expense for the manufacturer to supply such a program with films that need it. Later: The Vitagraph bulletin for first half of October contains musical program suggestions for some of the films. Good for the Vitagraph! Edison also suggests a program of music appropriate to their pictures.

Aperture Plate Not Straight.—Newman, Ill., writes: "Have been operating a Lubin machine for some time, but there are certain things that I cannot understand. What is the cause of picture being not level on the screen when the machine itself is level? What is the rule for setting shutter of a Lubin machine? Do you recommend using a motor to drive the machine or do you not? If not, why? If you do, give reasons."

The picture being out of level probably is due to one of two reasons, viz.: The aperture plate itself being out of square with the sprockets or the film not passing the aperture squarely, due to (a) intermittent sprocket being set over to one side; (b) top gate guide rollers (don't know whether the Lubin top gate guide is rollers or not) over to one side. In either case the film passes down over the aperture on a slant, producing the out-of-level effect on the screen. If the aperture is out of square the fault will show when the white light (no film) is thrown on the screen. The remedy is to set a flat punch against its edge near top or bottom and drive it over into place until the light is square on the screen when no film is in the machine. If the sprocket or gate idler is at fault they must be set over where they belong. The Lubin has a two-wing shutter inside the machine. Set the framing lever central—half way through its travel—and loosen the shutter on its spindle. Now turn the flywheel in the direction it runs until the intermittent moves, completes its movement and the cam-pin is half its diameter out of the star. Now revolve the shutter on its spindle in the direction it normally runs until the wide wing passes over the aperture and is just barely beginning to open the aperture. Tighten the shutter slightly on its shaft, but not so but you can slip it by exerting some pressure. Put in a film, light up and try it. If there is no travel ghost you are all right and may tighten the shutter tight on its spindle. If there is travel ghost, slip the shutter a very little, holding the flywheel stationary while you do it, until you get it exactly right, shown by effect on the screen. When you get it just right tighten on its spindle and the job is done.

I would not recommend a motor for the reason that the operator should be obliged to stay right at the machine every second it is running. Turning the crank is the only practical method of insuring constant attendance on the part of the operator. Otherwise there is no objection to motor driven machines, but that one thing is enough in my humble opinion.

Condensing Lenses.—New York City asks: "Will you kindly tell me what size condensers to use? I have an 87-foot throw, 12-foot 6-inch picture. Am using two 7½-inch condensing lenses and have a faint, blue ball in center. Lamphouse is back as far as it will go. Have A. C. and use ——— carbons. Are they best for A. C.?"

You have a very long focal length objective lens and really ought to have 8½-inch condensing lenses, but I think two 7½-inch lenses ought to fill the bill. How do you know they are 7½? Have you measured them? Quite probably the ghost is the shadow of your carbon tips, due to wrong set of carbons. Measure the lenses and see that they really are 7½. The carbons you name are not the ones I personally would select. I cannot advise in matters of that kind in The Column, for very obvious reasons. Directions for measuring the lenses will be found in back numbers of The World.

'Frisco Operators' Union on Parade.—W. S. Woods, president San Francisco Moving Picture Projecting and Machine Operators' Union, Local 162, writes: "Mr. Richardson—The moving picture operators of San Francisco, Local 162, I. A. T. S. E., took part in the recent Labor Day parade, which was participated in by 145 unions and 35,000 men, entering a float representing a nickelodeon in full operation. During the march a little comedy was played, the plot revolving around three big hats in the audience (the float had machine, screen, opera chairs, operators and audience) and the refusal of the ladies who wore them to remove the offending headgear.

"The float was easily first prize winner, while the escort, composed of nearly the entire strength of the organization, handsomely uniformed, won first prize for percentage of attendance. This is the first time in the history of 'Frisco Labor Day parades that one union has been awarded two prizes. The operators are being congratulated on all sides for their efforts and achievement.

"Members of the union also took a film of sections of the parade, which same was shown at several of the Independent houses Labor Day evening (the same day). This is the first time this particular feat has been accomplished here in the West."

In the language of the ever popular Teddy, "Bully" for the 'Frisco boys. I certainly would have enjoyed seeing you and the beautiful float. But more than all else I am proud that in one city there are operators capable of not only winning two prizes but of taking a film and getting the same on the screen the same day it was taken. Everything considered, it was absolutely a record performance. Other films have been made as quickly but not by operators actively engaged in the work of projection. I would like to shake hands with some of you. You are men after my own heart!

Tension Springs Shifting or—?—Boston, Mass., contributes the following: "Is the handbook you have mentioned in The Column a reference book for operators? If so, kindly mention price, as I want a copy.

"I am having some trouble with my Power's machine, as follows: When running the show the film seems to be loose in the center of the aperture. It shakes and vibrates so much that my picture is in and out of focus all the time, just in its center. The aperture plate is in good condition and the tension springs seem to be working O. K. Please advise me. I have a 75-foot throw and about a 15-foot picture. What condensers should I use?"

I should say your tension springs were rather loose and shifting from side to side of the track. Place them squarely on the track and, first removing the cooling plate, tighten up the screws which hold the springs as tight as you dare. Be very sure, however, that the tracks of your aperture plate are not worn. Two 7½ condensers ought to fill the bill all right. The handbook is a reference book for managers and operators. Remit $1.50 to The Moving Picture World and the book will be sent just as soon as it is off the press, and that will be soon.

Washington Questioned.—Dr. Addison O'Neill, Ridgewood, N. J., writes: "In regard to Washington, D. C., Trouble Department, September 10, will say that he is probably correct, but in order to get the result described his condensers are at an incorrect distance from the objective, causing the light rays to cross in front of, instead of between, the two factors of the objective. He may also be using two different sized condensing lenses and has reversed their respective positions. I cannot figure out how he is able to get ideal results on the screen with his present arrangement."

In this connection I will say that some of the statements made by Washington were incorrect. For instance: he said that printed letters looked at through a projection lens would be right side up when close to the lens but reversed when removed a few inches. This is not true. I do not wish to say more at this time, preferring to wait for what the Columnites will dig up for themselves. I confidently expect quite a few letters on this subject as soon as you have had time to do a little experimenting for yourselves. I might add that Doctor O'Neill is perfectly correct as to the condensing lens not reversing the image unless it be that the objective be located too far from the condensing lens—or at least that is my view of the matter. Let us hear from you, gentlemen.

Poor Projection.—Blaine Day, Sherman, Tex., sends the following: "Here is one I will have to tell The Column readers for it is much too good to keep. Recently the Houston & Texas Central Agricultural and Educational train pulled into Sherman and gave a free exhibit of advanced agriculture in these United States. The train contained four cars of cattle, sheep and swine, one dining car, two cars of sample fruit, together with a sleeper for the comfort and convenience of the lecturers and operator—for there was an operator (?) and projection outfit along.

"Now one would naturally suppose that a train involving so large an expense, on which presumably depended considerable in the way of empire building, would have everything of the very best obtainable. Not so, however! It was the same old, old, old song. Everything was first class except the machine and operator. Both of those, particularly the latter, were unspeakably bad. I was literally astounded at the performance of the 'operator' (?) carried with the train.

"There were 200 stereo views and two special reels of film, most of which were, or properly projected would have been, very beautiful. They carried one along the 'Sunset Route' through beautiful California, Oregon and Washington, showing the charming valleys filled with fruitful vineyards, orange groves and flowers. Again the eternal, hoary, snow-capped giants of the Rockies greeted the eye. Dashing cateracts, mountain torrents and waterfalls of crystal snow-water were viewed. The delightful Flower Parade of Los Angeles was shown. The beautiful California hotels of world-wide fame appeared. The water front of Seattle was viewed, showing the Alaska steamers, the ocean liners which clear for China and Japan.

"Altogether the films and slides were in themselves beyond criticism, but—and thereby hangs a tale. Probably 1,500 people viewed the performance here in Sherman and I was one of that number.

"The operator (?) had his stereo lens out of focus. On the film not only was the focus by no means clear, but in each of the four corners lurked several colors of the rainbow. The picture was half obscured by shadows a goodly portion of the time. Oh, Friend Richardson, it was unspeakably rotten. Yes, that is the only term descriptive of so miserable a performance. The conditions above named were not present in places but clear through the entire show (?). The lecturer was first class and with even passable projection the exhibition would have been very, very beautiful. As it was it was a howling farce?"

Yes, Friend Day, it is amazing that a railway company, or whoever financed the affair, would spend thousands of dollars getting up such an exposition and keep it out at heavy daily expense and then nullify the whole thing, in great measure, by purchasing an inferior machine and employing any but the very best obtainable man to run it.

But, after all, is this any more amazing than the fact that theater managers by the thousand pursue precisely the same idiotic tactics? A man will equip a moving picture theater at an expense of thousands of dollars. He will have nothing but the best in decoration, lighting effects and fixtures, seats, etc., etc. It is a palatial show house until the operating room is reached. Then begins economy. The ventilation of the theater has been expensively arranged but that of the operating room must be cheap. The seats of the house have been carefully selected regardless of expense, but the cheapest findable stool for the operating room is shameful extravagance and waste. The machine equipment is scanned, scanned and re-examined for possible reduction in cost. After all this is done it suddenly occurs to the manager that an operator is necessary and he proceeds to employ one, but the leading question now is, pre-eminently, "How cheap will you work?" Some perfunctory questions as to ability are asked, but the leading query is, "What will you work for?" The "manager" proceeds, apparently, along the lines of the idea that anything that walks upright, has two arms and isn't stone blind is abundantly able to run a machine. The right, sensible, business-like way would have been first, to employ the operator, after very carefully examining into his ability, record, and, if possible, looking at his work on the screen without his knowing it, then placing the outfitting of the operating room largely in his hands—that is to say, being largely guided by his advice. If, however, the manager cannot or will not trust the operator in the selection of machine equipment, he should consult other competent authority. Every piece of equipment is the best in the mouth of its salesman. Operating rooms by the thousands are supplied with inferior equipment for the simple reason that managers attempt to select, without adequate practical knowledge. They don't know themselves and won't seek competent advice. The H. & T. C. train matter is bad enough, in all conscience, Friend Day, but the projection field is chuck full of just such asininity. Too many managers are like an ass between two bundles of hay, they try to bite from the heavy receipts and light operating room expense bundles at the same time. The net result is never satisfactory.

Information Wanted.—Cincinnati, Ohio, writes as follows: "I am a reader of The Moving Picture World and your Column has helped me considerably. I have a few questions to ask. The present curtain I have is too small for my picture and when I have traveling companies it must be taken down and of course gets very dirty. What I want to do is to paint the back of a street drop and use it as a curtain. What would you suggest painting it with? I use A. C. current 100 volts with a Compensare and set my carbons same as Portsmouth in this week's World, but when I set them straight I cannot get a large enough disc of light over the aperture plate. What is the trouble? I have a ——— machine. Also I have trouble with my picture jumping. Can you tell me how to take this machine apart and get at the trouble? It is a new one on me and I don't understand it."

For painting back of drop I would use flat white lead, adding a little Prussian or ultamarine (preferably the latter) blue. Add enough so that it has quite a blush tint in the pail. Get the white lead and use a mixture of about two-thirds turpentine to one-third of boiled linseed oil to mix with. Make the paint tolerably thin and put on several coats if necessary. I would rather, however, have a cloth curtain. I have, after a considerable hunt, found a cloth 100 inches wide made especially for curtains. It is snow-white, quite strong, though light, and makes a splendid curtain. If properly handled I see no reason why you should get it dirty. You could have two of the curtains and have one laundered occasionally. Why take the curtain down? Why not just roll it up like any other drop curtain? Oh, by-the-way, before attempting to paint cloth you must fill it with some good sizing. The reason your spot isn't large enough is that you cannot get your lamp, for some reason, close enough to the condensers. As to the jumping, full instructions for taking the ——— machine apart will be found in the handbook. It would require much time and space to describe the process here. I could not form an opinion as to what makes your picture jump without further information. Are the teeth of your intermittent sprocket worn? Is the face of your intermittent sprocket clean or have you let a coating of gummy dirt accumulate on it? Describe the jump closely. It probably is not at all necessary to take the machine apart to eliminate the jump.

An Outrage.—Ottawa, Kan., writes: "Have been a constant reader of The World, especially of The Column, and am glad to know that at least one man has the nerve to roast near-operators. I believe, however, some of the exchange men would properly come in for a portion of your attention. Some of them put out circulars of in(?)struc(?)tion(?) to would-be managers. I inclose one of them and would like to hear your opinion of the same expressed in The Column. The world is, in my humble opinion, the best paper for the trade ever published."

Ottawa inclosed the following, taken from the circular of one of the large film renters having many branch offices:

"The operator is confined almost entirely to running the moving picture machine and song slides and although he need not have any great amount of experience, it is advisable to secure one who is mechanically inclined and capable of making all necessary repairs to the moving picture mechanism so that he can keep same in first class condition at all times. It is also very important that he should have a slight knowledge of electricity, as it is used in connection with the arc lamp and rheostat. It should be impressed upon the operator at all times to handle the film, especially in rewinding it, with the utmost care to avoid damage to the sprocket holes or the scratching of the film. The salary paid depends largely upon the location of the theater and the length of time each day which he is expected to work and ranges from $8 per week to $18. In some of the larger cities, however, they are paid as high as $20 per week."

My opinion, Ottawa, is that the thing is an outrage and an insult to intelligence. It seems that some firms stop at absolutely nothing in the way of misrepresentation in their effort to sell goods. The effort being put forth in this instance is plainly to induce some poor sucker who knows nothing at all about matters theatrical to invest in a motion picture outfit. Of course such drivel would merely amuse the theater man. It would do no harm and have no effect one way or the other with him, but it is not designed or intended for him. It is a deliberate effort to gouge someone by inducing sales through misrepresentation.

Tension Equalizer for Power's 5.—Mauch Chunk, Pa., sends description of a scheme he has evolved and has in use on his Power's No. 5 machine to equalize the film tension. It is as follows: he had the lower, or takeup, feed sprocket spindle made 1½ inches longer, the extension being on the pulley side. This extension he had threaded with an ordinary die and on it fitted a wing nut. He had the belt pulley sawed in half and the two faces placed smooth. One half (the one nearest the operator) is fastened to the spindle with a set screw. The other half he held against its mate by a spring, compressed by the wing nut, exactly the same as is the friction pulley on the lower magazine. In fact he just duplicated the friction pulley below on the shaft above, only, of course the upper pulley is much smaller in diameter. He sets the upper tension, by means of the wing nut, so it will take up about 700 feet of film and then, when the reel begins to lag, reaches over and tightens up the wing nut a trifle. The scheme is perfectly simple and will work all right, but it is not automatic and therefore not altogether satisfactory. Nevertheless I am sure we are indebted to Mauch Chunk for sending in the description of his clever scheme. (Note.—Above is the way I understand Mauch Chunk's explanation, but it seems to me that a whole belt pulley compressed against a friction surface would be more like it.)

Single-Pole Service Switches.—Savannah, Ga., propounds the following: "May I ask one question? Is there any good reason why it is not just as effective to use a single-pole switch, cutting but one wire of a circuit instead of both?"

Yes, Savannah, there most emphatically is. In the first place, while the single-pole switch would break the circuit and put out the lights it would not stop leakage through a ground, did there happen to be one. Moreover, the whole circuit would remain charged at the line potential and in making repairs one would always be liable to shock. Under all ordinary circumstances a double-pole switch should be used as service switch, never a single pole.

Music Program—Good!—The Vitagraph Bulletin for first half of October contains several suggestions for appropriate music for individual films. Good! The only fault I find with that is, it isn't done completely enough. It's a bully good start, though. Congratulations to the Vitagraph!

Classy Show.—From Leroy Bickle, manager Theatorium, Ardmore, Okla., comes the following: "Friend Richardson—You will find enclosed copy of my program for next Wednesday evening. I notice so much about high class theaters that I must show you what I am doing out here on the edge of the wild and wooly West. I think I have the best show in the world, and the greatest orchestra ever gotten together—something better than any other show in the State can boast of. Both yourself and The World have my very best wishes."

THEATORIUM'S CLASSICAL PROGRAM.

Light Cavalry.....Von Suppe Orchestra.
Out of the Past (Drama).....Vitagraph
Tannhauser March .....Wagner
No Man's Land (Child's Drama).....Pathe
Amaranthus .....Gilder
Cornet Solo.
No Rest for the Weary (Hand-colored Comedy)
Pathe
Celeste-Aida .....Verdi
An Unfair Game (Drama).....Vitagraph
Echoes from Famous Operas.....
Vocal Solo—"Sing, Smile, Slumber".....Gounod
Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

Friend Bickle is a hustler. He is one of those managers who are up and coming; who know the game and how to play it to get all there is in it. The program is all he claims. Would that others could show its equal. One thing you omitted, one thing, however, Friend Bickle, and that one thing is really the most important of all: you spoke of the excellence of the orchestra. The program speaks for itself, but you said not one word about the excellence of projection; and of what avail the other things if projection be poor? Why, why, why did you not also give the man who makes the show credit? I've not the least doubt but that your operator is a good one, else he wouldn't be working in your house, but why leave his end, the most important of all, out? Five minutes for explanations, Friend Bickle. I'm "handing you one" on this for the good of all concerned because I know you will take the dose without getting mad. It is not encouraging to the operator to have the manager boast of the excellence of his service, excellence of his orchestra, excellence of his house, his seats, the ventilation, the stage, the attendants and, in fact, everything he can think of in connection with the house, except the excellence of the work of his operator. He is likely to think: "Oh, well, what's the use anyhow. I don't get the least credit no matter what I do. The manager appreciates everything else in the place except my work.

Do you observe the point, Mr. Manager? Remember, Friend Bickle, I know this was only an unintentional oversight on your part, but it is altogether too common an oversight on the part of managers and it has its effect in discouraging operators. Glad to hear of your good work. Who can match it?

Curtain.—Waseca, Minn., writes: "Have had many helpful hints from your department since it started. I now take the liberty of asking your advice concerning screens. I am convinced that, next to the mirror screen, a plastered wall is best for picture projection. But when one cannot afford the one and by reason of windows cannot have the other, but must install a roll curtain, what is one to do?

"Have tried a common chalk-filled curtain, also alabastine on same and in the endeavor to get a still clearer, better picture, covered it with a paint giving it a silver finish. Instead of bettering matters the silver finish is the worst that ever happened. Looks like the pictures were behind a veil or had a mist before them. Also patches and scratches show very badly. Also while the flicker was not noticeable before it is very bad now.

"It means a new curtain. We want the best roll curtain or screen we can get. What will it be?"

Why not try a Solar Screen? Next to the mirror screen it gives the brightest picture. The Solar Screen is rollable and the cost very reasonable. While the Solar Screen has a metallic surface it has not the streaky or misty effect of hand-painted screens. The surface is applied to the Solar by patented machinery, hence its uniform surface.

"HALLBERG" EQUIPS THANHOUSER STUDIO.

J. H. Hallberg has recently equipped the Thanhouser studio, New Rochelle, N. Y., with a new Motiograph moving picture machine and two "Hallberg" economizers, one economizer to be used on their old machine. Mr. Thanhouser says it is the finest equipment on the market for his purpose, because to test his new films he has to have the best the market affords, as his customers are the purchasers of films and are therefore the best critics.

A BRILLIANT PROSPECT.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's establishment is a very busy place. The management states that they are now running to the full capacity of their floor space and even with the additional machinery recently installed, a considerably increased manufacturing force, and other facilities, they are still a little behind with their orders.

It is not as difficult as it used to be to convince managers that the best machine is none too good, and in looking over the field, it is pleasing to observe to what a large extent the Motiograph is being turned to as the up-to-date equipment. Its durability, combined with its simplicity and the excellent quality of the pictures, result in an exceedingly effective machine which will keep on growing in public favor.

TWO PROMINENT THEATERS INSTALL POWER'S MACHINES.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Company, who operate the Orpheum Theater, 174-176 State street, Chicago, Ill., which is perhaps the largest and the best moving picture theater in that city, have just purchased through the American Film Service of Chicago, a Power's Cameragraph No. 6, after exhaustive tests which proved its superiority to their entire satisfaction.

Power's No. 6 has also lately been installed in Ganes' Theater, Broadway and Thirty-first street, New York City, and is projecting a very steady picture on the large screen in that place.

NOVEL USE FOR MOVING PICTURES.

In order to entertain one thousand Indians, including several hundred from Alaska and British Columbia, who are picking hops in the western valleys of Washington, Herman Klaber, of Tacoma, owning the largest yards in the State, has installed a moving picture show in his biggest hop field near Littell, Lewis County.

The moving pictures afford evening amusement, with the result that the pickers are on hand next morning instead of wandering away to surrounding towns. The scheme meets with favor.

Chicago Notes.

The following exhibitors visited the new Western offices of the Moving Picture World this week:

James Sullivan, Star Theater, Elgin, Ill.

Charles Namur, Colonial Theater, Des Moines, Iowa.

T. V. Bryan, Lyric Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

J. H. Pence, Covington, Kentucky, and Mr. Sherwood of the firm of Sherwood & McWilliams, Fair Play Theater, Madison, Wisconsin.

Among other Chicago visitors this week were W. H. Stage of Marengo, Ill. and Dan Rice of the Copper & Iron Circuit of Calumet, Mich.

* * *

Some optimist or other once coined the expression "every knock is a boost," and I sincerely hope my friends in Freeport will take every one of the following "raps" as a boost, for the criticisms I am making are surely well intended, despite the fact that they may sound severe. Sunday afternoon I spent over three hours looking at pictures—yes, that's all—just looking at pictures. Talk about your quality and quantity, they were all to the good as far as quantity was concerned; quality, well we will talk about that later.

Freeport boasts of three moving picture theaters, two of these are directly opposite each other, the third a half block farther up the street, and all three combined do not possess the qualities of a "model" motion picture house. I visited the Lyric first to see if manager Hopper had any real excuse for decorating (?) his lobby as he did. Clear across the front was a canvas sign; the lobby was filled with 6 or 8 posters, pasted on boards, to advertise a Sunday show. If I had been a stranger in the town I would surely have expected to see a side show or museum inside. The Lyric is a neat little house, tastefully decorated, well ventilated and lighted; even the ushers are uniformed, and the four reels of pictures were very well projected. The only thing that corresponded at all with the glaring signs outside was the brand of music on the inside. Manager Hopper wants to give his patrons something for the extra nickel admission charged on Sunday, so he hires an amateur orchestra to furnish music. But if what I heard is really music, then may all music vanish from my soul instanter. The Lyric was packed to the doors Sunday, but mark this, Friend Hopper, if you persist in decorating your front in that manner, and don't cut out that awful noise that you pass off as an orchestra, you will find that your patronage will go to the man who appreciates the fact that some music will "infuse" rather than "soothe the savage breast."

At the Majestic, manager Guiteau, who by the way is the pioneer picture man of Freeport, was showing three reels of well selected pictures, on which the projection was excellent, but the house was far from playing to capacity. The Majestic has a store front, and although Mr. Guiteau knows how to advertise correctly (very often his ads. are strikingly original), nevertheless, the Majestic will never be a real winner until that "beautiful canned music" is thrown out, and the house properly lighted. Not a ceiling nor side light was lit while the pictures were being shown, not a single one, and the patrons, even though they are politely ushered to their seats, fall into, rather than sit down in the chairs on account of the extreme darkness. More than one poor aching foot is trod upon in the Majestic. The day is past when people will endure a continual "grind" from a talking machine while looking at a picture, and the sooner you light up your interior properly, and put in some real music, Mr. Guiteau, just that much sooner will you regain the large patronage which your theater and the excellent pictures you show are certainly deserving of.

Across the street is the "quantity house" the Superba. Five reels, 5—count them, all for a dime, and an illustrated song thrown in for a filler. A fair-sized audience was in the Superba, which, by the way, also has a cozy interior, and is well lighted, but the manager here strives to beat the Lyric with exterior decorations. Banners and posters stuck up all around the lobby, actually they are so loud you can hear the colors clash a half block away. And to think this sort of advertising is done on Sunday. No wonder the city council there was once contemplating closing the Sunday shows. The projection at the Superba is poor, very poor. No, you can't blame it all on the films. Some of them were not any too good, but one of the reels shown was a Powers picture play, "The Mail Carrier." When I first saw this release in Laemmle's exhibition room about three weeks ago, I thought at the time it was a very good Western picture, free from a lot of gun play. I could hardly recognize it as the same picture in the Superba. But then the motto of the Superba seems to be "give them quantity and forget the quality," which they surely did. The music at the Superba, for one, was contemptible. Some old story "Music, what soothing properties" under the name

It might be well to mention here that the Orpheum, a new vaudeville house, which will show pictures in connection, was opened in Freeport on September 10. It is a beautiful theater in every particular, and if they hit the patronage of the picture shows, the exhibitors will be to blame. Here's hoping they will take a hint, make some of the very necessary improvements, and pull hard for the good of their own business, and the moving picture business in general.

J. C. K.

NOTES FROM NEW ENGLAND STATES.

Boston, Mass.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of Boston have recently secured permanent headquarters at 724 Washington street. The following officers were elected at the last general meeting: President, J. J. Barry; treasurer, Harry Dalton; vice-president, Cecil True; financial secretary, Lawrence Tempst. John F. Burke, the business agent, is in charge of the office. The union, which has only been in existence three months, is in a most flourishing state, with plenty of cash in the treasury to meet all incurred expenses.

Boston is to have a new $200,000 moving picture and vaudeville theater, located on Washington street, near Ruggles street, Roxbury. The new house is to have a seating capacity of nearly 2,500 people. The house will have balconies and boxes. "Victoria" has been selected as the name. W. C. Bradstreet, president of the New England Amusement and Entertainment Company, is at the head of this enterprise. Licensed films, vaudeville, and illustrated songs will make up the bill, with admission prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents. Mr. Bradstreet has had much experience in the theatrical business. He is the man of "Scenic Temple" fame, as he has a large and prosperous chain of moving picture and vaudeville houses, in and around Boston, all of which are called "Scenic Temple."

Samuel Messing, formerly of Warren B. Church's booking office, Boston, has left his position there to accept an offer as manager of the new Lawrence Theater, New Bedford, Mass. Mr. Messing will undoubtedly make good, as he is a hard worker and quite original in his ideas.

That efficiency is sure to be found out, was proved by the promotion of Harry B. Goldman to the post of manager of the Savoy Theater, on Washington street, Lotta Crabtree, proprietor. Three years ago Mr. Goldman was employed as head usher by the Star Theater, Tremont row. After remaining there nearly a year, he left, to fill a position in New York. On his return to this city, Mr. Goldman was engaged as assistant manager of the "Savoy." During the latter part of last August, Harry F. Campbell, up to that time manager of the theater, left to go to Marlboro. Mr. Goldman was then made manager. He is without doubt the youngest manager in Boston, being only 25 years old.

The Globe Theater, Washington street (United States Amusement Company, proprietors), closed its Summer season of moving pictures and vaudeville recently. Manager Joseph Lanette stated that the season just passed had been extremely prosperous. The Globe has a very large seating capacity, thus allowing them to give a large show for the admission price of 10 cents. A concert of moving pictures and vaudeville will be given every Sunday night, from 7 to 11 P. M.

The Idle Hour Theater, corner of Castle and Tremont streets, which has been dark for some time, has been reopened by negroes, who are showing pictures and songs for 10 cents. The name has been changed to the "Pekin." This theater was unfortunately very poorly constructed from the start, and looks more like a fort than a theater. The house has never been a winner, as the location is poor.

Edward McDermott has been appointed manager of the Olympic Theater, Bodowin square, by Lasky Bros., to succeed William Wherty.

At the beginning of the Fall season it may be of interest to note that out of sixteen of Boston's most representative moving picture houses, ten are using licensed films, six Independent pictures.

The old South Theater, Washington street, Donaldson & Rudnick, proprietors; Frank E. Broune, manager, which was dark for eight weeks, due to extensive alterations, was delayed recently by labor troubles. However, the matter was patched up and the house was ready to open on Labor Day. The house has a seating capacity of just under 800 and is now a beautiful house in every way. Mr. Donaldson, talking to the World's correspondent, stated that the alterations had cost the corporation nearly $10,000.

J. H. Lemieux has leased the Sentsky block, of Thompsonville, Conn., for moving pictures and vaudeville.

The Broadway Theater, of Everett, reopened recently for the Fall and Winter season. The Broadway uses Independent films and three acts of vaudeville, giving three performances daily—one matinee and two evening shows. Admission, 10 cents, with a few reserved seats at 20 cents. As the Broadway has no competition it is usually difficult to obtain seats. Nathan Brown will again be in charge of the managerial end of things for Charles F. Rollins.

The Nickel Theater, of Haverhill, Mass., reopened recently after being dark for seven weeks. The house has been carefully overhauled and redecorated. Licensed films and illustrated songs are given to what is usually first-rate business.

The Colonial Theater, of Pittsfield, after a prosperous Summer season devoted to moving pictures and vaudeville, has returned to stock company attractions over the Winter.

Thomas D. Soviero will soon erect a first-class moving picture and vaudeville house in Marlboro. Licensed service will be used. Admission, 10 cents. HENRY ARCHER.

A VISIT BY THE WORLD REPRESENTATIVE TO FORT WAYNE, IND.

In former letters I pointed to the fact that motion pictures were shown to a better advantage and with more care, in small cities. Fort Wayne, Ind., is an example. Evidently the country exhibitor is at a disadvantage when compared to his lucky brothers of the big cities, where they can practically show any old junk in any manner they please, to shoppers and to a constantly renewing transient trade, while the country exhibitor has to depend all the time on the same local patronage.

As Speer Bros., of the Gaiety Theater, of Fort Wayne, Ind., were much interested in my notes on music for motion pictures, they extended me a cordial invitation to visit their place, and last Friday I was the guest of the moving picture theaters of this thriving town, coming to the front as the home of one of the best electric works.

I will not say that the theaters are models of architecture and of decorations, as in this line they are rather modest. In a small town it is not a question of luring the transient trade, with a lot of gingerbread decorations and electrical displays, but a matter to give a good show to the local patronage.

Messrs. Speer made a name for themselves, and their Gaiety Theater is the best known house, the house on the tongue of everyone. They show the latest licensed pictures on a mirror screen. Any exhibitor, who is willing to pay the price, can show first class pictures, but few know how to show them, and this is where the Speer Bros. made a success, in knowing how to convey to an audience the sentiments shown on the screen.

This is the stumbling block where so many exhibitors fail. They believe that the eye is enough. No, you want more than your eyesight to fully understand a picture. As we know that the mere barking of a dog, the cackling of a hen, etc., always add life to a picture, we must admit that appropriate music will always give the last delicate touches that the actors and the producers cannot make plain enough on the screen. Let us take as an example "The Old Fiddler." Although it was a remarkable production, many persons did not understand the picture. They could not see why the old man would expose himself to the abuses of his daughter-in-law for the sake of his violin. Well, the old man, although poor, was a real musician and a lover of music. To fully convey this impression to an audience it was necessary to have some good music, to show that the old man loved his violin and was not playing his fiddle for the mere sake of annoying his daughter-in-law. A good violinist in the orchestra, to play with sentiment a well known selection when the old man is shown on the screen playing his fiddle, will convey to the audience the impression that the old man can suffer a good deal for the sake of musical passion.

I would be impossible to name in these lines other examples, as all pictures have scenes that can be highly enhanced with proper music.

The Speer Bros. made up their minds that good music would get them the patronage of Fort Wayne, and with this object in view they secured the services of an experienced drummer in the person of C. H. Hancock and of H. B. Pierce as a pianist. Both these gentlemen are professionals, nothing amateurish in them, they know their repertoire and they work in perfect harmony.

During an intermission, Messrs. Hancock and Pierce gave us a fine selection, not in my honor, as my presence in the rear of the house was not known to them and they knew not on what mission I was in Fort Wayne. Later on curiosity forced me to move to the first row of seats and great was my surprise to find our friendHancock in a sea of musical instruments. On every side he was surrounded by instruments—a big bass drum, the triangle, the muffler, the beater, the cymbals, by his regular drum, xylophone, tympanis, chimes, orchestra bells and a great variety of traps for sound effects. To this long list I must not forget to mention the Deagan orchestra bells, the keyboard being convenient to the drummer, with the bells scattered in every corner of the house. It was a wonder to see how Mr. Hancock could operate all these instruments without getting mixed up or losing his time and tune.

I did not regret the trip as, to be candid, I would willingly travel twice as far for such a good musical treat and it is no wonder that the folks of Fort Wayne give their patronage to the Gaiety, in fact where could they find a better show for 5 cents? Not in Chicago and less in New York City.

A short time ago, I said that while a pipe organ could render good service in church scenes, it was out of place when played during the whole picture. The same can also be said of all musical instruments, and if Mr. Hancock had worked the Deagan bells all the time he would have tired his audience, but the way he worked them, accompanied by the piano and others of his instruments, he certainly brought out some very pleasing effects. A good orchestra is the soul of a picture.

Mr. Exhibitor take notice, do not for the sake of a few dollars, engage the services of a pianist who has only the experience of the cheap cafe concerts. Pay the price, engage intelligent musicians, men with some common sense, who can understand a picture and find in their repertoire the music to suit the different scenes Good music will make dollars for your theater.

The Gaiety has an original lobby on the Japanese style, which is a novelty. The auditorium has dark walls, the best arrangement to bring out a good picture.

The Lyric, on the other side of the street, had a rather rough experience. It is a large house, originally built for a stock company and on its failure was made a vaudeville house, but here again the owners could not make it pay. They decided to try motion pictures and they placed their theater under the able management of Sprague Green, with the result that August was the best month the house ever had. The Lyric is a licensed house, and is now experimenting with a new aluminum screen of a special preparation.

The Fairy is another licensed house, under the direct management of the owner, J. Mollet. At the time of my visit the Fairy was showing the Johnson-Jeffries pictures, under the special management of Chas. A. Nesser, of Toledo, Ohio, who secured the rights for Indiana and some other States. The admission charged was 50 cents.

The Hippodrome, also a licensed house and fitted with a mirror screen, claims to be doing an exceptionally good business.

The Casino, the Pearl, and the Star are three Independent houses. They all claim to have their share of the business and are very hopeful of the future, as the Independent manufacturers have greatly improved their work and are now in a position to give a good supply of good Independent pictures.

A new house is nearing completion which will be called the Colonial and will be under the management of J. Byron Cyphers. The building has been specially erected for a motion picture theater and promises to be a new attraction.

The Old Fort Film Exchange has opened offices at 721 Clinton street to deal in moving picture machines, supplies and the rental of Independent films. The prospects are very encouraging, as Fort Wayne, situated half way between Chicago and Toledo, has enough of a large territory to draw a good patronage. Our best wishes to this new exchange and its enterprising owners.

I had the pleasure of meeting C. D. Wheeler, the advertising manager of the Fort Wayne Electric Works, who took me around the large shops, full of life and noise, and showed me how the well known Compensarcs were made and carefully tested before they are shipped. It was a most interesting visit and I wished I had more time, as I am always deeply interested in mechanics. I was also much pleased to hear that the orders were keeping the works very busy, a sure sign that if the exhibitors are buying Compensarcs, motion pictures are far from dying out, but on the contrary are showing great improvements on every side. The Fort Wayne Electric Works are still expanding, and it seems that a new building is scarcely roofed when they find that they have to start work on new additions to their already large plant. J. M. B.

CAMERA CHATS.

Hardly a week passes that we are not asked by exhibitors to tell them where they can obtain high-class illustrated lectures to intersperse with the motion pictures. Having heard and highly approved a series of travelogues which have been going the rounds of the Keith & Proctor circuit, we have induced the manager thereof to place these lectures and slides within the reach of other exhibitors. On another page will be found the announcement of "Camera Chats" and below we take pleasure in printing a brief description of the series. All we have to say to the exhibitor is that the quality is there in the pictures and in the printed lecture and his measure of success will depend solely upon the ability of the lecturer he engages.

Season 1910-11.

JAPAN.

1. Rickska Ramble—Streets of Tokyo. -The curious life of an Oriental city as seen from the cushioned ease of a baby-cart vehicle -A strange mingling of the Old and the New—Tokyo, the book which you can "run and read" -A great open air bazaar—Its streets, the passageways and nearly every house a separate booth thrown wide open to the passing throngs Know Tokyo and you know Japan.

2, 3. Glimpses of Homo Life, Parts I. and II. -A revelation in the art of simple living—just enough of the inner life of a Japanese home to make you want to see more. The problems of human adornment and comfort as solved by a nation whose God is Simplicity, whose temple is Art, and whose religion is Cleanliness—not without a few good natured hints to ourselves—a people of boasted superiority.

4. Japanese Girldom. The lives of those who know but the one law—obedience—with the quaint wedding ceremony as a climax. An effort to correct some wrong impressions and to do justice to the real girlhood of Japan. Some unexpected sidelights on a subject too often discussed in the dark.

5. Japanese Babydom—Japan, "A Paradise of Babies."—The life of a Japanese boy from infancy almost to manhood—not forgetting little sister—Some hearty and intimate observations from the land where "Babies never cry." You will never forget Little Nippon!

6. Flowers and Landscape Gardens. Land of Beauty Worship -The true character of the Japanese people as displayed by their love for flowers -Their ideals of art as illustrated by the unique loveliness of their landscape gardens. More, too—an amazing realism in color and queer shapes.

7. Fuji-yama. The Peerless Mountain. -Watch its ever-changing aspect from break of day to starlight—from cherry bloom to Winter's frost; make a pilgrimage to the top; witness the magnificence of a sunrise above the clouds; see the world turned upside down; behold its matchless grandeur in these many lights, and cease to wonder that to the simple folks of Old Japan it has become a god incarnate.

8. Picturesque Religions. Part I. Temple and Priests. Not as dry as it looks. Animation of the antique with an infusion of Yankeeism. Much to admire and wonder at within many temple gates. If you laugh, the gods will laugh with you. Going back to the days when the Nation was dreaming.

9. Picturesque Religions. Part II. Gods and Worshipers.—Just to show you that going to church in Japan is vastly different from going to church in America. Gods and children of the gods at close range. Many quaint forms of worship. Spitball prayers. Curious votive offerings. Ringing of the bells of heaven. A system of wireless. Going to heaven by a different route—all of which to you and me is ridiculous, of course—but why? Be not surprised if a few pebbles fall upon your own roof.

10. A Little Journey to Miyajima, Sacred Island of the Inland Sea. —One of the "San-Kei" or three principal sights of Japan. Like a trip to another world. No place in the universe like it. Entertained by the chief priest The weird performance of a sacred dance. Deer everywhere who eat from your fingers and other strange delights of this strange locality, where birth, death, and dogs are not allowed. The glorious spectacle of an oriental sunset—a transition in gorgeous hues from daylight to dark.

11. Delightful Scenery. Japan, a dreamland of natural beauty; enchantment everywhere. A nation of Nature-worshipers. Why? No answer but this: See all that is most worth seeing, from Nikko, the magnificent, to Nagasaki! The port of a thousand farewells; see it from the standpoint of a beauty-loving Japanese. The gods have many hiding places, but none have escaped his notice

12. Schools and Athletics. Modern education. The making of a new race. Some of the flowers of western civilization flourishing in new soil. The THEN and NOW of going to school in Japan. Physical culture, a significant innovation. Wake up! and see what it is doing. "Lilliputians," "pygmies," "dwarfs" no longer. An increase in the nation's stature in a single generation Also, some food for thought in an exhibition of ancient sports—fencing, jiu-jitsu, wrestling.

13. A Nation of Busy Brown Bees.—Odds and ends of industry. The toilers. Singular facts and impressions picked up in the highways and byways. Activity everywhere. Methods that make us laugh—primitive, crude, monkey-like. Results that change ridicule into admiration. Japan, a box of riddles. For the sake of travelers yet unborn, may it never be otherwise.

14. Art Industries.—The makers and the making of many beautiful things. Getting in through the back door. Realities that seem unreal. Tracing back to their source some of the precious ornaments of our mantel shelves—porcelain, bronze, cloisonne, brocade, etc. Not a deal in chemicals and clay and weights and measures, but the nimble fingers, the eyes that see the invisible, the infinite patience, the amazing simplicity, the matchless genius, of that squatting, tea-drinking humanity which labors happily contented in the obscure corners of the nation's workshop.

15. Silk Industry.—Silk production from caterpillar to fabric. The fascinating story of those silent toilers who clothe the world in beautiful silks. For plain cold facts and figures, go to your books. Silk petticoats and ties will have an added worth when you have seen the worms and women who make them the other side of the earth.

PHILIPPINES.

16. Among the Gentle Farmer Folks of Old Japan.—Rural Japan and its merry-hearted peasantry today, yesterday, and a thousand years of yesterdays—from seed time to harvest. How the nation is fed by these miracle workers of the soil. Rice, not bread, the staff of life. Happiness without riches. Health without beefsteak. One place where the woman is as mighty as the man. The whole family roots together.

17. Our Philippine Possessions—Manila and Environs.—En route. A day at Hong Kong. Looking for those things not to be found in our own back yards at home—finding many. Modernizing the antique. Getting acquainted with the real Filipino. Interview with Aguinaldo. Life in the surrounding barrios. OLD GLORY, too, but as spangles in the light of two hemispheres.

18. Our Philippine Possessions—Trip to the Cocoanut Country. Off the beaten path—a profitable adventure beyond city limits. Some interesting facts about the cocoanut industry—and some more things worth knowing about our "Filipino Brother"—at his work at his play—at his devotions—building a home—one curiosity after another—an Eden of tropic beauty—a good place to live, but—

19. Our Philippine Possessions—Trip to the Hemp Country. Southern Luzon, where the finest hemp in the world is produced. Magnificent views of the volcano, Mayon. A revelation in tropic scenery. The story of Manila rope from stripping to shipping. The making of native cloth in the manner of our own "homespun days" with some comforts left out.

20. Our Philippine Possessions—Trip to the Igarrote Country.—Through the heart of Luzon. Much of ocean interest and more to see and talk about. Filipino farmers—planting and harvesting. Same kind of grain, same land, same day. Tropic method and strange customs at every wind of the camera. Negritos, lowest type of human being known as found in the jungle. Igarrotes, the mountain dwellers, at home and in the fields

21. Central America. Part I.

22. Central America. Part II. Tour of the five republics. General observations of a traveler in the land of "perpetual war."

23. A Cruise Down the Islands. Life and scenery and customs of the Caribbean Isles from St. Thomas to Venezuela—a part of the world but little known, yet quite worth knowing with a romantic past, a pathetic present, and a golden future.

24. The Tragedy of Martinique.

25. A Trip to the Ruins of St. Pierre. Remains one of the terrible catastrophe of 1902 a transaction in thunder, lightning, smoke, steam, brimstone, ashes, cinders, bursting bombs, hair-breadth escapes, beauty, terror and pathos.

26. Tour of the "Canadian Alps." Part I.

27. Tour of the "Canadian Alps." Part II.

28. Tour of the "Canadian Alps." Part III.

29. Canadian Winter Sports. Part I.

30. Canadian Winter Sports. Part II. -A very realistic account of a mid-Winter carnival at Montreal Wonderful Ice Palace under illumination. Snow shoeing—tobogganing—skiing, etc. "Jack Canuck" at play—the delights of a Northern Winter.

Correspondence.

WHY VAUDEVILLE IS DISCARDED.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—In your issue of September 3, I read your article, "Why Vaudeville Was Called Upon," and it was amusing to me to hear the remarks made against moving pictures by our learned and honorable C. W. Lawford. I have been a subscriber to the "World" for two years, long before I went into the picture business and I have always used your valuable articles as a guide and never fail to take advantage of its interesting columns. Now as to Mr. Lawford, when he says "Vaudeville is gradually taking the place of the picture," I do not see where he gets his information. Right here in our city, I have watched how pictures when properly projected never fail to attract. It was through "The Moving Picture World" that I did away with vaudeville and continued with pictures only. I used to read your articles the same as I read this one as to how moving pictures and vaudeville did not belong together. I hesitated a long time before I could make up my mind to change, so on January the first, of this year, I eliminated vaudeville and took the money that I was paying for punk acts as I called them (although I paid $25 for each act), and put on first-class pictures instead. My business dropped for the first week or two, but as the "World" always quoted "good pictures will always attract," I did not lose my nerve and inside of one month, my business had increased fifty per cent. I would not put vaudeville back into my house if I could get every act free. Just to show how much I think of putting it back, here, in the early Summer, I tore away my stage completely and put my curtain close up to the wall leaving no stage at all. I am running three reels of licensed film consisting of one five-day, one ten-day and a commercial. At present have gone over from the ranks of the Independents last November, although The Gem was the first Independent house in Baltimore. To give you an idea of how good pictures will draw, three houses further up the street have vaudeville and two have talking pictures and illustrated songs yet I keep my house always filled to capacity with my three reels only. Commencing next week I am going to start on an extra early service and keep on with my present policy of changing the entire three reels every day. So hoping you will find space in your valuable paper to insert this somewhat lengthy letter and also that if our dear friend Mr. Lawford would ever get in Baltimore, I would be glad to meet him and would convince him that there is one exhibitor who is not afraid of the picture having seen its best day and would be glad to show him what real good pictures can do. I remain,

Yours truly,

JOHN H. HEINZ,
Gem Theater.

714-16 E. Baltimore street,
Baltimore, Md.

HEARST AND THE PICTURES.

[illegible], Mass., September 20, 1910.
Moving Picture World, New York, N. Y.

[illegible] an advertisement [illegible] the pages of the [illegible] Sunday which I think will be of interest to the exhibitors in general. In view of the attitude assumed by the Hearst papers toward the industry, concerning the effect of pictures upon school children, there is a humorous side overlooked by the publishers in the portion that I have marked. As a passing thought, it also occurs to me that the so-called "clean, wholesome, sparkling humor" [illegible] of the Hearst Sunday editions may not be proper food for young minds. The experiences of Hans and Fritz, Little Jimmie and Buster Brown are such that if reproduced in motion pictures, there would be a tremendous outcry from parents and teachers from coast to coast, not to mention sedate Professors of Philosophy in Kansas and other centers of culture. The characters above mentioned, continue their existence only through their negative qualities. They are all disobedient, mischievous, untruthful and impolite.

I am aware that railing against Sunday Comic Sections is futile but at the same time there is a satisfaction in relieving one's mind, and I fully believe that a much more fertile field than moving pictures is offered the professional reformer. I suggest that you turn the idea over to Professor McKeever, who fully deserved all that the World handed him.

Yours sincerely,
H. F. JACKSON.

EXTRACT FROM ADVERTISEMENT OF ONE OF HEARST'S NEWSPAPERS.

"For instance, what other publication ever produced a feature as PERPETUALLY FUNNY as MUTT and LITTLE JEFF? In one of the Boston schools this week a teacher asked:

"'What is the most important event of the week?'

"The hand of one little boy went up instantly and a smile of satisfaction and certainty played over his face.

"'What is it, William?' inquired the teacher.

"'Mutt and Jittle Jeff have come back from their vacation!' promptly replied the boy.

"There you are! Can you beat it?

"Then take Mr. Dirks's HANS and FRITZ. If a man could write a book or a play that would hold the public as long and as completely as those frisky youngsters he would make an immense fortune."

The Hearst (moving) pictures are decidedly more in need of censorship than the pictures of the films. If the Boston child is quoted correctly, which we very much doubt, it is a weighty argument in favor of the movement that has been started amongst school teachers to discourage the reading of newspapers by school children.

PUTTING IT OVER US.

10 East Fifteenth Street,
New York, September 15, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

We are mailing you under separate cover a poster of our release of Wednesday, September 21.

We are somewhat worried about possible criticism of the bill, especially as the lithographer misinterpreted our suggestions and went beyond the limit.

We will admit the film is rather a sensational one and a distinct departure from our usual run of subjects, yet we feel the public demand more or less "blood and thunder" and we have "taken the bull by the horns," as it were, just to test censorship in the various cities and further sound out the picture public.

"Trailing the Black Hand" will be on view at the Comedy Theater on Fourteenth street on the date of issue, Wednesday, the 21st. We extend courtesies herewith and suggest you arrange to see the film and frankly voice your opinion of it.

Believing you are sufficiently interested in our welfare to grant the above request and with best wishes, we are,

Yours very faithfully,
ATLAS FILM COMPANY,
By H. R. Raver.

[Accepting the above invitation and the challenge implied therein, we betook ourselves to the Comedy Theater on the date specified. Our opinion of the sensational poster referred to would not be befitting to these pages. The film itself was a poorly photographed and stupid version of an idea carried out in comedy some two years ago by a European manufacturer. The "black hand" appeared to be the imprint of a chimney-sweep's digits on clean linen, with the usual chase. If this is the best kind of picture that the Atlas Company can produce, we suggest that they get down to the alphabet of the business. The joke is on you this time, Mr. Raver.—Ed. M. P. World.]

HINTS ON OPERATING THE FATHE PROFESSIONAL PROJECTOR.

The Pathe Professional Projector is perhaps the simplest moving picture mechanism on the American market, and by reason of this simplicity the necessary directions to the operator will occupy considerably less space than those of other machines.

The machine is threaded by bringing the film out of the upper magazine, over the top of and down between the top sprocket and its idler. From the upper loop the film goes down through the gate, the lower loop being formed in the inside of the machine between the intermittent sprocket and the lower take-up or feed sprocket. Care must be had not to have loops too long, or film will rub against the iron of the machine and become scratched. Use a little judgment and common sense in forming the loops with this machine.

The tension is taken care of by two long tension shoes set in the gate and held in place by two flat springs on the front of the gate. Should the aperture plate film tracks become worn, they may be removed by loosening the three small screws seen in their face. Should top gate idler spring become too slack and not hold the idler in its place, remove front fire guard and the spring which holds the idler bracket and carefully bend it (the spring) slightly. The shoe which holds the film against the intermittent sprocket should be renewed whenever it shows any considerable sign of wear. It is removed by merely loosening two springs and slipping it out of place.

To remove the intermittent sprocket for renewal, first take off the large crank gear and its shaft. Next remove the pin from the hub of the lower chain sprocket wheel and drive out shaft, thus removing the center gear on the operating side. We next remove the remaining large gear which meshes into the small flywheel pinion, by taking out the screw in the center of its hub.

Now, looking in the front (lens side) of the machine, we see two large screws which hold the framework of the shutter gear and spindle; remove these two screws. Immediately above these two will be seen, on either side, two more large-head screws which hold the lower end of intermittent casing frame, with two more above holding the upper end. Remove all of these screws and the whole framework, intermittent and flywheel will lift out. Now having the intermittent casement thus removed from the machine, the substituting of a new intermittent sprocket will be a very simple operation. The putting of the intermittent back into the machine is merely the reversal of the process of taking it out, being sure, however, that there is no dirt on the bearings of the intermittent framework when you put it back, and that all screws are set up good and tight.

The chain which drives the upper feed sprocket should be well oiled with a mixture of vaseline and graphite or other similar compound. The chain should not be very tight, neither should it be loose.

On the gate of the machine is the automatic fire shutter, and right beside the flywheel the lever which operates it. Immediately under the gate latch is the screw which holds this lever in place. Should the shutter not work freely it will probably be by reason of the fact that this screw is a trifle too tight, the remedy being to loosen it. This lever is worked by an eccentric on the inner hub of the flywheel. Looking at the inner side of the flywheel you will see a wide slot or groove in its surface. It is in this groove that the automatic fire shutter governor works, and it should be kept sparingly lubricated with vaseline.

The star wheel runs in an oil well which should be kept filled with a heavy lubricating oil.

The Pathe Company recommends that the star wheel be not adjusted or in any way interfered with by the operator. They claim that the star wheel and cam, if kept properly lubricated, will outwear the balance of the mechanism.

The holes for oiling are as follows: Two on the shutter shaft (one in the front and one in the back); two on the intermittent sprocket, on either side; two on the star-wheel shaft; one next to the flywheel (which lubricates the automatic shutter mechanism); one on the outside of the flywheel; two on upper sprocket shaft; two on the lower sprocket and one in the hub of the large gear on operating side of the machine.

On the inside of the fire shutter are the two steel rollers which hold the film in place on the lower or take-up feed sprocket. It is not only necessary but essential that these rollers shall revolve freely at all times.

The take-up tension on the lower magazine is controlled by a fibre washer working between two steel surfaces compressed together by a spring, the amount of tension being governed by the milled thumbscrew on the end of shaft. We would advise that you take this apart and examine it so that you will be familiar with its working, being careful, of course, to put it together properly. The claw play which draws the tape up should not be too tight, and the tension should only be such as will barely take up the slack through to the end of the run.

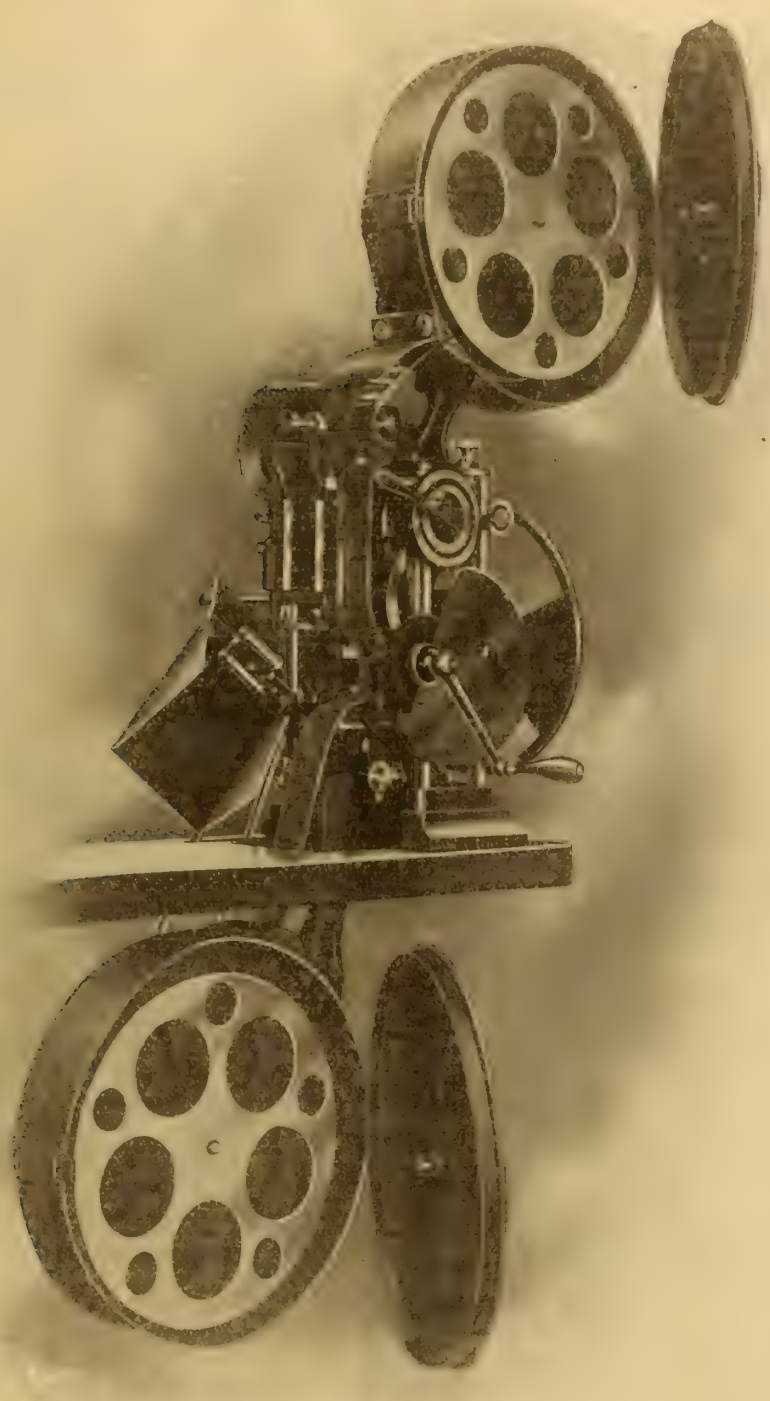
The setting of the revolving shutter to eliminate travel ghost is accomplished by clamping it in or out on the spindle. The screw is the head setting, at centre, for the ordinary shot.

The intermittent movement may be examined at any time by removing the cover in the side of the casing, but, as I before stated, the company recommends that inexperienced let the intermittent severely alone.



The Pathe Professional Projecting Machine.

Mr. Exhibitor

The house that tells the Truth !

Funny isn't it ?

We are not buying a thousaud reels a week,—but we ARE buying Enough to supply Any customer that we agree to Supply with the Best to be Had.

Why not write us to-day before you forget it.

THE BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.
(THE HOUSE OF MERIT)
309-311-313-317 Arcade Building
DAYTON, OHIO

UNBREAKABLE SLIDES

Patent applied for

The only manufacturers of non-breakable slides.
WHY : Because we fill all orders promptly.
This is no fake ad. We deliver the goods. Try us. Give us your order and see.

Song slides, glass $4.00, unbreakable, $5.00 a set
Announcement slides, glass $30.00 a 100
" " unbreakable 40.00 a 100

All work first-class and work guaranteed.

Send for catalogue of song and announcement slides

THE PARIS SLIDE CO.
932 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

SPECIAL ROLL TICKETS

The Big Ticket. Any Printing Any Colors.

5,000 - - - - $1.25	20,000 - - - - $4.60	50,000 - - - - $7 50
10,000 - - - - 2.50	25,000 - - - - 5.50	100,000 - - - - 10.00

Get the Samples — Stock Tickets, 6 Cents

NATIONAL TICKET COMPANY - - - Shamokin, Pa.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

EXAMINATION DAY AT SCHOOL.—You can catch more flies with honey than with gall, and you can easier be kindness than by tyranny. This fact is shown in this Biograph pastoral, which indeed might prove a lesson to educators. The teacher is thoroughly impart knowledge must win first the love of his pupil, otherwise his efforts are in vain. The old village schoolmaster is a lovable soul, and you can see the love his scholars bear him written on their smiling countenances as they scamper on to school. He in turn comes trudging along, his face lit up in the pleasant anticipation of soon being in the midst of his loved ones. All greet him joyously at his entrance and there are the little remembrance, an apple from one, a pear from another, a bouquet from another, etc. The opening exercises begin and the odious announcement that the county examiner will be there is received with frowns and pouts. The examiner arrives outside and the old teacher goes to meet and escort him into the classroom. While he is absent Jimmy the village "cutup," draws a caricature of the examiner on the blackboard. This so incenses the irascible personage that he immediately dismisses the class for the morning and when they have gone discharges the poor old schoolmaster. What a blow. He goes home almost heartbroken at the thought of losing the association of his dear little flock. Jimmy later becomes truly contrite for what he did, and with the scholars at his heels runs off to the teacher's home to beg his pardon. Here they learn what woe their lark has caused—their dear old teacher discharged. In the meantime, the examiner has gone to the Commissioners' office and engages a new teacher whom he enjoins to lambaste these youngsters into submission. With what success we shall see. The scholars unanimously plan a revolt and no sooner has the new instructor turned his back than he receives a fusilade of fruit and vegetables. Well, they soon whip him and he rushes off to the Commissioners' to tender his resignation. The children bellow and insist upon the reinstatement of their old teacher. Their plea is granted, so they hurry off to the teacher's home and fairly carry him back to the schoolhouse. The class again in session, the old teacher gives thanks, writing on the blackboard, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow—," the children singing as he writes.

ROSE O' SALEM-TOWN.—Reliable authority states that nine million human lives were sacrificed through the zeal of fanatical reformers during the Christian epoch. Religious fanaticism was in most cases the cause, still there were many victimized to satisfy a personal grudge, and this Biograph subject shows how easily such a crime can be perpetrated. Play upon the minds of a superstitious people and you may lead them blindly to any end. In 1692 the agitation was so great in Salem, Mass., that many people lost their self-possession, some even believing themselves to be witches. On the other hand, a number of the inhabitants moved away for fear of being accused of being witches. There are many relics of those days still in existence at Salem, and while conditions are such as to prevent our using the actual spots, yet many of the scenes of the picture are closely contiguous to them, our company of players making the trip there for the purpose. The story tells of the old mother and her child living on the sea coast, care free. The mother eks a living telling fortunes and nursing the sick among the village folk. The girl we might term a child of the sea, as she spends most of her time among the wave-lashed rocks of the coast, scampering from jut to jut more resembling a sprite than a human. Off in the hills we find a trapper at the camp of Mohawk Indians, on his way to the sea, of which he had heard but never seen. A Mohawk brave volunteers to guide him to the great waters of the Atlantic leaving him there overwhelmed with awe at the grandeur of the spectacle. Here he meets the pretty maiden and an attachment develops which later ripens into love, a betrothal resulting. As the girl reaches her home she is accosted by a hypocritical Puritan deacon whose insulting advances she indignantly repulses. He in revenge goes to the other churchmen and accuses the girl and her mother of being witches. Proof sufficient to convince these narrow-minded fanatics is easy to obtain, for the fact of the old lady's care and curing the sick is known to all. Hence they purposely construe her kindness to be witchcraft. The poor souls are seized and thrown into prison and later condemned by a prejudiced jury to be burned at the stake. As they are carried to the jail they are met by the trapper sweetheart, who learning of her pending danger, rushes off to enlist the aid of his Mohawk friends to rescue her from this awful fate. The mother is first to be made a victim and while she is suffering the injustice inflicted upon her the deacon visits the girl's cell and shows her from the window her mother's fate, with the hope of weakening her determination. She still repulses him and so is led forth to be victimized as was her mother. Meanwhile her sweetheart has gotten his Mohawk friends and is rushing to the rescue, arriving just as the torch is put to the brushwood piled up around the girl. With a mad dash the Indians rush upon the scene, knocking down and scattering the fanatics and carrying the girl off before the Puritans realize what has taken place. In fact, it was done so quickly that some of the more superstitious thought she went up in smoke.

EDISON MFG. CO.

A JAR OF CRANBERRY SAUCE. The story starts with the departure for the metropolis of Silas, a farmer but nobody's fool. His wife out of the goodness of her heart insists on putting up a lunch for him in spite of his protest that he is going to stop at a first-class hotel and buy the things to eat. She wins him over to her way of thinking by putting in a jar of his favorite cranberry sauce, and he takes his departure with it and a cheerful countenance in consequence thereof.

Arriving in town, he is assigned to a room which has two doors, one leading into the hall and the other into the next room. He goes down to the cafe but finds that the prices quoted opposite the things he would like to eat, have taken away his appetite. He hies him back to his room and to Mandy's lunch, which looks very good to him now. Meanwhile in the room next door a young man is reading his fourth penny-dreadful and becoming very much excited over the story of "The Crime in Room Thirteen." He grows so nervous as he follows its progress that he gets a revolver out of his suitcase and puts it down beside himself, more to feel secure than with any idea of using it.

Silas, munching his sandwiches, comes down to the stage where cranberry sauce is in order and starts to open the jar, but the jar refuses to do its part and a struggle ensues. In the next room the young man hears strange and unearthly sounds through the door—groans and grunts and heavy feet moving about the carpet. He becomes nervous, goes to the door to listen, and then hears muttered curses, low and deep. Silas is having the time of his life with the jar. Finally with a desperate wrench the cover comes off, but the jar itself flies against the door to the next room and the contents are spilled upon the door and sill and carpet.

On the other side of the door the trembling young man is listening to the apparent struggle of a strong man with his helpless victim, and is trying to decide whether to shout for police and thereby put his own life in danger or to stand by and allow the crime to be perpetrated without taking a hand. And then from underneath the door sill, soon after he hears the victim fall upon the floor, there creeps a red pool which adds to his certainty that he is the unwilling witness to a terrible tragedy. At this he incontinently rushes to the office of the hotel, reports the case and calls the police.

Silas in his room is cursing and not without reason, for he has hurt his finger, lost all of his cranberry sauce and is in a thundering bad temper in consequence. He decides that there is nothing else to do but go to bed, and has just pulled off one of his boots when there is a peremptory knock at the door and a voice bids him open in the name of the law. Taking his boot for self defense, he opens the door and stands confronted by two officers, the clerk of the hotel, the bell boy and the brave young man from next door. They force him back, charge him with a crime, seek for his victim and then when he demands an explanation point to the blood upon the floor.

At the word "blood" it dawns upon Silas that the drinks are on somebody else. Dipping his hand into the gore (?), he applies his fingers to the young man's mouth, much to our hero's disgust; but the evidence is irrefutable and the picture closes with the young man beating a precipitate retreat before the officers and the other members of the searching party can take their vengeance upon him.

ALMOST A HERO.—It begins with Percy behind a ribbon counter and shows his longing to be a man of deeds and of valor. Of course his reason for this is his desire to be admired by the pretty girls who come to the counter to buy ribbons and laces from him. We see how the desire works out as he goes into training with all of the physical culture apparatus known, and with prize fighters and baseball players as models to work to. He even learns marksmanship with the revolver to be sure of playing his part well when the occasion for very valorous deeds arises.

And it does arise, for soon we see him on the street, the accidental observer of a pickpocket plying his nefarious trade with a pretty girl for his victim. Percy dashes to the rescue and seizes the scoundrel by the collar, but instead of acting as any well regulated pickpocket should do and making a desperate effort to retreat, this pickpocket stands up to Percy and abuses him roundly. He is soon joined by two other vociferous gentlemen who hurl anathemas upon Percy's unprotected head until he feels that a pickpocket is a more popular character than an honest man. Finally it is forced upon his consciousness that he has walked into the taking of a scene in a motion picture, interrupted the camera's work and is thereby making himself decidedly unpopular. He is too disgusted to apologize but swallows his chagrin over this first attempt at heroism and beats a retreat.

Another opportunity soon appears. When walking in the park he sees a heavily veiled young woman attacked by two desperadoes, who struggle with her on a flight of stone steps apparently with the intention of abducting her. He draws his trusty revolvers and calls upon them to throw up their hands. They do throw them up, but in his direction, like his revolvers away from him and again point in the distance, where he sees another motion picture camera and where he recognizes the same friends upon whose operations he had intruded only a short time before. He resolves to be more careful next time, and the next time is not long in coming.

A young woman in a lonely place in the park goes to the edge of the water, stands waving her arms distractedly and then plunges into the dark depths of the river. Percy throws off his hat, dives in after her and, although he cannot swim, tries to drag her to shore. For the third time the motion picture people appear upon the scene and for the third time Percy finds himself a victim of misplaced confidence. He can't swim and he is obliged to accept the help of the lady to escape from the waters, after which a friendly policeman takes him gently by the collar and leads him away to the evident satisfaction of the motion picture people.

The last scene shows a lonely country road. A young girl appears, and from the bushes a tramp steals forth. He sees a jewel upon her neck and decides that it would be well for him to possess it. He speaks to her with assumed politeness and she tries to get past him, but he stops her and invites her to present him with the jewel. She turns looking for help in all directions, and then Percy appears upon the scene a short distance in the rear. She calls wildly to him and he dashes down to her rescue—then suddenly the memory of past scenes dawns upon him and he stops and smilingly signs to her that he is too wise to again get into a motion picture. At this instant a burly young chap dashes upon the scene, seizes the tramp and throws him to the ground. The girl promptly embraces her preserver. Percy applauds this warmly and congratulates them upon their realistic acting, and then learns to his unending sorrow that he has missed the one real opportunity of his life—that the tramp was a real one, the girl was a real one and the hero was a real one, while he was only a might-have-been.

OVER MOUNTAIN PASSES.—This film, taken by our special operator in South America, shows us scenes in the Andes of Peru and will introduce an animal to many a spectator which he has probably never before seen, namely, the llama, a native of Peru. This animal is described as having a camel's head, a sheep's body and the feet and legs of a deer. This is curious enough, but when we find further that the llama, besides being an extremely docile animal, is largely used as a beast of burden our interest is still further increased.

We see a drove of them loaded at the mine at the top of the mountain, and we watch them come down the steep mountain side, crossing the high passes and beautiful torrents. On the way down this drove meets another going in the opposite direction and it is curious to see how the animals "flock by themselves." No member of one drove mixes for the fraction of a moment with the other. Through scenes of exceeding beauty they finally reach their destination, and we see the copper ore unloaded for shipment at the mine warehouse of the railway station.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

CURING A MASHER.—Mr. Pest is a certain type of nuisance with whom you are all more or less familiar. A silly egotist with an exaggerated notion of his own importance, he believes that every woman he meets will fall an easy victim to his charms. As our story opens Mr. Pest is seen parading a fashionable drive watching his chance to make a mash with some fair damsel.

An opportunity comes at last, but the young lady is far from won by his smirking smile and walks away with a defiant toss of her head. Mr. Pest makes another attempt but is soundly slapped for his troubles. Not daunted by this the masher approaches a third young woman and makes his annoying advances despite her threats to summon a policeman.

Finally, however, the young lady's eyes light and she turns to the masher with a smile that means acquiescence. Certainly, she will be pleased to have Mr. Pest's company. Then she goes on to explain that she has some shopping to do and would Mr. Pest be so kind as to help her home with her things.

Little knowing what this means, Mr. Pest nods his head, and with an elegant bow takes her arm. The young woman pauses in front of a hardware store and first of all purchases a dozen flatirons and a heavy pail to carry them in. When she goes into her purse, however, the masher waves her aside and pays the little bill himself, not suspecting she may make other more expensive purchases. They visit store after store and Mr Pest, having spent all his money, is loaded down to the gunwales with all sorts of heavy and cumbersome merchandise. Besides the flat-irons and pail he is now carrying a watermelon, lawn-mower, a garden hose, foot-tub, a large hat box, etc.

The scenes which follow are ridiculously funny. The young lady prefers to walk and her escort is a sorry sight when he finishes the two-mile hike.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Released September 26th, 1910

Rose O' Salem-Town

A Story of Puritan Witchcraft

Reliable authority states that nine million human lives were sacrificed through the zeal of fanatical reformers during the Christian epoch. Religious fanaticism was in most cases the cause, still there were many victimized to satisfy a personal grudge, and this Biograph subject shows how easily such a crime can be perpetrated. Play upon the minds of a superstitious people and you may lead them blindly to any end. A hypocritical Puritan is repulsed by a pretty little maiden of the sea coast, and to be revenged he has both she and her widowed mother accused of witchcraft. The poor mother is victimized, but the girl is saved through the intervention of her sweetheart, aided by the Indians. The scenic beauty of the subject is a feature.

Approximate Length, 998 Feet

Released September 29th, 1910

Examination Day at School

An Object Lesson to Educators

You can catch more flies with honey than with gall, and you rule easier by kindness than by tyranny. This fact is shown in this Biograph pastoral, which indeed might prove a lesson to educators. The teacher to thoroughly impart knowledge must win first the love of his pupil, otherwise his efforts are in vain. The old village schoolmaster is beloved by his scholars, and through an innocent lark of one of the boys he is dismissed by an irate member of the school board, and another put in his place. The children rebel, and to re-establish peace the old man is re-instated. The subject is a most entertaining one, being a combination of comedy and pathos, with beautiful rustic setting.

Approximate Length, 991 Feet

BIOGRAPH COMPANY

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

MONEY FOR EXHIBITORS

Get It. It's Yours

REWINDERS $1.25

Machine parts sold for less

WHY?

Write, Davis Manufacturing and Supply Company

PREBLE AVENUE - ALLEGHENY, PA.

Drums, Traps and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.

272 Wabash Avenue Chicago

FILMS FOR RENT

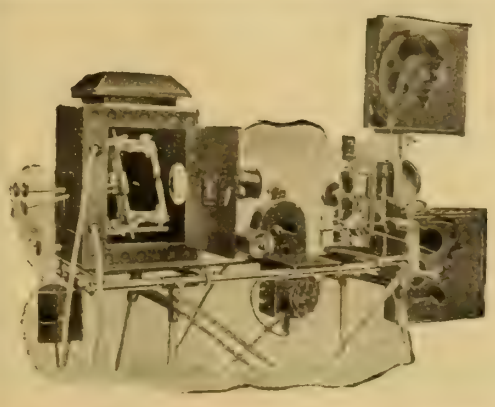
New Films High Class Service

The Pioneer House, With 8 Years Experience and $250,000.00 Back Of It

Write To-day for Terms

EUGENE CLINE

57 and 59 Dearborn St., Chicago



The "STANDARD"

The Machine That Gives RESULTS

Only Machine Approved by the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, Where Motor is Used.

Fire Proof—Flickerless

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

Send for Illustrated Catalogue

MANUFACTURED BY

AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE CO.

101 BEEKMAN STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co.

up four flights of stairs to the young lady's apartments is the climax of a horrible journey—for Mr. Peet. And when they get inside a strapping big chap in a sweater and boxing gloves is waiting for them. The young and pretty Mrs. Smart introduces her husband.

Mr. Peet does not faint, but he makes haste to remove his cumbersome parcels and to "beat it" out of the house, tripping down the stairs in the tangles of the hose.

And later when he meets a young woman who invites him to bet with her he shoos her on her way and lifts up his hands solemnly in an attitude which says quite plainly, "Never again!"

PATRICIA OF THE PLAINS. Patricia Watkins and her father are proprietors of the Lariat Saloon and dance hall but because of his small size and his tendency to keep in a state of perpetual drunkenness the old man has little to do with the business. Patricia as a barmaid meets all the riff-raff of humanity drifting across the plains to the West and the Lariat Saloon is noted far and wide, not so much for the quality of its poisons as for the pretty maid who always offers a smile with the drink.

On the evening our story opens, Patricia receives from the up stage driver a box of bullion with instructions to guard it carefully until the next day, when it will be picked up by the mountain stage. As the coach hauls up at the front of the saloon a man on horseback watches from behind a boulder, and, satisfied the box is left in care of the Watkins', wheels around and rides down the trail. Next we see him join a confederate and after a short consultation both ride to the Lariat and enter. It is perfectly evident that the second man, apparently the master of the two, is greatly impressed by the girl's beauty, and after a few drinks he strikes up an acquaintance with the girl. Sheriff Dixon, who is also in love with Patricia, enters, looks the stranger over, but refuses to shake hands with him when Patricia offers to introduce her new friend. Later, when the girl leaves the saloon for the cabin she turns Dixon down cold and to further arouse his jealousy accepts the stranger's invitation to accompany her home.

An hour later Sheriff Dixon receives a note in which it is stated that Dick Martin, a highwayman, is in his vicinity and a description of Martin corresponds with that of Patricia Watkins' new friend. The Sheriff loses no time in his effort to capture his rival. Riding first to the Lariat he learns that Martin is still at the Watkins' cabin, but arrives there too late as Patricia has hidden the bad man and informs the Sheriff and his posse that he left an hour before. The Sheriff shows Patricia a photograph of Martin and tells her that he is wanted and will swing if he is caught. However, the girl does not give him up but when the Sheriff leaves she sends Martin away refusing to shake hands with him in parting.

Not long after, Martin, who has tried to make his escape, is shot and wounded by the Sheriff, but succeeds in eluding him while he makes his way on foot to Patricia's cabin. After hearing his story the girl takes pity on him and hides him in a loft just as the Sheriff again enters. Dixon makes love to Patricia and endeavors to take her in his arms. A drop of blood from the wounded man above, splatters on the Sheriff's hand and in a rage he pulls down the ladder and orders Martin to come down.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

THE RESERVED SHOT. In the year 1815, at the camp of Grenoble, the old soldiers of Napoleon and the young officers of the king are banqueting. A sensational telegram brings joy among the one and consternation among the other.

Napoleon has landed at the Gulf Juan. There the soldiers sent to stop him have refused to fight and have followed him towards the north.

An old soldier quarrels with a King's officer, blows are exchanged, and a duel arranged. Each duellist is to have one shot.

On the next day, the duel takes place, the king's officer shoots and misses. The old soldier, instead of firing, says he will use his chance at a later day.

Ten years have passed. The king reigns again in France. The royal officer has forgotten his duel. It is his birthday and his wife and children are giving to him their best wishes, when a man comes with a card. It is a card from his almost forgotten opponent demanding him to continue the duel begun ten years earlier.

The officer kisses his wife and children and leaves them in tears.

At the meeting place the Napoleonite is ready to shoot when the royal officer's little boy arrives, and beseeches the soldier to do no harm to his father. The boy's plea is successful.

THE TIMES ARE OUT OF JOINT.—A wonderful film in which the people work and move so quickly, that it makes the heart sick to think that one day we might have to do the same. A clock, in a certain family, gets out of order, and the hands develop a frightful tendency to move round at an abnormal pace. This affects the household, causing them to do likewise. The clock is taken to be repaired, and the complaint attacks the clockmaker so vitally that the repairs are done in no time. The clock, however, has not lost its power, and as the owner speeds back with it, the effect on everyone who got near it is horrible. Then him is absolutely filled with long-felt pedaling situations.

THE SUNKEN SUBMARINE. A good dramatic story and very pretty, too. A young sailor writes home to his sweetheart, informing her that he has been appointed quartermaster of the Playboy. Great rejoicing takes place at his promotion, but it is followed a day after by the news that the Playboy has been sunk and all lives lost. The family are mourning their sad loss, when a telegram is brought in saying that the grandson was at the last moment transferred to another ship.

TOO MUCH WATER.—A certain gentleman wakes up one morning and makes the horrible discovery that the town is being flooded. After surveying the damage done, he hurriedly makes preparations in case his residence becomes endangered, and to do this he fits up a boat, provisions it and places it in readiness to be launched from the window. Night arrives, he prepares for rest, and washing preparatory to going to bed, he omits to turn off the tap. In his sleep he has a most horrible nightmare in which he is drowning, and in his fright he leaps out of bed only to find his room flooded. He retains his self possession, however, and boarding the boat, gracefully launches it through the window, the only mishap being that it capsizes when reaching the water.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

SCENES IN THE CELESTIAL EMPIRE.—We have pleasure in announcing the publication of a unique series of film subjects which graphically and vividly illustrate not only the life and customs, the processions, festivals, pastimes and industry of a country strange to Western eyes, but also the varied scenery of one leading city of the empire.

A vivid picture of life in Shanghai, giving representative glimpses of both the native and European elements, which, apparently, do not intermingle freely. In the native quarter everything is typically Eastern: in the European the atmosphere is as typically Western. There is even a smart volunteer—or territorial—regiment.

G. MELIES.

A PLUCKY AMERICAN GIRL.—Just plain Mary Ann, that's all, but there is something about this little country girl which stamps her as the right sort, with grit, grip and gumption to distinguish her among the famous men and women of the twentieth century, or any other century for that matter.

Her father is a faithful old servant in the employ of the D. & C. R. R. as a signal man in a tower on the lonely stretch of the track at a very important junction. After his day's work, Mary Ann, who has studied telegraphy and likes to practice, comes to the tower to go home with her father, after the night signal man comes to relieve him. The night man is somewhat delayed and her father leaves Mary Ann at the signal station while he goes home to get his supper and rest. He starts down the track and discovers that part of the rails have been torn up by a party of desperadoes, who design to wreck and rob the special limited. The old employee turns back on his way to the tower to report the danger and warn the trainmen. As he does so he is shot and wounded by the villains. He manages, however, to get back to the tower, where he finds the night agent on duty and Mary Ann gone home. While he is telling the night man about the torn track the outlaws burst into the room, shoot the nightman and knock the older man senseless.

Mary Ann, sleepy and tired, impatiently waiting for her father's return, looks out the window for him and notices there is something wrong with the switch and signal tower, looks at the clock and realizes that the "limited" is soon due. She hurries from the house, sees that the signals are not set for the "express" and quickly makes up her mind to get to the next station to notify the oncoming train. She sees a hand-car standing on a siding, jumps aboard and plies the handles. Soon she is at the station, breaks the window, jumps in and sends a message along the line, reaching a station where the message is received and in which the sheriff of the county happens to be. The station agent tells him, he forms a posse at once and they start out, signal the train, avert the wreck and arrest the outlaws; and all through the nerve and pluck of Mary Ann.

PATHE FRERES.

MAX IS ABSENT-MINDED.—This represents Max as a charming fellow, but with an unfortunate habit of becoming absorbed in a single train of thought which leads him to commit such hopeless blunders as pouring coffee into his hat, deserting fair companions in the street for the sake of a match and wedding with his daughter that evening. Max re-borrowing "lights" without returning the cigarettes to their rightful owners. He is negotiating with a horse dealer for the purchase of a mare. He finds the animal unsuitable, and writes a short note to the dealer to the effect that he is not inclined to buy. He has barely signed the letter, when he receives another from his future father-in-law, with an invitation to dine and to fix the date of the plebs, but in his usual distraught way he slips his notes into the wrong envelopes, so that the old gentleman receives the following: "It is useless your reckoning upon me. I do not want her for several reasons just because she is too old, secondly she is knock-kneed, and lastly she bites. * * * *" It is not to be surprised that the engagement is cancelled.

THE HOODOO. Augustus Slip is one of the beneficiaries under his uncle's will and he is summoned to attend at the office of the attorney for the estate to receive his legacy. Amidst great grief he receives from the attorney a package which, on opening it up, turns out to be an ancient statue of a little Indian god. Real grief now shows itself, for Augustus had expected larger and better things. However, he determines to keep it, for his uncle was a good fellow and he puts it in his pocket, and meeting some friends, shows it to them. One of them, who apparently knows, tells him that it is a hoodoo. Augustus does not believe in such things and decides to still keep it. When, however, a waiter in a restaurant upsets a tray full of orders over him and he is knocked down by an automobile, and on his return home finds a letter from his fiancee putting an end to their engagement, he comes to the conclusion that his friends were right and decides to give the little idol away. He first tries his butler, but he soon discovers that it is a hoodoo and returns it to him. Next a faking blind man who opens his eyes and seeing what it is, returns it to him. Then he places it in a small grip and leaves it in a quarry where a blast is just going to take place, and runs away, but the blast explodes and the bag and its contents are hurled so as to fall at his feet. Finally it seems to him a good plan to leave it on the sidewalk while he jumps on a car, but a thief sees it and runs away with it. A cop, however, notices the thief take it and gets back the bag and rushes off after the car with it. Almost exhausted, he gets up just as Augustus steps off. Disconcerted, Augustus runs away, but the cop and several hundred school children just coming out from school are after him and he is soon caught and the bag handed back to Augustus. He decides to go and see his late fiancee and explain matters to her. At first she will not speak to him, but after an explanation she fetches a hammer and tells him he had better smash this unlucky idol. He does so, but what is their surprise to find in it the plan of a secret diamond mine and a goodly lot of large samples from the mine. Needless to say that the hoodoo is now at an end and Augustus and his girl make it up and determine to share these riches together.

THE SICK BABY. The wife of a drunkard whose child is lying sick is receiving the visit of the doctor whilst her husband is drinking away what little money is left him. The doctor shakes his head ominously as he looks at the child and leaves behind him the prescription for an expensive medicine. The mother, whose pockets are empty, stares at it blankly after he has left, and then, with a sudden movement of fury, snatches up her shawl and runs out to find her husband, after bidding a neighbor watch by the child. In the saloon a painful scene takes place between husband and wife, but at last the latter induces the man, who is at that point where he is stupidly jovial, to accompany her home. Here she endeavors to make him realize that the child is dying for want of care, but it is a hopeless task. After giving vent first to a display of maudlin affection and then to a fit of ungovernable fury, the semi-brute of a drunkard falls into a heavy sleep on the floor. Impelled by some unknown force, the woman then goes out again into the street. It is snowing hard, and, overcome by fatigue and cold, she sinks down on a bench. A tipsy night reveller rouses her from her lethargy with an incoherent invitation to be up and be jolly. He follows up his invitation by brandishing a pocketbook stuffed with notes before her eyes, but she moves off, and the fellow, sinking down on the bench, lets fall the pocketbook. The woman sees it and is tempted to abstract one of the notes before taking it to the station house. Here she finds innumerable formalities have to be gone through before she can be allowed to depart, and whilst she is recounting her story the reveller appears to declare his loss. The pocketbook is opened, the notes counted, and the missing one is found in her possession. She tells her story and the reveller, a little touched, refuses to prosecute. But the end of the story is not yet, for some thirty minutes after the woman returns home, a knock is heard at the door. It is the toper, who, with his arms full of provisions and medicine, is rather a curious object. He hands his burden to the ever-joyed woman, gives the baby the first spoonful of the restorative medicine, and, with unconscious humor, winds up with a little homily to the now sobered husband on the evils of drinking.

WHO OWNS THE RUG.—Who owns the rug? It is indeed a conundrum; for the more often you see this picture, the more uncertain you will be as to who is really the rightful owner. Firstly you will probably favor Mrs. Smith, who first purchased it from Ikestein and laid it on her doorstep as a mat. But what is Mrs. Jones' position when tricky Ikestein furtively picked up the rug and took it next door and sold it to her. Did not she, as an innocent purchaser, have a right to believe that the rug was hers? It was hers, too, for a few minutes, for she, also thinking it would

EDISON FILMS

RELEASED OCTOBER 4th

More than His Duty

A Story of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police of Canada

A gripping story, taken at the posts of the Royal Mounted, scenically beautiful and dealing with the finest and best disciplined body of men in the world.

The hero of the picture, one of the Royal Mounted, shows a higher and nobler heroism than the mere physical heroism expected and exacted from all members of the force.

Approximate Length, 1,000 Feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 7th

BUMPTIOUS PLAYS BASEBALL

Derided and scorned at the beginning our hero finally gets a chance to get square with his critics and perhaps this time he would really make good did not his ever present hoodoo catch his eye at the critical moment. The varied personalities of the players and those on the grand stand are most amusing.

THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER

This is a real comedy gem. The pretty daughter—and she is really so pretty that no man could see her and keep his heart—has several suitors. One thinks up a plan by which he will get rid of the others and have her all to himself. The plan works admirably, but alas! he falls a victim to it himself at the end.

On One Reel—Approximate Length, 995 Feet

Don't Fail to Book the Third of the Canadian Series—"The Song that reached his heart." Released October 11

Send us a Postal for the "KINETOGRAM." A. B. C. DISPLAY POSTERS help you

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY

72 Lakeside Avenue, Orange, New Jersey - 90 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

ANOTHER HIT

An Indian's Gratitude

To Be Released on Saturday, October 8th

A story of California in the Fifties. Only two characters are palefaces. The rest are all natives

A FILM YOU CAN FEATURE

41 West 25th Street NEW YORK PATHÉ FRÈRÉS 35 Randolph St. CHICAGO

good deal, spread it on the top of her [illegible]. Unfortunately for her, Uncle Si was awaiting his opportunity, and as soon as she had disappeared indoors, he rolled it up and went next door and sold it to Mrs. Robinson who likewise used it as a covering. Mrs. Robinson purchased the rug, not knowing that Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jones had each purchased the same rug. Is she to be cheated and lose out or, as the final possessor, is she to be considered the rightful owner? But, if Mrs. Robinson was the last purchaser of it, how can she be considered to have a better right to its ownership than Mrs. Smith, who was the first purchaser and where does Mrs. Jones come in?

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE OLE SWIMMIN' HOLE.—"How dear to our hearts are the scenes of our childhood!"

The busy cobbler drops his tools to make happy the aching heart of little Nellie Leach who was reading a paper to the old workman that turns out to prove to be a letter from his old friend and comrade informing him of his good fortune saying his back pension had been granted to the extent of $1,000 and could be had by calling at the writer's office at any time. The old soldier's heart was lightened but a sad misgiving look falls from the veteran's eyes, that bespoke foreboding of evil.

Receiving the money and kind expressions from his old companions he goes to his little shop that seems to hold more happiness for him than all the money in the world. The light that little Nellie had put into his life in her childish patter was vigor to him—she was to be his beneficiary. The treasure is placed under the cot that has served as the only bed the old soldier has enjoyed for almost a score of years.

"Windows have eyes and walls have ears" and evil lurks in every dark corner.

Pete's eyes had caught a glimpse of the treasure through the little window and he vowed to gain it. Securing same he buries it near the creek but not unnoticed by the boys of the "ole swimmin' hole." When the loss is discovered and weighs heavily upon the old soldier, his greatest comforter is little Nellie whose tenderness sheds rays of sunshine to lighten life's burden for him. Finally, when the box is found, his happiness knows no bounds. Retribution and all ends in peace and contentment.

A KENTUCKY PIONEER.—John Winslow, an early pioneer of the grand old State of Kentucky had labored hard and long to prepare a home on the shaded hillsides near the Ohio. Martha Saunders, the girl whom he had hoped would become mistress of the cabin, was watching the daily arrival of the stage coach in the little village of Greentown, Ohio, for some word from John. Weeks and months passed by and letters and encouragement passed between them. Finally, when all was in readiness, Winslow writes the widow and sends a guide saying her arrival would hasten the time when her daughter would become his wife. In a few weeks, Mrs. Saunders, her daughter and the guide arrived in the old-fashioned pioneer wagon and were welcomed by the Kentuckian and his neighbors in a manner befitting his future bride. Martha was the admiration of the settlement. Black Hawk, an Indian near the Winslow farm, was profuse in his entreaties for the friendship of Martha—tokens of love were offered and his squaw grew jealous and more so when Black Hawk saved Martha's life when she was in danger of an approaching bear. This only served his purpose of carrying her off. Winslow hardened to his country surroundings, knew no fear and sought the Indian camp. The squaw and Martha make good their escape. The camp on discovering their absence was thrown into a furious rage and vowed vengeance.

The pitched battle between the pioneers and the raging Indians is fought with all the stubborn bravery that characterized the early settlers and the complete rout of the Indians and the recapture of Martha in the shade of spreading elms, completes a beautiful story of pioneer days.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

RENUNCIATION.—Love with a romance is by far more interesting than the ordinary article. While the romantic part of it is not always intentional it is undoubtedly desirable, so, when the hero, Jack, son of a wealthy and eminently aristocratic father, finds himself in love with the heroine, a chorus girl, we find ourselves interested in the story.

The young girl is of irreproachable character, poor but ambitious to make her way in life and succeed in her chosen profession. She applies to a prominent manager for a chance to show her ability to act, and she impresses him very favorably, but he cannot give her the desired opportunity. She leaves her name and address with him for future reference.

The manager is a personal friend of Jack's father, and while visiting him Jack comes in and the conversation turns to the stage. Jack mentions his acquaintance with the young chorus girl; the manager takes her card from his pocket, saying she had applied to him for a position and he had found her a very capable and charming young lady. Jack declares his love for her and his "dad" proclaims his objections to actresses in general and chorus girls in particular.

The father goes to see the girl and induces her to give up his son, and he suggests that she can cure the boy of his love for her by assuming drunkenness when he and the son call on her by the father suggesting to the son that he would like to meet the young lady and see for himself the sort of a person she is. She reluctantly gives her word that she will do it, hoping her loss will be Jack's gain.

The son joyfully and readily consents to his father's going to visit his sweetheart, feeling assured as will be won by her personality. At the father's request his friend the manager is invited to accompany them. Word is sent to the girl that they will call to see her. She receives the note.

With breaking heart she summons all her fortitude to her aid to give up the man she dearly loves and prepares to make herself objectionable to him. Her visitors arrive; the son is shocked and disgusted when he sees the girl apparently in a beastly state of intoxication. He silently leaves the rooms with his father. The manager lingers long enough to tell her she is a great actress and offers her a position in one of his companies. The father will supplement it with a present of money. Jack overhears their conversation, discovers the deception which has been played upon him, and determines to have the girl in opposition to everything and everybody.

The father and the manager go at once to see the girl; she spurns their offers of money and contract. She has lost more than fame and fortune in the loss of Jack and his love. At this moment Jack enters, tells her he knows all, and asks her to be his wife. She replies, "Not until your father gives his consent." The old gentleman is only too willing that his son should marry a woman who had acted not only well but nobly, and readily places her hand in the hand of his son, adding his blessing to his consent.

HER ADOPTED PARENTS.—Her grief is intense, accountable perhaps by the years of companionship with her parents, whom she mourns, and probably by the fact that she has remained a spinster to prevent possible separation from those she loved. Regularly at each meal served in her home the woman has two seats for the loved ones as if they were in the same places they occupied at the table when living. This she seems to do religiously as a sort of memorial.

The depression of loneliness becomes so great she buys a small house in the country where she can spend her summers. The house is occupied by an old couple who are so reduced in circumstances they are dispossessed and obliged to go to the poorhouse. The maiden lady, who has now moved into the place, learns about the old couple from a neighbor. She goes to the poorhouse to see them. She is deeply and favorably impressed with the old people, and in memory to her parents and a desire for companionship she asks the couple to become her adopted parents and make their home with her. The old gentleman is willing that his wife should go with her, but with becoming independence prefers to stay at the public institution.

The old lady goes home with her foster daughter, but cannot bear to be separated from her husband. She sneaks out of the house at night and returns to the poorhouse and her life partner. She left a note telling her good friend that she has gone to join her husband.

The good woman discovers the absence of her adopted parent, finds the note, upbraids herself for separating the old folks, and immediately goes to them and tells them she wants them both to live with her. She persuades them to accept her as their daughter, and they are all back in the old couple's home of many happy years, to remain in still greater happiness for the balance of their lives under the adoption and care of a daughter whose love and respect for her own parents made her love and respect others.

A HOME MELODY.—It is not unusual in the home where the taste for music prevails to find strong evidences of love and culture.

Seated at the harp, Mrs. Leslie is playing that instrument. Mr. Leslie at the piano and their little girl sings, producing a beautiful home melody which is greatly appreciated and enjoyed by their friend and visitor Mr. Blank.

On the edge of a placid river Stella, the little daughter, is seen making her way to a canoe which is partly drawn up on the shore. She gets in it just as her mother follows and lifts her from the boat, and they wander through the fields to a shady tree, where Mrs. Leslie seats herself with her arms lovingly about Stella's shoulders and gradually falls asleep.

The mother awakes, misses her child, rushes to the river, discovers the canoe, which has been upturned, then she sees the child's hat and Teddy-Bear. Her mind is deranged by the shock; she tries to throw herself into the stream and is prevented by two men who hear her screams of anguish and come to learn the cause. She wanders along the river bank and disappears.

The husband learns of her derangement and immediately notifies the police, who institute a search, but find it fruitless. The poor woman goes aimlessly about until she is found by the friend (whom we saw in the first scene) playing the harp of a street musician, instinctively feeling for the melody of home.

The friend takes her to her family. She does not recognize them until she comes in contact with her harp, upon which she begins to play the home melody. The friend has the husband play the piano and the child sing. Gradually reason is brought back on the tender strains of the home melody and with it happiness and unity.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE SHERIFF'S CAPTURE.—Nell does not like sheriffs. The dislike is general and not confined to any particular official and she is rather pleased with Dick Land when he rides into the yard and asks for a drink of water until she spies his star and learns that he is looking for a couple of outlaws. The outlaws are in hiding in the house, but Nell assures the Sheriff that she is all alone and he rides on in search of the fugitives. The men come from the house and one dies after the departing officer, who is badly wounded in the shoulder. Nell does not like sheriffs because she has been brought to believe that they shoot men in the back instead of facing fire, and now her sympathies are all with the man who lies senseless and bleeding. The outlaws make their escape and she manages to get the Sheriff into the house, improvising an ambulance from a door, the Sheriff's lariat and his horse. Then she rides for a physician to dress the wound and her indignation against the desperadoes who fight behind men's backs leads her to give information to the deputies as to their probable whereabouts. The deputies ride after the two men and the doctor and Nell return to the ranch where the Sheriff is soon made comfortable. The deputies make their capture and are highly elated, but the Sheriff makes a far more important capture and Nell prepares to serve a pleasant life sentence as his wife, for it was love at sight on both sides.

THE PATH OF DUTY.—Philip Trask is a member of the revenue service and his duties have brought him frequently to the little home of the Masons. The father is a fisherman, one of those rugged, big-hearted followers of the sea, and he is proud when Phil asks Maude's hand in marriage. He likes the alert young officer whose energies promise early promotion, and the course of true love flows smoothly. But the sun does not always shine and one day Mason finds a boat overturned by the waves in the storm of the night before, and beside the boat lies the senseless form of its occupant. Mason takes him home and his simple ministrations soon bring the man to consciousness. He takes his departure after warmly thanking his rescuer, but he leaves behind a note dropped from his pocket in his eagerness to assure himself that his papers have not been disturbed. The note is found by Phil, who has been warned to be on the lookout for a band of smugglers. The note is ambiguous, but it seems to leave no question as to Mason's complicity in the crime. It is a terrible situation for the young lover, but his star reminds him of his sworn duty and he makes the arrest despite Maude's tearful appeal. Mason is taken to the Customs station, but meantime the smuggler returns and asks for his letter. Maude's quick wit grasps the situation and the man is confronted with a gun and forced to follow Mason's footsteps. He quickly clears Mason of all blame and in the end the old fishermen decides that, after all, a man who follows the path of duty will make a good son in law.

THE WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

Monday, September 26th.

Biograph—Rose o' Salem Town (Dr.).....998
Lubin—The Sheriff's Capture (Dr.).....990
Pathe—Max Is Absent-minded (Com.).....551
Pathe—Colombo and Its Environs (Sc.).....426
Selig—The Old Swimming Hole (Dr.).....1000

Tuesday, September 27th.

Edison—Over Mountain Passes (Sc.).....275
Edison—The Footlights of the Farm (Dr.)....725
Gaumont—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Gaumont—Too Much Water (Com.).....351
Vitagraph—Her Adopted Parents (Dr.).....988

Wednesday, September 28th.

Essanay—Hank and Lank They Dude Up Some (Com.).....307
Essanay—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660
Kalem—The Heart of Edna Leslie (Dr.).....965
Pathe—The Hoodoo (Com.).....920
Urban—The Quarrel (Dr.).....670
Urban—Reedham's Orphanage Festival 1910 (Sc.)394

Thursday, September 29th.

Biograph—Examination Day at School (Dr.)....991
Lubin—The Path of Duty (Dr.).....990
Melies—A Plucky American Girl (Dr.).....950
Selig—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000

Friday, September 30th.

Edison—Onomko's Vow (Dr.).....1000
Pathe—The Sick Baby (Dr.).....984
Kalem—Spotted Snake's Schooling (Dr.).....885
Vitagraph—A Home Melody (Dr.).....907

Saturday, October 1st.

Essanay—Patricia of the Plains (Dr.).....1000
Gaumont—The Diver's Honor (Dr.).....591
Gaumont—A High-speed Biker (Com.).....401
Pathe—Who Owns the Rug? (Com.).....690
Pathe—Southern Tunis (Sc.).....302
Vitagraph—The Bachelor and the Baby (Dr.)..

The Path of Duty

Released Thursday, Sept. 29th

A splendidly scenic subject and a gripping story as well. A young revenue officer finds himself compelled to arrest the father of the girl he is to marry, but the girl herself arrests the real smuggler and delivers him to the officers.

Length about 990 Feet

Released Monday, Oct. 3rd

The Baggage Smasher

A comedy drama of real interest and with a novel and unexpected finish. A fake English lord gets away with some famous diamonds and is about to escape when the baggage smasher gets in his deadly work and the crook is found in the trunk.

Length about 990 Feet

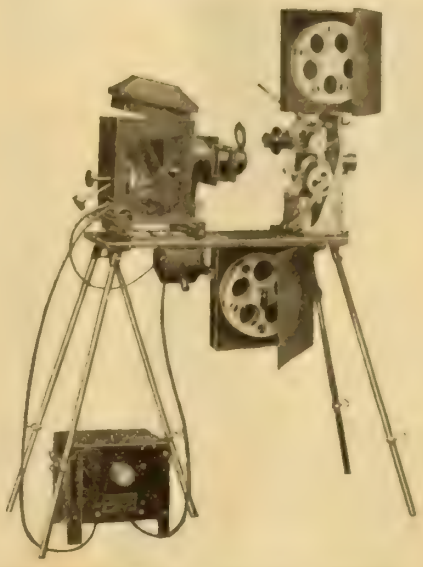
Send for Free Catalogue of Our 1910 Machine

LUBIN MF'G CO. 926 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO: 22 Fifth Avenue LONDON: 45 Gerrard Street, W

BERLIN: 35 Friederich Strasse

EDISON Projecting Kinetoscopes



UNDERWRITERS' MODEL TYPE "B"

FEATURES

1 The perfect Motion Picture Machine.

2 Highest efficiency combined with greatest durability.

3 Absolutely flickerless, steady and brilliant pictures.

4 Guaranteed mechanically perfect.

5 Minimum cost for repairs.

TO MANAGERS AND OPERATORS

If in the vicinity of New York or Boston, do not fail to visit the Fourth Annual Electrical Show at Madison Square Garden, Oct. 10th to 20th, and Boston Mechanics Exposition, Oct. 3rd to 29th respectively, where several of our machines may be seen in operation.

Edison Manufacturing Co.

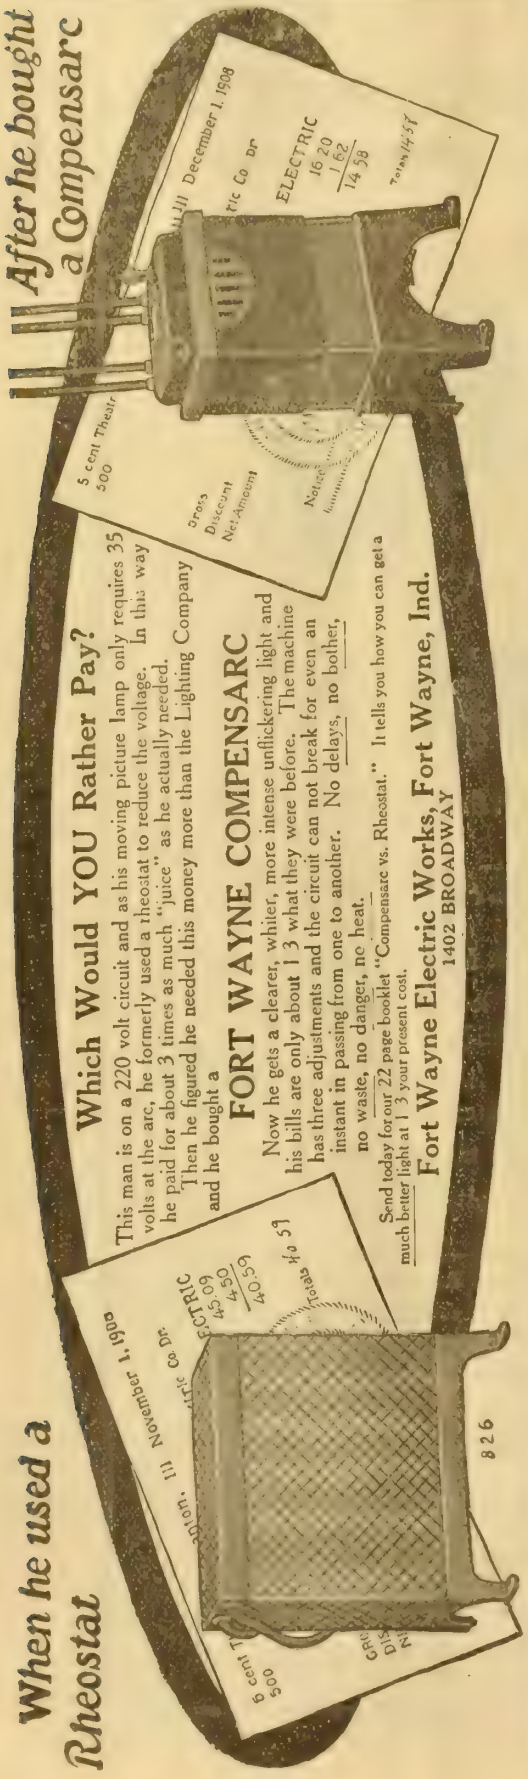
72 Lakeside Avenue, Orange, N. J.

90 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES
STEREOPTICONS, SLIDES, ACCESSORIES.

Chas. M. Stebbins
1028 Main Street,
KANSAS CITY, MO.
Large Line of Edison Goods
Established 1899.

After he bought a Compensarc



Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1 3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1 3 your present cost.

Fort Wayne Electric Works, Fort Wayne, Ind.
1402 BROADWAY

When he used a Rheostat

OUR

Musical Electrical Bells

(which are played from a Key-board, the bells being mounted in various parts of the house) have been a great success all over the country, and no Picture-house is complete without a set of them. We can supply 25 Bells, 2 octaves chromatic, C to C, correctly tuned to your Piano, complete with Resonators, Keyboard, Magnets, and boards, complete ready to install for $75.00. The only additional expense is about $2.00 for wire and about one days time to mount same.

The above is a special offer and holds good for a limited time only, so ORDER NOW and be the first in your locality.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800 to 3810 North Clark Street
CHICAGO, U. S. A.

THE ENTERPRISE MODEL B

Portable Calcium Gas Outfit

Is the only Substitute for Electricity for projecting Motion Picture or Stereopticon views and is the

Only Satisfactory Portable Outfit

because it operates by WATER PRESSURE, IS CONSTANT, REGULAR AND RELIABLE and has no complicated spring valves to corrode, choke up and otherwise get out of order. Is patented.

"OXONE" in SQUARE CAKES Is most Satisfactory for the production of Oxygen Gas. Send for particulars.

For Sale by Dealers

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. MANUFACTURERS AND SALES AGENTS
564 and 572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO

The Cream of Illustrated Lectures

BOOKINGS NOW OPEN FOR SEASON OF 1910-11

CAMERA CHATS

(COPYRIGHT)

BY

The YANKEE TRAVELER

Note: These chats were originally produced at B. F. Keith's Bijou Theatre, Boston, and are now running on the Keith & Proctor Circuit. Each chat runs from ten to fifteen minutes and is accompanied by Fifty Beautifully Colored Slides.

List of Subjects

JAPAN

1. Ricksha Ramble—Streets of Tokyo
2-3. Glimpses of Home Life, Parts I and II
4. Japanese Girldom
5. Japanese Babydom—Japan, "A Paradise of Babies"
6. Flowers and Landscape Gardens
7. Fuji-yama—The Peerless Mountain
8-9. Picturesque Religions, Parts I and II
10. A Little Journey to Miyajima — Sacred Island of the Inland Sea
11. Delightful Scenery
12. School and Athletics
13. A Nation of Busy Brown Bees
14. Art Industries
15. Silk Industry
16. Among the Gentle Farmer Folks of Old Japan

PHILIPPINES

17. Our Philippine Possessions,—Manila and Environs
18. Trip to the Cocoanut Country
19. Trip to the Hemp Country
20. Trip to the Igorrotte Country
21-22. Central America—Parts I and II
23. A Cruise down the Islands of the East Indies
24. The Tragedy of the Martinique
25. A Trip to the Ruins of St. Pierre
26-27-28. Tour of the "Canadian Alps"—Parts I, II and III
29-30. Canadian Winter Sports—Parts I and II
31. In Old Quebec
32. A Canoe Trip in Ontario
33. The Great Northwest
34. Yellowstone Park
35. A Tenderfoot's Experience in Montana
36. Seeing Washington with Three Eyes
37. Niagara Falls
38. Rambles in the Southland
39. The Dear Old Farm
40. Childhood Memories
41. A World of Babies
42. Pictures and Poems
43. Dawn to Dark with the Poets
44. Flowers and Rhymes

For Terms, Address Agent

"Camera Chats"

545 Washington Street - - Boston, Mass.

LICENSED RELEASES.

BIOGRAPH.

Aug. 18—An Old Story With a New Ending....512
Aug. 22—The Sorrows of the Unfaithful (Dr.) 994
Aug. 25—Wilful Peggy (Dr.) 997
Aug. 29—The Modern Prodigal (Dr.).....992
Sept. 1—The Affair of an Egg (Dr.).....995
Sept. 1—Muggsy Becomes a Hero (Dr.).....693
Sept. 5—A Summer Idyl (Dr.) 990
Sept. 8—Little Angels of Luck (Dr.).....998
Sept. 12—A Mohawk's Way (Dr.).....991
Sept. 15—In Life's Cycle (Dr.).....997
Sept. 19—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.).....987
Sept. 22—The Oath and the Man (Dr.).....997
Sept. 26—Rose o' Salem Town (Dr.).....998
Sept. 29—Examination Day at School (Dr.)....991

EDISON CO.

Sept. 9—Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (Co).995
Sept. 13—The Great Secret (Com.).....990
Sept. 16—Bumptious as a Fireman (Com.).....
Sept. 16—From the Arctics to the Tropics (Scenic) .....
Sept. 20—An Unselfish Love (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Jar of Cranberry Sauce (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Almost a Hero.....980
Sept. 27—Over Mountain Passes (Sc.) 275
Sept. 27—The Footlights of the Farm (Dr.)....725
Sept. 30—Ononko's Vow (Dr.) 1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 14—Whist (Com.) 545
Sept. 14—He Met the Champion (Com.).....455
Sept. 17—Hank and Lank—Joy Riding (Com.).233
Sept. 17—The Pony Express Rider (Dr.).....750
Sept. 21—A Close Shave (Com.).....553
Sept. 21—A Flirty Affliction (Com.).....416
Sept. 24—The Tout's Remembrance (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some (Com.) 307
Sept. 28—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660
Oct. 1—Patricia of the Plains (Dr.).....1000

KALEM CO.

Sept. 2—White Man's Money the Indian's Curse (Dr.) 980
Aug. 12—The Call of the Blood (Dr.).....940
Aug. 17—The Perversity of Fate (Dr.).....970
Aug. 19—True to His Trust (Dr.).....822
Aug. 19—Running Fire (Com.).....175
Aug. 24—The Romany Wife (Dr.) 980
Aug. 26—The Canadian Moonshiners (Dr.) 975
Aug. 31—A Game with Fame (Dr.).....975
Sept. 2—White Man's Money (Dr.).....980
Sept. 7—Mama's Birthday Present (Com.).....935
Sept. 9—The Cow Puncher's Sweetheart (Dr.).972
Sept. 14—The Little Mother (Dr.).....980
Sept. 16—A Leap for Life (Dr.).....985
Sept. 21—The Japanese Spy (Dr.).....975
Sept. 23—The Conspiracy of Pontiac (Dr.).....975
Sept. 28—The Heart of Edna Leslie (Dr.).....965
Sept. 30—Spotted Snake's Schooling (Dr.).....885

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Aug. 29—The Stronger Sex (Dr.).....990
Sept. 1—The Man Who Died (Dr.).....990
Sept. 5—The Healing Faith (Dr.).....990
Sept. 8—Matilda's Winning Ways (Com.)....900
Sept. 12—The Greenhorn and the Girl (Com.)..990
Sept. 15—Mrs. Rivington's Pride (Dr.).....500
Sept. 15—Resourceful Robert (Com.).....450
Sept. 19—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.)....990
Sept. 22—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.).....990
Sept. 26—The Sheriff's Capture (Dr.).....990
Sept. 29—The Path of Duty (Dr.).....990
Oct. 3—The Baggage Smasher (Com.).....990

GAUMONT.

G. Kleine.

Aug. 30—Ancient Castles of Austria (Sc.).....209
Sept. 3—Unrequited Love (Dr.).....584
Sept. 3—Calino Takes New Lodgings (Com.)...427
Sept. 6—The Way of the Transgressor Is Hard (Dr.) 952
Sept. 10—Robert, the Devil 998
Sept. 13—An Easy Winner 463
Sept. 13—A Powerful Voice (Com.).....486
Sept. 17—Poems in Pictures 391
Sept. 17—A Dummy in Disguise (Com.).....581
Sept. 20—Tactics of Cupid (Dr.) 896
Sept. 20—Sunset (Scenic) 102
Sept. 24—The Reserved Shot (Dr.).....741
Sept. 24—The Times Art Out of Joint (Com.)..252
Sept. 27—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Sept. 27—Too Much Water (Com.).....351

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

G. Kleine.

Aug. 24—Shipbuilding of Toulson, France (Educ.) 296
Aug. 24—Escape of the Royalists (Dr.) 670
Aug. 31—Buying a Beard (Com.).....495
Aug. 31—A Cruise in the Mediterranean (Sc.)..420
Sept. 7—Ingratitude (Dr.) 749
Sept. 7—Military Kite Flying at Rheims (Sc.)..256
Sept. 14—The Artisan (Dr.) 457
Sept. 14—The Tramps (Com.) 525
Sept. 21—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.).....699
Sept. 21—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.)..269
Sept. 28—The Quarrel (Dr.) 607
Sept. 28—Reedham's Orphanage Festival 1910 (Sc.) 394

G. MELIES.

Aug. 25—The Romance of Circle Ranch (Dr.)..950
Sept. 1—Won in the Fifth 950
Sept. 8—Baseball, That's All (Com.).....950
Sept. 15—In the Mission Shadows (Dr.).....950
Sept. 22—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950
Sept. 29—A Plucky American Girl (Dr.).....950
Oct. 6—Billy's Sister (Dr.) 950

PATHE FRERES.

Sept. 16—Unconscious Heroism (Dr.).....951
Sept. 17—The Vagaries of Love (Com.).....950
Sept. 19—The False Friend (Dr.).....558
Sept. 19—Trip to the Isle of Jersey (Scenic)....397
Sept. 21—An Arizona Romance (Dr.).....990
Sept. 23—Max in a Dilemma (Com.).....446
Sept. 23—The Mexican Tumblers.....476
Sept. 24—A Simple Mistake (Com.).....950
Sept. 26—Max Is Absent minded (Com.).....551
Sept. 26—Colombo and Its Environs (Sc.).....426
Sept. 28—The Hoodoo (Com.) 920
Sept. 30—The Sick Baby (Dr.) 984
Oct. 1—Who Owns the Rug? (Com.) 690
Oct. 1—Southern Tunis (Sc.) 302

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

Aug. 29—The Emigrant 998
Sept. 1—The Road to Richmond (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—Led by Little Hands (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—Jim the Ranchman (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—Little Boy (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 15—The Schoolmaster of Mariposa (Dr.) .1000
Sept. 19—Bertie's Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—Big Medicine (Com.).....
Sept. 22—The Sergeant (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Old Swimming Hole.....1000
Sept. 29—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 26—The Men Haters' Club (Com.).....985
Aug. 27—Rose Leaves (Dr.).....995
Aug. 30—Jean and the Calico Doll (Dr.).....970
Sept. 2—A Life for a Life (Dr.).....995
Sept. 3—The Wrong Box (Com.).....985
Sept. 6—Chew Chew Land (Com.).....600
Sept. 6—A Rough Weather Courtship (Com.)..400
Sept. 9—How She Won Him (Dr.).....980
Sept. 10—The Three of Them (Dr.).....985
Sept. 13—The Sepoy's Wife (Dr.) 990
Sept. 16—Two Waifs and a Stray (Dr.).....985
Sept. 17—A Lunatic at Large (Com.).....997
Sept. 20—Jean, the Match-Maker (Com.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Modern Knight Errant (Dr.).....967
Sept. 24—Renunciation (Dr.) 999
Sept. 27—Her Adopted Parents (Dr.).....988
Sept. 30—A Home Melody (Dr.).....997

What did the Machine Cost?

Unless you can answer this question without being compelled to figure over a bundle of repair bills, you have not purchased the most profitable device for your business.

1911 Model

"The Edengraph"

will put you on the right road to profitable projector purchasing. It is profitable because

1. It is durable in every part.
2. It throws a picture that advertises your house.
3. It uses none of your time in care.

Make More Money by Saving Both Time and Money

Points of Superiority Enumerated and Described in a Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue which will be mailed on Request.

THE EDENGRAPH MANUFACTURING CO.
GEORGE KLEINE, Pres.
135 West Third Street, New York, N. Y.

HALLBERG

ELECTRIC ECONOMIZER

SAVES ⅔ ON ELECTRIC BILL
GIVES 50% BETTER LIGHT

Come, let us get together. If you already have a current saver, I will make a liberal allowance for it in trade for a "HALLBERG" Economizer. Besides the wonderful "HALLBERG" Economizer, I make 4000 Candle Power Flaming Arc Lamps and Economizers for incandescent lighting, and sell all high grade moving picture machines which I will gladly demonstrate; opera chairs, lenses and all kinds of supplies. Send $1.50 for a set of "HALLBERG" Terminal Connectors. They stop burning out of lamp leads, and my "Spec-Oil" at 35c. a can by mail, postpaid, saves 25 per cent. on the wear of your machine and over one-half on oil bill.

"Electra" Pink Label Carbons.
"Excello" Flame Arc Carbons.

Send for FREE catalogue
No. W-45

J. H. HALLBERG

36 East 23d Street, New York

Those Inimitable Twins Again!

Scene from "HANK AND LANK"

Release of Wednesday, Sept. 28.

HANK and LANK

THEY DUDE UP SOME

(Length, approx. 307 feet)

The second release of the Hank and Lank series of cartoon filmlets will thoroughly establish these funny fellows as favorites with your patrons. Don't miss any issue of the Hank and Lank series. Released with

CURING A MASHER

(Length, approx. 660 feet)

A comedy with a moral. The story is humorous and the acting full of spirit, delightfully natural and expressive. GET THE HANK AND LANK POSTERS WITH THIS REEL.

A WESTERN FEATURE PICTURE

Release of Saturday, Oct. 1

"PATRICIA OF THE PLAINS"

(Length, approx. 1000 feet)

One of the strongest Western dramatic pictures our Western producer has yet given us. A thrilling story, realistically staged, which will hold the unflagging interest of an audience from the first foot to the last.

Our posters are for sale by the exchanges

Get our beautiful poster placard of the Essanay Indian Head. Great for the lobby. Poster Dept. B. Ask about it.

The Essanay Guide is Free for the asking. Read it.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

LONDON
5 Wardour St. W

435 N. Clark Street
CHICAGO

BERLIN
35 Friederich Str.

Classified Advertisements

Advertisements, five cents per word cash with order, 50 cents minimum. Initials and address count.

FOR SALE—Fully equipped moving picture show using the new electric Power's picture machine. Pleasant and satisfactory business. Picture machine in good condition, and show using Edison Projecting Kinetoscope. Seating capacity 400, cheap for cash or will rent. JOHN H. MICHELL, Edna, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FREE SAMPLE of Silvelo, a new discovery by which every user can make from one to five dollars per day. Silvelo will copper, nickel, tin or zinc plate. Silvelo will outwear ten times its cost. Send 10c. to pay postage. SILVELO MFG. CO., Mason Building, Kansas City, Mo.

FOR LEASE—Picture theatre, low rental. Box 471, Seattle, Wash.

TO LET—Left or part, 124 East 14th St. Low rent. Apply in Cigar Store.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—Operator owning Standard machine, Jersey City. Moving Picture World.

WANTED position as Manager of first-class Vaudeville and Picture Theatre. Fifteen years' experience in amusement business. Strict disciplinarian, capable of maintaining house up to the highest standard of excellence. Address MANAGER, 51 So. Russel street, Boston, Mass.

WANTED Operator, first class; male; other need apply. F. MONTGOMERY, Grand Theater, Jacksonville, Fla.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

MANAGERS, ATTENTION—A-1 operator and Electrician (21 years' experience) desires position on the road. Can run stage, operate any machine and can furnish the best of references. LEO FISK, 279 West 114th St., New York City.

CAMERA MAN and expert photographer wants position with reliable concern. CAMERA MAN, care Moving Picture World.

MANAGER and singer, first class vaudeville and pictures, at liberty after September 19th. Best of references. Salary or percentage or both. C. W. LAWFORD, Gen. Del., White River Jc., Vt.

AT LIBERTY—First-class moving picture machine operator. Five years' experience. Best reference. Electrician, repairman. Sober and steady. G. H. LEECH, 164 Pine street, Williamsport, Pa.

EQUIPMENT WANTED.

WANTED—Second-hand Power's No. 5. State condition, if complete, and lowest cash price. Address J. C. B., care Justice Machine Works, 110 Third avenue, N. Y. City.

WANTED—Will buy the third reel of the Pathe Passion Play. State price and condition. PASSION PLAY, care Moving Picture World.

WANTED to exchange 8/4 Buffet B Flat clarionet, used two months, for Edison one-pin machine, preferred, or other good one-pin machine. ARTHUR POWELL, Powell's Pharmacy, Montezuma, Ind.

EQUIPMENT FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—250 Opera Chairs, cheap. Apply, DREAMLAND THEATER, Syracuse, N. Y.

FOR SALE—No. 5 Power's Cameragraph; like new; low price. L. B. S., care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—At a bargain, Lubin moving picture machine. Has never been used. Equipped with the latest improvements. Apply ANDREW FROST, 46 Barre street, Montpelier, Vt.

Released Sept. 29th

"THE KENTUCKY PIONEER"

A Dramatic Episode taking place during early settling of Kentucky.

Length About 990 Feet — Code Word, Kentucky

Released Oct. 3rd — 2 ON 1

"A COLD STORAGE ROMANCE"

A Comedy and Drama

"MY FRIEND THE DOCTOR"

A Comedy

Combined Length About 1,000 Feet — Code Word, Storage and Friend

Released Oct. 6th

A Great Colonial War Picture

"FOR HER COUNTRY'S SAKE"

One of the Best of the Season

Length About 1,000 Feet — Code Word, Country

Released Oct. 10th

The Best Full Reel Comedy You Have Ever Seen

"THE SANITARIUM"

It is Certainly a Laugh Getter—See it

Length About 1,000 Feet — Code Word, Sanitarium

"JUSTINIAN AND THEODORA"

Selig Polyscope Co. CHICAGO, U.S.A. 45-47-49 Randolph Street

Independent Film Stories.

ECLAIR.

THE STREET-ARAB OF PARIS. George d'Esteve, [illegible] Arts, [illegible] a beautiful young girl, [illegible] Mlle. Marguerite Leon [illegible] Street. Wishing to keep all the [illegible] from the knowledge of the girl, he dispatches her to an [illegible] and takes apartments in the [illegible] where [illegible] with parents and her young brother, Joseph, a real Street Arab of Paris. One young heroine is the cause to the precipitation of love on the part of George, but the ever vigilant Joseph discovers it and keeps a keen watch upon the young soldier, and, if possible, to clear up the mystery when appeared [illegible] the lover of his sister. Clinging to the back of George's carriage one day, Joseph learns then and ascertains the real identity of the young man, and, of course, is overwhelmed with surprise when he sees the abode of the young soldier.

At about this time General d'Esteve, George's father, receives a letter from General Buggand, asking him to send his son to his staff office. This is a fine opportunity for George, and his father, of course, expects his son to learn the news with the greatest joy. On the contrary, however, he is amazed to see that the news greatly depresses our young friend. George realizes that he must obey the command, and accordingly writes to Louise, who is thrown into deep despair at the news of her lover's departure. The tactful Joseph, however, unable to bear the sight of his sister in grief, visits the General and tells him the whole story of the love of young George and his sister. The General scolds his son severely, but when the beautiful young girl is brought before him, her grace and loveliness so charm him that he at once gives his consent to the marriage, and no one dances more joyfully at the wedding than the clever little brother, Joseph, the Street-Arab of Paris.

GIOVANNI OF MEDICI (Cines).—John Medici, better known under his war name of John "des Bandes Noires," visiting Raphael's studio in the following of Leo X. saw Emma, the beautiful sister of the painter Caravaggio. John and Emma fall desperately in love with each other, and the girl, forgetting all prudence, accepts an appointment from her lover in her own house.

Emma's brother runs home to revenge the insult, but John makes good his escape, while Emma is sent back to her mother in the City of Caravaggio.

Some time afterward John at the head of his army takes the town of Caravaggio by storm, and in the terrible sacking which follows the victory Emma's mother is slain by the furious soldiery. John succeeds in saving Emma's life, but the girl, horrified at the sight of the man she holds responsible for the death of her mother, rejects John's proposal to marry her and seeks for peace and oblivion in a convent.

Mortally wounded at the battle of Cassano, John is taken to the palace of the Marquis Gonzaga. On his death-bed he remembers Emma, and sends her an ardent appeal to come and forgive him. The young lady, still dearly loving John, rushes to his side, but only in time to see him die the death of a soldier.

THROUGH THE RUINS OF CARTHAGE.—The opening scene shows the Professor Champeaux, archeologist, in charge of the excavations to be performed at Carthage, in an endeavor to locate the lost treasure of Eschmoun. One of the professor's secretaries conceives a plan for stealing the treasure. He therefore bribes one of the Arab servants, who at night steals into the study of the old archeologist and robs him of the plans of the ruins. As soon as the plans are delivered into the hands of the base secretary he hides them in the "Torch of the Holy Priestess" and acts to work to eliminate any shade of suspicion that might attach itself to him.

A short while after the professor misses the papers and, becoming frightened, the Arab servant confesses, denouncing the false secretary. The Arab then conducts the archeologist and a party of detectives to the spot where the thief is in hiding. Meanwhile the secretary, having discovered the treasure, has had plans for escape, and is about to make his departure. After considerable difficulty the thief is captured and the treasure retaken, and just punishment is meted out to the offender.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF THE CINEMA STAGE.—This is a very amusing film, showing plainly the various mysterious tricks put into operation in the production of the moving picture films. First we behold the execution of the scenario, the work of the stage manager, stage hands, mechanics, etc., and finally we have displayed before us the film completely finished and projected on the screen.

DEFENDER

THE SCHOOL-MARM'S RIDE FOR LIFE.—Demon drink has brought misfortune and misunderstanding aplenty upon those to whom its lure has called and who have been too humanly frail to resist its siren note. That is the fortune, or the lack of it, that befalls Tom Hartley, when he tries to drown his sorrows brought about by busi-

[illegible] ness reverses. In drink, and hastens [illegible] quantity of the exciting beverage that has so [illegible] gotten to pass. He engages in one of [illegible] and in the presence of the several [illegible] ness, [illegible] is [illegible] upon by striking [illegible] an [illegible] [illegible] from [illegible] them [illegible] [illegible] He is [illegible] [illegible] of his [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Any Old Worn-Out Machine

that has my improved star, pinwheel and sprocket put in will give better results than a new one. TESTIMONIALS Two Patents applied for on above improvements.

E. W. LAVEZZI

3042 N. Ashland Ave. Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Theater Manager:

I pay for this white space to draw your attention to my Solar Screen. Its brightness is as this compared to a closely printed page. Do not confound the Solar Screen with aluminum daubed imitations. There is only one Solar Screen and that is made by me and its cost is so little more than that of an ordinary screen that it is as nothing to the manager who wants to put on a better picture than his competitor.

Write me to-day for full particulars and testimonials.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON, 111 W. 132nd St., NEW YORK

¶ Don't overlook the vital part of your equipment — the lens.

¶ The novice may pass this by lightly, but "an old hand at the business" will tell you frankly that if you want results that will bring the crowd back you must buy a

BAUSCH & LOMB PROJECTION LENS

¶ Our lenses are the recognized standard. They will give results superior to any other lens

¶ Send for Projection Lens booklet.

¶ We offer our assistance in selection of lenses for special requirements.

Our Name on a Photographic Lens, Microscope, Field Glass, Laboratory Apparatus, Engineering or any other Scientific Instrument is our Guarantee.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

NEW YORK WASHINGTON CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO
LONDON ROCHESTER, N.Y. FRANKFORT

UNCLE SAM FILMS — MADE BY YANKEE FILM COMPANY — TRADE MARK — NEW YORK

BANG! BANG!! BANG!!!

Reports from everywhere Tendering YANKS the Palm of Supremacy. Exhibitors are waking up and are now demanding The All-Powerful YANKEE FILMS as Headliners on their weekly program.

HERE'S AN EXAMPLE

Yankee Film Co., Peekskill, N. Y., Sept. 19, '10
New York, N. Y.

Gents,—Will you place the Star Theatre on your mailing list. We are the only house in town showing Independent Films. We had two "Yanks" yesterday. The Right to Labor and Captured by Wireless. Both Top notchers and both made a hit. Give us more like them and we will do the rest.

Yours most respectfully, STAR THEATRE, Main St.

OUR ISSUE OF OCTOBER 3rd

Will set the World of Moving Pictures Agog with Excitement and Interest. It will act as a mighty stimulant for run-down theatres. Its power will be felt in the land of Films long after its title is forgotten.

WOMEN OF THE WEST

Tells a story of early days in the West when the firebrand and scalping knife of the Indian were abroad in the land. Woman's bravery in time of danger, even against terrible odds, predominates throughout the entire film. A band of real Indians, a group of genuine Cowboys and the entire Yankee Regulars make the production one to be justly proud of.

COMING YANKEE HEADLINERS

OCT. 10. A MONOGRAMMED CIGARETTE
OCT. 17. THE COPPER AND THE CROOK
OCT. 24. SOLVING THE BOND THEFT
OCT. 31. THE SWEAT-SHOP ROMANCE

YANKEE FILM CO., 334 E. 32d St., NEW YORK

WRITE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO. Telephone 6170 Madison Square

ugly with the handsome, the grave with the gay. By common consent it is the universal impression that Cupid's only duty is to pierce the human heart with his arrow of love. This is only the beginning of his labors and the easiest of them all, for we humans are more susceptible to the feeling of affection than to any other emotion mortals are heir to. Cupid's domain covers the universe and it requires tireless effort and a sleepless vigil to keep his followers in subjection. It is when Cupid sleeps that "the broth is spilled" and his real troubles begin, for when Cupid is off duty his subjects become mutinous and he must necessarily assert his authority and demonstrate who is master. Caught napping one day, his slaves rebelled and it was only after the most strenuous efforts that Cupid suppressed this uprising.

The incidents of this rebellion are numerous and would require too much space to relate in detail; suffice it to state that each and every mutineer was promptly captured and sentenced to spend the remainder of their days in Prison of Mutual Admiration and were securely linked together with Chains of Affection.

This punishment was meted out to the youngest calf lovers as well as to the oldest habitual offenders.

LUX FILMS.

HOW JONES WON THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—A cycle race is in progress, and we are shown the start and a smash-up on the way. Jones, a long, lanky individual, has wandered down to the river, and, being tempted by the cool, placid surface, and clad in a neat striped bathing suit, he plunges in. Meanwhile, one of the cyclists, tired of the race, rides up, and seeing Jones splashing about, slips off his number, and leaving his cycle, makes off. Soon a party of men arrive, and mistaking Jones for one of the starters, haul him out, put his number on, place him on the cycle, and start him off. Now the fun commences. Once started, there is no stopping Jones, who rides over everything indiscriminately. He turns a somersault over a table outside a cafe, leaving everything in wild confusion. Down a flight of steps he goes, smack into the river. Off again, he rides into a house, and the annoyed occupants vent their wrath upon him in a violent fashion. In riding over a bridge he comes into collision with two men, who promptly fling him over into the river and follow it up with the cycle. But at length Jones rides in, and being first home, is unanimously proclaimed the winner and thus becomes champion by mistake.

KINDNESS ABUSED AND ITS RESULTS.—Two cavaliers, tired and hungry, knock at a woodman's hut and ask for shelter. The woodman, a poor man, invites them in and gives them the rough food which he has, after which he provides clean straw for them to sleep on. The following morning the cavaliers make their departure, one giving the woodman, in return for his hospitality, a magic wand with which he can obtain all he desires. When they have gone the woodman tries the efficacy of the wand. He desires first a good meal, and it is provided for him. Then he wishes for wealth, and a fine castle with servants. These are all provided, together with rich clothes for himself. But riches have turned his nature and the erstwhile woodman becomes hard and uncharitable. Finding an old man who has begged for food eating, he tears the dish from him and bids him begone. A poor girl is gathering sticks, when the man comes up and, snatching the wood from her, orders her away. Shortly after the same cavalier who gave away the wand comes along, and touched by the girl's weeping, inquires the reason. Brokenly the girl explains, and giving her money, the cavalier, realizing what has happened, enters the castle. As the other comes up he assumes a cringeing air, and pleads for alms. The woodman raises his whip and prepares to strike him, when the cavalier, standing erect, discloses his features. The man drops on his knees and pleads for mercy, but the other reminds him of his hardness, and taking him to a wood, transforms him back again to a woodman. The wretched man drops on his knees, and then, seeing how justly he has been punished, seizes an axe lying against a tree and commences his old laborious task again.

IMP

ALL THE WORLD'S A STAGE.—An actor may love with all the pulse and ardor of one not as much accustomed to being caught in the mesh—and often the mess—of Cupid. And often the amorous appeal he is called upon to make upon the stage holds more than a grain of sincerity and candor in it, a note that those behind the footlights fail to detect. And just as often the other man, the one who does not kiss the particular "her" in the play, emits his curses with more depth and feeling than the audience can fathom. An actor and his wife live happily, contented with each other and fate, until a friend intrudes—very much in the usual way. The three people appear in the same production, and the husband realizes that the love scene between his wife and his friend is unartificial enough to satisfy the most censorious of dramatic critics. The husband is inclined to do bodily harm to his traitorous friend, and is restrained by a mutual chum. The director realizes the situation, and arranges to have the husband play the part of the lover. In the love scene the husband acquits himself very creditably, doing far better than the director expected of him. After the rehearsal he takes husband and wife into his private office, and after a good, sound lecture they depart, sweethearts once more.

THE DECIDING VOTE.—A young politician is elected to the legislature, from which he is absent during the debate of the very first bill of the term, because of his wife's illness. The bill favors a land company, and it is necessary to obtain his vote to insure its passage. A representative of the land company calls on him and proffers a bribe, which he indignantly spurns. Then, realizing that his wife is ill, and that he is in poor circumstances, they try to gain his gratitude and his vote by sending a doctor to attend the invalid. The doctor's examination results in his discovery that an operation is imperative, which requires a large fund of money. He decides to accept the bribe, and his wife dies under the dearly bought operation. At the next session of the assembly the vote comes up. A vision of his wife's empty chair arises before him, just as he is about to cast his vote, and he votes against the bill. As he leaves the assembly chambers he is confronted by the land company's president, who flies into a rage because of his breach of promise, and after a heated discussion he returns to his home, broken-hearted, and weeps over the empty chair.

CHAMPION.

THE COWBOYS TO THE RESCUE.—George Monroe and his son and daughter, after settling themselves in the ranch house that they had secured for a couple of months, decide to take a stroll through the little old western town and see the sights.

This is what the inhabitants thought and that is what the Monroe family wanted them to think, but their object is to size up, as it were, their prey, for this respectable-looking family of father, son and daughter, was nothing less than a family of card sharks who had come from Denver for the purpose of fleecing the cowboys.

The girl, tall and beautiful, acts as the magnet to draw the victims to the ranch. They were successful. The most constant visitor and heaviest loser in their gambling den is Wilson Moore, a handsome young cowpuncher, and the support of his widowed mother and his little sister Aggie.

Belle Monroe leads him on until the poor fellow is head over heels in love with her and firmly believes that his love is returned. She plays with his affections while her father and brother rob him of his money. Belle often takes a hand with them and it is while playing opposite him at the table that she is suddenly made aware of the startling fact that she is really in love with the man she has been fooling.

The shock of the discovery unnerves her and she wants to leave the game, but a stern glance from her father and an exclamation from her brother brings her to her senses and she, with hysterical laughter, continues the game, winning all of Wilson's money.

Meanwhile the widow Moore is grieving over the actions of her adored son. She is unused to his leaving her every evening as he is now doing and his daily drawings from the strong box where their money is kept, alarms her.

Being present when her son receives a letter from Belle's Indian maid, she reads the request from the Monroe's to come up for a big game, she decides to put a stop to this ruining of her son.

Hurrying to the ranch of the card sharks, she is admitted to the presence of the girl. With tears streaming down her old cheeks she implores the young woman to give her back her son.

Her pleadings are not in vain, for the love that is consuming Belle needed only such fuel as this mother's love and the two women unite to save the one man.

Lowering her Indian maid from the window she tells her to go for the cowboys if she can't find Wilson before her father and brother get him. At this moment she hears them coming and secretes the old lady just as the three enter the room. With an assumed gaiety she stealthily removes the revolvers from her father and brother and when a prearranged quarrel takes place the brother is about to brain Wilson she stops them at the pistol's point.

Ordering them to "hands up" she holds them so until the cowboys arrive and carry them off to jail. Wilson and the widow then take the weeping girl home with them to live in a purer atmosphere as his wife.

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

HOME-MADE MINCE PIE.—Life in a country town is often tedious and tiresome, and were it not for the little "dinners" and "teas" that townsfolk are constantly giving, existence in some localities would be a very dreary thing indeed. So the time-honored "get-togethers" of the small town are an established feature of the social calendar; they are much a matter of necessity and as such have come to stay.

The Gales thought well of the established feature. They made it a joyous occasion for themselves as well as their guests. They were hardly an overwealthy family and their table was never notable for an over-supply of the good things of life, but whenever they gave a dinner they cast all thoughts of economy to the country winds and worked to the one end that their guests have a pleasant time.

On the night before such an event neither Mamma, Papa or Daughter Gale could get three minutes' solid sleep for thought that they might have overlooked some essential to their guests' comfort. At the first crow of the rooster they would come hopping down to the kitchen to get the larder into shape. So little wonder that, on the occasion of the dinner here pictured—when the prize dish was a splendid home-made mince pie—the Gales were ever looking after the needs of the said pie.

First Mamma Gale would tip-toe to the table whereon it sat in solemn state, and give it a stir; and then Papa Gale would tip-toe over and give it a stir; and finally Daughter Gale would have to come over and honor it likewise.

Then arrived the guests. The minister and the Mrs. Minister, they were, and some neighbors. While she was receiving them the recollection came to Mamma Gale that the beloved mince pie had not received its flavoring. Off she speeds to a decanter of whiskey and the kitchen. She pours into the pie the right proportion of liquor and goes back to her guests.

Then Papa Gale remembers that the pie has not been flavored. He, too, excuses himself and a moment later is found pouring whiskey into the sacred mince. No sooner has he ceased and returned to his guests than Daughter Gale, who has just remembered about the forgotten flavoring, rushes in and makes for the whiskey. She pours the "right proportion" in, too.

DOTS AND DASHES.—May Wilson and Jack Preston are employed in a downtown brokerage office, she as telegraph operator on the private wire of the firm, and he as head bookkeeper. The young people are fond of each other, and at the opening of the play have just made an engagement to spend the evening in each other's company at one of the theaters. May has been teaching Jack the mysteries of the Morse code, and is greatly pleased when she finds that he has so far mastered it as to be able to rap back an answer to her messages.

After May has left the office for the day, the head of the firm calls Jack into his private office, and there confides to him that there is something wrong with the books of the concern, and tells Jack to investigate. On looking into the matter, Jack discovers that his fellow-worker, Carson, is the defaulter, and accuses him to his face. Alone in the office, Carson begs Jack to shield him, while Jack insists that he must make their employer conversant with the facts. As Jack leans far into the large safe to deposit the ledgers of the firm, Bill thrusts him inside, and turning the knob entombs him alive in this steel prison. Trembling with fear at his act, Bill steals cautiously from the office.

May, becoming impatient when theater time arrives and Jack fails to call for her, decides that he must be still working at the office, forgetful of the lateness of the hour. She proceeds to the office to remind him of his appointment, and finding it deserted, she is about to leave, when muffled groans reach her from the safe. She realizes that it must be her sweetheart who is imprisoned, and that unless she can free him in short order, he will surely die of suffocation. Not knowing the combination of the safe, and being unable to reach by telephone her employer, she suddenly conceives the idea that if by telegraphic signals she can make known to the man in the safe that she is there, trying to help him, he in his turn can in the same code give her the combination of the safe. This plan works out successfully, the two lovers tapping out their messages against the steel sides of the safe. The door of the safe finally yields to the combination, and Jack's apparently lifeless body rolls to the floor of the office. May revives him, and amid tears and laughter they rejoice over Jack's narrow escape.

Haunted by fear of what he has done, Bill creeps stealthily back to the office, and opens the door of the safe, impelled to learn its horrible secret. As the door opens he is confronted by two officers of the law, who place him under arrest.

POWERS CO.

WAR.—Gordon Clay, a young married man, leaves his wife and child to enlist in the Confederate army. As one of a scouting party he is ordered to scale a cliff and look for the enemy. A young Union lieutenant looking through his spy-glasses sees Clay. He makes a bet with his brother officers that he will hit that "Johnny Reb." He borrows a rifle, fires, and Clay rolls down the precipice, dead. We see the poor wife waiting for his return. A comrade of Clay's enters and tells her that her husband died in the performance of his duty.

THE BEECHWOOD GHOST.—A house party is given at the old Beech mansion. The young people are playing a kissing game. Young Oliver wins a kiss from Eleanor Beech, who refuses to give it to him. He makes a bet that he will get his kiss from her within twenty-four hours. The young people are discussing a newspaper article of the Beechwood ghost, which appears occasionally as a general of the Continental army. Oliver hires a Continental general's uniform, passes as the ghost and gets his kisses.

For Rent to Licensed Theatres

ORIGINAL

JOHNSON-KETCHEL FIGHT

2500 FEET

The greatest picture of a knock-out ever snapped by a camera. Exclusive American Rights controlled by the Johnson-Ketchel Fight Pictures Co.

A. J. GILLIGHAM, Mgr.
103 Monroe Street
Grand Rapids, Michigan

INFORMATION
Upon all Matters Pertaining to the Motion-Picture Business
CHARGES MODERATE
ALAN J. BACHRACH
P. O. Box 38 Washington, D. C.

Old Fort Film Exchange
INDEPENDENT
721½ CLINTON STREET
Phone 2987
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

CHEAP
Steel Frame Theatre Chairs
ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE
Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.
Second Hand Chairs
Also seating for Out-of-Door Use.
Address Dept. W.
STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York Office: 150 Fifth Avenue
Boston Office: 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

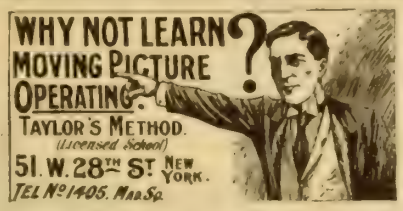
BLANK LEADERS
In Black, Red, Green or Any Color
$15 PER 1000 FEET Guaranteed Against Brittleness
WASTE UTILIZATION CO.
442 E. 166th St. NEW YORK

For Rent—6 reels films with signs and slides, $12 For Sale—50 reels perfect condition films, $10 to $16.50 per reel. Perfect song slides $1.50 per set. Steel Slide Carriers, can't burn, won't break, 75c. Tickets, 9c. per 1,000.
LIBERTY FILM RENTING CO.,
105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

Andrews OPERA CHAIRS

Over 75 per cent. of the finest theaters in the United States and Canada are furnished with them. They are used in 318 of the 406 moving picture theaters in Chicago.
To meet the growing demands for
LOW PRICED OPERA CHAIRS
we have originated a number of styles which, though inexpensive, are characteristic of
ANDREWS QUALITY
Write to Department K for our large Catalogue No. 81, illustrated in colors, which will guide you when contemplating the purchase of opera chairs.

THE A. H. Andrews Co.
CHICAGO ESTABLISHED 1868
NEW YORK SAN FRANCISCO
ST LOUIS SEATTLE
174-176 Wabash Avenue, Chicago



Correspondence Course. Special rates to the trade, send for free illustrated catalogue.
School class meets every morning and afternoon, with F. H. Richardson of Chicago, as chief instructor. Evening classes meet every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We positively guarantee you a $15 position.
We are selling agents for the Powers' Cameragraph and Motiograph Moving Picture Machines.
We carry a large line of electrical supplies and furnish everything for the theatre.
F. C. TAYLOR
49 West 28th Street New York City
Phone 1405 Madison Square

Canadian Exhibitors

Looking for a first-class film service, write the Crystal Palace Film Exchange for particulars. We handle both Licensed and Independent films and can give you a right up-to-date service. We own and operate the most successful Moving Picture Theaters in Canada.

Located at
141 Yonge Street, Toronto
331 St. Lawrence Blvd., Mont.
27 King Street East, Hamilton
Agents for Powers and Edison Machines

Crystal Palace Film Exchange
141 Yonge Street Toronto, Can.
269 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, Can.

EXCHANGES!

Have you tried our process for renewing your old films

IF NOT

Send us a reel and see what we can do

IF

Your second run reel is in good condition it will help rent your new film

Shipments of fifteen reels returned same day received

Old Reliable Film Renovating Co.
22 Randolph St. :: Chicago, Ills.

Write for References from 75 Exchanges

Lantern Slide
MATS AND BINDING STRIPS

WE manufacture a full line of these goods. Have you tried our GUMMED PAPER LETTERS for making up slides? If not, do so at once and save time and money.

CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES ON REQUEST

The Tablet & Ticket Co.
Chicago, New York, San Francisco

Film Service for All Classes
PRICES TO SUIT ALL
INDIANAPOLIS CALCIUM LIGHT & FILM EXCHANGE
114-116 S. Capitol Ave. Indianapolis, Ind.

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 5—The Little Blind Girl.....625
Sept. 15—Between Duty and Honor (Dr.).....820
Sept. 16—The Sacking of Rome 800
Sept. 19—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Sept. 19—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic).....440
Sept. 26—The Street Arab of Paris (Dr.).....820
Oct. 2—Through the Ruins of Carthage.....660
Oct. 3—Behind the Scenes of Cinema Stage...320

CINES.

Eclair.

Sept. 23—Julie Colonna (Dr.) 760
Sept. 25—Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer (Com.)..236
Sept. 30—Giovanni of Medici (Dr.).....1000

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 3—The Little Drummer Boy (Dr.).....
Sept. 3—Fabian Hunting Rats (Com.).....
Sept. 10—Robinson Crusoe (Dr.) .....
Sept. 17—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....
Sept. 24—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—The Flight Across the Atlantic (Sc.)..

"IMP."

Aug. 29—The Widow 994
Sept. 1—Right Girl 982
Sept. 5—You Saved My Life.....995
Sept. 8—Sister's Sacrifice 996
Sept. 12—Two Daughters 992
Sept. 15—Dixie 986
Sept. 19—Debt 998
Sept. 22—New Butler 994
Sept. 26—Pressed Roses 987
Sept. 29—Annie (Dr.) .....
Oct. 3—All the World's a Stage (Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Deciding Vote (Dr.).....

LUX FILMS.

Sept. 15—A Selfish Man's Lesson (Dr.).....603
Sept. 22—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Sept. 22—That Typist Again (Com.).....380
Sept. 29—How Jones Won the Championship (C.)380
Sept. 29—Kindness Abused and Its Results (Dr.)531

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 10—Hearts of Gold (Dr.).....990
Aug. 17—Why Dad Was Held Up (Com.).....
Aug. 24—In the Black Hills (Dr.) 960
Aug. 31—The Blazed Trail (Dr.).....989
Sept. 7—The Moonshiner's Daughter (Dr.).....960
Sept. 14—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956
Sept. 21—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963
Sept. 28—Where the Sun Sets (Dr.).....976

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
("Bison.")

Sept. 13—Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Sept. 16—For a Western Girl.....915
Sept. 20—For the Love of Red Wing.....957
Sept. 23—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000
Sept. 27—A Cowboy for Love 989
Sept. 30—The Ranch Raiders 1000
Oct. 4—Young Deer's Return 1000
Oct. 7—The Girl Scout 1000

ITALA.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Aug. 27—Foolshead in the Lion's Cage.....622
Aug. 27—An Enemy of the Dust.....382
Sept. 3—The Nestal 1000
Sept. 10—A Thief Well Received (Com.).....578
Sept. 10—Mr. Coward (Com.).....345
Sept 17—The Falconer 818
Sept. 24—Foolshead as a Policeman.....500
Sept. 24—The Bad Luck of an Old Rake.....500
Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank 1000

AMBROSIO.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Aug. 31—Tweedle Dum's Forged Bank Note....297
Sept. 7—The Caprice of a Dame (Com.).....
Sept. 7—Fricot Has Lost His Collar Stud (Com)
Sept. 14—The Iron Foundry.....900
Sept. 21—The Last Friend.....500
Sept. 21—Molly at the Regiment—Her Adventures 500
Sept. 28—The Virgin of Babylon 908

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Sept. 6—The Inconstant (Com.) .....
Sept. 10—For the Girl's Sake (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Tell-Tale Perfume .....
Sept. 13—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Sept. 17—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....
Sept. 24—His Lordship (Dr.).....
Sept. 27—The Taming of "Buck" (Com.).....
Sept. 27—O! You Wives (Com.).....
Oct. 1—The Music Teacher (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—War (Dr.) .....
Oct. 4—The Beechwood Ghost (Com.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Aug. 26—The Latchkey (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 30—An Assisted Elopement (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 2—A Fresh Start (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 13—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Not Guilty (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—The Convict .....
Sept. 23—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.)...
Sept. 27—Home-made Mince Pie (Com.).....1000
Sept. 30—Dots and Dashes (Dr.).....1000

SALES CO.—FILM D'ART.

July 21—Mateo Falcone 694
July 21—Andromache 356
July 28—The Hidden Place.....900
Aug. 4—The Eagle and the Eaglet.....1000
Aug. 11—Charles Le Temeraire.....518
Aug. 18—Carmen 995
Aug. 25—In the Day of the First Christians..1000
Sept. 1—King of One Day 975
Sept. 8—The Minister's Speech.....500
Sept. 8—The Conscience of a Child.....500
Sept. 15—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.).1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

Aug. 18—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 25—Hazing a New Scholar (Dr.) .....
Sept. 1—Great Marshall Jewel Case (Dr.).....
Sept. 1—That Letter from Teddy.....
Sept. 8—Cowboy's Courtship (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—An Athletic Instructor (Com.).....
Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.).....
Sept. 29—A Schoolmarm's Ride for Life (Dr.)..

CHAMPION.

July 13—The Abernathy Kids 1000
July 20—Romance of an Anvil (Dr.) 1000
July 27—Cowboy and the Squaw (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 3—Spitfire (Dr.) 900
Aug. 10—Hermit of the Rockies 900
Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge, (Dr.) 900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.) 900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.) .....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.) 900
Sept. 28—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....900
Oct. 5—The Cowboys to the Rescue (Dr.).....900

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 18—Right to Labor.....998
July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.) .....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not In Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless 1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Women of the West (Dr.).....950

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 17—Count of Noaccount.....
Aug. 24—The Tale of the Hot Dog.....725
Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.) 450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders 450
Sept. 14—Monkey Shines 500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Sept. 28—Levi the Cop (Com.).....
Sept. 28—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....
Oct. 5—When Cupid Sleeps (Dr.).....

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart.....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Bill Mason's Ride (Dr.).....700

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, September 26th.

Eclair—The Street Arab of Paris (Dr.).....820
Imp—Pressed Roses (Dr.) .....
Yankee—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....

Tuesday, September 27th.

Bison—A Cowboy for Love (Dr.).....989
Powers—The Taming of "Buck" (Com.).....
Powers—O! You Wives (Com.) .....
Thanhouser—Home-made Mince Pie (Com.)...1000

Wednesday, September 28th.

Ambrosio—The Virgin of Babylon 908
Atlas—Levi the Cop (Com.).....
Atlas—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....
Champion—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Nestor—Where the Sun Sets (Dr.).....976

Thursday, September 29th.

Defender—A Schoolmarm's Ride for Life (Dr.).
Imp—Annie (Dr.) .....
Lux—How Jones Won the Championship (C.)...380
Lux—Kindness Abused and Its Results (Dr.)...531

Friday, September 30th.

Bison—The Ranch Raiders (Dr.).....1000
Cines (Eclair)—Giovanni of Medici (Dr.).....1000
Thanhouser—Dots and Dashes (Dr.).....1000

Saturday, October 1st.

Great Northern—The Flight Across the Atlantic (Scenic) .....
Itala—Foolshead Employed in a Bank.....1000
Powers—The Music Teacher (Dr.).....

ADVERTISING : ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES

Genre Transparency Company
507 N. Clark Street : : : Chicago

Moving Picture Machines
Repaired by skilled mechanics at short notice and reasonable prices. Work guaranteed.
CHAS. E. DRESSLER, 388 2nd Avenue
Near 23rd Street Take Elevator

"STOLEN"

A list of our customers was recently Stolen and is now being used by scoundrels whose reputations in the business world are almost as good as that of any burglar. Their brains, if they had any, would rattle around in a peanut like peas in a washboiler, Don't negotiate with crooks, patronize the house of merit.

The Swaab Film Service Company
(Incorporated)
338 Spruce Street : : Philadelphia, Pa.

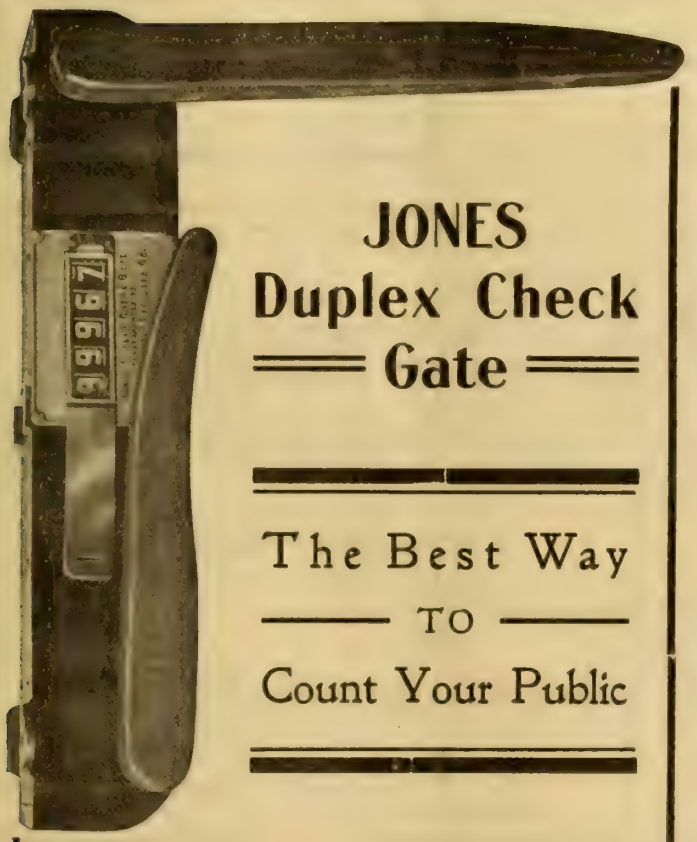
LUCIEN PRÉVOST

MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS : 21 Rue Perdonnet, Paris
WORKS : : : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras
Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)
Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines



JONES
Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way
TO Count Your Public

Manufactured by

JONES
Change Register Co.
INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

BIO CARBONS

Bio Carbons

last from 25% to 30% longer and give a steadier, whiter light and 1-3 more of it, than any other carbon on the market.

This is a simple, truthful statement of facts which every BIO user has proved for himself.

If you don't know it, there is only one reason—you have never tried BIO Carbons.

We especially urge all who try BIO Carbons to test them side by side with the best ordinary carbons they know of, and judge accordingly.

Isn't it worth your while to know the only carbon that has won every competitive test in which it has been entered—that has never failed to make good every claim.

Pin your check for $1.50 to this ad, and mail to nearest office for prepaid sample package of 50.

For samples write your name here

Your Name.....

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK - - - - - 39 Cortlandt Street
PITTSBURG - - - - - 421 Frick Building
MILWAUKEE - - - - - 114-116 Huron Street
SAN FRANCISCO - - - 195-197 Fremont Street

ATTENTION, MR. EXHIBITOR, did you ever stop to consider how much your film cement costs you by buying it in bottles. "Why not make your own."

I will send the formula for making the strongest and best cement on earth. Can be used for both kinds of film. A gallon of mine costs only $3.68, can you beat that, making

128 oz. bottles which would cost $32.00 at retail; or,
256 ½ oz. bottles which would cost $38.40 at retail

Are you interested? If so send $1.00 to-day for formula to

JOHN H. HEINZ
GEM THEATRE, 714-16 E. BALTO. St., BALTO., MD.

A SCHOOL FOR MECHANICS

Conducted by Al. Kupky at 110 Third Avenue, is open to operators desiring a further knowledge in setting up and repairing Moving Picture Machines.

COMPLETE COURSE $10.00

Justice Machine Works

110 3rd Ave., - New York

Lang's Rewinder No. 2
Price, $5.00 Net
Send for latest catalogue
Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

You Stole My Gal.
I'm Just Pinin' For You.
Beloved.
There's a Girl up in the Moon.
On Mobile Bay
He got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.
What is the World Without You.
On a Sunday Evening in the Summer Time.
Come Along My Mandy.
Love Sick.
In My Garden.
Sometime in After Years.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Miror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock; Tripods, Tilts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply, special lenses, films and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

SONG SLIDES FOR RENT

5c PER SET, PER DAY

EXCELSIOR SLIDE COMPANY

138 East 14th Street, New York — Telephone 789 3812 Stuyvesant

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the
Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St., TOLEDO, O.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS

FOR

Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest New and Second-hand Films Dealers in the United States, both Independent and Association. New Film, from 4c. per foot up, Second-hand Film, from $5.00 per reel up, Second-hand Power's Machine, like new, $115.00, Song Slides, at $2.00 per set up, ⅝ x 6 Electra Carbons Pink Label $19.00 per 1000. Complete List sent free upon request.

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West — Broadway and 17th Street — New York City

IMP — BISON — DEFENDER — ATLAS — OWL — AMBROSIO

CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE

315-317 West Fourth Street, CINCINNATI, O. Long Distance 'Phone, Main 1450.

"THE HOUSE THAT BUYS FILMS"

Connect with a real, live, up-to-date Film Exchange that can give you a real service.
References—MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

ITALA — THANHOUSER — FILM D'ART — YANKEE — OTHERS

LUX FILMS

The World's Best—Bar None

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES

Split Reels Give Variety
Order This One NOW

Kindness Abused and Its Results

Length 531 Feet—Drama

How Jones Won the Championship

Length 380 Feet—Comedy
RELEASED SEPTEMBER 29, 1910

This reel is a winner, portraying an excellent bit of moral teaching that will appeal to young and old, and an uproariously funny comedy showing some hair-raising trick cycling.

BOOK IT AT ONCE

Do not Forget the Free Colored Lithos.

R. PRIEUR

10 E. 15th Street, New York City
Telephone Call, 3124 Stuyvesant
Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

Eclair Films

BEST MONEY MAKER ON THE MARKET

For October 3rd

A TWO SUBJECT REEL

"THROUGH THE RUINS OF CARTHAGE"

660 FEET

An exciting story of adventure among the wonderful ruins of Carthage, combining the excitement of drama with the most interesting instruction; most beautiful scenery ever produced.

"Behind the Scenes of The Cinema Stage"

760 FEET

A most interesting film—something unique, which will be appreciated by all.

Cines Films

For September 30th

"Giovanni of Medici"

1000 FEET

A superbly dramatic production. The Story of a brave and desperate man, brought low, by a stronger One than he.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.
CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST.

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Inc.

The oldest and largest Independent Film Exchange in New England

Mr. Exhibitor: When you see your receipts drop, call on us

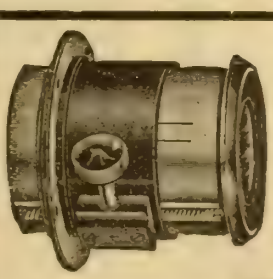
If you are unable to call, drop us a line and we will convince you that our service is the service you want to increase your business

Don't forget the name and address

W. E. Greene Film Exchange

INCORPORATED

228 Tremont Street Boston, Mass.



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15 00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

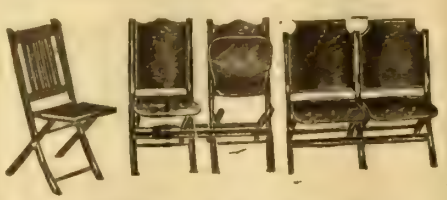
All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS
ROLL TICKETS

50,000 for $8.75 — Stock Tickets
100,000 for 13.50 — 9c. per 1000
Terms Cash—No C.O.D.

Canadian Ticket Press, GANANOQUE ONT.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices — Best Work — DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

"BULLY! IT'S AN IMP"

The minute an "Imp" pops out of the can, the wise exhibitor is tickled because he knows its going to be one of the best two days in his week. The other best day is when he gets the next "Imp." If you're paying a half way decent price for your film service, you are entitled to TWO IMPS EVERY BLESSED WEEK. If you don't get them, why on earth do you stand for it? Why don't you GET WHAT YOU'RE PAYING FOR or else switch to some other exchange?

"All the World's a Stage"

This deals with a question that will interest everybody, especially the women. It shows the jealousy of a husband because his wife, who is an actress, plays a love scene with another actor. It is strong, clear, steady and a typical Imp. Released October 3. Begin to ask for it this minute.

"The Deciding Vote"

This deals with one of the most timely topics of the day—attempted bribery of the legislators—and every man in your town will think the play was written about your own State Legislature. The acting will set you wild with enthusiasm. So will the photography and every other detail. Released October 6. Begin to ask for it this minute.

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America-
CARL LAEMMLE, Pres.
102 WEST 101st STREET
NEW YORK
All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

CURRENT EVENTS

From every exhibitor using them we receive glowing reports. The subjects vitally interest the public and consequently bring you the nickels and dimes.

RENT THEM FROM YOUR EXCHANGE or order direct, PRICE $6.00 per set, posters FREE.

Full particulars on every slide; therefore no written lecture is required

COMING
Walter Wellmans Attempt to Cross the Atlantic

Teddy Roosevelt's Western Tour (Two Sets)
Capture of Dr. Crippen
Attempted Assassination of Mayor Gaynor
Landing of the Pilgrims
World's Famous Aviators
Jeffries-Johnson Fight
Sir Genille Cave Brown Cave, the Cowboy Baronet

24 Union Square — LEVI COMPANY, Inc. — New York, U. S. A.

SEND IN YOUR BID QUICK

BEFORE THE TERRITORY YOU WANT IS SOLD

For the exclusive City or State Rights for the only moving pictures of

Buffalo Bill's Wild West & Pawnee Bill's Far East

If you want to make big money on an Exclusive Proposition that will stand repeating, get the pictures of the WILD WEST and FAR EAST, combined.

BUFFALO BILL and PAWNEE BILL draw larger crowds to their exhibition than any show on earth. These pictures will draw larger crowds than any ever made, and they will never lose interest. With the 3000 feet of film you can show in any theatre the complete BUFFALO BILL WILD WEST and PAWNEE BILL FAR EAST exactly as it is exhibited in the open arena. You can give a genuine $1.00 show at a low price of admission.

Not only the Wild West but the Rough Riders of every nation, the Far East—all combined make the 3000 feet of film novel and exciting from start to finish—the Greatest Drawing Card in the World.

50 styles of the finest lithograph posters.

Fine assortment of large size photographs for lobby frames, heralds, cuts, etc. Everything to help you get the money.

Buffalo Bill & Pawnee Bill Film Company

care of MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, 61 W. 14th St., NEW YORK CITY

A PROGRAM without a NESTOR is

HAMLET without HAMLET

FOR RELEASE WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28th, 1910

WHERE THE SUN SETS

LENGTH, 976 FEET

A Remarkably Human Story of the Far West

WATCH!!!

WAIT!!!

An avalanche of applications for BULLETINS has paralyzed us for the moment. Necessary steps have been taken, and in another week no EXHIBITOR on our MAILING LIST need be without NESTOR'S WEEKLY BULLETIN

C. R. HOLMES, Mgr. of The Acme Theatre, 1067 Dolores St. San Francisco, Cal., writes:

"My patrons have GREAT praise for all your pictures. 'In the Black Hills' made a GREAT impression."

Scene from "WHERE THE SUN SETS"

We are all familiar with that noble type—the self-sacrificing woman—but how often do we hear of the man who completely effaces himself and readily gives up everything he treasures on earth that he might benefit others? You will find just such a man in "WHERE THE SUN SETS"—a story at once PATHETIC and VIRILE. The brief synopsis, enlarged a hundred times, would scarcely convey the SUBLIME CHARM, POWER and BEAUTY of this MARVELOUS NESTOR CREATION.

ORDER THIS INSTANT! You NEED this picture—it will GRIP your audience and GIVE you a FIRMER GRIP on your BUSINESS.

ROUGH-HOUSE for "WHERE THE SUN SETS" and SEE that you GET IT!

Sold through MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CO.
111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK CITY

A Full Page of Good, Live Exchanges Buying Nestor Films!
Read the List and Note its Steady, Healthy Growth! There's a Reason.

BE A MEMBER OF OUR LARGE MAILING LIST FAMILY

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CAPITOL FILM SERVICE	422 N. High St., Columbus, Ohio.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE	602 Dooly Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE	315 West 4th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
DIXIE FILM CO	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La.
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
EMPIRE FILM EXCHANGE	150 E. 14th St., New York City
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC STATES FILM EXCHANGE	734 S. Main St., Los Angeles, Cal.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO	723-34 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
TOLEDO FILM EXCHANGE	319 Superior St., Toledo, Ohio.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM & SUPPLY CO.	112 N. Market St., Wichita, Kan.

THIS WEEK'S ADDITIONS:

SWANSON, WILLIAM H	Denver, Colo.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE	934 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO	Atlanta, Ga.
STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE	155 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

MERCIFUL HEAVENS!

Read This Threat:

Now, you exhibitors who paid no heed to my prophecy, read this letter! It was written to an EXHIBITOR by an agent of the General Film Company and may therefore be construed as the policy which Gen. Flimco intends to pursue. Read it carefully. And read carefully the last sentence and especially THE LAST FOUR WORDS OF THAT SENTENCE! Now then, by all the gods, what do you think of it? What will you do when you get a letter like that? Are you going to SIT ON YOUR TROUSERS AND WAIT till some one threatens to CRUSH YOU, or are you going to assert your Independence now—while the asserting is good? If you think you can wait till you are kicked into Independence and then come with tears in your eyes and ask for the best in the house, you're counting your chickens before the eggs are laid. The Cause of Independence needs and wants you NOW when every new exhibitor added to the ranks will have more effect than every TEN exhibitors added after the fight is won. Don't try to kid yourself into thinking that Independent films are not good enough for you. You've never even seen them. Make arrangements to see some of the latest Independent releases and you'll wake up with a jerk. Read Gen. Flimco's letter again. Learn it. Sing it. Whistle it. It's a hot old tune. SOME OF THESE FINE DAYS YOU MAY HAVE TO DANCE TO IT IF GEN. FLIMCO TELLS YOU TO.

DENVER FILM EXCHANGE
713 LINCOLN STREET
H. H. BUCKWALTER, MANAGER
DENVER COLORADO

Denver, Colo., August 26, 1910.

Mr. W. F. Aldrach,
Palace Theatre,
Great Bend, Kans.

Dear Sir:

A few weeks ago your operator ruined two reels and we called your attention to the fact at the time. Explaining that we would later put in a claim for the damage. The writer returned from New York a few days ago and this matter was thoroughly discussed with the final understanding that you must pay for the damage.

Today we find you sent in the Forgiven reel absolutely ruined It is not our desire to be harsh or unreasonable in any manner, but you must now pay $50.00 in partial settlement of the damage done by you. I shall tonight wire the General Film Company of this decision.

For your information I will say that this exchange was sold to the General Film Company several days ago and the writer is now western manager of this concern which has absorbed nearly every exchange in the United States including the Kleine Optical Company as well as the Yale exchanges in Kansas City and St. Louis and the Pittsburg Calcium Light Company.

The writer cannot overlook expressing the opinion that it was actions such as this which prompted the formation of the General Film Company which now has absolute charge of the business. We advised you in a very friendly manner just before leaving for the east regarding the value of the films and notice that you have again erased our value and reduced it to $50.00. It is not the writer's intention at this time to go into any lengthy explanation but you will realize that if you intend to stay in the business and avoid expensive law suits it will be necessary for you to conform your methods with those of every honest exhibitor. You will find that by doing this the General Film Company will look after your interests to the very highest degree while if you do not care to treat their property with consideration, of course you will expect to have trouble with a concern the size of which is quite ample to crush you very quickly.

Yours truly,

DENVER FILM EXCHANGE,
By H. H. Buckwalter, Treas. & Mgr.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

Headquarters: 196-198 Lake Street, Chicago

Minneapolis Portland Omaha Salt Lake City Evansville

The biggest and best film renter in the world

RIP VAN WINKLE

WATCH!

The topical song has it that Rip Van Winkle was a lucky man to live in the Catskills twenty years without paying rent, but if Rip could see our film of his adventures he would indeed consider himself fortunate, for he has been treated luxuriously by the Columbia. He is played up to the limit of glorious achievement and in his best days he never wandered through more beautiful scenery, danced with prettier girls or was treated with more reverential courtesy than in our hands.

RELEASED OCTOBER 1st

"Jealously"

RELEASED OCTOBER 8th

This is the last word in picturesque scenery, fine photography and dramatic tensity. Clean and wholesome, it is a story of desperate motive.

"Tracked Across the Sea"

RELEASED OCTOBER 16th—A Surprise.

"Breaking Home Ties"

RELEASED OCTOBER 24th

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Sold Through The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

VITAGRAPH

"LIFE PORTRAYALS"

FOR RELEASE TUESDAY, OCT. 4

RANSOMED

Or, "A PRISONER OF WAR." Strongly dramatic and excitingly thrilling in the war scenes. A triumph of military picture production, telling a story that is absorbingly interesting. Approximate length, 998 feet.

FOR RELEASE FRIDAY, OCT. 7

THE LAST OF THE SAXONS

Historical Drama. A powerful picture story, correctly descriptive of early English life. Approximate length, 1,005 feet.

FOR RELEASE SATURDAY, OCT. 8

THE SAGE, THE CHERUB AND THE WIDOW

Refined Comedy, full of laughing interest and telling a charming love story. Approximate length, 998 feet.

If you are not getting our Bulletins, send in your name and address at once. In making revisions a number o names have been dropped by mistake.

USE VITAGRAPH POSTERS. Posters specially made for each Film Subject. Order from your Exchange direct from us.

The Vitagraph Company of America { NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. PARIS, 15 Rue Sainte-Cec..

Vol. 7., No. 15. October 8, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

★ MÉLIÈS RELEASES ★

BILL'S SISTER

This is the swiftest and most dramatic of Western dramas. Length, 950 Feet

Released OCTOBER, 6, 1910

OUT FOR MISCHIEF

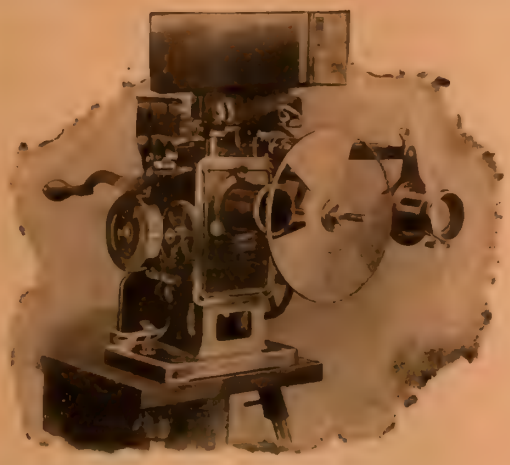
Bubbling with fun, real fun by children who are natural fun makers. Length, 960 feet.

Released OCTOBER 13, 1910

MÉLIÈS FILMS ARE SURE MONEY GETTERS. TRY THEM YOURSELF AND BE CONVINCED.

G. MÉLIÈS, 204 East 38th Street, New York City

Western Representative: JOHN B. ROCK, 109 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.



Power's Cameragraph No. 6

The Perfect Motion Picture Machine

"I am sure the success of our show is due to the first class pictures we are giving the people, and the secret is, we have, as you know, a No. 6 Power's installed last May."

(Signed) F. R. BENJAMIN, Mgr.

Dated Sept. 19th 1910 The Family Theatre, Darby, Pa.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE G—JUST OUT

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY - 115-117 Nassau Street, New York City

VITAGRAPH

"RELIANCE" FILMS

FIRST RELEASE SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22nd

In the Gray of the Dawn

A stupendous production, with Magnificent Costumes, Superb Photography, Exquisite Toning and Beautiful Tinting, which viewed from any standpoint, will rank as the

WORLD'S MASTERPIECE OF MOTOGRAPHY

A compelling story, with a cast of 75 people, the principal roles being interpreted by leaders of the motion picture field, including—

MARION LEONARD — HENRY WALTHALL
GERTRUDE ROBINSON — ARTHUR JOHNSON
PHILLIPS SMALLEY — JAMES KIRKWOOD
FRANKIE BURNS

Portraying the human passions so vividly that the hearts of the characters seem bared upon the screen,—pulsating with love, overflowing with charity and repentance,—and the finale shows the battle fought by a woman with her conflicting emotions, every fibre of her being yearning passionately for the affection of the man who has led her from dubious paths into the light of respectability and proffered marriage,—opening wide to her the gates of earthly paradise,—and her conscience bidding her send him back to his blind fiancee from whom she has unwittingly lured him. To save the man from self-destruction which he threatens in his mad infatuation, and to gain a few moments' respite, she apparently consents to the marriage, and while he dashes joyfully away for a minister she ends her own existence. He returns,—in the gray of the dawn,—and as he fondles the lifeless form of the beautiful creature in a paroxysm of grief, the minister solemnly raises his hand to heaven, saying, "It is the will of God"—presenting a tableau which will live forever in the minds of those witnessing it.

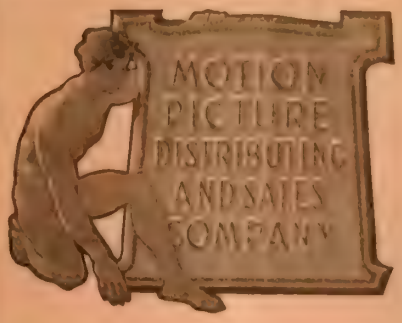
The Ballroom scene, where the queen of the demi-monde meets the youth,—the blind girl pining for her loved one,—the clash of the rivals for the affections of the lovely courtesan,—are but few of the intense dramatic incidents portrayed in this subject with faithfulness of detail seldom seen in motion pictures.

Begin Today Demanding This Subject of Your Film Exchange!

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES

1 UNION SQUARE : : : : : : : : NEW YORK CITY



We Have Won the Public

Public recognition of the superiority of our films is demonstrated every day by the ever increasing patronage of Independent theatres, and the number of enterprising exhibitors who realize the worth of our pictures and are taking service from our Buying Exchanges. Look at our releases and decide for yourself if we are not putting forth weekly the

FINEST PROGRAM IN THE WORLD

You are the judge. Isn't it worth a little of your time to find out what we are doing? Here is the regular

ORDER OF RELEASE

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
COLUMBIA—Columbia Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.
RELIANCE—Carlton Laboratories.
1st. Release, October 22.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, September 21st, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.

CALIFORNIA.

California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

COLORADO.

W. H. Swanson Film Exchange, 301 Railroad Bldg., Denver.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Consolidated Film Exchange, Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta.
Sunny South Film Exchange, Rhodes Building, Atlanta

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 79 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.
Standard Film Exchange, 155 E. Washington St., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 256 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1230 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1517 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Buckeye Film & Projection Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Capitol Film Service, 422 N. High St., Columbus.
Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 924 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Co-operative Film Exchange, 320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

"THE FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN" IS COMING!

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week

Say "THANHOUSER"
to the Exchange Man for the "Thanhouser"
Two-a-Week

Released
Tuesday, Oct. 11th

POCAHONTAS

is a magnificent portraiture of court and colony life as lived in the long ago by the Indian girl and the persons who, through the mere fact of acquaintanceship with her, have passed down into time as big historical figures. The wonderful story of this wonderful woman is told by the moving picture as the printed or spoken word could never give it. It shows the motion picture AT ITS BEST as a text book and an entertainer.

App. Length, 1000 Ft. No. 150. Code Word, Pocahontas.

Released Friday, Oct. 14th

DELIGHTFUL DOLLY

is a delightful tale of a doll who isn't a doll at all, but who in her effort to be doll-like makes you laugh till the tears come to your eyes. WE MEAN IT! The tot is actually so funny in her imitation of the doll that you'll yell every time she fools the child opposite with the stiff, jerky movement of the limbs that usually belongs to toy children.

App. Length, 1000 Ft. No. 151. Code Word, Dolly.

Have you dropped us a card for the THANHOUSER NEWS, "The Exhibitors Guide?" It's sent FREE of CHARGE to anyone who can show connection with the moving picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Say "Thanhouser" to the Exchange Man

The Sales Co., Agents for United States and Canada.

"THE FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN" IS COMING!

COWBOY AND INDIAN

Frontier Celebration, Held at Cheyenne, Wyoming

Reviewed and Participated in By COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Exclusive Motion Pictures WILD GLORIES OF THE VANISHED WESTERN BORDER

Over 3,000 feet of the greatest money-getting Motion Pictures in the world, showing "the West as it was."

EXHIBITORS—EXCHANGES This will be a dandy money-maker anywhere and everywhere.

These Reels Show World's Champions in

Bucking Broncho Riding; Trick and Fancy Roping Contests; Steer Roping and Calf Branding Contests; Fancy Rifle and Pistol Shooting; Bulldogging of Wild Steers; Riding and Driving only Team of Buffaloes ever broken to Harness; Hitching and Driving Wild Horses; Spectacular Galloping Parade of Indians, Cowboys and Cowgirls; Indian War Dances and Ceremonies; Champion Lady Bucking Broncho Rider; Riding Bucking Mules and Buffalo; Squaw Races; Ladies Cowpony Races; Indian Races; Mounted "Pototoe Race," and Teddy Roosevelt through all.

Said The Wyoming Tribune

"The presentation of the so-called 'Cowboy Carnivals" as seen in various travelling exhibitions, put on in stereotyped form by tired performers, gives one but a shallow insight into the excitement that pervades the atmosphere of these wonderful motion pictures, and those judging the "West as it Was" by these poor presentations cannot even image the feats of daring and recklessness displayed by these Real Actors in these Realistic Motion Pictures of the Wild and Woolly West."

EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY FOR SALE. PRICES VERY REASONABLE. WRITE OR WIRE AT ONCE

EXCLUSIVE PROPERTY OF

THE TOURNAMENT FILM COMPANY

TOLEDO, OHIO

Select territory you want and write at once. Exhibitors are going to demand these pictures—Be prepared.

Wire, Phone or Write Before the Territory You Want is Sold

FOR THE EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS FOR # DARE DEVILS

50 Realistic Exclusive Hand Colored Slides 50

Realistically Portraying

Human Life Slaughtered on Speed Lustful Tracks

Only Exclusive State Rights will be Sold. $75 Buys a Complete Set with Right to Rent and Exhibit them in Your State

The Early Bird Gets the Worm

Condensed Captions of a Few of the Above Mentioned Slides Are:

They carried the lifeless body of the "dare-devil Borque" across the course. The roaring fiend-like racer turned turtle and killed two spectators and the car mechanican. The car swerved from the course, the driver lost control, and the racer wrapped itself around a post. The dead and dying lay in a row. "For God's sake tell Father and Mother I am alive," were the first words of the dazed driver.

Since The Dawn of Picturedom

you have never been offered so graphic a set of slides as "Dare-Devils." By co-operating with the various pictorial news agencies throughout the country, we have been fortunate in securing representative pictures of the following speed courses: Indianapolis and Atlanta Motor Speed-ways, Los Angeles Motordrome, Brighton Beach Course, Daytonia Florida Beach, Vanderbilt Course, Prince Henry Course in Germany, Dieppe Course in France and the noted Brooklands Track in England.

One Complete set of Slides and Exclusive Right in your State, $75 One Complete set of Slides and Exclusive Canadian Rights, $150.
One Complete set of Slides and the Exclusive European Rights, $200.

Four Color Lithos, 10 Cents Each

WIRE OR WRITE YOUR ORDERS TODAY—FOR THE EARLY BIRD GETS THE WORM

Slides sent C. O. D. with the Privilege of Examination

DARE-DEVIL PICTURE CO., Boonville, Indiana

FIVE REELS A WEEK

Bison  Films

Tuesday; A "Bison" Wednesday, "Ambrosio"
Thursday; "Itala" Friday; A "Bison"
Saturday; "Itala"

2 WESTERN REELS 2

ASK FOR THEM!

YOUNG DEER'S RETURN

Scorned by the father of the girl he loved, whom he had saved from death in the burning desert, Young Deer goes back to savage life, discards civilized garments and weds a girl of his race. This film shows splendid scenes of stirring interest, the fight with the bandits, the rescue from savage Indians, the winning of a sensational baseball game by Young Deer at Carlisle, etc., etc.

Released Tuesday, Oct. 4th

THE GIRL SCOUT

While the emigrants are engaged in mortal combat with the Indians, the Girl Scout gallops wildly for assistance through rushing streams and rocky passes. Led by the girl the cowboys ride at terriffic speed to the succor of the whites, and the Indians are tumbled from their saddles by the bullets of the ranchers. The defence in the improvised stockade against the circling savages is most thrilling.

Released Friday, Oct. 7th

2 WESTERN REELS 2

GET THEM!

"AMBROSIO" RELEASE—WEDNESDAY, OCT. 5th
"THE PIT THAT SPEAKS" "TWEEDLEDUM'S DUEL"

"ITALA" RELEASES
"FOOLHEAD FISHERMAN" "MRS. CANNON IS WARM"
SATURDAY, OCT. 8th

"MYSTERIES OF BRIDGE OF SIGHS AT VENICE"
THURSDAY. OCT. 13th

EXHIBITORS: Send your name and address for our mailing list and we will send you weekly a sixteen page book entitled "Film Fancies" giving full synopsis of our films and other interesting matter. Profusely illustrated.

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

New York Motion Picture Co.

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures

1 Union Square - - New York City

Who's Loony Now?

The man who overlooks anything unusual, or unusually good.

The exhibitor who overlooks a Western film like

"Wild Bill's Defeat"

Released Thursday, October 6th

(Remember the 6th Falls on Thursday)

It don't take a million to get this reel, but getting it will help you make one

Money was the primal cause of the famous Chanler-Cavalieri separation. Money is the cause of many separations.

Question—How much money will you be separated from if you fail to get future Defender releases.

Soft! S-s-sh! CONNECT!

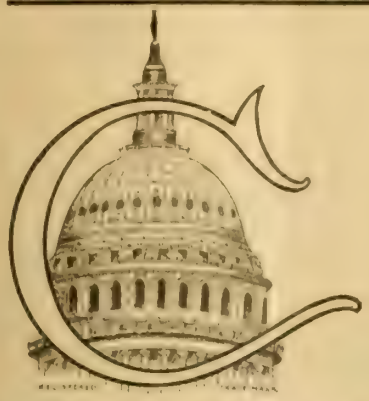
DEFENDER FILM CO.

WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 East 14th St., New York

Sold only throught the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

Exchanges, Attention!



PLACE YOUR ORDER AT ONCE FOR

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE AND WAR

With Col. John S. Mosby, a hero of '61, appearing in real war-time action, picturing scenes that happened nearly half a century ago.

See the Smoke and Powder Rising Off the Old Battlefields

See a real hero, a true story and the actual site of the fray. This will probably be the last opportunity that this generation will have to see one of the real heroes of '61 appearing in real war-time action.

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D. C.

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

RELEASED SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8th

WITHIN AN INCH OF HIS LIFE

A soul-stirring drama showing the narrow escape of an innocent man. The court-room scene is great. Acting, staging and settings are "Perfect."

RELEASED TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11th

A Man and a Girl — A western drama full of stirring scenes. Fine riding and a fine fight.

2 on 1

Simpson's Skate — A rip-roaring comedy showing Simpson with skates on and on a skate.

Insist, Demand That Your Exchange Furnish Every POWERS

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

Our Lobby Display Frames, Easels and Photos are Going Fast All Wise Exhibitors are on Our Mailing List. Are You?

ROASTED TO A TURN!

When we released "Trailing a Black Hand" we forgot to announce it was a comedy subject, although everyone knows we make nothing else.

One critic accepted our "invite" to see the "Bloddy Melodrammer" and when he found The Joke was on him decided to "teach us a lesson" and further cover his confusion by means of The Roast. We're making a special film for this member of the "Solid Ivory" clan, and for all others whose density was caused by over-development, A film to make peevish "old ladies" twitch and twist until they can't help laughing.

It's Coming October 12

CURING A GROUCH

Written and Produced Especially for the Occasion and to break the spell we're bringing out a beautifully colored reproduction of the World-famous ocean liner S. S.* MAURETANIA GOING TO SEA. A distinctively Novel and interesting subject.

Two Big Shows on One Reel---Coming Crack Comedies

October 19, The Cat Came Back
Imperfect Perfectos

October 26, A Touching Mystery

November 2, Turning of The Worm
That Dog-gone-Dog

ATLAS FILM CO.

10 East Fifteenth Street, New York City

SALES COMPANY TICKLED TO DEATH—WIRE YOUR ORDER

GREAT NORTHERN

GREAT·NORTHERN·FILMS·C°
COPENHAGEN

Stands for Quality!

Release for Saturday, October 1st

THE FLIGHT ACROSS THE ATLANTIC

SENSATIONAL AND THRILLING FEATURE PRODUCTION.—760 Ft.

Birds-eye View From World's Highest Buildings

235 FEET

Release for Saturday, October 8th

"The Storms of Life"

A powerful dramatic production containing an appealing love story which arouses both sympathy and interest for the pretty heroine. Realistic and true to life. Full reel subject. Don't miss it.

Many Big Headliners Coming. Watch for Them

THE GREAT NORTHERN FILM is the film make of Universal Fame (Pioneer of Independent Makers). No EXHIBITOR'S Weekly Programme is complete without a GREAT NORTHERN Reel.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCT

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

THE RIGHT WAY
To Bring
More Money
To the Box Office is to Show Better Pictures
than Your Competitor
Motiograph Pictures

are SO MUCH BETTER than those projected by other machines, that wherever a Motiograph is installed in a locality where it was not previously known, it's sure to be

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

AS SHOWN BY THE FOLLOWING EXAMPLES:

Warren & Jones, Greenville, Me., say:
"We get crowds with the Motiograph. Other machines failed."

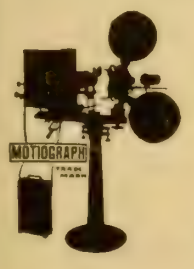
J. V. Lopaze, Trinidad, Colo., says:
"Best results and best pictures in town."

J. E Benton, Hiteman Opera House, Hiteman, Iowa, says:
"I show pictures that make them sit up and take notice."

Pendry & Kingsbury, Mgrs. Opera House, St. Anthony, Idaho, say:
"We show much better pictures than our competitors."

J. O. Cass, Laredo, Texas, says:
"My patrons say my pictures excel all others."

The Colonial Circuit of Eleven Beautiful Theatres use Nine Motiographs.



THE MOTIOGRAPH
Shows Far Better Pictures
Wears Far Better than Others
YET COSTS NO MORE
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE
and 52 REASONS why you should use it

Manufactured and Jobbed by Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.
564-572 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO, U. S. A.
J. H. HALLBERG, Agt. New York City
J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt London, Paris, Berlin

MAKING GOOD

is a difficult game, especially under adverse conditions and unfavorable circumstances. Then it is a rocky, ragged road, indeed. But is making good at every twist of the game and every turn of the road, and our next release,

The Champion Film Co.

HOW THE TENDERFOOT MADE GOOD

Released Wednesday, October 12th,

not only proves that we have, but pictorially relates how a young Easterner goes West and after strife and stress and struggle, disappointments and discouragements, wins fame as the trapper of a notorious outlaw, the sheriff's badge and the hand of the girl he loves.

If you are in the habit of getting good things, get this. If you are not, get the habit!

From a Man Who Had a Taste for Champion

"Put me on your mailing list, for Champs. What I have already had made me wish for more."

C. W. YALE, Manager,
Lyric Amusement Co.,
Siegfried, Pa.

SEE "PAST PERFORMANCES" FOR CHAMP FEATURES

CHAMP

THE CHAMP STAMP

CHAMPION FILM CO.
Mark M. Dintenfess
General Manager
12 East 15th Street
NEW YORK, U. S. A.

Laboratories at Coytesville on the Hudson

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company
111 East 14th Street, New York City
Live Men Are On Our Mailing List—Are You

Adaptability of Kinemacolor

TO EVERY CLASS OF SUBJECTS

All Public Functions, Pageants, Races, General Sports, Regattas, Dramas and Comedies, which are daily produced in black-and-white pictures, can with equal facility and promptness, be recorded in the Actual Colors of Nature by the KINEMACOLOR Process.

EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS FOR SALE

The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

INDEPENDENT, COMPETITIVE, PROGRESSIVE

UTAH'S ONE BEST BET

Revier Motion Picture Company

TRADE

MARK

WITH THE LARGEST PLANT IN THE WEST

OUR MOTTO

"See Trust Films if You Must, but Try Our Releases First."

The natural scenery of the Mormon State is the equal of any the world over for the production of motion pictures.

Ample capital is available and people of long experience have charge of our production.

We Are Ready---Our Aim The Best

WATCH FOR OUR FIRST RELEASES

Offices:
Majestic Theatre Building
H. REVIER, President

Salt Lake City, Utah

FACTORY:
Sugar House Station

Fairness to All, Privileges to None, Correspondence Solicited

The Cream of Illustrated Lectures

BOOKINGS NOW OPEN FOR SEASON OF 1910-11

CAMERA CHATS

(COPYRIGHT)

BY

The YANKEE TRAVELER

Note: These chats were originally produced at B. F. Keith's Bijou Theatre, Boston, and are now running on the Keith & Proctor Circuit. Each chat runs from ten to fifteen minutes and is accompanied by Fifty Beautifully Colored Slides.

List of Subjects

JAPAN

1. Ricksha Ramble—Streets of Tokyo
2-3. Glimpses of Home Life, Parts I and II
4. Japanese Girldom
5. Japanese Babydom—Japan, "A Paradise of Babies"
6. Flowers and Landscape Gardens
7. Fuji-yama—The Peerless Mountain
8-9. Picturesque Religions, Parts I and II
10. A Little Journey to Miyajima — Sacred Island of the Inland Sea
11. Delightful Scenery
12. School and Athletics
13. A Nation of Busy Brown Bees
14. Art Industries
15. Silk Industry
16. Among the Gentle Farmer Folks of Old Japan

PHILIPPINES

17. Our Philippine Possessions,—Manila and Environs
18. Trip to the Cocoanut Country
19. Trip to the Hemp Country
20. Trip to the Igorrotte Country
21-22. Central America—Parts I and II
23. A Cruise down the Islands of the East Indies
24. The Tragedy of the Martinique
25. A Trip to the Ruins of St. Pierre
26-27-28. Tour of the "Canadian Alps"—Parts I, II and III
29-30. Canadian Winter Sports—Parts I and II
31. In Old Quebec
32. A Canoe Trip in Ontario
33. The Great Northwest
34. Yellowstone Park
35. A Tenderfoot's Experience in Montana
36. Seeing Washington with Three Eyes
37. Niagara Falls
38. Rambles in the Southland
39. The Dear Old Farm
40. Childhood Memories
41. A World of Babies
42. Pictures and Poems
43. Dawn to Dark with the Poets
44. Flowers and Rhymes

For Terms, Address Agent

"Camera Chats"

545 Washington Street - - Boston, Mass.

AESTHETIC FILMS

GAUMONT AND

MOLIÉRE'S LAST APPEARANCE

COMING

A Great Success

in the way of Historical Film

The Life of Molière

as thrilling as a drama and absolutely authentic

Current Releases Described on Another Page

BULLETINS Mailed Free. Are You on the List? Posters Made in Four Colors.

URBAN - ECLIPSE

52 State Street George Kleine CHICAGO, ILLS.

An Indian's Gratitude

Release Day, October 5th

TWO HITS

A Summer Flirtation

Release Day, October 12th

41 West 25th Street NEW YORK PATHÉ FRÈRÉS 35 Randolph St. CHICAGO

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands.

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3¼ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building, Chicago). Telephone Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 OCTOBER 8, 1910 No. 15

Summary of the Week.

The Micro-Kinetoscope 797
The Usual Thing. Second Article..... 798
A Moving Picture Convention. Third Article..... 799
Moving Pictures in Natural Colors, by Thos. Bedding, F.R.P.S. 800
Praiseworthy Production by a New Producer..... 801
Motion Picture Censorship..... 802
Chief Operators, by F. H. Richardson..... 802
War in Peace Valley. A True Story by Will Smith... 803
New England Notes..... 804
"Man-About-Town" talks to the operator..... 806
"Lux Graphicus" meets the Vitagraph girl..... 807
Chicago Notes 808
Operators' Column. Questions and Answers..... 809
Comments on Licensed Films..... 813-814
Comments on Independent Films..... 816-817
Correspondence: An Exhibitor's Kick—The Picture in Educational Fields—Local Newspaper Advertising.. 819
Among the Exhibitors..... 826-827
Release Dates of Licensed Films..... 828
Release Dates of Independent Films..... 834

NOTICE.

The new Western offices of the Moving Picture World, Rooms 307-309, Post building, 160 Washington street, Chicago, are now ready to receive World readers visiting Chicago. Mr. John M. Bradlet, Western representative of the World, will extend to every one a cordial welcome. They will find a complete file of manufacturers' catalogues and a bureau of information on films, theater construction, materials and supplies. They will also find desks and stationery for their correspondence, the services of a lady stenographer and a polite messenger boy to act as their guide or go their errands. We invite every exhibitor or person interested in motion pictures to make our Western office their headquarters when visiting Chicago.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

We desire to state that, in conformity with recognized newspaper usages, all copy and cuts for advertisements in the Moving Picture World are received subject to the approval of the publishers, and that they are accepted for insertion absolutely without condition, expressed or implied, as to what appears in the reading portion of the paper.

Newspaper Agitation.

For several days during the past week the New York World has been publishing severe strictures upon the moving pictures exhibited in this city. The buildings in which some of these exhibitions are given are criticised, as is also the National Board of Censorship.

The first thing we have to say about these articles is that they are very belated, especially for a newspaper. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has already—and repeatedly—traversed all these conditions in special articles. The strictures upon some of the earlier pictures still being reproduced in the cheap places have been fully and severely made by us, and in justice to the National Board of Censorship as well as to ourselves it must be pointed out that these objectionable pictures were made before the Board of Censorship commenced its supervisory labors. It should be further shown also that these pictures are what is known as "junk" to the trade, so that our esteemed contemporary is sadly behind the times in every respect.

Concerning the criticisms of some of the later and censored pictures it is only fair to state that they are not all just; in some instances a garbled report is given and in others things purposely omitted are censured as if actually shown, so that a reader not familiar with the facts would be misled. Is this done purposely? If so, with what motive? We beg to assure the New York World that this paper is doing—and claims the credit for having done—much to raise the standard of moving picture work; more and better pictures is our motto, and if they follow our columns from week to week they will find little need for their untimely and inadequate method of dealing with the situation.

The Mico-Kinetoscope.

The scientific applications of the phenomena of persistence of vision, are as important, to our minds, as their application to the purposes of entertainment. How many people overlook the fact, or are ignorant of it, that the moving picture has many other important uses besides that of amusing us? This fact is slightly apparent in the list of releases which we publish in the back pages of the WORLD every week. There you will see that industrial subjects occasionally figure. We would like to see them figure there with greater frequency, though this is, of course, a purely personal preference. Still, even those who conduct trade papers may have preferences which, —ever, the exigencies of duty oblige them to keep in the background.

The title at the heading of this article may possibly seem abstruse or difficult to understand. Unfortunately the terminology of our subject is not so simple as it might be. It is necessary to use terms which, though, quite clear to trained men of science, frequently confuse and perplex the ignorant. Still we will endeavor to be as plain as possible, consistent with the due and proper treatment of our subject. Briefly, what we want to say in this article are a few words about a somewhat neglected field in moving picture science. We mean the union of the moving picture with the microscope. That is why we have chosen the above term, the micro-kinetoscope, to convey what we have in mind. In the original kinetoscope put on the market some seventeen years ago, it will be remembered that one looked through occulars on to a tolerably large image in a cabinet which moved across the field of view. With slight variations this is the basic principle of the mutoscope and other devices. But here you don't look at a continuous film, but upon a series of different pictures which recede from the axis of the ocular or eye piece.

Anybody who has worked with a microscope or who has studied it, or who is familiar with the scientific field that it embraces must realize how great are its potentialities for conveying instruction, information and, in many senses, amusement to the seriously inclined. The microscope shows us what are practically enlarged pictures of exceedingly little, or virtually invisible objects. Were it not for the microscope, the principal part of which is a carefully made objective of exceedingly short focus, it is doubtful if any American breakfast table to-morrow morning would be free of poisonous food. It is the microscope which, in the hands of Dr. Wiley down at Washington, enables him to keep tab of attempted adulteration. It is the microscope which enables the bacteriologist to locate, identify, isolate; typhoid, diphtheria, cholera germs, etc. All these scourges of humanity are tracked down by the microscope. Of course, there are adjuncts to this beautiful instrument in the work of the constant espionage of nature and life in miniature, such as photography, drawing, lantern projection, organic analysis, etc. But it is the microscope itself which primarily renders all this work possible.

Consider, now, if in the hands of all men of science, scholastic professors, chemists, experimentalists, investigators and physicists who use the microscope for research work—consider what a great additional power would be placed in their hands if to the enlarged images of the minutiae of organic life, which it is their duty to examine and study, the valuable property or element of motion were imparted. In other words the presence in the laboratory, the lecture theater, the class room, on the parlor table, of moving pictures of microscopic objects: the lower organisms in water; zymotic germs; animalculæ; diatoms—everything in fact in the world which, on account of its miniature form or structure, it is desirable to photograph and enlarge. From the sublime to the ridiculous: just fancy a moving picture of pulex irritans under the microscope. Verily, that would be a great sight to many a suffering mortal.

Radium is said to be a substance which possesses something like the property of perpetual motion. Would it not be interesting to have a microscopic moving picture of it? We pause in our suggestions, for this is really such a vast subject that it is impossible for us to handle it completely in such a short article. Our present object is to throw out the suggestion and draw attention to the fact that progressive science and its up-to-date methods of teaching demand the union of the microscope with the moving picture. We are not betraying secrets when we say that the manufacturing and assembling work of the micro-kinetoscope is actually being proceeded with at the present time. The practical outcome of this would be that sooner or later for a comparatively small sum we shall be able to buy a small table microscope in which we may view moving pictures of small objects. There is clearly a wide field awaiting this application of the theory of persistence of vision.

The Usual Thing.

SECOND ARTICLE.

When we printed our little article last week under the above title, we hardly expected that it would secure the reception that it has. It has pleased us very much to hear it quoted, requoted and generally approved of by all sections of the moving picture field with which we have come into contact these last few days—and we get about a bit, as the reader knows. The phrase, "the usual thing," is, of course, as we pointed out, not our invention. It has caught on in people's minds as describing, or indicating, a mediocre, or indifferent, moving picture. We are glad of it. There is much virtue, much power and much potency in a phrase. A phrase killed Mr. Blaine's chances of the Presidency. Mr. Roosevelt's phrases are far-reaching in their effects. Even such a wealthy man as the late Edward Harriman was afraid of them. The late Mr. Cleveland asserted the dignity of this country in a controversy with Great Britain, in a single phrase.

This phrase of ours, then, "the usual thing," may not improbably be the means of relegating the mediocre to its proper place. Even as we are writing this article we have visitors who are disclaiming any desire, any intention, or any advantage to themselves of making "the usual thing" in the way of moving pictures. They are aiming to produce the very highest class of picture that can be produced so that the public will be satisfied and attracted to the picture instead of disappointed and repelled. "The usual thing," in fact, is doomed. The race for quality is being run in deadly earnest. Only last week we felt it our duty to condemn both orally and in print, several pictures of the type of the usual thing, in the preparation of which many thousands of dollars had been expended if not wasted. It is not pleasant for us to have to do this; we would rather praise than deprecate.

At the same time we are ever desirous, nay anxious, to encourage. There is always room at the top. Several manufacturers, who at the present time are producing "the usual thing," must not take it amiss from us if we are severe on their work. We are severe only to be kind. Commendation and praise may help a good picture into popularity, but they will never advantage a bad picture. Failure teaches many valuable lessons, not the least important of which is that good work, and good work only, is one of the primary conditions of success in moving picture making. This is a truism and may be trite, but it is a lesson that requires to be driven home.

The real uplift of the moving picture, of which so much was written about last year, is the uplift of quality—photographic, producing, artistic, narrative quality. With all these at their best there will be no need to talk about uplift: the goal will have been reached. All that is left, then, is competition, emulation and progress. Look at the illustrated magazines and publications that are issued from the press in such great numbers to-day compared with the productions of ten or twenty years ago. Note the conditions: "The usual thing" in magazine and public illustration has been killed off. By "the usual thing" we mean the old wood cut of badly drawn subjects.

Photography has stepped in to effectively preserve the touches of the artists' hand. Three-color printing has displaced coarse chromo. All along the line, modern methods of graphic illustration have improved, to the exclusion of "the usual thing" of years ago. So it is with the picture, will be with the picture, and must be with the picture. The usual thing must go, or, if it remains, it will find only a limited clientele amongst the ignorant and those whose minds have not been prepared for delicate, artistic work.

"The usual thing" must not be allowed to kill the picture in the estimation of the public. Therein lies the danger. The public at large likes the best. It likes the best in literature, art, music, sculpture and architecture. Large sections of the public, however, are still surfeited by "the usual thing" in moving picture making, and therefore are probably unfavorably influenced against the picture. Remove the cause and the effect will cease. That is why we are so anxious to see the back of "the usual thing" in moving picture making.

A Moving Picture Convention.

THIRD ARTICLE.

The vital necessity of a Moving Picture Convention having been clearly demonstrated in the two preceding articles, we now come to some practical suggestions for the realization of the idea. Here let it be said that these articles are but initiatory ones. We shall pursue the idea until it becomes a concrete fact. It will become a concrete fact next year. During the Winter we shall recur to the subject, and not allow interest in it to die off. A moving picture convention is just about as certain to be held in due course as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is due to appear regularly and perpetually, whatever else may happen.

Some little foresight animates us in advocating the formation of a moving picture convention, representative of all branches of the industry. We want the moving picture industry to rest upon a broad basis; we do not want any one section or faction to be preponderant in it. Preponderance means monopoly, or attempted monopoly —not a good thing for any industry. The sentiment of the American people is growing increasingly strong against monopoly. Cool students of the probable outcome of events can clearly discern in the not distant future, an American Revolution, not less drastic in its effects than the French Revolution of the eighteenth century. The originating cause of the American Revolution will be the same as the originating cause of the French Revolution: The people will revolt against being robbed by the rich.

But, to come down to earth and our moving picture convention, let us give the reader an idea of the sort of work which we should expect such a gathering to get through. We want our convention to work for the good of the entire industry. We have no use for purely social organizations, though even the social side of the picture convention has its use: it brings people together. We cannot better carry out our idea of conveying what is in our minds than by anticipating the possibility, which, in some shape or other, is destined to become an actuality, namely, of the actual holding of a Moving Picture Convention, so soon as the first meeting is held next July in a convenient central city, such as, for example, Kansas City. July is a good month for the holding of conventions; the business is then at its lowest ebb, though people are holiday making. However, they are talking about their plans for the coming Fall. It is a good thing to discuss those plans in the Summer.

Gathered at the convention are thousands of exhibitors from all over the United States; two or three thousand, at least. All the exchanges are personally represented; all the manufacturers; all the press. There are many visitors interested in the moving picture and some of its aspects. Convention Hall is filled with exhibitions of cameras, projectors, darkroom apparatus, chemicals, sundries. It is a trade exhibition in which everything that goes to the making of a moving picture is shown. On the walls of Convention Hall there is a pictorial display. You have portraits of prominent people identified with the industry. You have photographs of the leading actors and actresses. You have photographic enlargements of notable films. The entire moving picture trade and industry is represented in the exhibition at Convention Hall. Then you have a demonstrating room for showing pictures, for giving talks to operators—for many operators will go to the convention. Then you have a meeting room. In that meeting room during the convention, papers and addresses of interest to exhibitor, renter and manufacturer are given; but chiefly of interest to the exhibitor, as he is the backbone of the business. He is the nearest man to the public. Of course, the convention will be officially welcomed by the good people of Kansas City. It will be such a huge success that other cities will start competing for the privilege of succeeding meetings.

The work, then, of our Moving Picture Convention would be carried out in the interests of the business as a whole, and not for any one faction of the business. Just as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD exists for the benefit of the business as a whole, and not for any one faction of it.

Cannot our exhibiting readers see, then, the prime, the vital necessity for such a convention? Is there any exhibiting reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD who can confidently place his hand on his heart and say that he expects to be in the business two years hence, though he is making money out of it now? Of course not! Why? Because his outlook is so gloriously uncertain. He is a segregated atom. He does not know where he "are." Though he has community of interest with other exhibitors, he has no opportunity except through our columns, of putting that community of interest into practical effect for mutual advantage. It is unnecessary for us to labor this point of the absolute, the vital necessity of a moving picture convention in the interest of the business as a whole.

There would be, of course, a convention banquet and other special amenities of the gathering. As we have said before, we do not want to ignore the social side of our scheme; but, above all, it must be a working convention. Suppose 5,000 exhibitors became members of the convention and paid $20 annual dues! There is an income of $100,000. The convention could also make money out of letting spaces in Convention Hall, and from advertisements in the convention handbook. With a little organizing work, the moving picture convention could easily acquire an income of $120,000 or $150,000. Armed with a comfortable bank balance, its capacity for effective action in the interest of the business as a whole would be obvious.

We shall recur to this subject time and again later on.

To Joseph Jefferson is attributed the remark that "the artist and the writer each lives in his works, but the art of the actor dies with him." From the tone of that remark we would be willing to hazard that the genial Joe, were he alive, would become a patron saint of the moving picture. He never was good at holding aloof.

Moving Pictures in Natural Colors.

By Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S.

Now that the Fall season has opened, and active work in the moving picture field is in full swing, I propose, in the course of a few short articles, to carry out an intention I have long had in mind, viz.: to deal with the subject mentioned in my title, from the point of view of the maker of moving pictures—that is, the practical point of view, and to consider the feasibility of utilizing, wholly or in part, some existing processes for the making of moving pictures in natural colors. No doubt many of my readers will be surprised to learn that there are several processes for making moving pictures in natural colors. Such, indeed, is the case. It must not be supposed that the Urban-Smith process, which has been so often referred to in these columns, is the only available method.

It is necessary at the outset that I should make use of the first person singular, a little. It must be quite twenty years since I first gave the subject of photography in colors some attention. Glancing through a file of the paper of which I was formerly editor, namely, "The British Journal of Photography," I find that one of the earliest articles I wrote therein was headed "Colored au Natural." Later, I published in the annual called "The British Journal Photographic Almanac," of which I was also editor, an exhaustive article on the subject of color photography. The number of individual articles I wrote on the subject between the years 1887 and 1904 could be counted by the hundreds.

Again, I attended innumerable lectures by Wall, F. E. Ives, Sanger Shepperd, Lippman, Sir William Abney, Sir William Herschel, Prof. R. W. Wood of Wisconsin University, and many others renowned throughout the world as authorities on color photography. Moreover, for a long time past I have had in hand a series of practical experiments on the subject, the result of which will be made public in due course. The time is not yet ripe.

The other day, in company with my confrere in the conduct of this paper, we were discussing with a very well known photographer in New York City this subject of moving pictures in natural colors. Our photographic friend, a man of great experience, ability and intelligence, exclaimed almost rhapsodically: "Oh! if we could only get natural colors on the screen." That voices a general aspiration. Of course, we already have them as given by the Urban-Smith process. But then the Urban-Smith process is in a class by itself; that is to say, the results are only produced by those commercially interested in the process, therefore it can hardly be called in the general meaning of the term a practical every-day method.

To cover my subject exhaustively would take up hundreds of pages, for I would have to deal with the nature and properties of light, which in itself is a fascinating theme upon which the greatest of the world's philosophers, like Sir Isaac Newton, Helmholtz, Young, Brewster, Lord Rayleigh, Ogden Rood, Huggins and many others have written. The subject, indeed, is a vast one, if it be exhaustively studied; in fact, it might be said that at the present time our knowledge of the solar spectrum is by no means complete. The spectroscope, like the telescope, is constantly adding to our information as to the wonders of the physical world.

I know that hundreds, if not thousands, of readers of the Moving Picture World are interested in this subject. Few of them, however, understand its fundamental principles. They talk color, not knowing what order means. When told, they are surprised to learn that color is merely light in a more or less decomposed form. This is the beautiful, natural phenomenon of the rainbow. This does not look a very important fact by itself, yet if it was adequately grasped by all interested in the subject of moving pictures in natural colors, something would be accomplished towards a general understanding of it. To end this short introduction: Those of my readers who don't understand what color and light really are, had better purchase a simple primer on the subject and then proceed to the photographic aspect of matters by studying some of the following manuals: "The Chemical Effect of the Spectrum," by Dr. Eder; "Photography in Colors," by Tallent, Bolas and Senior; "Photography in Natural Colors," by E. J. Wall; "The Kromskop," by F. E. Ives.

The writings of Sir William Abney, Leon Vidal, Prof. Gabriel Lippman, and E. Sangor Shepperd can be consulted in the "Journal of the Royal Photographic Society," which is accessible at the great libraries in this and other countries; or it can be purchased through the ordinary book store. There is, therefore, no excuse for anybody in this country who is genuinely interested in this subject of the application of color to moving pictures to remain in ignorance of what has been done in the matter. It is all on record.

The two processes at present before the public are the Urban-Smith process and the Friese-Greene process. A brief description of the former is as follows: The film is made panchromatic by suitable dyes, and it is exposed in the camera, behind a revolving shutter in which are fitted two filters (or screens) colored red and green. Thirty-two pictures a second are taken, one for each filter. When the negative is developed a positive is made from it and this is projected through red and green filters at the rate of 32 per second on the screen. The eye of the observer then perceives the moving picture approximately in the colors of nature.

Here is the Friese-Greene system: An orthochromatic film is placed in the camera for exposure. In the axis of the lens—that is, behind it and in front of the film—there is also fixed a prism of 20 degrees; next, immediately in front of the film are placed a red and a green screen, in the same plane as the image, that is, one above the other. So there we have the essential factors in the following order: 1, lens; 2, prism; 3, screens; 4, film.

The action of the prism is roughly to assist in passing two images instead of one to the image plane; this it does in virtue of the fact that it refracts some rays of light more than others, and consequently part of the image which passes through the primary lens is deflected to form the second of the two pictures placed one above the other. Both images pass through the screens, and when the positive is made from the negative those images in their turn are passed through other screens and a prism. Roughly the system for exposing the negative is that for projecting the positive.

The foregoing descriptions are condensed from particulars published by their respective inventors. The Urban-Smith results are tolerably familiar to the majority of our readers; Friese-Greene's has been shown in England. The process, however, at present has not been worked commercially, although I have noticed that Mr. Greene advertises that he is prepared to make pictures by the process.

So far I have merely traversed ground familiar both to myself and my readers. But this was necessary by way of introduction to the subject. Next week I will dig a little deeper into it and shall enumerate and describe a number of other methods for making these pictures. I do not guarantee that they are absolutely practicable in that they can be very easily adapted to any existing factory, but they contain a wealth of experimental data which the modern film maker or experimentalist would assuredly find useful in going over the ground.

The subject is indeed a great one. As I said at the outset, it can hardly be treated adequately in the limited space at command. But, at any rate, these articles may at least serve the purpose of directing attention to what has been done in the matter and of the possibilities that lie before the experimentalist.

Praiseworthy Production by a New Producer.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

An artistic revelation in the pictural drama will be made when the first Reliance play is released. I make this prophecy in spite of the fact that my advance view was thrown by a defective light on a small and poorly-painted screen, and in spite of the fact that the play is so weak that I would avoid mentioning it at all if I could, for the sake of the playwright. There are so many splendid qualities in the first Reliance release that a heavy balance must be struck in its favor. There is a sure hand shown in the directing; the performance of the leading woman is magnificent; and the photography will make every producer in the Independent Camp sit up and take notice. In the many deep scenes there is that delightful quality not attained by four other houses in the world: the visibleness of every salient detail; and the details are all in good taste. I do not expect playwrights to turn out fifty-two masterpieces a year, but, when a masterly play comes along, the Reliance studio seems to be equipped to take the first of foremost place in the ranks, I look for an ideal creation in the new art. As it is, the play will be an artistic success and constitute a distinct advance beyond an enormous number of the silent dramas now being shown. It is beautiful.

Most of us detest deliberate ugliness in a drama that is only seen, except when it is rendered absolutely necessary by situations of stress and sorrow, or to enforce a contrast. When it serves to set off strikingly some object of beauty, or where it has an appropriate place in the development of an idea it helps out the grand totality. There is enough that is revolting in our every-day experience, "sufficient unto the day—," we go to the theater for relief, not to hear discords, nor to see them. The idea that the plain ordinary public has no sense of beauty emanates from theatrical hacks, the rubbish that has been swept out of stage doors into moving-picture front-yards. I have heard these fellows talk on the street corners near Lobster Square about "When I was with Belasco, I says to Frohman, says I." They have all put plays on Broadway, put them on the fritz. It is a waste of words to try to teach them anything, but human beings who prefer a brick-yard to a cathedral, who prefer a swamp to a noble landscape, are like clams in the mud, serenely ignorant that ships sail on the sea. Those who are catering to the scum and residuum of society are mere drag anchors on the progress of intelligent producers. This statement may be jarring to the pristine egotism of those who profess to know "what the people want," but we have only to glance back at the career of a certain theatrical firm for evidence. They obtained control of seventy theaters in the large towns, put on the "cheap and nasty" style of melodrama and emptied their own houses. It always bewilders and saddens a savage to be brought suddenly in contact with civilization.

The central figure in the Reliance tragedy is a beautiful woman, and she is even more beautiful than our recently-acquired citizen, Lina Cavalieri Chanler; her loveliness is enhanced by elaborate costumes, accentuated by charming ensembles, and her fine acting is ably supported by two men who have few equals in the business. She suits the part, or it was probably written up to her. The playwright may have sacrificed himself to give the central figure opportunity. It was a treat to see this charming actress portray so many and so varied shades of emotion, but she would have been equally effective if the author had concentrated on the motive instead of on the personnel. The moment she came down the staircase in the first brilliant ensemble, dressed in a black costume, Sapho-esque in design, I recognized the lady who appeared in a skit of my own, "The Day After." In this comedy, the principal characters descended a staircase in deep perspective into a scene of festivity and in the Reliance drama this presentation is made equally effective. Both showed masterly treatment of a simple incident. The black costume was very effective, but I confess that I was dazzled by the sudden change to one of ivory satin. Not that it was necessary for us to see the gowns changed, but there was too sharp a break, like that of a sliced reel, in the transformation from one striking costume to another. This worldly character was an enchantress, who turned men's heads, and it was easy to see that she could. Right there is the important point.

Men fall in love through the eye, and women through the ear. Cleopatra's head was turned by Mark Antony's eloquence, the flame in pure Desdemona's heart was kindled by Othello's voice, and many a girl has left home and mother, to her eventual annoyance if not regret, because of a persuasive wooer. Now man is a homely and useful animal. He is constructed on lines of utility and proud of the fact that he can make his living. He contemplates himself in the mirror and knows all of his fine points from his brow to his toes by heart, but he is vaguely conscious, in spite of his new tie, that he is not a thing of beauty. He naturally turns with a sense of relief to the ideals which women instinctively present, especially when her face and form are in harmony with those ideals. He loves womanly beauty, illusions and all. He decorates his bachelor quarters with photographs of stage beauties, he stares in the shop windows and theater lobbies at the ladies who show decorative possibilities for the suburban cottage or the Harlem flat. He buys seats in the front row, sends flowers and mash notes. If the central figure in a picture drama is a woman, he prefers her to be a beautiful one. If she falls short of his idea of what she should be, he curls his lips and says: "What's the use of making such a fuss over her?" The Reliance backers have netted a leading lady resembling the one who rose from the foam of the sea, the one to whom Paris gave the apple (not the one who gave us the apple); she is a veritable Aphrodite who will enhance the beauty and interest of all the productions in which she may appear. Sheriff Bob could have done just as well at home.

The visible effects in this new departure are charming and nicely timed, it is a treat to the eyes. It was a serious error to alienate that valuable asset, human sympathy in the beginning of such a play, show no promise of reformation in the heartless character of the central figure, then try to put over such an impossible transformation at the last moment, resulting in a sacrifice of life itself for motives that cannot be shown in a picture play. But in spite of this defect, the reel will make a sensation among the initiated, the merit is there. Future performances by the Reliance Company will surely soar to greater heights of artistic beauty when they:

"Suffice the eye,—and save the soul beside."

MOTION PICTURE CENSORSHIP.

At a meeting of the Yorkville Civic Forum in the Hungarian National Hall, 321 East Seventy-third street, last week, John Collier, of the People's Institute, Educational Secretary of the Board of Censorship, spoke in defense of the censors in their work with moving pictures. He said:

"There are periodical outbursts in the newspapers against the moving picture theaters, and in these attacks the Board of Censorship is generally by implication involved. There are certain things the Board of Censorship is responsible for and certain things it is not responsible for, which can be readily made clear.

"The Board of Censorship does a national work, inspecting moving pictures before they are placed on the market. When a picture is condemned, or a change made, this verdict is made effective for every copy of the picture shown in the entire country. The Board of Censorship has correspondents in cities throughout the country, who receive weekly bulletins from the Board and are thus able to notify the Board in any case where its verdicts have not been put into effect.

"The censorship has existed for a year and a half, and probably eighty per cent. of all the pictures seen in theaters have been reviewed by the Board of Censorship. Of the remaining twenty per cent., some are undoubtedly bad. There is no way on earth to suppress these pictures except to watch each individual theater (there are ten thousand picture theaters in America), and when the picture is shown punish the management legally and then confiscate the picture by legal process. These pictures are lodged on the shelves of hundreds of exchanges in a score of cities.

"The Board of Censorship operates through agreements with the manufacturers of motion pictures. The ever-diminishing percentage of pictures issued prior to the time the Board began its work, have passed out of the ownership or control of the manufacturers and out of the jurisdiction of the Board of Censorship. They must be taken care of by the police of each city and by local reform bodies that are equipped to inspect the theaters in their neighborhoods.

"As for the pictures issued since the censorship began the Board stands squarely by its verdicts, which are reached by a committee of social workers, acting in a volunteer capacity and absolutely free from the trammels of obligation of any kind to the moving picture business. A picture cannot be judged by the sensational or inimical description of it which may be published in a newspaper. Neither can it be judged by the flaming poster which may be hung in front of the show, for such posters generally have no relation to the picture whatever. Why, I saw the 'Passion Play' in moving pictures recently advertised by a poster showing the elopement of a modern couple in evening clothes over a garden wall. The picture theaters on Fourteenth street and the Bowery are especial offenders along this line.

"When motion picture theaters are criticized for lack of precaution against fire, for bad air and the like, this again is a concern of the local police, fire or building department of each city. In New York, excellent work has been done in the past year toward the improvement of the picture shows and theaters generally, and the city departments ought to get credit for their progressive handling of a complicated problem. Much remains to be desired. We are assured by the Mayor's License Bureau, by the License Bureau of the Police Department, and by the Bureau of Violations of the Fire Department, that any complaint against picture shows will be promptly investigated and remedied. At present all these departments are making more or less thorough, periodical inspections of all the picture shows in New York."

Now that they are taking moving pictures of the human brain, let's have one of the brain of the man who runs films without titles. Maybe we could find out the mental process by which he concludes that the audience knows what it is looking at.

CHIEF OPERATORS.

By F. H. Richardson.

The writer is firmly of the opinion that where a company owns or controls six or more motion picture theaters it is an act of wisdom to create the office of chief operator and fill the same with a strictly high-class man. Such a position should carry a minimum salary of $40.00 per week, with a called upon to assume charge of, say, fifteen operating rooms. To make such an office effective its incumbent must of necessity be given full and complete charge of all operators, with power to employ or discharge. He must also have full and complete charge of all matters pertaining to projection, except as to the selection and arrangement of the program, that being properly within the rightful province of the manager. Also to the manager must be left the privilege of cutting out any portion or portions of the program he may desire, but the right to order the operator to "speed 'er up" should be taken from him absolutely, as should all other things which make for good or bad performance in projection.

I can see the heads of some of the big combinations controlling ten to fifteen houses as they read the above lines! I can see their look of amazement and hear their snorts as they mentally comment on the monumental nerve of the man making such radical suggestions. But, nevertheless, I not only have made them, but what is more, I reiterate them. I firmly believe such a proposition would return large dividends, provided a really high-class man be employed. I also am firmly of the opinion that it would not pay with a cheap man occupying the office of chief operator. The real difficulty, at this stage of moving picture affairs, would lie in the possible lack of men competent to take such a position and make good. Having employed a man in capacity as above set forth, the company would look to him for one thing, and one thing only, viz.: Results on the screen! The employer, having installed such a man at a salary calculated to buy ability and brains, would accept absolutely no excuse for any result but the best. This would naturally mean that, while he need not necessarily do the actual buying, he must have the selection of machines, appliances and operating room supplies of all kinds. In fact, where anything involving projection is up for consideration, the chief operator must be "it." In other words, the employer must take the position: "In matters pertaining to your department we leave you unhampered, but we want and expect results; excuses absolutely don't go."

Being placed in this position, the chief would naturally be compelled to place himself in exactly the same relation to the individual operators under him. As the matter now stands, the operator is under no one but a theater manager, who, nine times in ten, absolutely does not know what constitutes a really first-class, high-class performance in projection. In fact, he is most likely unable to say whether or no gross and plainly discernible faults in the picture are avoidable or unavoidable. The operator knows this, and, as a rule, acts accordingly. He is careless, since he well knows the manager doesn't know the difference. He is lazy, because he well knows the manager doesn't know when a shadow is on the picture unless it is very, very bad. He has breakdowns, because he knows the manager can't tell whether it might have been avoided or not. But place the same operator under a man whom he knows is liable to be in the audience at any moment of the day and whom he well knows he cannot make any excuse for inferior work, and let him thoroughly understand that the first time the chief catches a shadow on his picture or the first time he has a breakdown that might have been avoided by timely work, he will be unceremoniously fired, and you will see that same operator wake up. You will see a vast improvement in his performance or you will see a new operator installed who will give value received. Let it be thoroughly understood that the writer means no disparagement of managers by the foregoing. It is not to be supposed that a manager, however high-class he may be as a manager, is an expert in projection, or matters pertaining to projection. In too many cases he is so utterly devoid of knowledge along these lines that the operator, even though of mediocre ability himself, would put on a distinctly better performance were he left without managerial interference. But for all that he may be a splendid manager, if he be confined to that end of the business. The plan proposed would of necessity confine the manager to his proper sphere and place projection matters in the hands of the chief operator entirely. Such a proposition, carried out properly, would cost a company more than the present way of doing things—cost more aside from the chief's salary, I mean—but it would produce infinitely better results, hence would increase revenue at the box office.

WAR IN PEACE VALLEY.

A TRUE STORY NARRATED BY WILL SMITH.

The golden era of the moving picture was at its highest point, the taking and counting of small change was the most strenuous labor in the exhibitor's life and where he had menials to perform this for him, he had practically nothing to do except to spend the profits more or less conscientiously. The Motion Picture Patents Company lay as yet in the lap of fate, competition had not been able to supply the demand, restrictive laws, envious theaters were as yet unknown. "Standard Oil" and moving pictures seemed to be the best things financially from Maine to California. The boom was observed everywhere and by everybody. In the town of Krautville, in the very heart of the German district of Eastern Pennsylvania, a man had drifted from the phonograph business into moving pictures and in a small store room he was showing to capacity three, four and five hours every day and night, Sundays excepted. It came to pass that one day Oscar Otto Oberholtzer strolled into the "Dreamland," and beheld the throngs surrendering nickels. Mr. Oberholtzer had come in from a neighboring town, famous for its slate quarries. In one of said quarries Oberholtzer had toiled for twenty-two years and had saved a tidy little sum, which was drawing interest at the low but cheerful and safe rate of 4 per cent. Why Oberholtzer no longer toiled in the aforesaid quarry is a story in itself. Oberholtzer was, like most of our Pennsylvania German friends, very "sot" in his notions. His ideas were very few and very simple and hated any change. This likewise is characteristic of our good German friends in that part of the Keystone State; a man who is late to his dinner, who goes to his work either before or after the rest of his fellow citizens, is viewed with suspicion. The type found its fullest expression in Oberholtzer, who had never from the day of his birth been in danger of succumbing to cerebral hemorrhages, for within his capacious head any microbe, feeding on human brains, would have starved to death. Twenty-two years Oberholtzer had toiled and would have been toiling yet, but for a revolutionary step on the part of the company for which he had been working. The remuneration of Oberholtzer had been at the rate of 12 cents per hour, when for some unexplained cause the company raised the compensation to 14 cents per hour. At this all the conservative instincts of Oberholtzer revolted and utterly refusing to consent to the innovation, he left the employ of the company. While in no immediate need of money it was apparent to him that he must find a source of revenue and a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent. While in this mood he saw the great crowds at "Dreamland." He was deeply impressed and when he returned to Slatetown his mind was made up to embark in the moving picture business. It was about this same time that Michael Mullaly and Patrick McGarry, likewise residents of Slatetown, which had been years ago one of the hot beds of the Molly Maguires, had an earnest business conference in the livery stable in which they were jointly interested. In intervals between currying and sweeping, said Patrick to Michael:

"Sure, it's a shame, so it is, the way that Dootchman over in Krautville is making the money."

To which Michael, with equal sincerity, replied: "It is a shame, indade, and the old engine house here in our own town empty; and I think we can put a couple of hundred chairs in it, so we could."

* * *

Thus it came about that the Slatetown "Weekly Banner and Republican Budget," in its next issue, contained two items fraught with great interest to the amusement loving people of that staid old burg. Its readers were informed "that our popular townsman, Mr. Oberholtzer, who recently severed his connection with the Slatetown quarry, had rented the old brewery malt house to convert it into a moving picture palace, where the choicest products of this new invention were to be shown," and "that Messrs. Mullaly and McGarry had decided to show moving pictures in the old engine house, and that a gentleman from Mahanoy City, a skillful operator and manager, was even now on his way to Slatetown to take charge." I feel, before going any further, like invoking the aid of the muse for power to describe the wrath of Oberholtzer on learning of the Hibernian enterprise and vice versa, especially vice versa. There were openings in due season and the two places, being close together, the whole of Slatetown turned out and it looked as if Slatetown actually had the population which an extravagant census had given it in 1900, to-wit—2,871. For a while all went well, it was indeed a halcyon time, in which even a poet or a hod carrier could have made money with the exhibition of moving pictures. As the populace, however, became surfeited with the entertainment the rush of nickels subsided and the stream became thinner every day.

Oberholtzer, unused to worry, began to lose weight and he, whose digestive organs had rivaled those of the ostrich, began reading the "indigestion ads" in the weekly paper and decided that he was suffering from gastritis. In some alarm he went to the doctor, who advised him to eat more pretzels and "thin-line-of-red" German sausages, which Oberholtzer did very conscientiously and soon found his digestion restored to its normal capacity. While in the mellow mood of the convalescent and in the act of taking large doses of his medicine, Oberholtzer was visited by a great actor, temporarily without an engagement. The actor was lean, almost six feet tall, and from what could be obserevd through a wild and straggling growth of beard, the novelist would be compelled to set down his complexion as pronouncedly sallow. He shaved himself, he confided to his friends, who never saw any reason to doubt his word. His raiment was of antique cut, and while there was a decided classic cast to it, it was clear that it had not been pressed or cleaned in some time. Before the tragic inspiration came to him his name was Johnny Michaels, but he was now billed—strictly by himself—as Mortimer Wethersbee Effingham. Mortimer had a furtive gaze, which, however, never failed to detect the vital spots in the free lunch counters, and though wandering on through life with a curious reserve and dignity, apparently oblivious of the doings of his fellows, had his ears keenly attuned to invitations to a drink. While he could not hear adverse criticism, though shouted at him by an auctioneer, no beer collector could whisper, "What will you have?" low enough to escape the hearing of Mortimer. It would indeed be difficult to paint a greater contrast than Mortimer and Oscar Otto Oberholtzer. The latter sat there so stolid, so comfortable, unbothered of nerves, feeding himself with frequent slices of the mysterious sausage and doing it with the utmost deliberation; the former restless, conveying a suggestion of perpetual hunger, perpetually unappeased. With a courtly gesture Mortimer doffed his hat to Oberholtzer, saluted him formally, introduced himself as the well-known tragedian Mortimer, stated that he had just come in with his company from the Junction on the Buffalo express. In truth, Mortimer knew nothing of the Buffalo express except what could be learned on the time table, for he had actually come in on a canal boat, sharing the honor and pleasure of the voyage with a large load of fertilizer and the company was even now attending to the disinfecting process in the primitive basement of the Lehigh Hotel, a hostelry of the eleventh rate.

"I have decided, my dear sir, to bide here, tarry as it were," continued Mortimer, in a genuine tragic basso, "for a week possibly, and having heard of your play house, Mr. Oberholzer, a Mecca, I believe, for the true Thespian, an altar of art, I was bound, sir, to seek an early introduction to its distinguished impresario."

Oberholtzer at first regarded Mortimer with the utmost composure and being thoroughly good natured and hospitable, like all his race, was tempted to invite Mortimer to share the repast, but when he was told about his place being a "Mecca for Thespians" and himself an "impresario," he began to view Mortimer with suspicion. Oberholtzer felt that his conscience was clear and that he had never wilfully wronged anybody, he had been honored by his fellow citizens, who had elected him president of the "Louder Maennerchor," but "Mecca" and "impresario," was he being heaped with new honors, or was that "skinny Irisher" insulting him "already yet"? At this moment a white-aproned youth appeared and set a huge stein in front of Oberholtzer. Mortimer sniffed the fragrance with distended nostrils and Oberholtzer, forgetting his suspicions, ordered a stein for Mortimer. It came and Mortimer refreshed himself, noisily smacking his lips.

"Ah," cried he, turning to Oberholtzer, who offered him the pretzels and sausages, at the same time wisely ordering a new supply, "I do find this malt tonic most beneficial and quaff it often."

All this took place in a sort of private chamber, partitioned off from the general barroom. Between draughts of malt tonics Mortimer acquainted Oberholtzer with the "personnel and the eminent merits of his company." The company consisted, it appears, of two ladies of uncertain age, who danced and sang and had long been the ornaments of a female minstrel troupe, and of three gentlemen, who likewise excelled as minstrels; during the acts of the ladies the gentlemen furnished the music and vice versa. Intervals were filled out by Mortimer himself, who recited the ravings of John McCullough. The regular compensation for the company's services, Mortimer confided to Oberholtzer, was $1,000 per week, payable in advance, but out of personal regard for Oberholtzer they would play in his theater at $10 a head and board for a week. If preferred they could give a masterly production of either "East Lynne," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Hazel Kirke," or "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The last named attraction seemed fine to Oberholtzer, who faintly and diffidently asked, "Ten bar rooms in a night, how could you do it then?" It was finally decided to give all the attractions during the week, when it occurred to Oberholtzer that he had no stage.

"No stage," stentoriously repeated Mortimer. "No matter, we move the first three rows of chairs and play on the floor."

"All right," Oberholtzer consented faintly and made an advance of $10 to the delighted Mortimer, who rushed off in the direction of the Lehigh Hotel and imparted the cheerful news to the company. They carried no paper, but this was not necessary in Slatetown, for within an hour the town knew of the attraction. This was on a Thursday and by Friday night at 7 Oberholtzer's place was crowded to overflowing, though he charged a flat rate of 20 cents for seeing the actors and actresses. Mullaly and McGarry were furious. Scarcely had the barnstormers completed their engagement in Oberholtzer's palace when the rivals engaged vaudeville through an agent at Wilkesbarre. It consisted of a "reub act," a female ballad singer, who told jokes that were hoary and rancid and a trained dog. The dog was very good. The rush now set toward Mullaly and McGarry and there began a vaudeville war in this valley of peace which filled the trains coming to Slatetown with the motliest collection of freaks consistent with a semblance to the human form. At first this vaudeville was changed only once a week, then twice a week and finally there was a change every day.

Though the quality was the worst which it is possible for human imagination to conceive, the rivals paid fancy prices and soon Slatetown became known as a paradise to the underworld of the "profession." In the dressing rooms even of Philadelphia and New York one could read the well-meant advice to go to Slatetown. Oberholtzer's experience grew in inverse ratio to his bank account. Mullaly and McGarry, who were very susceptible to female beauty, one of them being red headed in the extreme, not only paid out more than they took in, but came near wrecking their domestic bliss and happiness, and even to this day people delight to narrate how Mrs. McGarry precipitated her portly form upon a gay soubrette while the latter was sweetly singing, "I am Longing for To-morrow, when I Think of Yesterday." The delicious song came to an abrupt close when Mrs. McGarry rudely disarranged the intricate coils and rolls of the German nightingale and scattered the loose parts thereof on the floor of the improvised stage in full view of the screaming audience.

Musical acts, jugglers, baby singers of both sexes, "silly kid acts," sister and brother acts, minstrels and magicians, comedians and tragedians chased each other in seemingly endless procession through the temples of amusement of Slatetown, drawing from forty per upward. The demand of Oberholtzer and Mullaly and McGarry had bulled the market to an unbelievable degree. Not a penny was left of their profits, the livery stable was mortgaged and Oberholtzer's bank account had dwindled down to three figures and small ones, too. The worst of it was that the people were now as sick of vaudeville as a keeper of an asylum gets sick and tired of his charges. Actors and actresses, at one time a rare sight in the streets of Slatetown, now were commoner than miners or farmers. The inevitable reaction began to set in. The shrewd parents of Mullaly and McGarry chased them back to their proper sphere in the livery stable and the pitiless hand of necessity taught the lesson to Oberholtzer. Michale and Patrick are back with the horses, sighing regretfully; the engine house is empty, likewise the malt house, Slatetown has returned once more to normal conditions and this is the saddest blow of all—Oberholtzer is back in the quarry working for 14 cents an hour.

The Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures have been given for the benefit of a hospital and dispensary. Well, when you come to think of it, there is some slight connection.

New England Notes.

The official census returns give Boston proper a population of practically three-quarters of a million people. With this fact in mind the ordinary person conversant with moving picture affairs, would be inclined to doubt the statement that Boston proper has barely twenty moving picture theaters—and at that has even more than it can easily accommodate. The twenty houses are located on three streets —Washington street, Tremont Row and Bowdoin Square. It seems as if these are the only three thoroughfares suitable for the motion picture theater—with the exception of Bowdoin Square, the two streets named command the very highest rents in this city, twenty to thirty thousand dollars being paid for premises ranging from 25 to 40 feet front, and 100 feet deep. Boston proper is unique in that it has no house charging less than 10c. admission at the present time. All the large houses run some vaudeville, the four smallest doing without any. The wholesale district has been found useless for the moving picture theaters, and the residential district no better. The great majority of houses on the locations mentioned above do an excellent business, and are models in their line, costing from $25,000 to $50,000 to build. No one has been able to give the exact reasons why the locations favorable for moving picture theaters are so restricted in Boston. It is not due to the fact that moving pictures are not looked upon as one of the best forms of entertainment by the better class of people, because Washington street is Boston's premier retail shopping street, with Tremont Row a close second.

* * *

B. F. Keith has begun a crusade against moving pictures that ridicule people of different races and nationalities, according to a Boston report. The statement goes on to say that the fact that such pictures are being produced was first called to his attention by a little Boston girl. Also that orders were sent to managers of his moving picture theaters all over the country to the effect that no moving picture of objectionable character such as described, should be allowed in any theater with which his name is connected. Mercy! No one in Boston connected with moving pictures was aware that such pictures were being manufactured—much less exhibited! It looks as if it would be much more to the point if B. F. Keith would talk to some of his Irish or Hebrew vaudeville acts if he is bound to do away with this really objectionable feature. It really seems as if Mr. Keith had been incorrectly informed by that little Boston girl.

* * *

The Liberty Theater, on Tremont street, Boston, will reopen on or about October 1, under the management of the Automatic Vaudeville Company of New York—Morris Kohn, president; Emil Shauer, treasurer. This house was opened originally about one year ago by some Chicago people. After a most disastrous season, the house was permanently closed last May. The Liberty has several very poor features about it, the foremost of which are, a seating capacity of less than 300, no ventilation, a poor front and lobby, and a poor location. It would seem that these misfortunes were enough to doom any theater to failure. The reason for the reopening of the house goes back several years. The Automatic Vaudeville Company took a considerable lease on this very store several years ago, using it for a slot-machine parlor. After this line of business became unprofitable, the company subleased the store to a merchant. The merchant, in his turn, leased it to the moving picture people, and later threw it over on the merchant's hands. This forced the Automatic people into possession once more, and they are opening the house with the intention of making whatever may be possible, as this is better than allowing the store to remain idle. During the summer the premises could not be rented. Under these circumstances, it can not be predicted what the fortunes of the Liberty will be. Independent pictures and songs will be used, admission 5c. At the present time this is the only 5-cent house in Boston.

* * *

The American Music Hall, formerly William Morris' Boston vaudeville house, which has been under the management of William Gane since September 1, narrowly averted a panic, Saturday night, September 17, when a small fire broke out in the boiler room. However, all danger was averted by the prompt way in which the fire was put in restraint. Although the fact became known to most of the audience, no riot occurred. This occurrence was not in the Boston daily papers. The Music Hall is running the usual big show run by houses directed by Mr. Gane. A write-up of the house will be published soon in "The World." Louis Boas, formerly of Fall River, is resident manager for Mr. Gane.

The Theater Comique, on Tremont Row, operated by the Automatic Vaudeville Company, has just installed a balcony, seating approximately sixty (60) people. This brings the total seating capacity up to nearly 475 people. Independent films and songs are used. The films are changed daily. The Comique, and the Premier, corner of Washington and Beach streets, also owned by the same corporation are the only houses in Boston using a daily change of films.

Leominster, Mass., has a new moving picture and vaudeville house with a seating capacity of nearly 1,500 people. The "Music Hall," as it is called, is owned by G. M. Kendall, and under the management of Ed. Billette.

H. F. Campbell, former manager of the Savoy Theater on Washington street, which, by the way, is owned by that famous actress, Lotta Crabtree, has opened a house in Marlboro, Mass. This house was originally owned by C. E. Bradstreet, who sold out to W. E. Greene, the New England Independent film renter. Campbell will run different kinds of entertainment, some weeks using road-shows, other weeks using Independent films and vaudeville. It cannot be found out whether Mr. Campbell bought this house from Mr. Greene, or is managing the house for him. The house has been renamed The Princess, and its only opposition is a small five-cent moving picture house.

The Back Bay Theater, 104 Dartmouth street, Boston, reopened recently for the Fall and Winter season, under the management of L. N. Connors.

C. S. Hurst opened the Bijou Theater, Newton Highlands, Mass., recently, running pictures, vaudeville and illustrated songs.

The Johnson Hall Theater of Stoughton, Mass., has been bought by F. A. Glines, and the name will be changed to the Pastime Theater. The theater has been entirely renovated, and expects a prosperous season.

The Nickel Theater, Lawrence, Mass., recently was opened with a seating capacity of 2,000, having two balconies. This house is one of the best in Massachusetts charging only 5 cents admission.

The Goldstein Bros. Amusement Company of Springfield, Mass., have added another house to their chain by opening a house at Westfield, Mass. The "Bijou" will run pictures, songs and vaudeville for 10 cents, this being the regular attraction at all houses owned by this company.

The Orpheum Theater of Newburyport, Mass., has recently changed managers. Harold A. Chenowith is the new man in charge.

Brighton, Mass., a suburb of Boston is to have a new moving picture theater, making two in that town. The house will probably open about October 1, 1910, being called The Brighton. Alderman Woods of Boston has backed the house to the tune of $20,000. John E. Dunne will be in charge of the house. Four hundred people can be accommodated, and, although the writer does not vouch for it, report has it that the theater has 14 fire exits.

The Central Square Theater, of Lynn, Mass., will open October 15, with a seating capacity of 1,500. Mr. Burke, an old-time vaudeville performer, is in charge of the house. Lynn as a big shoe center is a good show town, as the factory workers evidently like moving pictures.

Thomas Marion of Holyoke, Mass., has bought the Lyric Theater on High street. After renovating the house completely, Mr. Marion will open it as a high class moving picture and vaudeville house—admission 10 cents.

Nat Burgess, who has been general manager of the Old South Theater Company—James Donaldson, president; Simon Rudnick, treasurer—since its formation, nearly three years ago, has left that corporation, owing to some decided differences of opinion. Frank E. Brown, former manager of the Beacon Theater, Tremont street, is now in charge of both theaters owned by the company—the Old South Theater and the New Washington, both on Washington street, this city. The former house was closed for more than eight weeks this Summer, and was extensively renovated. Mr. Rudnick, speaking personally with the World's representative, stated that upwards of $40,000 has been expended—the house now has a seating capacity of practically 800, with standing room for 200 more. The house has an exceptionally fine ventilating system, and is a model house in every respect. Independent films and vaudeville are offered, with admission at 10 cents.

The new theatrical licenses have recently been issued by the Hon. John Francis Fitzgerald, Mayor of Boston. The wording of the licenses issued for theaters devoted to moving pictures has been changed. Formerly they read, "For exhibitions of moving pictures, illustrated songs, and stationary slides." Now, however, they are worded, "For exhibitions of moving pictures, illustrated songs, slides, and vaudeville without scenery." This last clause was only won last Winter by much active fighting on the part of the moving picture interests. The "Theatrical Managers' Association" was very active against this insertion in the license and arrayed much legal talent to break down the claims of the moving picture men. Several meetings were called, the Mayor presiding, where both factions represented by Boston's ablest legal talent disported themselves freely. After a mature consideration of the matter, the Mayor decided in favor of the moving picture interests. At that time it was considered a great feat, that the practically disbanded moving picture men won a victory over that closely-knit body of men—the Managers' Association. HENRY.

THE OTHER SIDE.

The apparently organized attack upon motion pictures by the newspapers has been the means of connecting this harmless amusement with almost every violation of law and decency that is aired in the courts.

So it is both a relief and a surprise to read the following evidence of the good effect of the picture, in the New York "Press" of this morning (September 29):

Motion Picture Hits Thief—Causes Him to Surrender After Stealing $500 from Hotel.

A moving picture show—in Pittsburg, not in New York—brought a thief to repentance. So Charles G. Mayer yesterday said when he was arraigned in Jefferson Market Court. He confessed he stole on August 3, when a clerk in the Hotel Victoria, $500 left with the house for safe keeping by P. F. Brown, a guest. He took the money to have a good time. In Pittsburg he saw a motion picture showing a bank thief's repentance.

"I thought of my home and dear mother out in Denver and then of what I had done," said Mayer in court. "I pictured her at home, proud of her young son in New York, and perhaps wondering why she did not hear from me. I had not written home since I stole the money, and tears came to my eyes and I wanted to make amends. I left the picture place and went to the first policeman I met and told him what I had done and asked him to send me back to New York. And here I am, sorry for what I have done and willing and ready to take my punishment. I have learned a lesson. All I hope is that my poor mother will never know." He was held.

CHILDISH INNOCENCE CORRUPTED.

It begins to appear that the New York "World" has reserved page 8, columns 1, 2 and 3, for the especial denunciation of moving pictures, with the distinct object of starting a world-wide "awakening." It all began with the so-called confession of a young scallawag from the Hell's Kitchen district of New York City. From this one confession the New York "World" has magnified it into "several."

The Moving Picture World has taken the trouble to investigate the case of that young man for the sake of its own peace of mind. It now comes to light, through our efforts, that the young man has a record of several terms in the reformatory. He is an habitual liar, a born thief; his parents refused to come to him in jail; his father wanted him to get the limit; he has smoked cigarettes until he looks like a consumptive. He kicked and abused the woman he tried to rob; he admitted to our representative that he was drunk at the time he entered the flat, and that his object was to obtain money for more beer. At the police station he abused the police and the complainant, and was very free in calling them all "—— —— liars," until the sergeant threatened to take him over his knee. He is crafty enough to remember that some boys have pleaded moving pictures as an excuse for wrongdoing, and clings doggedly to that as an alibi.

As our representative talked to him through the bars, he eagerly told of the effect of pictures on his mind, but he would spoil it the next minute by wanting to know if his answers would help him to get out of jail. His memory is a blank on all points except that the pictures made him bad. This, then, is the foundation of the New York "World's" picture crusade. It takes as its model of childish innocence a perverted liar from Hell's Kitchen (Thirty-third street and the tracks), one of the toughest neighborhoods in New York City. Instead of calling upon the nations to "Awake!" in our opinion it is the New York "World" and a few other would-be moral newspapers, that should open their eyes and crawl out of the muck in which they happen to be wallowing in this year of our Lord, 1910.

Rumors have been afloat for some time that arrangements had been made for an organized attack on the moving picture interests of the country and one of the methods of attack was to be persistent hammering upon public sentiment and gradually get the people arrayed against the pictures. A New York paper apparently confirms the rumor, or at least gives some color of truth to it. This paper has been giving a column daily denouncing moving picture films and digging up opinions against them. In one issue the exclusion of children from moving picture shows, whether or not accompanied by parent or guardian, is advocated. Even the Board of Censors came in for a roasting.

* * *

There is nothing original in the articles. They are simply a re-hash of what the enemies of the moving picture business have been harping upon for months. It is difficult to see how they can be written with current investigations as a basis. There never was a period when the police, fire, building, electrical, and all other municipal departments that can find an excuse to supervise any part of a moving picture show, have been more active than they are to-day; and there never was a time in the history of the moving picture business when cleaner and less objectionable pictures have been exhibited or manufactured.

* * *

It is quite clear that most people who spread themselves in the columns of the daily press with moving pictures as the topic, know very little about the subject. If this were not the case the articles would be different. The chief knowledge of the average newspaper man on matters bearing upon moving pictures, is limited to his ability to distinguish a moving picture machine from a stereopticon, and it took him a long time to learn that. After being ridiculed for stating that a stereopticon machine upon which moving pictures were being run, had exploded, they woke up.

* * *

In one of the current attacks a newspaper says: "Secretary Storey, of the National Board (of Censors), says all new product is inspected, but old motion picture films are shown without any interference on the part of his organization." This is only a part of the truth. In doing this the Board of Censors is performing the duty laid out for it when the organization was formed, that is: Inspect all new films manufactured in and brought into this country. Each film is certified by the Board if it is all right in its opinion. If any part of a film is objectionable, the manufacturer or importer is required to remove it before the film is allowed to go upon the market.

* * *

The proper time to censor films is before the exhibitors get a chance to get hold of them, and this is what the Censors are doing. If there are on exhibition pictures of an objectionable nature which got upon the market before the Board of Censors came into existence, the police authorities have ample power to prohibit their exhibition, and by so doing they will receive the thanks of not only the film manufacturers, but also the public. Films that have been doing service since the time preceding the organization of the Board of Censors have no legitimate place outside of the junk heap and no up-to-date manager wants them.

* * *

To my mind the articles attacking the picture shows bear the earmarks of a biased opinion. The attacks are sweeping and no merit is recognized, whereas a popular vote would show decisively that it exists to a far greater degree than objectionable features.

* * *

I want to say, also, I do not think a regular dramatic or vaudeville critic is a fair judge of moving pictures. He is too closely allied with those who have been fighting the pictures for years. Every house that is transformed into a picture theater is like so much grist taken from the critic's mill. He pays no attention to the pictures. Like many people in the theatrical field he ignores them, or pretends to. As a dramatic critic he will not criticize moving pictures. They are cheap and vulgar, in his eyes, and he cannot afford to dignify them with a critic's attention, except when he gets a chance to knock them. Anyone acquainted with the theatrical and the moving picture business knows this is the truth and must agree that such critics cannot be depended upon for impartial criticism of moving pictures.

* * *

Let this suggestion be made: The investigators should first find out if the objectionable films were put on the market before the Board of Censors was organized. If they were, let the proper authorities prohibit their production. A list of them can easily be secured and the place renting them to the exhibitor can be just as easily located. If the films were made after the Censors were organized, it is a very easy matter to call the attention of the Board to them and insist upon a more rigid censorship. This appears to be a very feasible plan of procedure. At all events, it is far more sane and just than the one advocated by some of the newspapers, by which the exhibitor, who may be entirely innocent in the matter, is made the sole victim of punishment by having his trade driven from him.

* * *

I have personal knowledge that the moving picture exhibitors are endeavoring in every way to cater to the women and children and try to avoid producing subjects that are not in keeping with that idea. The film exchanges and the film manufacturers are also endeavoring to follow along the same lines, and that it is being admirably followed is demonstrated by the statements of the newspapers. They have practically declared that the objectionable films are old ones.

* * *

A rather peculiar condition of affairs has developed in connection with the cancelling of operators' licenses by the New York City Department of Electricity. All operators are compelled to prove citizenship either by birth or citizenship of their fathers. Those who have been unable to show this have lost their licenses for the year 1910, and there are large numbers of them. The circumstances following are these: New York operators who have thus lost their cards go over to New Jersey and get positions of operators working there. I am informed that where the New Jersey operators were getting $22.50 per week, the men who lost their cards and take the places get $14, or $8 less per week than they were getting in New York. So the New Jersey exhibitor profits by the New York law. It has been claimed that the men who lose their cards are not good, practical operators, as a rule, but I am reliably informed that a great many of them are, and if they were not they could not get the New Jersey positions even at the reduced rate. What becomes of the displaced New Jersey operators? If they hold a New York card or can qualify for one, they get places in Greater New York, but the percentage of these is so small the operators across the Hudson are talking of having regulations enacted in New Jersey similar to those existing in New York. This, they claim, will be done in furtherance of the home rule principle. A New Jersey operator said the other day: "The New York regulations are all right. I know there have been a number of youths and men holding operators' licenses when they were really not entitled to them. The Operators' Union in New York has undoubtedly gained a point by the recent rulings in having the number of operators reduced, but look at what we operators in New Jersey, who were receiving union wages, get out of the deal. The union in New York profits by the citizenship rule, but the New Jersey citizen operators lose out. For that reason we feel justified in getting a citizenship regulation for New Jersey and send the fellows who could not qualify in New York to some other place, or let them go into some other business. I was born in New Jersey, have lived there all my life, and have been an operator for years. I must either take a big cut in wages, or make room for the lower salaried man and take a chance on getting a card in New York."

Nyack, N. Y.—The Electric Theater, formerly owned by Warren Minnerly, has been purchased by E. H. Wagner, who has put in new chairs and otherwise given the house a thorough renovation. Running Independent program and having excellent results.

Curiosity lost Eden. This is one of those superficially smart sayings which you sometimes hear issue from the mouth of a man when he wants to score off Madame Son Altesse la Femme. Excuse my French. It looks great, doesn't it? It just means woman, lovely woman. The French are the politest nation on earth, and so, instead of saying just "woman, lovely woman," they say, when referring to her in general terms, "Madame, Her Highness, woman." And that is roughly the meaning of that pretty little French phrase above.

* * *

But, of course, curiosity is not exclusively inherent in the fairer half of mankind. We are all curious. Last week, it was pointed out in these pages, in reference to the Eclair "Behind the Scenes of a Moving Picture Manufactory" film which has just been released, that we all want to know how the pictures were made. We like to see the work done. We like to see the producers directing the actors and actresses acting. On the ordinary stage, there is no greater privilege coveted than that of a seat in the wings while the performance is in progress. We all like to be privileged spectators of anything. We are all curious. If curiosity lost Eden, well, curiosity should get us to Heaven. Sound reasoning, eh? But I am not preaching; I am merely recording observations.

* * *

When the moving picture was stepping into its rightful place, two years ago, I perceived that the performers in those pictures would very soon interest people. We wanted to know something about the beautiful woman who played the lead; of the handsome man who was the hero; of the funny man who made us laugh, and of the clever man who did stunts. We were just curious. I do not want to brag too much about it, but I believe I was the first to draw attention to the great part which personality, beauty and cleverness played in the picture. I foresaw that a natural curiosity would rise in the minds of the public as to the personalities – the corporeal personalities—of the good people who make those "shivery shadows" for our entertainment. In other words, the public wanted to see what moving picture actors and actresses were like in the flesh.

* * *

The gratification of this natural curiosity has proceeded upon obvious lines. First of all, you have had the stationary photographs of these clever ladies and gentlemen placed on sale. You can buy a picture of an Edison star or a Kalem performer, just as you buy photographs of Maude Adams, John Drew or their confreres. Then, just as we all like occasionally to see John Drew or Maude Adams in the flesh, so it is that we (I speak as one of the great moving picture public) like to see the originals of the clever figures that delight us on the screen.

* * *

It is the clever, vivacious Florence Turner, "the Vitagraph girl," who is drawing aside the curtain of secrecy that hides those players from the public and public from the players. Several times of late, over in that foreign country, Brooklyn, Miss Turner has appeared before a moving picture audience. I am hoping that, ere long, she will come right up to civilization—that is, Broadway, which is near this office—and show her charming self before one of Mr. Gane's audiences, or one of the Keith & Proctor audiences. She would have a royal reception.

* * *

The other evening, having learned that Miss Turner was to personally appear before a moving picture audience, I wended my way to the well-managed little Park Row Theater at the back of the Post-Office, New York City. The courteous manager showed me to a reserved seat. A few minutes after 8 o'clock, a bevy of fair ladies entered the crowded house. The first of them came and sat next to me. It was Miss Florence Turner, the world-famous Vitagraph girl. Never mind what we talked about. She is a picture girl and I am a picture man. And, well—we just talked pictures! Of course!!

The reception which Miss Turner had at the hands of the crowded house must have gratified the girl—she looks such a little girl to be so clever and so famous—and indirectly convinced me of the enormous interest that is taken in the personalities of these picture players and the work they do. There was an introductory address by one of the Vitagraph staff, descriptive of a public desire to meet Miss Turner. Then, after several Vitagraph pictures had been shown, a lady sang a very nice song called "The Vitagraph Girl." Then, Miss Turner herself ascended the platform, made a nice little speech, was very warmly applauded and received many handsome bouquets of flowers. Altogether it was a very delightful evening. I could not stay for the Vitagraph dog; I wanted to come away with an impression on my mind only of the enormous popularity of this "ordinary girl with extraordinary abilities." This is what the gentleman said. But I do not think that Miss Turner is "an ordinary girl."

Of course, now that public curiosity has been partially gratified by Miss Turner, and I think by Miss Lawrence, by their appearances in public, the public's appetite has been whetted, and as the appetite grows by what it feeds upon, moving picture performers as a body must become personally interesting to the public. The more they meet the public, the more the public will come to understand and realize that moving picture actors and actresses are as clever, beautiful, handsome and human as their brother and sister performers of the ordinary theater. In this way the work of the moving picture actor and actress will be dignified. Another thing: Your moving picture actor and actress is denied the stimulant of public applause. Applause helps us all. Even I who write this page sometimes like to hear nice things said about me. I am sure it would stimulate moving picture actors and actresses in their work if they occasionally appeared in public and received the congratulations of the great public for whose entertainment they work. Appreciation always encourages us.

One of the pleasantest little reflections that I have of the evening of which I am writing is contemplating Miss Turner's enjoyment of her own pictures. She laughed just as heartily as the rest of the audience at the amusing and other things her effigy was doing on the screen. Was it not Burns who said: "Oh, would some power the giftie gie us, to see ourselves as ithers see us!" The moving picture enables this to be done—at our best, but not our worst. I think the idea of the Vitagraph Company in featuring Miss Turner at the theater, occasionally, an exceedingly good one for the business. I do not go so far as to suggest that it should be imitated, but it may suggest other ways in which moving picture players and the moving picture public are brought into closer touch, to the advantage of both.

SUCCESSFUL OPENING.

Hayden & Royall opened a new theater in Hackensack the evening of September 22. Long before the hour set for opening the sidewalk was blocked in front of the place, and even after the first relay had been admitted the crowds gathered so that it was necessary to detail extra police to keep the sidewalk and street clear for pedestrians and vehicles.

The theater is running only Independent films. The first program included "Debt," released by the Imp people that day, the "Moonshiner's Daughter," of the Nestor Company, and the "Little Blind Girl," released by Eclair. There was one illustrated song, rendered by a singer who can sing.

The theater is located at the corner of Main and Bergen streets, not far from where a new $1,500,000 court house is in process of erection and on the line of one trolley. It seats 200, and is comfortably, though not elaborately fitted up. The projecting apparatus gave a clear picture and worked without difficulty even on a first night. The place goes under the name of the Royal. The show opens about three in the afternoon and runs to midnight and consists of four or five reels and a song. The admission is 5 cents for children and 10 cents for adults in the afternoon and 10 cents for all in the evening.

It is the second show in the place and even though the first night drew an extraordinary crowd the attendance at the other was in no wise diminished.

Chicago Notes.

Miss Evelyn Corbett, for the past six months connected with the Chicago office of the Motion Picture Screen Company, has accepted a position as Chicago representative of the Colonial Theater Company, who operate a change of theaters in Illinois and Indiana. Miss Corbett has had a wide experience in the moving picture business, her knowledge of which will enable her to fill her new position very satisfactorily. We wish Miss Corbett all kinds of success in her new venture.

* * *

Watterson R. Rothacker, for the past three years Western manager of The Billboard, has severed his connection with The Billboard so as to be able to devote his entire time to the direction of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, a corporation organized by him, and of which he will act as general manager. This new concern will specialize in the manufacture and handling of motion pictures adapted for industrial, commercial and advertising purposes. It is their intention to enter the field at once, having already leased offices in the Boyce Building, 112 Dearborn street, Chicago. We regret very much to see Mr. Rothacker leave The Billboard, for he was one of the most gentlemanly individuals we ever had the pleasure of meeting, and his genial manner has won for him a large number of friends. That Mr. Rothacker will make a success of his new undertaking is a foregone conclusion. He is a close student of the moving picture business, an able advertising man with a full knowledge of the "game," and if he devotes his talents and energy to his own business as he has to the interest of The Billboard, the Industrial Moving Picture Company will be a winner in every sense of the word. "May fortune smile on you, friend Rothacker."

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER

* * *

A Well Merited Promotion.

Chas. J. Ver Halen has been appointed Chicago manager of The Billboard as successor to Mr. Rothacker. Mr. Ver Halen entered the services of The Billboard in the capacity of stenographer, and his rapid rise is evidence of the fact that his ability is recognized and appreciated. Mr. Ver Halen has The World's best wishes for success.

* * *

Quite a flutter of excitement was occasioned last week in Western circles when Joseph Hopp announced that the Standard Film Exchange, of which he is president, had "gone Independent." Thinking it a mere rumor, I called on Mr. Hopp, who informed me that the report was true, and that he had been contemplating this move for several months past. The principal reasons given by Mr. Hopp for his alliance with the Independents were that, after careful consideration and investigation, he had come to the conclusion that the Independent film maufacturers were rapidly reaching a stage of excellence with their products which created a greater demand on the part of the exhibitors, who were willing to use Independent releases if they could get good exchange service. Mr. Hopp expressed a very optimistic view of the future, and is confident of the success of the Independents in general.

* * *

The following exhibitors visited the new Western offices of The Moving Picture World this week: W. D. Moore, Colonial Theater Company, Joliet, Ill.; W. H. Ellis, manager Colonial and Colonnade Theaters, Decatur, Ill.; Fred Bartholomae, Garfield Theater, Chicago, Ill.; C. F. Goodrich, New Bijou Theater, Menominee, Mich., and Royal Theater, Green Bay, Wis.; S. Harding, Princess Theater, Omaha, Neb.; A. Kunz, Grand Theater, Springfield, Ill.; W. Hayman, Janet Theater, Chicago, Ill.

POLICE DOGS PHOTOGRAPHED.

Moving Pictures Taken for the Budget Exhibit.

Moving pictures for the budget exhibit by the city authorities to be held at 230 Broadway, Manhattan, between October 3 and 28, were taken September 28 of the police dogs in action at Eighteenth avenue and Ocean Parkway. The sixteen Belgium dogs attached to the Parkville station, went through interesting maneuvers giving an exhibition of catching a thief climbing through a window, holding a man down until the police arrived, and other tricks for which they are employed in the police service. The dogs are in charge of Officer Young. A large crowd was assembled and Captain Farr, of the Parkville station, was in command. Lieutenant Wakefield, the trainer of the dogs, was also present. —Brooklyn Citizen.

NEW YORK POLICE CONTROL THE PICTURES.

Justice Holds that Licenses Cannot Be Transferred Without Official Consent.

That it is not within the province of a New York moving picture show owner to transfer the license issued to him by the Police Department without the consent of the latter is the opinion of Justice Oppenheimer, of the Fifth Municipal Court, in a carefully written opinion handed down on September 27.

The case came before the court in an action brought by Matthew J. Smith against Martin Meyer to recover for the alleged sale and transfer of a moving picture license for the premises at 2508 Webster avenue, The Bronx. The court holds that under existing conditions there could have been no transfer and finds for the defendant. The defendant alleges that such a license was a privilege and not transferable by the person to whom it was granted, and that, therefore, no legal transfer had been executed.—New York Tribune.

"HALLBERG" EQUIPS COLONIAL THEATER, BROOKLYN.

R. H. McDonald, 7415 Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., placed an order last week with J. H. Hallberg, 36 East Twenty-third street, for a new Motiograph moving picture machine with "Hallberg" Economizer. Mr. McDonald has had another make machine in service during the past few months, but is one of those careful exhibitors who don't spare expense in order to give his patrons the best show, and any one interested in the business will find an interesting comparison between the pictures produced by the Motiograph and those produced by another well known machine of the latest model.

IMPORTANT INSTALLATION OF POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH.

The Franklin Amusement Company have just completed the Savoy Theater, 852 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, New York, which is one of the finest in that city. They have spared no expense in procuring the best equipment in the market. The People's Film Exchange, Columbia Theater Building, New York City, secured their order for the Power's Cameragraph and Power's Inductor which have just been installed in their operator's booth.

TROUBLE DEPARTMENT
QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
CONDUCTED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Non-citizen Operators.—The writer has received several letters of inquiry from New York City operators, and several very warm letters of protest, regarding the matter of the new law which prohibits the issuance of licenses to operate moving picture machines to any other than American citizens of full legal age, namely twenty-one years.

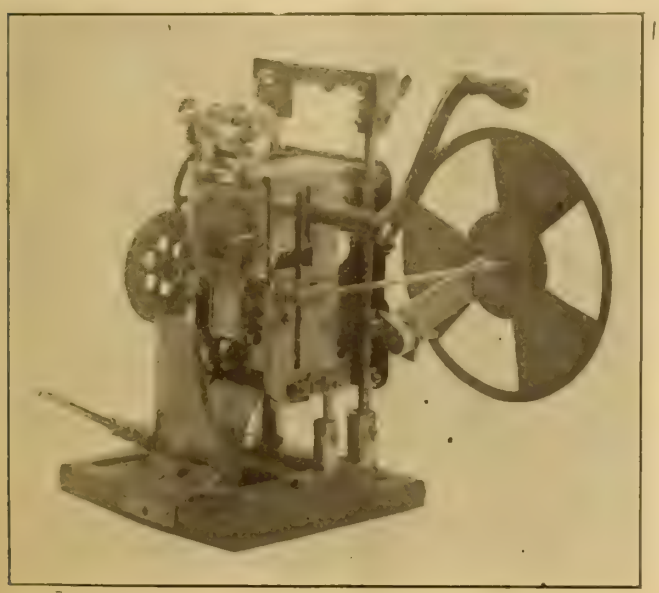
Viewed from almost any angle, the law seems to me to be wholly unjust. I firmly believe that any human being has a perfect right to earn his daily bread and the daily bread of those dependent upon him by the sweat of his brow, on and in any portion of the Creator's footstool. If I went over to Italy and was told I could not earn my living there, working at my trade, until I had first become an Italian citizen, I would certainly raise all the howl I knew how to raise, and create all the disturbance of which I was capable. However, this is neither here nor there. Whatever you or I may desire or believe to be right cuts no figure. The law says very definitely: "No person shall be eligible to procure a license unless he shall be a citizen of the United States and of full age." It will thus be seen that the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity appears to have no discretion whatever in the matter. Inquiry at the Department office elicits the reasonable assurance that the 1910 license cards issued prior to the passage of the new law will be allowed to expire naturally on December 31 of this year. That is to say, the cards of non-citizen operators will not be taken up during this year. It is of the utmost importance, however, that all operators who are citizens shall file proof of that fact with the Department without delay, since no new license can be issued in the absence of such proof.

Incidentally, this quite possibly may cause some tall skirmishing. The writer himself does not know exactly how he is going to establish proof of his citizenship. He was born in a small town in Iowa forty-four years ago. In those days, so far as he knows, in the smaller towns, no record was made of births. He has been burned out twice and thus lost the old family records. Now, I would like to have the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity suggest some feasible method of proving his citizenship—if it can.

* * *

Outside Shutter on Power's No. 5.—Seattle, Washington, contributes the following: "Recently a correspondent of The Column asked if a three-wing, outside shutter could be successfully attached to the Power's No. 5 machine.

"O. H. Craig, operator at the Lyceum Theater, this city, has made and installed such an attachment and it works perfectly. The enclosed photograph conveys the idea very well.



"The camshaft is extended out to the right and the regular No. 5 beveled shutter gears installed, the shutter-shaft extending ahead as shown. The shutter is very light, being of tough cardboard. It still remains to be seen whether or no it will stand the long grind."

There is no doubt, Seattle, but that a very light shutter, installed as shown, will work very well. It is very creditable to Mr. Craig that he has evolved such a contrivance—very creditable indeed. I have seen precisely the same thing installed on the other side of the machine, but it was not the work of an operator. My opinion is that in the hands of a very careful, competent operator the device would serve its purpose but in the hands of the average man it would not. The photograph shows, apparently, some new scheme of a lower fire-shield. I can't make it out and would like further information concerning same. I am glad to hear of such things as this and thank Seattle for sending it in.

* * *

Hook on Power's Lamp.—Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "Why is the cast-iron hook, which prevents tilting the Power's lamp back only so far, put on? It is simply a nuisance."

The hook, Cleveland, is a requirement of New York law, the idea being to prevent the lower carbon arm from coming into contact with the front of the lamphouse, thus grounding it.

It is, as you say, a nuisance, and the first thing I do (outside of New York, of course) is cut the hook off with a hacksaw or file. It is the result of an example of ignorance in lawmaking. Had the wise men who presume to tell us what we must do, known their business, or, rather, our business, they would have required the front and inside of the lamphouse to be lined with asbestos millboard or some other non-combustible, insulating material. For myself, I simply lay a piece of sheet asbestos in the bottom of the lamphouse, letting it bend up so as to cover the front end as high as the condenser opening. Of course, the part on the bottom soon gets covered with carbon dust so that it will carry current, or would if I let it. But as a matter of fact I lift it out every day and clean it thoroughly. Cut off the hook, is my advice. Also file out the bottom of the lower carbon holder so that you can use as long a lower carbon as possible by letting it extend down through the holder. You thus eliminate a goodly part of the carbon waste. In thus advising I take it for granted that nothing in your local laws prevent following my directions. Always comply with the law, even though it be foolish and unreasonable.

* * *

Something to Think About.—In looking over my daily paper recently I found something, by one Sophie Irene Loeb that, with very slight change, applies directly, and with telling force, to the operator. Study it well. Read it and read it again. Typewrite it and paste it up right beside the lookout hole where you will see it all the time. Paste another copy in your hat. Here it is:

"Nothing ever stood still except a bad picture (and usually even that don't, Miss Loeb.—Ed.). Who wants a bad picture? Even Ophelia would not smile at one. She'd take her slate and run! Move is the thing! Move is the monitor that makes the mare go. Like the brook, it cries, 'Men may come and men may go but I go on forever.'"

To stop at any time means stagnation. The operator who thinks he has a mortgage on good work is very likely to wake up some fine morning to find the mortgage foreclosed. Why? Simply because he stopped paying interest in the form of study! We must pay interest on our capital of knowledge, no matter how large it (the capital) may be, in the form of study. Sometimes we may think we are paying usury but if we don't pay some one else will. And there you are! We must keep up with the procession and the man who manages to do so, or even be a little in advance of it, is the one who gets the velvet. Too many operators are satisfied to be at the tail end of affairs. They stopped paying interest in the form of study almost before they had any capital (knowledge) at all. Wake up, gentlemen! Get busy and forge up toward the head of the good projection procession. If you don't you'll get bumped, and bumped good and hard, too, in the very near future. The day of "any old thing will do" is rapidly (thank heaven) passing. King Ignorance is dying! King Knowledge ascends the throne. The King is dead! Long live the King!

"We are on the main line of a crowded track;
We've got to go forward; we can't go back
And run the risk of colliding:
We must make schedule not now and again,
But always, forever and ever, Amen!
Or else switch off on a siding.
If ever we loaf, like a car in the yard,
Doesn't somebody bump us and bump us hard,
I wonder?

"You've succeeded in building a pretty fair trade,
But can you sit down in the grateful shade
And kill time cutting up capers?
Or must you hustle and scheme and sweat,
Though the shine be fine and the weather be wet,
And keep your page in the papers?
If ever you fail to be pulling the strings,
Aren't some of your rivals around doing things,
I wonder?

"You are starred on the bills and are chummy with fame;
The man on the corner could tell you your name
At three o'clock in the morning;
But can you depend on the mind of the mob?
Can you tell your press agent to look for a job,
Or give your manager warning?
Should you lie down to sleep, with your laurels beneath—
Wouldn't somebody else soon be wearing the wreath,
I wonder?

* * *

Current Strength.—The Wascenic Theater, Waseca, Minn., asks: "Would like to ask a question, feeling that you can help us. We have A. C. through a Compensarc. Our throw is 65 feet, picture 10 feet 6 inches. We are unable to get a good light unless we use the highest contact, 60 amperes. This uses up the carbons (5/8 Electra) so rapidly that one setting will run but two reels and for the third one we must reset the carbons, which causes an unpleasant wait with 'nothing doing' for the audience. Can this be avoided in any way? Forty amperes will run three reels but doesn't give light enough and a stop is far preferable, bad as it is."

Get a lamp with longer feed. I presume you have a lamp to match your machine and, particularly if it be their old style lamp, its range of feed is very short. Also you might try 3/4 carbons, though I rather doubt your success with them. It takes from 50 to 60 amperes A. C., to produce good light on 60 cycle current. Very likely 50 amperes would do your work as well, maybe better, than 60. But you have no 50 ampere contact. You might reduce the current a little by inserting some slight resistance in the secondary line, but I hesitate to advise this since it would have to be carefully done and would require some cautious experimenting as to amount required. Better get a lamp with more feed (longer rack-bars). If you know how, however, setting the carbons should occupy but from fifteen to thirty seconds.

Have a pair of eight or ten-inch "button" plyers and a pair of good gas plyers the same size. Keep your screw threads well lubricated with a good grade of graphite, putting some vaseline on each evening when the lamp has become warm and dropping on some graphite. The vaseline is only to make the graphite stick and will immediately burn off. Use the gas plyers to handle the hot carbons and the button plyers to manipulate the wing-nuts. Learn to work quickly and accurately.

* * *

Practical Operator on the Examining Board.—I am informed that a practical operator, a Mr. Andem, has been appointed to the New York City Examining Board of Motion Picture Operators. This is as it should be. I have opposed from the very first inception of examining boards the "all electrician board." The electrician who is also a practical operator is in much better position to give a really practical, valuable examination than is the one who is merely an electrician, no matter how expert he may be on matters electrical. The Department is to be congratulated on its progressive move.

* * *

Side Motion—Condensers.—Winnipeg, Man., writes: "I take great pleasure in The Column as well as your talks on various subjects pertaining to our business. Probably you will be surprised to receive a letter from this far-north city but I am seeking aid, like many another. What is it causes the side motion to a film? By side motion I mean a swaying from side to side of the picture on the screen. There is no lost motion between the star and cam and everything seems to be in perfect condition but the side motion is there! I get a perfect picture, good light and am quite satisfied otherwise. Have been operating for seven years and this is my first experience of this kind. Have an Edison, latest model, only run three months.

"I note the number of queries concerning condenser breakages and have, myself, overcome that difficulty by taking the lenses home and tempering them.

"I put them in the kitchen oven four or five days, allowing them to heat and cool off again and again, and have had no further trouble. One condenser lasted 14 months and then was broken by the helper in cleaning. Would be glad to correspond with some of the brother operators. We have a nice house, good operating room and above all a good man to work for. We take the Moving Picture World and like it. My address is Mack Brown, care Colonial Theater, Winnipeg, Man., Canada."

Glad to hear from you, Winnipeg. We are obliged for the method of tempering condensers. Let others try it out and report. As to the side motion, it may be caused by your intermittent sprocket shaft having side motion, in which case loosen the bushings and, holding the star over snugly, but not too tightly against the cam, shove the right hand (operating side) bushing up against the shoulder of the shaft. Tighten its holding setscrew and then shove the other bushing in as far as it will go, the whole idea being to set the star snugly against the cam and hold it there without binding and without side motion. You say there is no lost motion between star and cam but you may not mean sidewise. It is also possible that the top gate guides are too wide, allowing the film to move from side to side. Remember that very slight movement at the aperture looks big on the curtain. Again, it is possible that your machine table itself sways slightly with each revolution of the crank. You may test this by running without film in, brakeing the takeup belt wheel with your fingers to make the machine run as hard as it usually does. If the white light sways on the screen that settles it.

* * *

Excellent Suggestion.—Richard Foote, Archibald, Pa., writes: "Have noted the remedy for burning off of wire terminals suggested by Albert Rider in The Column. My belief is that most of this trouble is due to the construction of the lamp house and more particularly to the manner in which the wires enter it. Most generally the wires enter through bushings placed in the walls of the lamp house. This is the mistake. As the carbons are moved together and apart there is a constant pull on the wires which eventually loosens the connections or breaks the strands of wire. My solution of this trouble consists in placing the bushings in the bottom of the lamp house directly beneath the lamp arms. In this way the wires hang perfectly loose and there is no wear either on the wire or the insulation. On some machines the lamp sets upon the board so that this method would not be practicable in such cases unless the board is cut off so that the back part of the lamphouse projects out over the end of the board."

Your suggestion strikes me as excellent, where it is possible to adopt it, friend Foote. I think it would not work on machines that are used both for motion picture and stereo work, since the lamp house must be shoved over and in the movement it passes over an iron rod in most outfits, I believe. Where the lamphouse is stationary a hole could be bored through the wooden table, in cases where there is one, and bushed with porcelain. If an extension be attached to the lamp binding post, running back well towards the back of the lamphouse, where the holes in its bottom should be located, the scheme would be perfect. Otherwise the top wire would hang too close to the arc I am afraid, and get quite hot. The extension must be stiff enough to carry the wires. The thing impresses me as worth trying out at any rate.

* * *

Honest Dealing.—J. Heinz, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I am sending, under separate cover, sample bottle of film cement to be used on both N. I. and inflammable film stock. I ask that you give it a thorough trial and if found all right kindly inform the "picture world" as I have an ad. on page 716, current issue Moving Picture World. I send this to the end that you be placed in position to answer any questions concerning the value of the formula I seek to sell. I read The Column and find it most interesting. I shall, some day in the near future, send in a letter concerning motion picture affairs in Baltimore."

I will test the cement, friend Heinz. It certainly looks straightforward and honest when you send in your product for test. Shall be glad to receive the letter concerning motion picture affairs of your city.

* * *

Candle Power.—Bemidji, Minn., contributes the following: "I notice, in the Trouble Column, of which I am a constant reader, an article on the candle power of a projection arc lamp; notice also that you invite intelligent discussion on the matter. Now, friend Richardson, I most emphatically do not wish this letter to be taken as an attempt at discussion on the matter. What I want is to be set right on matters of which I evidently have wrong ideas, since my figures and yours do not gibe at all, not even approximately. I will try to explain my method of calculating candle power and will appreciate the favor if you will tell me where I am wrong and set me right.

"First, let us assume that we are using 35 amperes at 110 volts pressure. The rule is that volts × amperes = watts. Therefore, 35 × 110 = 3,850 watts.

"Three and one-half watts equals one c. p.; therefore, 3,850 watts divided by 3½ gives 1,100 as the c. p. of 35 amperes at 110 volts.

"Now to try another way: Let us still have 35 amperes at 110 volts. One 16 c. p. lamp (incandescent) burns .51 of an ampere of current at 110 volts, or approximately ½ ampere. Therefore, 35 amperes will supply seventy 16 c. p. lamps, and 70 × 16 = 1,120 c. p. This is very near the first result and I had always supposed this to be correct. In the above I have discarded fractions."

The above is ingenious and quite correct in-so-far as applied to incandescent lighting, but I do not believe it would apply to arc lighting at all. Incandescent and arc lighting present two entirely separate and different problems. It does not follow that because approximately ½ ampere of current produces approximately 16 c. p. in an incandescent globe, where the current works in a vacuum, the same c. p. result will be produced where it must leap an air-gap and volatilize carbon in the operation of producing light.

Now this is about as far as I can go. I do not know how to figure c. p. in an open arc light. I only know that street lamps using approximately 10 amperes of current are said to produce 2,000 c. p. These lamps work on variable voltage, there being, in the series arc system, 50 volts to the lamp. As I understand it, there may be any number of lamps, whereas the amperage remains constant at 10; also the c. p. remains constant at 2,000. Since the wattage would vary with the voltage, the amperage remaining constant, how is the thing figured? Is it taken at the arc drop as to voltage? That wouldn't work out at all. Come on, wise ones. I'm up a stump, waiting to be helped down.

* * *

A New Machine.—Yonkers, N. Y., writes as follows: "Friend Richardson—You will please pardon the familiarity, but seeing the eminently satisfactory manner in which you censure would-be operators and knowing from constant reading of The Column that instead of having "your slats broken" we should all feel thankful for the persistent manner in which you labor for the uplifting of the profession. Until you entered the field, many of us did not dream that a crank-turner could ever be anything more than a crank-turner. Knowing what you have done for me, as well as others, I cannot help but address you as 'Friend.'

"Had anyone told me a few years ago that real moving picture projection was a science and an art, I would have laughed at him. Why, I never wearied myself even thinking there was value in the knowledge of many things I now value the knowledge of highly. Had I then seen some of the questions we now see propounded and answered in the World I would probably have laughed and said (to use the latest expression), 'Who's looney now?' But now I devour each number of the World with increasing eagerness, and I wish to personally thank you for an insight into what looked before like a fathomless nothing. Did I fill these pages, I could not give sufficient credit to The Column and its editor, as well as to the Moving Picture World which made both a possibility to us all. I believe thousands of other operators and managers feel the same.

"And now to commercialize this knowledge—to give a cash value to what we get so freely: Five years ago, when the moving picture business was a grab-nickel game, I owned a five-cent theater on 125th street, New York City, in which I did considerable of the operating. Desiring to expand, I sold out and opened a big theater in Connecticut, 10 and 15 cents admission. On my very first night, with a packed house [that's the time it always happens.—Ed.], my machine broke down. I closed the show, and next night the same thing happened. I had a second-hand machine and little real knowledge of projection. That settled it. No matter how hard I tried, I could not again secure the public's confidence, and in one month sold my outfit, costing $2,000, for $450. Real knowledge of the machine, such as I now have, would have enabled me to avoid those breakdowns.

"But the breakdown and loss set me thinking of the desirability of interchangeability of machine parts. Being mechanically inclined, I have evolved a projection machine which has the following points of excellence: Absolute interchangeability of parts; no sliding framing carriage, but the whole head cast in one piece; film exposed only at aperture as it passes from magazine to magazine; a four separate wing shutter which eliminates flicker; an automatic rewind which winds the film on reel only as fast as it is fed from lower sprocket and does not pull or depend on belt slipping to relieve strain on film. It is simple and can be applied to any machine. I have an automatic device which gradually shuts off the light from screen before end of film passes in front of aperture, thus doing away with the flash of white light at end of film. I have two patents already and more on the way.

"Now, what I want to know is: Is the Motion Picture Patents Company's control of patents such that it would prevent the manufacturer of a new machine from successfully entering the market? Of course, my machine uses the star and cam and loops. I can get ample capital if I find I can enter the field."

Friend Yonkers, I appreciate your kind words and thank you for them. I believe I have quite some friends and I'm proud of it. I think, in fact I know, that even those who are opposed to the dissemination of projection knowledge (dog-in-the-manger sort of people they), scan The Column each week and, while they wouldn't admit it for the world, glean all the knowledge they can.

As to the machine: I dislike to discourage you, but you will tackle a stiff game, friend Yonkers. In the first place, the Patents Company does not close the door to inventors. If you can demonstrate a machine having distinctive improvements in addition to their own fundamental patents, they will grant you a working license. In the second place, I personally know of one company which put $100,000 in before one dollar of clear profit was had on their machines. It cost another company, with a splendid reputation to help, upwards of $25,000 just to put out a new model of their machine. More than this, it does not follow that because a thing looks all right on paper, or even in its finished form, that it is all right. The Power's No. 6, for example, looked perfect. It was run in the factory for three months under severe strain and seemed splendid, but nevertheless as soon as it went out into actual service many necessary changes became apparent. They were promptly made, but the money it cost to make them would give the average man heart-failure. Look before you leap, is my advice, and don't leap. I know this is hard for you to swallow, but, friend Yonkers, you don't have to swallow it. I've told you my candid opinion and I have pretty close knowledge of the difficulties you will encounter. If you have the real goods you can succeed, yes; but it will be a heartbreaking game. The McKinney machine you ask of in your postscript is, I understand, in the hands of Wm. H. Swanson, of Chicago. What he intends to do with it, I don't know.

* * *

New York Law.—New York, N. Y., writes: "Kindly inform me whether or not I am allowed by law to have a musical program under a common show license, the performers to be on the floor; or could I even go so far as to have them perform from a stage, without letting any curtain drop?"

No, New York, you cannot have a musical, or any other program except motion pictures and a piano under that sort of license. Even a drum or singer of illustrated songs is allowed only by courtesy of the Bureau of Licenses. Any program, of any sort or kind, other than motion pictures and piano, comes under the heading of vaudeville license. Whether or not all theaters having vaudeville or musical acts have the vaudeville license, is more than I can say. I only quote you the law as given me by the Bureau of Licenses, City Hall.

* * *

Salt Lake City Again.—John Kern, operator, Casino Theater, Salt Lake City, writes in part as follows: "It would be a wise move for many operators and managers if they would get the Moving Picture World regularly. By so doing they soon would come to the conclusion that, no matter how much they may already know, they cannot help but reap benefit from the discussions in its columns.

"It will be well for the wise ones to remember that this old world of ours is moving very rapidly and that the motion picture business is several jumps ahead of almost anything else in the matter of rapidity of change in methods and appliances. They should remember, also, that two heads are better than one, no matter how wise that one may be; therefore, discussion through the columns is bound to help us all. More than this, by reading a trade paper such as the World, one keeps posted on new machines, resistance devices, transformers, etc., which are constantly bobbing up and which it is most embarrassing not to understand when one takes a new position.

"Any man who honestly seeks information and owns up to the fact that where there is a good man there is always a better one, and profits by that better one's knowledge, should be admired and not sneered at.

"Personally, I have been lucky enough to work in large houses, with first-class equipment. Also, I had the privilege of learning under a competent man and had all the show in the world to see machines repaired, having a machine shop in connection with the houses. Being a graduate from the Westinghouse Electric Company, I knew my A B C's in that very important branch of our profession, but even now I do not imagine I know it all.

"I wish there had been such a paper as the Moving Picture World when I started. In those days, when one wanted information from an "Old Timer," it was a case of dig up dollars for very doubtful value received. I read The Column from week to week and think you are doing a great work. If all those really benefited, appreciated the no doubt sometimes very hard labor you put forth to oblige, there would be decidedly fewer kickers."

Friend Kern, there is much truth expressed in your sensible letter. It is positively amazing what indifference is displayed by thousands of men who claim to be operators. They seem to think projection is a joke, and judging by the results of their labor as seen on the screen, it certainly is a mighty poor joke! Ask some of them to pay two whole dollars for the World for one year and they would have hydrophobia. "Waste two whole dollars on a paper? G'wan, man, youse crazy! I fergot more'n five minets dan dat guy Richardson ever knew," would be about the answer to a request for subscription, based on the fact that the operator could learn something through the paper. Of course, I don't mean that all would answer thus. Within the ranks are very many good, level-headed, sensible men, but also there is a liberal sprinkling of the critter described by the above two sentences. And it is exactly that brand of "operator" which ought to, and must, for the good of the business, be weeded out. He will never in this world learn the business or do creditable work. It simply isn't in him. He got in the game in the days when the business was growing like a mushroom. Theaters sprang up overnight and there were no operators. They must be made. Anything in the shape of a picture on the screen would do to get the nickels or dimes. Anyone who could thread a machine, make a patch and turn a crank, was an "operator." When the public got tired of the fearful exhibitions on the screen and began to get shy, quantity (not quality) was hastily added and vaudeville (?) invoked. But gradually the chaos natural to the mushroom-like growth of a new business is being eliminated, order taking its place. "Any old thing" won't do much longer, and the manager is waking up to the fact. Ignorance in the operating room must give way to knowledge. The public daily becomes more discriminating and daily knows better the difference between good and bad projection. The operator who "knows it all" soon really must know something, or else climb down from the operating room for the last time, giving place to the man who is ready, willing and eager to learn all he possibly can about that most fascinating of professions, projection.

A Correction?—Coeur d'Alene, Ida., corrects me as follows: "In reading The Moving Picture World every week I naturally look carefully through the 'Operators' Column, which often has some interesting questions and educating answers (thanks to you). Have also noticed that your pet theory is, that an operator should know and be able to explain anything concerning his machine or projection When at school it was considered very fine and a joke on the teacher to catch him in a mistake.

"In the issue of August 27 you answer the question, 'A Hard Proposition' (Ill.). Quoting from your answer, you say:

"'This means that, supposing you propose magnifying your picture as it appears in the aperture of the machine 150 times. One hundred and fifty times ¾ of an inch is 9 feet 4½ inches, about, while 150 times 15-16ths of an inch is close to 11 feet 9 inches. You would therefore have a picture of those proportions;' etc., etc.

"Well, sir, there's where you made a mistake in your explanation of the measurements for picture projection. He would certainly have a picture of those proportions, that is as ¾ is to 15-16. But he would not have his aperture magnified 150 times but would have it on the screen magnified 22,560 times. The tone of your answer indicates that in magnifying the aperture 150 times gives a result of 9 feet 4½ inches by 11 feet 9 inches and that is your mistake, as 150 times the aperture would only give a picture a little more than 11 inches by 9 inches. I remain. ————.

Well, my dear friend Coeur d'Alene, you are one too many for me this time! If 150 times ¾ of an inch isn't close to the number of feet and inches I said it was then I'll admit I don't know how to "figger." Possibly you have square magnification in mind, whereas I was dealing in linear.

As we go to press this week, the moving picture operators are holding a mass meeting at 10 East Fifteenth street, with the idea of forming an association composed of non-citizen operators, to petition Mayor Gaynor to repeal the law passed last June, by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, making it impossible for a man not born in the United States, nor holding citizenship papers, to operate a moving picture machine in the City of New York.

The meeting hall at 196 Grand street was crowded with some three hundred alien operators last week, when the meeting was called at the usual hour of 11.30 p. m., and was attended by some men prominent in the trade. Mr. Mark Dintenfass, of the Champion Film Company, addressed the meeting, as did representatives of the Acme, Lux and Defender film exchanges. The Sales Company and Imp Manufacturing Company also had representatives on hand, to assure the operators that their sympathy was with them.

When interviewed, Mr. S. Solomon, chairman of the petitioning committee, claimed that the passing of the new law will mean the discharging of some five hundred operators, some of whom have been in the business a number of years and have become experts. Many of these men have large families depending upon them for support, and their discharge will mean great hardship. Almost every man of them is striving to get his papers, and as many of them already have their first papers, but are compelled to wait five years for their second papers before they can become citizens, they are, through various ways, trying to have the law modified, so as to enable the possessor of first papers to operate.

Our sympathy lies with the operators, union or non-union, and we always stand ready to lend a helping hand, if they, in their trouble, will come to us. MACARTHUR.

THE SOLAX COMPANY.

Solax means, or is intended to mean, a brand of moving pictures shortly to be released. Mr. Solax himself makes his bow in our advertising pages this week. In imagination we perceive the Solax effigy or trade-mark on many beautiful moving pictures in the Independent theaters of the United States and of other countries of the world. For it is no exaggeration to state that few new companies that enter the manufacturing field are so well equipped to turn out pictures of the highest technical and pictorial qualitative character as the Solax Company.

Over in Flushing there has been erected a plant, second to none for efficient equipment, by the Solax Company. It is no secret that while there is no Gaumont association with the new company, yet Gaumont brains, Gaumont experience, Gaumont knowledge have been pressed into service in the erection of the plant. And there the Gaumont association begins and ends. Mr. H. Blache is the presiding spirit of the new company, and Mr. George A. Magie, who during his short presence in the American moving picture field has made himself so favorably known by his engaging personality and good business ability, is the business manager of the new company.

But chiefest and most valuable of all the assets of the new company is the artistic personality of Mme. Blache, who for many years was identified with the Gaumont Company in Europe. Mme. Blache is a consummate artist who has received many decorations in recognition of her talent as a maker of moving pictures. What kind of picture has Mme. Blache made? Generally speaking, she has been responsible for the production of many of the Gaumont pictures which are admired in this and other countries, for their artistic and technical excellence. It will be seen that in the American productions which Mme. Blache is to supervise she will bring to bear the supreme artistic ability and insight which characterized her work in Paris.

As will be seen, the Solax Company will be shortly releasing pictures. In subject and treatment these pictures, we are confident, will appeal to the Independent American exchanges and the Independent exhibitors, and through them, of course, to a large body of theatergoers in this country and in other countries. We wish the new company every success in its venture and hope soon to have an opportunity of seeing some of the pictures that are in preparation

ROSE O' SALEM TOWN (Biograph).

One of the latest films released by the Biograph Company receiving special attention this week, is entitled "Rose o' Salem Town."

The scene is extracted from the days of the Puritans, when witchcraft was rife in Salem, Mass. Rose, an unsophisticated girl, having lived all her young days upon the rocky shores of the Atlantic, is called a child of the sea. A young trapper meeting her at this time, becomes enamored of her and his love is most innocently accepted by Rose. A prominent Puritan, branded as a hypocritical deacon, also seeks the favors of this attractive young girl; being repulsed by her, he vows vengeance upon both herself and her mother.

The old saying, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him," is verified here, for the deacon reports mother and daughter to the church as witches, and, of course, "burn them" is the inevitable verdict.

Both are cast into prison. The deacon uses the fate of the mother (whose death he causes the daughter to see from her prison cell window) to press his attentions upon the daughter, but without avail.

Rose in turn is also condemned after ineffectually denouncing the deacon. She is bound and tied to the stake and is just about to be burned when the young trapper, who has secured the help of a company of Mohawk Indians, makes a timely rescue and saves the girl from the terrible fate prepared for her by the religious fanatics. The scenic beauty of the pictures is evidently a feature, as they are indeed beautiful; the acting, too, is of a high order; the main question is the suitability of the plot or sentiment of the play. While it is an unfortunate truth that a species of Puritan fanaticism and witchcraft caused much suffering and gave many martyrs to the stake, history records sufficient incidents upon which a plot, illustrating (and, if needs be, exposing) the fearful superstitions of the times, and which would easily suggest groundwork for a picture of this nature. To deliberately invent the character of a "hypocritical deacon" is in exceeding bad taste, and, while many sad deaths were the result of a blind prejudice and superstition, the enactment of a foul murder as a revenge for rejected illegal love advances, is much to be deprecated and censured.

It really seems that the fact of the witchcraft martyrs has been used as an excuse upon which to build an unhealthy love tragedy in a way that is not honest, showing a distortion extremely detrimental and depressing.

The idea of the deacon compelling the daughter to behold from her cell window the burning of her mother, is somewhat repulsive; it would seem that the young girl should have been treated equally with the audience in allowing imagination to fill its purpose, rather than an actual view of the tragedy so mercifully saved from the public. It is not surprising that exception has been taken to this part by the public press.

We can only repeat, that the history of those superstitious times would afford sufficient incidents for picture portrayal, with the necessary lessons to be derived therefrom, without the painful introduction of an unhealthy and revolting love plot which finds its culmination in a most unnerving tragedy. The ending was a welcome relief, the splendid work of the trapper and the Mohawk Indians being appreciated.

"Love's Old, Sweet Song" (Lubin).—A love story in which a country girl, a city man and an objecting mother figure. The young man goes wrong, but his erring life is reclaimed by the singing of Love's Old, Sweet Song. Much of pathos is represented in the lonely vigils of the two women as they wait for the erring young man to return, and sterling qualities are discoverable in the rough young country woman. Ultimately, reclaimed from his evil ways, happiness is renewed in the little family circle.

"The Salt on the Bird's Tail" (Melies).—A pretty story built up around the old saying regarding putting salt on a bird's tail to catch it. It is of a child, and is, therefore, interesting. It leads the little one through many beautiful scenes until, exhausted, she sinks to sleep at the foot of a tree, without her bird. But a tramp she befriended catches the bird and restores it to the cage. Astonishment is too plainly written upon the face of the little one to be mistaken when she discovers her bird in the cage. Her distracted mother appears at this juncture and there is a happy family reunion, which includes the tramp, his face transformed by smiles.

"The Sergeant" (Selig).—A pretty story of love and devotion to duty, the scene of which is laid in the great Yosemite Valley in California. There is an Indian fight, with a thrilling rescue, but the most attractive feature of the film is the reproduction of the magnificent scenery of the great valley. The work is adequately done and one may obtain a reasonably accurate impression of the grandeur of the scenery by seeing this film. The operator selected his view points with care, and the work on the film in the reproduction has been so well done that little criticism is possible. Those who have seen the valley will see much that is familiar. Those who have never seen it have here an opportunity to get an impression of it that is only less than the impression made upon one by the great valley itself. The house deserves commendation for producing such an excellent picture.

"A Jar of Cranberry Sauce" (Edison).—A comedy that develops some extremely amusing situations. In fact, it forces you to laugh. Here is the plot, a novel one, by the way. A farmer not used to city ways at a hotel; a young man in the next room given to reading sensational literature; a quantity of cranberry sauce that trickled under the door and looked like blood. Think of the possibilities of thrilling situations and disturbing occurrences in a combination of that character. And the Edison players extract every particle of interest, and excitement and humor, going from one funny situation to another, the astonished farmer supplying the comedy while the excitable young man strikes tragic attitudes and urges on the disturbance with suggestions repeated from his yellow literature. The picture is funny, but funny in a different way, and keeps the audience in good humor throughout.

"Almost a Hero" (Edison).—Fate condemned Percy to the unkind destiny of presiding over a ribbon counter when his soul yearned to perform deeds of valor like the brave knights of old. And when he attempts to give rein to his ambition and compel Fate to recognize his achievements the motion picture man frustrated his most laudable efforts. And when Fate, realizing that he was determined to overcome all obstacles and be a hero anyhow, placed an opportunity in his way he never recognized it and allowed it to pass. This film is one long laugh, a succession of funny incidents that compel attention by their novelty and unexpectedness.

"The Oath and the Man" (Biograph).—A story based upon the presumed rights of feudal lords to any woman among the peasants they might fancy. After the noble commands a peasant's wife to go to his castle a revolt breaks out among the peasants and the couple are obliged to accept protection at the hands of the outraged husband. But vengeance other than his is meted out to them. They are forced to remain in hiding while the mob devastates everything within reach. Sometimes individuals want to mete out their own vengeance, but God's vengeance is quite as sure, though slower in coming, and usually it is worse when it does come. Ethical reasons exist for this, and the inexorable law, promulgated centuries ago, is the same to-day it was then. This law cannot be evaded; it cannot be abrogated, but who so transgresses will surely be punished.

"Max in a Dilemma" (Pathe).—Sometimes one receives a succession of shocks from unexpected sources that disturb one's equanimity. Max was rejected by the girl's father because his bank balance was infinitesimal. Then he hires a burglar to kill him, only to receive notice shortly afterward that he has fallen heir to a large fortune. Acceptance by the erstwhile obdurate parent, and the accompanying festivities are interrupted by the aforesaid burglar who apparently has come to fulfill his agreement. But after a long chase he succeeds in handing back the check with the observation that he will not risk his neck to do anyone a favo

Thus, eventually, all difficulties are removed and Max escapes both horns of a very bad dilemma.

"The Mexican Tumblers" (Pathe).—A well photographed film, considering its subject, representing some very clever work. The Pathe films which have dealt with similar subjects, have received a notable addition.

"A Modern Knight Errant" (Vitagraph).—The battle with its spoils is not always to the strong. The fistic encounter here depicted is sufficiently lively to set the blood tingling, and when the lithe young fellow vanquishes the big, hulking, burly brute, involuntary applause ripples through the audience. That is what men like, and women, too, and they will applaud the winner in a fight of this sort, even when it is only a story. But Cyril's reward comes later. Perhaps it need not be described. Maybe it couldn't be. But it is safe to say that almost any man would do more fighting than that to get one. The film has plenty of life and go and will be popular.

"A Tout's Remembrance" (Essanay).—Pictures dealing with racing are always interesting, and when it is not posed, but is made from actual scenes on the track it is all the more so. The race track here represented is Jaurez, Mexico, and are reproductions of actual occurrences at that track. The heart interest is worked out through a love story in which the revenge of a would-be sport plays a part. When the reformed tout plays Godfly at 100 to 1 to win $10,000 the scenes are intensely dramatic, not because they introduce any new or novel feature, but because almost anyone can sympathize with the young fellow. And when he wins the applause is spontaneous. A racing picture arouses the emotions as nothing else can and when one is worked out as well as this it is all the more attractive.

"A Simple Mistake" (Pathe).—A comedy presenting in vigorous fashion the mistake of an officer asked to throw an intruder out of the house and pitches out the head of the house himself. Then when the real intruder and the head of the house meet, more trouble develops. And so on until the tangles are finally unraveled and everybody is satisfied that a disastrous mistake has been made.

"Renunciation" (Vitagraph).—A powerfully dramatic picture, acted with remarkable expression, the intense emotional scenes rising above the ordinary in motion pictures. It tells the story of a young actress who sacrificed her dearest hope to insure the happiness of others, yet in the end is victor through her own sacrifice. Perhaps it will be called the strongest film of the week. At least such an opinion of it will not be far wrong. It seems well balanced, and it is done so well that it carries one along irresistibly, holding the attention and arousing the emotions as few films are able to do. The staging is superbly done and the photographer has performed his part to perfection. It is therefore, above the common run of pictures and will assuredly please any audience that cares for good acting.

"The Sheriff's Capture" (Lubin).—A love story based upon the proposition that a girl does not like sheriffs, but when one is shot in the back by desperadoes she was protecting, she not only gives information which leads to their capture, but succumbs to the sheriff's charm and agrees to serve a life sentence as his wife. Perhaps upon the proposition that all the world loves a lover, this picture possesses interest; but beyond that its merits are too insignificant to remember. Lubin is capable of better things as has been demonstrated over and over again. This type of picture has had its day and it should retire to the rear and make way for a stronger feature.

"Max is Absent Minded" (Pathe).—A comedy representing the difficulties into which an unfortunate absent-minded individual runs without thought, ending with the breaking of his engagement with a very desirable young woman. While the picture is mildly amusing it contains no startling novelty which appeals forcefully to an audience.

"Colombo and Its Environs" (Pathe).—A striking series of views made in the far away Straits Settlements, presenting interesting phases of life in and about this city. Such pictures always attract attention. They bring the ends of the earth together. This film enables one to sit comfortably at home and visit the antipodes and perhaps see more of the actual life of the community than he would if there. Its mechanical execution need not be criticised and the selection of scenes for reproduction deserves commendation. It is a worthy addition to the travel series.

"The Ole Swimmin' Hole" (Selig).—Not many faults can be charged against Selig, but just why this title was selected is difficult to say. "Little Nell" would be more appropriate. While the money box was buried near the "Ole Swimmin' Hole" the latter is merely an inconsequential incident in the drama. Little Nellie is a lovable character, and her comforting the old man when his money is stolen is a good bit of work. Then comes the return of the money, retribution for the thief and afterward peace and contentment.

"Over Mountain Passes" (Edison).—A scenic film of interest. It takes one to a new and unknown country, the passes of the Andes in Peru. While the scenery is grand beyond description it is saved from being oppressive by the introduction of two droves of llamas, one going up and the other down; the latter bring loads of copper ore, which is carried in this way from the mines to the smelter. The mountain scenery is accurately reproduced, with all the rugged grandeur, for which the Andes are famed, retained. The picture opens a new region and suggests possibilities of scenic glory well worth consideration.

"The Footlights or the Farm" (Edison).—A quiet story which tells simply, but graphically, how a country girl developed a longing for a life on the stage. But the picture goes on and tells with equal strength how she was cured of this infatuation and explains why she returned to the farm and her old sweetheart, satisfied to rest there. A view of dramatic life is given that will probably be new to many. It isn't so alluring after the glamor of the footlights is removed and the disagreeable features of the work are unsparingly revealed. Possibly this film will perform a service beyond the mere amusement of the people who attend the motion picture theaters. It may exert an influence toward curing the longing some young people unconsciously have for the stage as seen from the front.

"The Sunken Submarine." (Gaumont).—A dramatic story based upon a letter a young man writes to his grandmother informing her he has been ordered to duty on the Pluviose, a submarine. The transition from rejoicing to mourning is very sudden when later news reports the Pluviose sunk and all on board lost; though the incongruity of loss of life in a sunken submarine is apparent, it is scarcely a feature of the story. Then comes news of the transfer of the young man to another ship at the last moment, and joy reigns supreme in the home of the grandmother.

"Too Much Water" (Gaumont).—A comedy dealing with nightmares and dreams about water and floods. Most who see it will sympathize with the unfortunate gentleman who capsizes his boat when he launches it according to his prearranged program. There may be others who have had experience in floods, or with overflowing faucets, as humorous as this, but not all prepared a boat with provisions in case of an emergency. This emulation of the late Mr. Noah raises this comedy to a higher level than ordinary and stamps the gentleman interested as almost an original genius.

"Her Adopted Parents" (Vitagraph).—The outstanding features of this picture have a strong appeal to the imagination. The girl does well to induce the old people to live with her, and maybe the suggestion this offers for similar action whenever opportunity offers furnishes reason enough for the existence of the picture.

The man who can make a phonograph keep time with a patched reel is the man we want to hear from. Until he appears, this is about all the space we have to devote to "synchronization."

There is a new law in New York which requires all operators of moving picture machines to be citizens of the United States. It is a law that is probably wholly unconstitutional and would be so declared if a case could be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. But the unnaturalized persons who have been employed in this business in New York cannot be supposed to have the means to bring a test suit. What defense can be made of such a statute we do not see, and we are surprised that Governor Hughes should have approved it.—Hartford (Conn.) "Times."

B. Feldman, the genial music publisher of London and the representative of Jerome H. Remick on the other side, has departed from his usual conservative methods and devoted the biggest part of a page in the London "Era" to announce the fact that Arthur Altridge, a noted singer, had made a tremendous success rendering the "Garden of Roses." Feldman wires also that it is destined to be the big hit of the year and that the sales will outrival anything he has ever published. Jerome H. Remick & Co. have another season's success to look forward to in the way of a big demand for the song, "Therese," by Adolph Phillips.

In answering advertisers, kindly mention the Moving Picture World.

Real Music That Really Fits the Picture

"MOTION PICTURE PIANO MUSIC"

FIFTY CENTS A COPY.

A Piano Book that contains descriptive Music to fit all probable Scenes, Actions, Characters etc. shown in Moving Pictures. Composed and compiled by a Professional Pianist of twenty years' experience in Theatrical lines. Bristled of practical suggestions for the inexperienced Pianist in a M. P. Theater. Descriptive Circular sent free upon request. Book will be sent promptly upon receipt of fifty cents. Address,

FRELINGER MUSIC COMPANY

LAFAYETTE, IND.

Drums, Traps, and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.

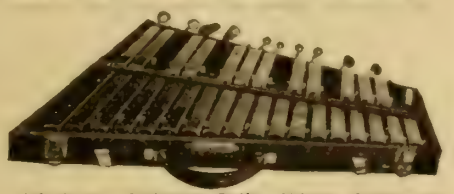
272 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.

The Pedal of the Hour

This latest invention eliminates all pedal workers. Produces natural arm struck tone. Ease of action phenomenal. Constructed entirely of metal. Strong and durable. Folds in space 9½ x 31½. Weight only 35 oz. Just the thing for vaudeville. Keep in touch with progress. Write for complete description and testimonials. We have everything you need for your line. We supply Chicago's leading picture houses with drums and effects.

LUDWIG & LUDWIG

134 E. Van Buren St., Room 610, Chicago, Ill.



Xylophones, Orchestra Bells, Chimes, Forks, etc. Send for free illustrated catalogue.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

WURLITZER

Automatic Musical Instruments

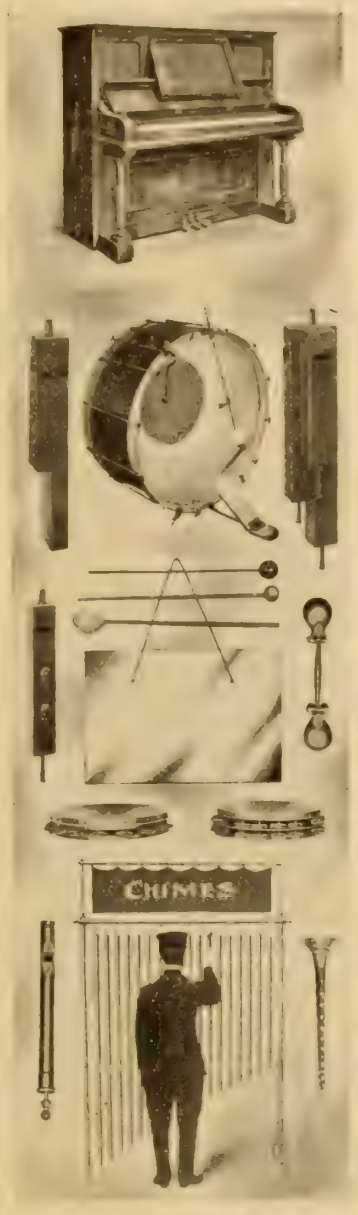
They do the work of expert musicians and reduce operating expense.

Wurlitzer is the world's largest manufacturer. We supply the U. S. Government musical instruments. Write for big 84-page catalogue showing the only complete line of self-players, from a small electric piano to automatic orchestra representing 35 musicians. Easy payments.

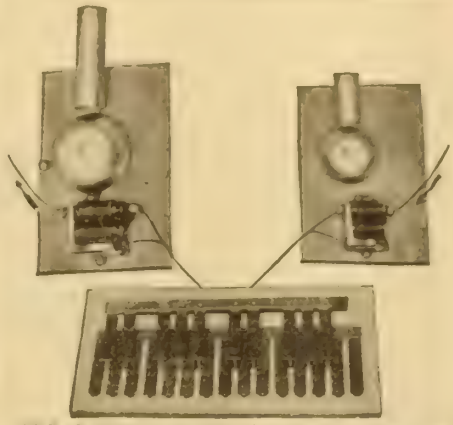
Concert Piano Orchestra.

RUDOLPH WURLITZER & CO.

CINCINNATI—117 to 121 E. 4th; NEW YORK—25 & 27 W. 32d (bet. B'way & 5th Ave.); CHICAGO—266 & 268 Wabash Ave.; PHILADELPHIA—1835 Chestnut; ST. LOUIS—912 Pine; CLEVELAND—206 Prospect Ave., S. E.; COLUMBUS, O.—57 E. Main.



WURLITZER



OUR PATENT ELECTRIC BELLS create great enthusiasm in Moving Picture Houses, play from a keyboard as a solo instrument or as an accompaniment to songs. Twenty-five Bells, two octaves chromatic, including resonators, magnets and keyboard, $75.00.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Moving Picture Pianists

Are you "working up" your pictures? If not, why not? If so, you want some good melodramatic music. Send for free sample page of "Orpheum Collection of Moving Picture Music." Now being used and praised by many of the best houses in the country.

PRICE.....75 CENTS

Also latest cue music (series 1910) for 10 parts and piano.....$1.00

¼ discount on both numbers.

Clarence E. Sinn

1501 Sedgwick St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Sound Effects

In Picture Machine Theaters it is very essential that the imitations and sound effects are of the kind that can be depended upon. We make only practical and serviceable imitations that will give the exact reproduction of the original. We also manufacture Chimes, Tympani, Bells, Xylophones, Drums and accessories.

LEEDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

1055 E. Palmer St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

TO TRAP DRUMMERS

A Limited Time Offer

Special Offer: Size Shell 8 x 14 $10.00 Size Shell 8 x 15

Solid Maple, Rosewood or Walnut, 10 fine plated thumb screw rods, Kangaroo, Angora or Skunk Calf Drum Heads.

We ship with privilege of 6 days trial

E. P. ZEIDLER DRUM CO.

Dept. F. Cleveland, Ohio

Send for my large free catalogue of Folding and Parlor Organs, suitable for use in Moving Picture Theaters.

Address

J. C. KAY

4036 Ellis Ave., Chicago.

Commments on the Films.

INDEPENDENT.

"The Cattle Thief's Revenge" (Defender).—A thriller that might have been produced from some dime novel. Vengeance seems to be the order of the day. Joe has rather the better of it since he manages to have the lieutenant shoot the girl to whom he had been making love because of wrong information regarding her identity. Usually an author gives the woman the best of the argument, but in this instance the girl alone is killed. Even Joe, the real thief escapes his just punishment, and succeeds in having this unmerited punishment inflicted upon the girl. The complications make the story interesting.

"Debt" (Imp).—The story of a separation brought about by a wife's extravagance which is patched up after the husband makes a fortune. The last part reminds one very forcibly of the old fairy stories where everything was happiness after the difficulties were finally settled.

"A Cattle Rustler's Daughter" (Bison).—Plenty of exciting action here. A cowboy film which is different from most which have been produced recently. Some of the scenes of grazing herds, cowboys at work and play, rustling cattle, and others, are faithful reproductions of actual occurrences which were common on almost any ranch. Then there is the capture of the rustler, his quick passage toward eternity and his daughter's sensational shot that cut the rope. The love story is not necessary to hold the interest, but happily does not detract from the main features of the film. The picture is well conceived and well executed and all things considered is one of the best of that type for some time.

"The Convict" (Thanhouser).—A burlesque picture which becomes more thrilling as it proceeds. The convict is supposed to have escaped and the way he is chased and surrounded bodes no good for him. But somehow he manages to elude the steadily increasing army of pursuers until they are gathered around him, when he calmly shows a motion picture announcement, and the reason for all this melee, in which the whole country side took part, becomes apparent.

"A Husband's Jealous Wife" (Thanhouser).—Sometimes unreasoning jealousy receives its just desserts and when a wife creates as much disturbance as the one here depicted perhaps the unfortunate husband is justified in eloping with the homeliest girl he can find who will go with him. Anyhow the ill-visaged stenographer was the unfortunate man's friend and helped him escape from the unpleasantness which surrounded him at home.

"Foolshead as a Policeman" (Itala).—Once again Foolshead appears, this time as an officer and his adventures are quite as funny and unexpected as they have been in other parts. Foolshead is a character whose efforts to amuse are always attended with success and as a policeman he maintains his reputation earned in other roles.

"His Lordship" (Powers).—A Western picture, full of life and sparkling with comedy. It is presented with all the finish and close attention to details which are characteristic of the Powers films. It keeps the audience in excellent humor, and develops numerous funny situations as it runs, each one better than the one previous. "His Lordship" will be popular with all Independent patrons as long as it is shown. There is a quality about the Powers plays that can scarcely be described, yet unquestionably this quality is what adds to their popularity and holds the attention of those who see them. They seem to touch the human note, offering interesting illustrations of certain phases of human life which are common to everyone, and there possess extraordinary power in pleasing or arousing the emotions.

"Pressed Roses" (Imp).—A comedy which can, perhaps, be appreciated by those who have pawned their last loose property to take a girl to the theater, and then get a mix-up in which the roses are sent to the tailor to be pressed while the trousers go to the girl with instructions to "wear them to-night." Ultimately the snare is straightened and everybody is happy, while the girl presses the trousers after all.

"The Yankee Girl's Reward" (Yankee).—A rather interesting drama based upon a family skeleton that insisted upon rattling its dry bones in a very uncomfortable, not to say startling way, and which could have been banished by the young wife telling that part of her family history. However, this omission worked out eventually to the advantage of a little girl and her brother who befriended a sick working man. There are numerous interesting complications in the plot, an exhibition of a high degree of common sense on the part of a policeman and a liberal reward paid for the capture of an escaped convict which went to the little girl. And the wife buried her skeleton, for her recaptured convict brother, to whom she sent her pearl necklace which created all the disturbance, had no reason to tell who he was. There is much of interest in this picture, which deepens as it runs, and does not cease until the last flash.

"A Cowboy for Love" (Bison).—This picture is an improvement on some of the recent Western output. It is pleasant to see the family reunited after the unreasonable separation and the touch of humanity in the baby fingers is interesting, as always.

"The Taming of Buck" (Powers).—A short comedy that will rouse your audience and set them laughing. How Buck was tamed might be a suggestion for similar cases and offers valuable instruction in this direction.

"O! You Wives" (Powers).—A snappy comedy that possibly reveals some secrets that wives here and there would not want their husbands to know. There is snap, and go, and lively humor here.

"Home Made Mince Pie" (Thanhouser).—A domestic comedy with a different flavor. In fact, with a mince pie for a basis the flavor comes to resemble brandy very strongly by the time that the cook, the maid and the mistress of the house and her daughter have added the proper proportion of flavoring, neither one knowing that the others have done likewise. The humor in the piece centers around this pie. What happened to the guests who partook of it certainly draws upon the imagination. Imagine eight people, not to speak of the cat, getting drunk on the brandy in one mince pie! One could appreciate a short skit on the idea, but to feature such whimsical subjects as a full reel, taking up twenty minutes, is a mistake. We do not single out this subject as being more evidently padded than others shown on the screen this week. Licensed as well as Independents were guilty and it is time that the manufacturers realize the importance of the scenario end of matters. The mince pie episode was well done, which is the faint praise that we do not like to mete out to any one.

AN "IMP."

There is a clever little lady in charge of the executive offices of the Independent Moving Pictures Company who is a devout reader of the Moving Picture World. Our editorial last week on "The Usual Thing" did not escape her attention and when a sweet voice at the other end of the wire pleaded with us to come and see something different from "the usual thing," what could we do but accept? The surprise proved to be a poem in pictures entitled "The Garden of Fate." In conception, execution, and setting it stands out head and shoulders above any previous "Imp," and we have seen quite a few. Staged and photographed on the magnificent country estate of one of New York's multimillionaires, the photographer has done justice to the splendid opportunity. The actors were specially selected for their parts, which they performed with good taste. We learned that the leading lady—a new Imp favorite, by the way—was the author of the scenario, and she is entitled to praise for its arrangement and for the part she played.

Altogether the picture marks such a distinct departure from the usual thing that we hope the Imp will persevere in the direction in which they have taken so sudden, so bold and so successful a step.

THANHOUSER.

We could not resist the cordial invitation to pay another visit to the Thanhouser studio, especially when a ride in Mr. Thanhouser's swift automobile was an added inducement. Since our first visit, which was recorded in a former issue of the World, the Thanhouser studio has been transformed inside. The lighting arrangement, which at first was more or less of an experiment, is now permanently installed. Great masses of props are convenient to the stage directors. Dressing rooms have been built for the actors, and everything is spick and span. Most important of all was the new equipment of the laboratories. Here is to be found the latest and most approved machinery built by European experts. The improvement in the technical quality of the work more than compensates for this expense, and in this respect the two films which we were shown, "Pocohontas" and "Dots and Dashes," may be taken as excellent examples of progress.

"Dots and Dashes" is a clever little sketch containing the choicest elements of dramatic effect. If May Wilson had not taught her admirer the telegraphic code, he (Jack Preston) would have suffocated inside a vault. This in a few words is the idea of "Dots and Dashes." There is a defaulter in the case whose shortages are discovered by Jack, and incidentally here it may be remarked that the said de-.

American Film For the American People

MANUFACTURED BY THE

AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

This is the announcement of something new in the Film World—a new Independent Film Manufacturer. But although we are new, we are already old. A new Film Manufacturer may have much of everything—all that money will buy in the way of plant, equipment and talent—and fail. No NEW concern can have a reputation ahead of its first product unless that reputation shall rest upon the experienced personnel of its organization—EXPERIENCED EMPLOYEES. We therefore respectfully invite your attention to the appended list which comprises partially the staff of the American Film Manufacturing Co.

EXECUTIVE

A. M. Kennedy, General Manager
G. P. Hamilton, Superintendent Factory and Studio

PRODUCTION

Thomas Ricketts, Dramatic Producer
Sam Morris, Comedy Producer
Frank Beal, Western Producer

TALENT

G. Warren Kerrigan, Leading Man
David G. Fisher, Juvenile Lead
Harry Clifford, Juvenile Lead
Miss Dott Farley, Character Parts
Miss Josephine Ricketts, Juvenile Leads
Miss Jessie Mosley, Character Parts
William Lee, Character Parts

PROPERTY

Robert Coffee, Chief Property Man
Nelson Lund, Property Man
Edward R. James, Property Man

SCENARIO

Allan Dewan, Scenario Expert

DEVELOPMENT

Henry Meyer, Asst. Superintendent and Chemist
E. R. Fraks, Foreman
Miss Anna Gallaghan, Forewoman

MECHANICAL

Chas. Zebath, Mech. Expert
Otto Hubel, Electrician

NOTE.—In addition to the above listed heads of the various departments of the American Film Mfg. Co. every employee in our Office, Factory and Studio has had from two to five years' experience in the manufacture of film for an established manufacturer. There is not an inexperienced man in our employ.

We have eliminated all question of doubt about our first release. We have a modern plant and facilities, brains, money and a combination of know-how. Every man in our organization has had from two to five years experience in film making—all the way from the studio to the screen. They are conscientiously and diligently striving for the highest attainment in film making. WATCH FOR TWO IMPORTANT THINGS—OUR SUBSEQUENT ANNOUNCEMENTS AND

OUR FIRST RELEASE

AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK :: :: :: CHICAGO, U. S. A.

faulter is some actor. May is the telegraph operator in a broker's office and it is plain to be seen that Jack is in love with her. They use up a good deal of the firm's time practicing telegraphy, while the defaulter is bending over his desk, defaulting like a good fellow. Finally the head of the firm gets wise that he is being double-crossed all around and sends for Jack and puts him on the trail. The defaulter being the only other employee around the place, it is a cinch for Jack to get him with the goods, simply by opening a book and doing some wonderful stunts in rapid addition. In a couple of minutes he has the defaulter begging for mercy which he cannot give. For this he is shoved into the vault by the defaulting clerk and the heavy doors are closed upon him.

Jack and May were going to the theater that evening, and the reason Jack did not show up at the house was the same reason that brought May back to the office. Finding the theater tickets on the floor gives her the inkling that something is wrong, and a moment later a faint tapping from the vault is heard. At this point the novelty of the story is brought well into play as the two lovers begin to telegraph to each other by tapping on the iron door of the vault. It is rather to be regretted that the Thanhouser people did not make the most of this climax by introducing telegraphic dots and dashes in a manner to create suspense. By this is meant that had a few lines of dots and dashes been flashed on the screen, word by word, and with each word spelled out in letters beneath each dot and dash, it would have given a telegraphic semblance or realism to the scene.

The acting is well done, especially the defaulter, who was totally unlike the stereotyped stage villain. He gave the true impression of a man who was not wholly bad, but who yielded to temptation and was duly harrassed by his conscience. The comedy scrubwoman had only a little to do, but we can see in her work the makings of a big scream when they furnish her with a comedy scenario and let her be the principal. The leading lady of the Thanhouser stock company is a well-trained actress and a very pretty girl. It is quite easy to imagine the yell of surprise from the audience when the police come out of the vault and nab the defaulter, who has returned, conscience-stricken, to the scene of his crime. He wants to see if his victim is still alive. Those of us who saw it were wondering where the cops were all the time. We asked Mr. Thanhouser where they were and he said he guessed he had forgotten about them. A moment later when the defaulter opened the vault, the police stepped out of it and arrested him, and the laugh was on us.

"Pocohontas."

The story of Pocahontas is always a popular one, but, like all well known stories, its success lies in the telling, and that is the charm of this new Thanhouser offering. We all know the story, but it was left for this enterprising concern to show us John Smith landing from the "Half Moon," which was borrowed for the occasion. This occurs at the very beginning and gives the film a stamp of reality that has seldom been attained in any historical subject. It is deserving to call special attention to this master stroke of realism. The story all through is sympathetic and true. All modern backgrounds are carefully dodged and we get nature unadorned.

Still continuing along the line of reality, the minor Indian parts are played by the real natives, and for a wonder they act them right. Well selected water scenes follow each other and the detail throughout is as clear and sharp as a good lens and a fine light can make it. Add to all these the costuming, which we know to be correct, because costuming is one of the subjects upon which Mr. Thanhouser is known to be an authority; this added and we have a film that is nearly perfect in every department.

It is needless to review the story itself, or to follow the scenes in detail. There is only one scene that was not altogether convincing and impressive, that being the reception of Pocahontas at the court of King James. This one scene appeared to lack to some extent what one would expect in such a scene. Rather unfortunate in arrangement because it did not give a glimpse of any throne, which, according to all precedent, must be in sight as an evidence of good faith, as well as for the ready grasp of the obtuse. Never leave a throne to the imagination. The scene seemed to lack the element of grandeur, which, in many cases, is obtained by simplicity of line rather than ornate detail. In this scene the background is cut up with a number of queer shaped windows that have a tendency to draw the eye to them and away from the actors. To the average spectator this would pass without being analyzed, but the impression left is that of a conservatory or enclosed veranda. The windows being odd in shape, start one speculating unconsciously on their form. In all court presentations the acting must of necessity be perfunctory, and it lies with the surroundings to complete the idea of grandeur; hence this long paragraph about a scene that forms but a small part of the picture.

It is quite easy to believe that Mr. Thanhouser would be the first one to refute the assertion that his films have attained absolute perfection. In the first place he is too sensible a man to entertain such an idea, and secondly, there would be no more worlds for him to conquer. At the present writing the Thanhouser masterpiece is "Pocahontas."

RENO FIGHT PICTURES.

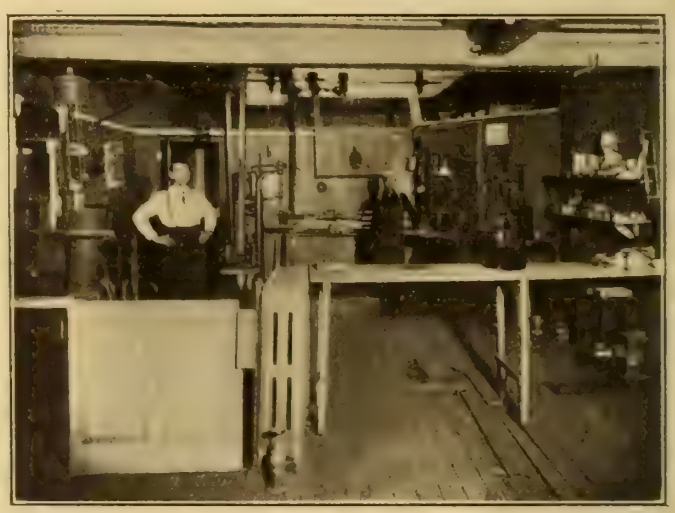
The London Times is credited with being the most conservative old dame of journalism in the world, but apparently she did not get a bit excited over the moving pictures of the fight, for here are some of the things the venerable old lady says (weekly edition):

"The much-discussed pictures of the Reno glove fight, in all 6,000 feet of films, were shown on Monday afternoon at the National Sporting Club. The many pictures of Reno and its vast and excited population in the days preceding the contest were vivacious in the extreme. The fight itself was rather dull and not at all like the highly colored word paintings of it. The truth is that the cinematograph leaves out all the adejctives. There was much more wrestling than boxing. A very harmless show; and anybody who could be demoralized by seeing it would certainly lose all his morality if he saw a cab accident."

Durn the hard sense of the bloomink Britisher!—New York Press.

Bellows Falls, Vt.—The new Dreamland, a fireproof theater being built at Bellows Falls by T. F. Kiniry, is progressing rapidly. It will have a stage and scenery and seat about 325. Will open about October 24.

The Chicago Song Slide Exchange is now located in its new quarters, 107 Dearborn street, where Messrs. Honeck, father and sons, have plenty of room and the best facilities to conduct their very successful exchange. The Chicago Song Slide Exchange is not only the most popular but the largest exchange of the West, where any illustrated song, old or new, can be found properly catalogued. By moving, Messrs. Honeck have more than quadrupled the floor space that they had in the Masonic Temple, affording a much larger waiting room, more up-to-date offices and a model stock and examining room.



JUSTICE MACHINE WORKS

Theater managers and operators will be pleased to learn that the Justice Machine Works have opened an up-to-date shop at 110 Third avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, for the setting up and repairing of moving picture machines and parts. The accompanying cut shows a part of the shop, with the owner, Albert Kupky, in the foreground, and also tends to give an idea of the equipment of the shop. The enterprising operator who desires a further knowledge of the repairing of moving picture machines, and especially the delicate parts of same, will find a complete course of mechanical instruction open to him, with shop lessons under the supervision of Mr. Kupky, for the nominal fee of $10.

Correspondence.

PICTURES IN EDUCATIONAL FIELDS.

Magnetic Film Service Company,
123 Shillito Place, Cincinnati, Ohio, September 13, 1910.

Moving Picture World,

Gentlemen—We are enclosing you herewith a copy of letter this day received from Rev. F. J. Finn, a priest of the largest church of Cincinnati, Ohio.

We have for two years furnished Rev. Father Finn with moving pictures for his entertainments given to the Orphans' and various homes of the city of Cincinnati, and have received numerous letters of thanks from him, and this is one of the nicest letters received and we think that it is well worthy of publication in large type, to show the exhibitors that the moving picture business is not only appreciated by the outside public but by the pulpit as well.

Trusting you will see fit to publish this letter and thanking you in advance for same, we remain,

Very truly yours,
MAGNETIC FILM SERVICE COMPANY.

The St. Xavier School Association,
St. Xavier School,
520 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Magnetic Film Service Company, Cincinnati, Ohio:

Gentlemen—I wish to thank you sincerely for the many favors you have shown me during the past year, and especially for your kindness in furnishing pictures for the Fourth of July Celebration at Cummonsville for the benefit of the little orphans.

The pictures—five in number—were all high class. One was an optical poem, another an optical sermon, and the other three were good, clean comedies. About four thousand people, men, women and children, viewed these pictures, and all spoke of them in the highest terms.

These five films, chosen out of your stock with the greatest taste by yourselves, not only show the elevating work that has been done by the moving pictures, but also furnish good hope of still more wondrous possibilities.

Again thanking you for your favors, I am,

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) F. J. FINN, S. J.

A LETTER FROM C. B. PURDY.

New York City, September 27, 1910.

Moving Picture World, New York City:

Gentlemen—We take great pleasure in informing our many friends among the exhibitors, through your valuable paper, that we are in a position to handle the exchange business of our old patrons again, with a service consisting of upwards of 1,500 reels of first-class commercial stuff, all titled with the original titles and subjects that have never (that is, a good part of them) been seen before. Although we have been lying rather quiet for the past Summer, we are by no means going to sleep during the coming season, and are now in a position to handle a liberal amount of business. Mr. Chas. Dowson, an old-timer in the business, is now with Mr. Purdy and will handle a good part of the outside trade. Prices are exceedingly reasonable. Until larger and more adequate quarters can be procured, we will be found at the old address, 300 East Twenty-third street.

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE.

AN EXHIBITOR'S KICK.

Watsontown, Pa., September 26, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—What an easygoing easy mark your average exhibitor seems to be! I have never seen registered in your columns a kick against the grafting exchange that agrees to supply film a certain number of days old, and then substitutes a very ancient vintage of wornout junk, as some exchanges are doing at the present time. I have just had a little experience along that line, having been quoted a certain price for 60-day film, and the very first shipment came six months old. I called the exchange on the 'phone at the cost of one dollar, and told them I must have 60-day film as agreed, and the next day received more six-months-old reels. Mind, I had paid in advance for a week's service, and paid the price quoted by the exchange without a murmur, and on inquiry among neighboring exhibitors I found that they had been served in the same manner. It would seem to me that this is an infraction of the law, and that exchanges doing business on this plan would be violating postal regulations against obtaining money in a fraudulent manner. I would advise every exhibitor when treated in this manner to write the Post Office Department at Washington, D. C., being careful to keep the letters quoting prices, etc., and a list of the films received, with their release dates, which could be used by the postal inspectors as evidence. I got even by returning the film shipped me, C. O. D., for the amount of money advanced by me. The tip is free; pass it along.

Yours for a square deal.
STUNG.

LOCAL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio, September 28, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Being one of your subscribers, I noticed in one of your issues copies of ads. I am a great believer in printers' ink and I enclose an article which I had in yesterday's paper. I insert notices like that every day. I took charge of this theater when it was almost dead and now it is doing the business of the city. It pays to advertise. You might use this article, as it will be of interest to your many readers and at the same time give the Imp and Powers companies a free notice.

Yours truly,
ROSCOE C. CUNEO,
Star Theater.

Star Theater this Evening.

Three dandies: Imp film, "The Right Girl." A corking drama. The dish-washing scene keeps you laughing all the way through. An enjoyable production. Powers films, "The Burlesque Queen." You will enjoy this comedy. It is great. "The Horseshoer's Girl." You laugh and cheer and perhaps shed a few tears. You will say, it's a great show to-night. Are your friends missing any of these great films? Two new reels every evening. No repeaters. The junior class of the high school has charge of the theater Thursday and Friday evenings.

The Motion Picture Company of Boston was recently incorporated to deal in moving picture theaters, etc. Capital, $10,000. President, M. D. Flattery; treasurer, James Conon.

W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Inc.

The oldest and largest Independent Film Exchange in New England

Mr. Exhibitor: When you see your receipts drop, call on us

If you are unable to call, drop us a line and we will convince you that our service is the service you want to increase your business

Don't forget the name and address

W. E. Greene Film Exchange
INCORPORATED
228 Tremont Street Boston, Mass.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

A GOLD NECKLACE.—This is a delightful comedy of errors, in which a gold necklace figures prominently. Mazie lends her necklace to Nellie, her guest. Nellie is asleep in a hammock when Sam, her sweetheart, arrives in his auto. He awakens Nellie with a kiss. As she starts up she drops the necklace in the grass and their efforts to find it prove futile. Sam promises to buy her one to replace it, thinking it was her own property. He has her minutely describe it that he may get an exact duplicate. Meanwhile, the governess has found the necklace and given it to its owner, Mazie, who is unknown to Sam. He sees it on Mazie's neck and after a chase insists on purchasing it. Mazie thinks him a lunatic and humors him, receiving a good price for the band. Nellie, upon receiving the necklace, restores it to Mazie. Sam meets Mazie again and sees the necklace again around her neck. This time he fancies she has stolen it and hurries to tell Nellie, but his valet takes more decided steps and recovers the necklace by seizure. Mazie is flabbergasted at first, and when she recovers her equanimity she rushes off for the village constable. He surprises Sam in the act of restoring the necklace to Nellie, who is also surprised. The participants of the episode are now assembled, and after the excitement has subsided, explanations and introductions bring peace.

HOW HUBBY GOT A RAISE.—Leave it to wifey, she'll fix things for you. Her schemes are so subtle that there doesn't seem to be the slightest chance of their falling down. However, when Mrs. Knowit suggested a plan to her husband, Esra, by which his services would be the better appreciated by his employer, docile Esra had his doubts, yet dare not oppose. This plan was to invite his boss to dinner and give him the feed of his life. She argued that the way to reach a man's good nature was through his stomach. To Esra's surprise, the boss accepts the invitation with avidity. Esra telephones, what he feels, the ominous intelligence, and so wifey prepares. That she may make a great showing, she starts on a borrowing expedition. An evening dress from one of her neighbors, cut glass from another, silverware from the next, in fact, various sorts of furnishings, even a maid to wait at the table. Everything in readiness, she feels proud of the layout. Esra and the boss appear, and dinner is at once served. The boss is rather suspicious as he regards the elegance with which his employee's dining-room is fitted, and he indulges in a bit of mental calculations. Wifey is self-satisfied for she fancies she has made a great hit. The boss upon leaving expresses himself as having enjoyed himself, but upon returning to the office, he writes a note and dispatches one of his clerks to the Knowit domicile. Mrs. Knowit seizes the note, sure that it contains news of a boost. The note:—"Dear Sir: I can't have men in my employ who live beyond their income. You are discharged." Collapse of the Knowit family.

THE ICONOCLAST.—Iconoclasm, the attacking of cherished beliefs and theories, has ever been the incitement of discontent, but the iconoclast of to-day may be better termed the socialist. Discontent is rather induced by selfishness, and selfishness is the seed of irrational socialism, nurtured mainly by laziness, and very often, drink. The principal character of this Biograph story, is a lazy, drink-sotted printer. He must be urged by his poor suffering wife to leave his cups to go to work. As usual he arrives at the office late, and an argument between him and the foreman ensues, just as the proprietor of the establishment enters, escorting a party of his friends to show them about and introduce them to the mysteries of his printing plant. The sight of these people dressed in sables and silk is extremely odious to this disgruntled workman, and when the proprietor shows a spirit of cordiality, he, galled by the inequality of their stations, repels it, and with a show of anarchism attempts to strike his employer. For this he is discharged, but his wife begs him, for the sake of their children, to try to get his position back, which he endeavors to do, but in vain. By this time he is ripe for anything, and drink-mad, sets about to take a fool's method of leveling ranks, that is, armed with a pistol he makes his way to his former employer's home to wreak revenge. We anticipate the printer's visit to the publisher's home, by showing the publisher in the depths of despair over the intelligence that his little child, despite the endeavors of surgical experts, is an incurable cripple. This is the scene that greets the printer at his surreptitious entrance. He finds there are things that wealth cannot buy—health and strength. He steals through the portieres with pistol in hand, intending to satisfy his covetous grudge with the death of this heart-crushed father, who sits weeping for his poor child's misfortune. The little one realizes her father's despair and so tries to cheer him, showing how nicely she can walk with the aid of the leg supports. This fortitude of the child makes a stronger appeal than moral suasion, and he turns from his purpose. The publisher, however, sees him and recognizes him as his former employee, and reasoning that now is the turning point in the man's nature, detains him to persuade him to mend. The child's mediation causes him to view the world from a different angle. Things could be better with him if he wanted them so, hence his employer gives him another chance by reinstating him in his former position at his printing office.

EDISON MFG. CO.

THE FOOTLIGHTS OR THE FARM.—Margaret is the pretty daughter of a farmer. She becomes stage-struck and decides to go to New York to begin a career. Her young sweetheart is informed of her intention and is heartbroken at the intelligence. Margaret reaches the great city and has the usual experience of a great many young girls who start to climb the ladder of fame in the great metropolis.

It is some time before anyone is attracted to her, but finally she is engaged by a manager to play a leading part. It is necessary for her to spend nearly all of her savings for wardrobe, but Margaret is not daunted by this, as visions of stage triumphs flit before her eyes. The great day of the first rehearsal arrives about a month or so after her engagement. Margaret reports for rehearsal.

On the stage are gathered a number of persons—actors and stage attaches—and at his table near the footlights sits the stage director accompanied by the stage manager. Margaret stands waiting for her part to be given out, but is dumfounded when no part is passed to her and her name is not called. She finally musters courage and steps up to the stage director, only to learn that he has never heard of her and that another young woman, an actress of experience, is about to rehearse the part. While the stage director is very sorry, he can do nothing in the matter.

Margaret leaves the stage with saddened heart. Her great ambition has received a damper, and her spirit is completely crushed. She no sooner passes out through the stage door than she almost runs into her country sweetheart, John, to whom she tearfully unfolds the story of her wrong. John is immediately inclined to go in and punch the stage director's head, but Margaret dissuades him. Finally he pleads with her to give up her stage ideas and come back to the farm. Margaret looks long into his eyes as if deciding between two careers. Finally John wins.

ONONKO'S VOW.—The story of Ononko's Vow is a pretty love tale through which is intertwined the story of an Indian's fidelity to his promise. The prologue takes place during the course of the Bloody Brook Massacre when an Indian chief, one of the rescuing party, saves a young Puritan, Jonathan Smith, from the tomahawk of a hostile Indian. Ungagook is the name of this chief, and he is accompanied by his little ten-year-old son Ononko. Ungagook unknown to Smith receives his death wound in rescuing the latter. Together the chief and his son come to the house of Smith and as they see him safely to his door the colonist's young wife expresses her thanks to Ungagook. The chief makes a gesture which is intended to convey the idea that he thinks lightly of what he has done, and immediately thereafter betrays the fact that he is mortally hurt. He expires in the home of Smith, but before doing so has his little son Ononko promise fidelity to the family in whose house his spirit goes to the Great Manitou.

Twenty-eight years later we see how Ononko now a vigorous young brave, keeps the pledge which he made his father in the years gone by. Deerfield has been sacked. Jonathan Smith and his daughter Ruth, who has just been affianced to Ebenezer Dow, are driven before the tomahawks and flintlocks of the Indians. Dow has gone for assistance, managing to evade the raiders, and the rescuing party comes from the settlement below. Jonathan Smith is saved by a trapper, but his daughter Ruth is among the colonists who are being taken on across the meadow toward Pine Hill and thence to Canada.

Ononko has seen the light in the sky from the village below and has hastened with the relieving party of colonists and Narragansett Indians to the scene. He enters the room where the colonists had stoutly defended themselves but where most of them were massacred. Failing to find his friend he seeks him without, and meets him as he is leaving the awful scene of carnage. Learning from the father that his daughter is among the retreating Indians, Ononko promises to seek for her and bring her back to the grieving old man. The story ends in his successfully carrying out his promise.

After the rescue, which is accomplished in a most thrilling manner, we see the young colonist and his bride-to-be approaching the edge of the settlement under the guidance of the tall young chief of the Narragansetts. Behind them walks their friend, the trapper. Ononko stands at the edge of the forest and points toward the settlement below. The three others pass him and turn to bid him good-bye, first asking him to proceed with them into the village. Ononko refuses. Why? Perhaps because in the breast of the handsome savage some gentle thought of the girl he has saved has entered; but his nobility of character permits him to entertain the thought only for a fleeting moment.

When Ruth was in captivity she was protected from the snow only by the woolen dress she wore. On the homeward march Ononko had given her his blanket to keep her warm. As he bids Ebenezer and his pretty fiance farewell Ruth offers Ononko his blanket, which she is wearing. The young chief prettily presents it to Ebenezer and places it across the shoulders of the girl. After accepting the gift the young people go to their home, their trapper friend accompanying them. Long Ononko stands contemplating the settlement below him. What his thoughts may be the observer is left to imagine.

At the finish of the film we again see Mr. Sheldon bidding good-bye to the two young people who have been visiting his town.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A LIE.—Billy Larkin is the proud possessor of a new car and he invites his friend Smith for a short spin in the country. With the promise to be home again within an hour or two, Smith enters the auto.

An hour later we find them stranded with a broken-down car, twenty miles from home. Billy is no mechanic, and after laboring hopelessly with the intricate machinery of the balky machine gives up in despair and suggests that they look up lodgings for the night and catch the first train for the city in the morning.

At the little wayside inn Smith makes an effort to telephone his wife, but the 'phone is out of order. Smith and Billy suffer all the discomforts peculiar to "best" rooms in country hotels, and sigh relievedly when they board the city-bound train.

When poor Smith finally reaches home and endeavors to explain his nocturnal adventures to his skeptical wife, she refuses to believe the truth and he takes refuge in a more conventional falsehood. He tells her he was called out of town on a business matter with Mr. Brown of Pickletown. Later, when Mrs. Smith, still skeptical, is left alone, she wires the following to her husband's supposed friend at Pickletown: "Come at once and see me. Husband must not know."

After she leaves the room Smith enters with Larkin, whom Mrs. Smith has never seen, and finds the blotter with the note to his imaginary country customer. Aware that Brown of Pickletown is a fictitious character, Smith urges Larkin to play Brown. Mrs. Smith returns and is introduced to "Brown," and is for the moment pacified.

Unfortunately Pickletown harbors a real Brown, who receives Mrs. Smith's message, and being somewhat of a country Lothario hurries into his best clothes and sets sail for the abode of his unexpected admirer. In his haste he leaves the telegram and his wife discovers the duplicity of her spouse.

Brown of Pickletown, after some trouble with the butler, is ushered into the presence of Mrs. Smith. He presents his card and a large bouquet, and Mrs. Smith, confused by this, calls upon her husband for an explanation.

The real Brown is at once accused by them of being an impostor, and as he is unable to produce the telegram they hustle him out and, threatening him with instant destruction, feel they have disposed of him.

But they have not reckoned with Mrs. Brown of Pickletown, who arrives in search of her erring spouse. Here follows another confusing scene for Mrs. Smith. But Smith and Larkin bribe off the Browns and get them to swear they are both impostors.

The picture ends happily with the final ejection of the Browns and Mrs. Smith in her husband's arms.

THE BEARDED BANDIT.—In the little Western town of Lariat, when our story opens, there is much excitement over the latest depredations of the robber, who, because of his particular ingenuity in hiding his real identity, is styled the "Bearded Bandit." The name was evidently supplied from the fact that he wears a disguise in the form of a heavy black beard. The night before the bandit is reported to have held up a bunch of punchers and got away with a good quantity of dust. Something must be done to stop him, and therefore a posse is organized to accompany the sheriff on a little man-hunting expedition with a prize of $5,000 to the citizen who either bags or "plugs" the dare-devil robber.

Curt Wilson, the young sheriff, is in love with Nan Connors, the daughter of a neighboring ranchman, and it is partly to obtain the advice of his prospective father-in-law as well as to see Nan that he rides out to Connors' ranch before setting out on his perilous expedition.

He shows Nan and her father the notice stating that $5,000 reward will be given the man who captures the bearded bandit and asks Connors' consent to marry Nan immediately he captures the bad man. Connors winces, then rises and smilingly offers his hand. "It's a bargain," he says; then pleading an excuse to get away he leaves the two young people alone.

The next scenes show Connors riding up the mountain road, listening for the first faint rumbling of the wheels of the stagecoach, which he knows is due at this time and which, he is also aware, carries an express box full of bullion.

Two hours later the little town of Lariat is again electrified by the news of the bearded bandit's holding up the stagecoach. The sheriff and his posse hesitate no longer, but, swinging into their saddles, start in pursuit of the bandit. On their way they meet Connors, who has disposed of the swag and who even has the audacity to

WOMAN'S VANITY

Released Thursday, October 6th

The very latest thing in dresses worn by an exceptionally pretty girl who attracts more attention than she bargained for and throws the dress away. It falls into the hands of a negress who is followed by the same crowd of men who trailed the heiress. Then they found out her color. Length about 600 Feet

ON THE SAME REEL

THE GOLF FIEND

The golf fiend hit at anything that looked like a tee and made a general nuisance of himself until a coal heaver persuaded him to drop golfing and nurse his bumps. Length about 350 Feet.

Released Monday, October 10th

THE CLOWN AND THE MINISTER

The Minister took the clown's place when the crisis came and to leave the sick child would mean her death. His substitution enabled them to gain the precious hour and the camp applauded his deed. Length about 990 Feet.

Send for Free Catalogue of Our 1910 Machine

LUBIN MF'G CO. 926 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO: 22 Fifth Avenue LONDON: 45 Gerrard Street, W
BERLIN: 35 Friederich Strasse

INTERNATIONAL FILM TRADERS

INCORPORATED

147-157 Fourth Avenue

New York

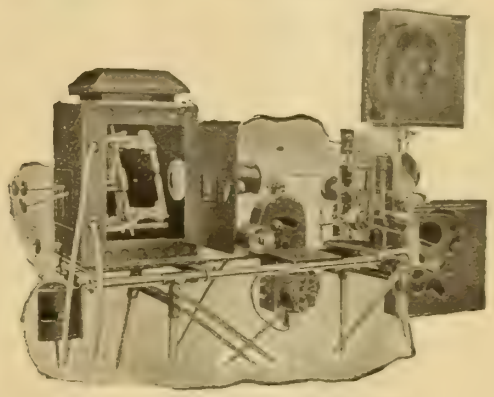
The Largest Dealers in

Second Hand Films

in the United States

The "STANDARD"

The Machine That Gives Results



FIREPROOF-FLICKERLESS

Messrs. Aronson & Brown of Henderson, N. C., report as follows:

"We have been using a Standard for fifteen months and have not spent one cent for repairs. It certainly is a reliable machine, and produces a better picture than any other we have ever seen."

Write for Illustrated Catalogue at once

AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE CO.
101 BEEKMAN STREET - - - NEW YORK

join the man hunters in their search for the wily highwayman. Needless to say, the search is a failure and the disheartened sheriff and his posse return to town.

A few weeks go by and we find Connors and a few of his cronies at a friendly game of poker in the "Red Dog," Lamar's best bar and dance hall. During the game a young stranger, who has entered, is permitted to take a hand, but Connors finds him cheating and, drawing a gun, orders him out. The young fellow stalks angrily out, then turns on his heel and fires through the open door. Connors sinks in his chair, mortally wounded, but staggers to his feet and asks one of the boys to fetch his daughter.

Half an hour later Nan is at his side, and when they are alone Connors pulls from his breast the bearded bandit's outfit and begs Nan to use them in claiming her reward. Then death seizes him, and the girl falls weeping over her father's body. Rising again stolidly she seizes the black beard, the mask and other equipments and thrusts them in the stove just as the sheriff and the boys enter.

The "bearded bandit" was never captured.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

THE DIVER'S HONOR.—A diver and his son, also of the same profession, are reading a notice in a paper, which asks for divers to apply at the Admiralty in order to assist in the raising of a sunken submarine. The son applies and is engaged. In the vessel are certain plans of great value, and the young diver accepts a bribe to get these papers from the submarine and hand them over to the spy, but unfortunately while concocting the plot, they are overheard by a man who carries the tale to the father. The young diver is next seen being lowered into the sea, and he is shown disappearing into the sunken submarine. He has been under the water but a short time, when the father rushes up to the quay, rows out to the boat and tells to the officials the tale of his son's treachery. The old diver is lowered down after his son, resolved upon a desperate thing. He finds the son, and after a short, but fierce struggle, cuts the tube which supplies air to the young diver.

A HIGH-SPEED BIKER.—A grocer is seen having a few words with his assistant, preparatory to the latter starting off on his morning rounds. The little homily so annoys the assistant, that he departs from the service of the grocer, without even giving him a minute's notice. Finding himself in this quandary, the grocer casts his eyes around for a way out, and these fall on a fellow lounging at the street corner; he is immediately engaged to go round with the grocer's bicycle-carrier to get the orders. Off he starts, immediately coming to earth again, but not a bit dismayed, he again mounts, and, after three efforts, he dashes off on what proves to be an adventurous journey. His escapades are thrilling in the extreme, and must be seen to be appreciated. The film is one laugh from beginning to end.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

THE QUARREL.—A woman is deserted by her wealthy husband. She finds an unpretentious lodging and works with her sewing machine to keep herself and the babe. She suffers many privations in the endeavor to make both ends meet, and one day when she gives way to her grief, her sobs are overheard by a pleasant-looking old workman who lodges on the same floor. He comes to offer his sympathy, notices the evidences of poverty, and, with true tact, leaves some money in the baby's hand. In the course of his employment he does some work at a large house. A portrait there seems familiar—he has seen a copy at the house of the woman he has befriended. He finds it is her faithless husband, and deliberately breaks open the rich man's desk and takes sufficient money to supply the wife's needs. He places the notes in her drawer in an envelope bearing the husband's monogram. The police and the husband soon come to the workman's room; he calmly leads them to the next apartment. The husband, full of remorse, on seeing his wife there, dismisses the police and pleads for the forgiveness of the woman he has wronged.

REEDHAM'S ORPHANAGE FESTIVAL, 1910.—Boys' Drill.—The fancy evolutions of the boys are not only performed with a skill and finish rarely witnessed even in military circles, but they produce artistic evolutions which will arouse every audience to enthusiasm. Order of pictures: Formation of companies and marching to position. Artistic evolutions—Formation of companies in a square with open corners, enclosing one company. Opening out to five crosses; revolving, with kaleidoscopic effect and remarkable precision. Development into "Victoria Cross" formation; perfect alignment and accuracy. Whirligig of concentric circles, moving in opposite directions. Dismissal, for preparation of tableau. Grand tableau; cone formation; outer circle prone, inner circles rising to center, with apex formed of three boys, gracefully arranged.

Girls' Drill.—Order of pictures: Girls advance and take open order. Drill—graceful and charming. Re-form for drill, in double lines. Drill in double lines, close order, great freedom of action. Drill in two ranks, alternate girls kneeling, beautiful motion. Changing rank. Marching. Drill in open order, with dumbbells and wands.

G. MELIES.

BILLY'S SISTER.—Full of booze, bluster and fight "Black Pete," a big "bad man" of the wild West comes from the local saloon ready to put daylight through anybody and everybody within the range of his voice and the reach of his gun and, to further convince the crowd that he is the terror of the territory, lands on an inoffensive bystander knocking him down.

"Billy" is an entirely different sort of a citizen; he is a young chap living with his sister whom he loves very dearly; their love is mutual. Billy has received a letter and stops on his way home in an opening in the woods to read it. While thus engaged, an Indian girl is making her way through the woods. "Black Pete" coming along the pass sees and attacks her. Billy springs to her defense and knocks "Pete" down; in falling he strikes his head on a stone and is killed. In his haste to get away, Billy drops his letter.

Shortly after the death of "Black Pete" his body is found by some of his gang, who at the same time pick up Billy's letter which readily connects him with the killing of Pete. They decide to capture and lynch him. The Indian girl overhears their vow of vengeance and warns Billy and entreats him to escape.

He makes good his escape, tells his sister of the accident and the determination of the gang to lynch him. His sister, with a woman's quick wit, quickened by love and impending danger, tells him to take off his cowboy togs and put on his store clothes, mount her pony, catch the next train at the railroad station and get away as quickly as possible. He loses no time in starting and is now on his way to reach the train.

His sister soon follows him dressed in his discarded outfit, her long hair turned up under the sombrero. She looks the counterpart of "Billy," the ranger; it is not surprising that the gang mistake her for "Billy" and give pursuit, exactly what she wanted them to do; by misleading them "Billy" has plenty of time and chance to make his "getaway."

sombrero. She looks the counterpart of "Billy," sister never sat astride a horse. She leads the gang a long and rapid chase. There's a flash, a dash; it's a wild, exciting ride; whiz! whir! goes the lariat and swish! it lands over the girl's shoulders, caught by the desperate men who pull her from her horse, drag her to a tree and throw the rope over a branch; but they fall back astounded when "Billy's" sister looks into their faces and shakes down her long brown hair and stands defiantly before them. They ask her what has become of her brother. She tells them he is further than they care to travel and a heap farther beyond their reach. They release her and she goes back to her home, where she rewards her faithful horse with her caresses and gratitude for his part in the saving of "Billy."

PATHE FRERES.

SOUTHERN TUNIS.—Tall date trees against the background of the silent desert forming a beautiful oasis is the first of the many things of Southern Tunis revealed in this film. Under the protecting shade of these giant trees grows a verdant mass of clinging vine and smaller fruit trees. Then comes a picture of a dangerous inhabitant of the country, a cobra, which rears its hooded head menacingly. But paramount in interest are the pictures of the clouds of locusts settling upon the land and ravaging its crops, a blight which human ingenuity is yet powerless to combat. Bringing hunger as they do in their train, it is strange that the locusts should sometimes serve as food when other nourishment is not obtainable, but this is so, and a boy picking off and eating the locusts settling on his coat illustrates this truth. Market scenes in Nabeul, a picture of a norla—a rude contrivance sometimes used in Spain and Eastern countries for raising water—and views of flocks pasturing amongst the olive trees under the sheltering care of a Tunisian shepherd, are also included in the film.

BETTY IS STILL AT HER OLD TRICKS.—Madcap Betty purloins a big ball of string, and thus armed, prepares innumerable traps for the peaceable inhabitants of the neighborhood. Bells are rung from a distance by means of a length of string, a stand full of crockery is fastened to the wheels of a motor car, and an old woman, deceived by an innocent-looking "lost" purse—which is mysteriously jerked away as she stoops to pick it up—causes the whole of the outside display of a fruit store to fall in hopeless confusion. Before long the whole district is in an uproar, and Betty finds it expedient to make herself scarce. A horse provides the means, and jumping upon its back, she gallops out into the open country, where she comes across a very human-being looking scarecrow. In an incredibly short space of time she has jumped to the ground, has fastened it on the back of her patient steed, and has herself taken its place. She then spurs it on with a lash on its flanks, the horse gallops away, and it is not at all unnatural that Betty's pursuers in the distance should fail to recognize that it bears only a dummy figure. Even when they do capture the runaway horse their rage blinds them for a few minutes to the deception, and they pound away at the unoffending dummy, whilst Betty stands gazing at the scene a couple of fields away.

MIRTH AND SORROW.—It is carnival day in Paris, but Bertha Corazzo, artiste at the Grand Opera House, is scarcely aware of the fact until she receives a letter. By it she learns that there is to be a matinee at the theater that afternoon and that she must attend to take the part of one of the principals who will be absent. There is no joy in the news for her, for her mother is lying at the point of death. But go she must, so donning her jacket, she leaves her mother to the care of a neighbor. The comic opera is in full swing when a hasty note is handed to Bertha in the wings of the theater. Her mother is worse, and she must hurry back if she desires to see her once more. Without stopping to think, she throws a cloak around her shoulders and hastily leaves the theater. Outside, the streets are full of people. The carnival procession is passing, and revellers in fantastic costumes are tossing handfuls of confetti at each other. Bertha, still in her fancy stage costume, is taken for a merry-maker and showers of the variegated bits of paper are flung at her by three young men who pursue her to the very door of her poor room. Here, after a second's hesitation, they decide to enter, bearing with them the burdens of confetti and flowers, with which they purpose to bombard their victim. They push the door open and then stand shamefaced and silent at the sight which meets their gaze. In a room which tells a tale of poverty and pinching, the young girl whom they have just been pursuing lies sobbing on the floor by the bedside of her mother, dead before her daughter could reach her. For a few moments they look at each other, and then, not knowing how else to offer his sympathy, one takes the flowers, and, shaking off the confetti, lays them on the bed before silently withdrawing with his companions.

SLIPPERY JIM.—A phlegmatic pickpocket is arrested and taken to his cell. As he is an unusually wily customer, he is bound by fetters and chained to the wall. Speedily putting these off, he is locked up by the enraged warders in a chest, but escapes and is finally thrown into the river tied up in a sack. Coming up from the water again, perfectly dry and safe, he makes a bicycle for himself and rides off furiously, springing ultimately onto a passing train which bars his passage. In this way he is carried along on his bicycle for some distance, but reaching the river again, he descends on his machine, performs a few evolutions in mid-air, the reflection of the bicycle showing up clearly on the face of the water, and then lands in a sumptuous room. The police follow, but are baffled by the continued disappearing tricks of the clever thief, who dissolves from view and reappears in the most unexpected places. At last he is captured in the police station itself and carried once more to his cell, but crashes through the iron bars with little trouble, leaving his warders safely under lock and key.

A LIFE FOR LOVE.—The salient figure in the piece is Toine, the village idiot, in whose confused brain there has sprung up an undivided love for Nais, Farmer Micoulin's daughter. Nais is fresh and pretty, and when Frederick, the son of her father's landlord, comes to spend his vacation at the farm, the man and girl love each other with ardent passion. It is impossible, however, for some glimmering of the true state of affairs to escape Farmer Micoulin, and his first suspicions are confirmed, and there then germinates in the old man's cunning brain a plan to be avenged. He dare not openly attack his landlord's son, but a shot from behind when he and Frederick are out shooting alone will never be regarded as anything but an accident. So run the farmer's thoughts, but those of Nais keep pace with his, and she, suspicious of her own father, enlists Toine to keep watch over Frederick. Toine knows it is because she loves the city man, but although he suffers, he is faithful to his trust. The results are fatal, for one morning Nais and Frederick find the mangled bodies of the idiot and her father tightly locked together at the foot of a ravine. They have met, fought, and gone over the precipice together.

AN INDIAN'S GRATITUDE.—This is a story of early California in the 'fifties. Two prospectors, after many years of disappointment, have at last discovered gold in a river, and are washing it out and hiding it near their rough and simple camp. Iron Horn, an Indian medicine man, one day comes across them, and furtively watching, finds out their secret cache. He rides back to his tribe and tells them of the white men who are mining, but does not say that he knows where the valuable metal is secreted. The Indians ride up in the night and surprise the two unfortunate men. Binding them with stout ropes, they sling them across their horses and carry them back to their native encampment. The two prospectors refuse to disclose the hiding place of their find and one of them is severely tortured without result. Iron Horn is called to cure Lightfoot, the chief's son, who has fallen sick, but being unable to effect a cure, is placed under guard. As a last resort one of the prisoners is asked to aid, and under the white man's treatment the lad recovers. That night, while the camp is dark and the rest of the tribe are asleep, Iron Horn escapes, and

Satisfy the Demand for Clearer Films

THE mere novelty of a moving picture has worn off; people now expect clear and steady light on the films, as well as interesting subjects.

Wherever a comparison has been made, direct current in the arc has given far better results than alternating current. How to obtain direct current (the best light) from alternating current (the ordinary supply) is therefore a question that interests every thoughtful manager. The solution is the

General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier

This device rectifies the current with very little loss. It has no moving parts, occupies a floor space of but 18 inches square, and operates without attention.

The improved light provided by the Rectifier will increase patronage.

The minimizing of heat in the booth will please the operator.

The low cost of operation will be of direct benefit to the manager.

MAIL THE COUPON

To find out all about this remarkable device, simply sign and mail the coupon. Don't delay in taking this action; for if you install a Rectifier right away, you profit by its use throughout the whole winter season.

Mail the coupon today.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

Largest Electrical Manufacturer in the World

Dept. 53J Schenectady, N. Y.

Without incurring the slightest obligation on my part, please send me your illustrated Booklet, telling all about the use and operation of the G.-E. Mercury Arc Rectifier. Mail me also an information blank to be filled out and returned to you, so that you can advise me how much money I can save, and how much my light can be improved.

Signed .....

Theatre .....

City .....

Address: General Electric Company, Dept. 53J. Schenectady, N. Y.

The exclusive rights for the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware for the great

BUFFALO BILL'S WILD WEST AND PAWNEE BILL'S FAR EAST PICTURES

ARE SECURED BY

H. CARSON

1429 N. FRANKLIN ST.

PHILADELPHIA, - - PA.

Write for Reasonable Terms

Mr. Exhibitor

The house that tells the Truth!

Funny isn't it?

We are not buying a thousand reels a week,—but we ARE buying Enough to supply Any customer that we agree to Supply with the Best to be Had.

Why not write us to-day before you forget it.

THE BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.

(THE HOUSE OF MERIT)

309-311-313-317 Arcade Building

DAYTON, OHIO

NEW SONG SLIDES

JUST RELEASED:

I hear my country calling.
Outside of that you're all right.
Don't say good-bye.
Gee, It's great to meet a friend.
Dearest.
Come to me, darling blue eyes.
I'm pining away for you.
While under the Jungle Moon.
Little band of gold.
Put me in my bath tub.
Not to-night, Josephine.

EXCELSIOR SLIDE CO.

138 East 14th Street :: New York City

MONEY FOR EXHIBITORS

Get It. It's Yours

REWINDERS $1.25

Machine parts sold for less

WHY?

Write, Davis Manufacturing and Supply Company

PREBLE AVENUE - ALLEGHENY, PA.

Opera Chairs

The Strongest Made
Most Attractive Designs
Permanently Noiseless

More of our chairs used than all others combined. There are reasons.

Large stocks constantly on hand, and we can make prompt shipments of rush orders

Write for Catalog V

American Seating Company

215 Wabash Avenue CHICAGO — 19 West 18th Street NEW YORK

BOSTON PHILADELPHIA PITTSBURGH

runs to the prospectors' deserted camp to obtain the booty. The other Indians soon miss him and follow on his trail. A lively chase ensues, part across wild virgin land, and part on water in canoes. Iron Horn obtains the gold and continues on his flight, but the Indians overtake him. He turns round as they approach, stumbles, and falls over a cliff 250 feet high. The Indians descend and find him dead. They take the bag of gold from his hand and return to their camp. Here they find Lightfoot entirely recovered, and in gratitude for this give the two prospectors their liberty and return to them their gold.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE BAGGAGE SMASHER.—Celia Strafford is a romantic young girl, but she admires brawn and good looks more than she does a title. Her father, however, is not averse to being the father-in-law to a baronet and he falls an easy victim to "Jimmy the Duke" when that adroit swindler presents himself as Lord Euclid. His wife passes as his sister, the Duchess of Lornemary, and it looks pretty soft for Jimmy, who is after the Stafford necklace, a wonderful collection of diamonds. The little heiress does not care for Jimmy from the start and she admires him less after John Bender, the baggage master's assistant, comes to her aid when she is attacked by a tramp, after "Euclid" has taken to his heels. As soon as the tramp is down Jimmy comes back to the attack and seeks to claim the credit, but Celia will not have it that way and John is thanked. All he cares for is Celia's praise, and when they meet again the next day and she again thanks the stalwart baggage smasher he is transported to the seventh heaven of delight. There is a splendid foundation for a romance, but the sinister figure of Lord Euclid stands in the way. Jimmy, however, "makes his haul," but the detective thinks his face familiar and visits the rogues' gallery of the metropolis. There a finger print and a picture tell their tale and a warrant is sworn out. Through underground channels a warning comes to Jimmy and he makes his escape in his sister's trunk. The baggage smasher smashes the trunk and Jimmy is arrested. That leaves the coast clear for the happy union of Celia and the baggage smasher.

WOMAN'S VANITY.—The devotee of fashion, having mastered the intricacies of the hobble skirt, sought new modes to conquer and a Parisian dressmaker evolved the "hobble hoopskirt," a hobble skirt with the hoop skirt of our grandmothers starting from just below the knees and flaring some fifteen feet in circumference. It was a wonderful creation and the girl's delight was unbounded when the soft tissues were removed to disclose the "creation." Navigation proved somewhat difficult, but she was able to make her decorous progress through the streets all unconscious of the attention she was attracting until upon her arrival home she found half a dozen persistent swains in her train instead of on it. It was more than she had bargained for, and with tears of mortification in her eyes she threw the now detested garment out of the window. It was rescued by a negro, who took it home to his inamorata, and presently the delighted darky was strutting out to show herself in the wonderful structure with its fifteen-foot flounce. Some of the mashers who had seen the original owner fell in behind and the crowd was augmented by others until there were a dozen following. The stroll ended by the water and when the self-satisfied wearer raised her veil the men all fell off the dock.

THE GOLF FIEND.—The golf fiend with his bag of sticks and bag of tricks is a funny person, but Jones was funnier because he was a golf fiend without being much of a player, and he persisted in driving at a ball no matter whose property the gutta-percha object happened to be. The other players objected when the ardent Jones knocked their spheres off the tees, and passers-by objected when he knocked the balls into their eyes. It may be seen that Jones was not the most popular man on the links by a great deal, and the more he hung about the more he got himself disliked. On the street it was pretty much the same, and there were a lot of people who thought they would enjoy nothing quite so much as using Jones' head for a golf ball and a sledge-hammer for a driver. It was not their fault that someone did not carry out this program, but Jones was a good runner and he managed to keep ahead of them until their tempers had cooled down somewhat and they were not quite so bloodthirsty. At any rate Jones does not play so much golf now and there is a reason. Give a look at the reason.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

FOR HER COUNTRY'S SAKE.—The play is located in a tavern near Valley Forge when the British and the colonial armies were both stationed in that section. A message is received by the tavern keeper that Washington, in riding through, is planning to stop at this inn for a couple of hours' sleep. The inn keeper with two accomplices plan to kill Washington while he is sleeping in order to secure the £3,000 offered by the British government. The inn keeper's daughter who is strongly loyal to the colonial cause, overhears the plan and resolves to save the life of the great general.

She hastens out to the stables, finds the hostler and leading him to the top of a hill, pays him to stop Washington as he rides by that way. The daughter then returns to the inn. She stands by the window anxiously watching out. Her father smokes his pipe by the fireplace and the two accomplices have retired through a door that stands ajar into an adjoining room. From time to time they peek in through the door or creep out cautiously and whisper in the tavern keeper's ear. The hostler is not able to stay Washington, who is riding rapidly on horseback, so the girl sees him ride into the yard; and the next minute he appears in the room. He orders supper, which the daughter spreads for him on the table.

The scene changes to the hall of the inn, where a flight of stairs leads up colonial fashion, showing two bedroom doors at the top. Washington is ascending the stairs, the daughter leading him. The father stands at the foot holding a lighted candle. He points out to the girl the door of the room in which he wishes the general to sleep. She opens it, bows, and Washington enters.

The play again shows the living room of the tavern. The father and his two friends are smoking and moving about it and the daughter is clearing away the table. She then goes over and kisses her father good-night impressively, putting both hands on his shoulders and looking into his face. She bows good-night to the other two and leaves the room. At the top of the stairs, she knocks softly at Washington's door. When he appears, she asks him to lie down and rest in the next room. When the door closes on him, she stands with hand on heart and then enters the room where those below believe him to be sleeping.

Downstairs the three men throw dice to decide who shall do the deed and the lot falls to the father who picks up a dagger and leaves the room. In a minute he returns, flourishing the dripping dagger. The three pour out wine from a bottle that stands on the table, lift the glasses and click them and are about to drink to their success. While they are doing this, Washington enters. He crosses the room to them, opens his purse and lays a coin on the table; then leaves the room. They are too overcome by his appearance to move and stand speechless until he has left. The father with a cry then dashes from the room. In a minute he appears, carrying in his arms the lifeless form of his daughter.

A COLD STORAGE ROMANCE.—One would never give a simple little egg the credit of furnishing the material for a real romance. Nevertheless, stranger things have happened—and Samantha Higgins was thoroughly imbued with the romanticism characteristic of a blushing maid of seventeen summers. Hans May, the neighboring farmer, makes love and ventures a proposal to Samantha—but it was not according to Laura Jean Libby's idea of love's romantic courtship that the young lady of seventeen glimmering years had been digesting. So he got the mitten, but Hans, remembering the old adage, "If at first you don't succeed," etc., so at the first opportunity pops the question again with like results.

Samantha has too much foolishness on her mind to suit Daddy Higgins and is frequently reminded of the fact. During the packing of the eggs, she conceives the idea of inscribing her autograph on one that is ready for the storage. In the meantime the undaunted Hans has enlisted the aid of Daddy Higgins in the pressing of his suit. Remembering what the knights in the novel did, she forced her admiring Hans to get on his knees to her.

An elapse of ten years and the innocent little egg had found its way to an aspiring poet larder. By accident the poet finds the message and determines to investigate not knowing that for ten years past the writer of that message had been Mrs. Hans Hay.

Hans was lazy and Samantha still dreaming of Laura Jean sets her food down hard and fires the stalwart defender of the home out and hustles the kids after him. Coincident with this move the poet arrives, following up his clue, confronts her with the egg and Samantha at once strikes the old romantic chord, just as Hans enters and proceeds to extinguish the poet. The natural consequence—a family tete-a-tete—and just to think it was all caused by an innocent little egg.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE BACHELOR AND THE BABY.—Secretly married, Letty Holcomb is now the mother of a sweet little baby boy; she is impatient that Hugh Channing, her husband, announce their marriage and give the child its legal name. Hugh, who is presumably a bachelor among his friends, refuses to publish their wedding, and while he is living in swell apartments Letty is living in a couple of poorly furnished rooms, trying to protect herself and baby from calumny and shame. Her husband not only refuses to make their wedding public but he entirely denies it, sending her a statement that it was a mock ceremony.

Crushed and stunned, she feels helpless. Recovering from the blow, she decides to strike back, goes to the apartment house where her husband lives, she locates his rooms, which are next to a suite occupied by a young bachelor named Benson, who is engaged to be married to a very pretentious young lady of aristocratic importance.

The young wife returns to her home, takes her baby and carries it to Hugh's apartments with a note telling him she is going away and leaves his child for him to support and care for.

In her excitement and anxiety she mistakes young Benson's apartment for her husband's, and leaves the baby on the bachelor's bed and makes her escape from the building without being observed.

The young and aristocratic fiancee of young Benson sends him word that she is coming with her mother to visit his rooms and learn some of the mysteries of a bachelor's life. They arrive and are charmed with his home, but are very much startled and shocked when they discover the baby in his rooms. Benson is as much mystified as they are, and, rushing into his bedroom, they find Letty's baby and the note.

Disappointed and lonely, Benson sympathizes with the poor kid, and resolves to adopt it as his own and forever remain a bachelor. Hugh Channing is taken fatally sick, sends for Benson, and before he dies gives him a confession that he had lied when he told Letty that her marriage to him was a sham and he had grievously wronged her.

The child grows to be a bright and handsome boy, and Benson finds him a very companionable chum and they pass most of their spare time together. One Summer at the seashore the boy tears his trousers. Benson takes him to a young seamstress, who lives there, to have her repair the boy's clothes. While she is measuring the boy's waist she sees a ring on his finger and recognizes it as the one she had tied around her baby's neck when she left it in Benson's room. She asks Benson about it, he tells the woman his knowledge of the child and she learns that the boy is her own child. Benson shows Letty her husband's confession, and while she is happy at finding her child, he hates to be separated from him, but the situation is easily relieved when they find that they are both in love with each other in their mutual love for the boy, and decide they can better care for him by becoming husband and wife.

RANSOMED; OR, A PRISONER OF WAR.—Making his departure from home, Captain Jack, of the Confederate army, leaves to rejoin his regiment, but before doing so promises his boy that he will return to celebrate the little fellow's fifth birthday.

One month later the Captain gets a leave of absence for three days and goes back to keep faith with his son. The house is watched by Union soldiers, and to enter it without being detected seems impossible. The birthday promise must be kept with little Ned, and after some reconnoitering the father succeeds in getting to his family with a few presents which he has purchased to make the boy happy and keep up the spirit of the occasion.

The furlough is ended and the Captain must go back to the ranks. The question of getting safely through the Union lines is a puzzling one and the attempt to do so was arrested by the "Yankees," who make the Captain a prisoner of war.

Word must be sent to his wife: it is accomplished through the kindness of a guard, who allows him to write a letter which he sends to the prisoner's family. They are grieved and the wife gives way under the strain and sorrow of it all. Not so with little Ned. He proves himself to be made of sterner stuff and profits by the example of his father. He starts for the Union camp, approaches the General and tells him of his father's home-coming to celebrate his fifth birthday and how he was taken prisoner when he was going back to his regiment. The boy then offers the General his little woolly lamb in exchange for his father's freedom.

The General is convinced from the boy's story that the Captain was not acting the part of a spy when captured, and to humor the child accepts the woolly lamb and releases his father.

Shortly after his release the war is closed, and the General sends little Ned a fine rocking horse in exchange for the woolly lamb, which he has always kept and cherished in memory of the boy who loves his father.

THE LAST OF THE SAXONS.—By way of introduction:—Harold, Duke of Wessex, second son of the powerful Earl of Godwine. He laid claim to the throne of England after the death of King Edward the Confessor in the year 1066, and succeeded to the kingdom. "William the Conqueror," the son of the Duke of Normandy, came to England, defeated Harold at the Battle of Hastings, in which Harold was killed, and William took possession of England and was raised to the throne at Westminster on Christmas Day, 1066.

This ornate and magnificent picture, "The Last of the Saxons," has to do with the betrothal of Harold to Lady Edith, one of the court attaches. This occurred when he was the "Duke of Wessex." After the death of King Edward and he was selected as ruler of the kingdom he was obliged to break troth with Edith in order to sustain his relations with Edwin and Mocar and stand in with his allies. Therefore he married the Princess Aldyth, although he did not love her and always kept in communication with Edith, who was as much in love with him as he with her, as is evidenced at the gorgeous and unprecedented elaborate marriage ceremony at Westminster, where Edith is seen mournfully witnessing the wedding of her rival to her love, the King. Then, again when she bids him farewell, just before he starts for the Battle of Hastings and finally when she searches among the dead after the fatal encounter with William to find the body of Harold and expires of a broken heart when she discovers it.

SWAAB

The Pioneer Film Exchange of Philadelphia
and Largest Dealer in Machines and Supplies

Agent for
Power's Cameragraph
Lang's Rewinder
and
Cary Coated Carbons

The Trade Supplied. Licensed Films Only

SWAAB FILM SERVICE CO., Inc.
338 Spruce St. Philadelphia, Pa

Moving Picture Machines

Repaired by skilled mechanics at short notice and reasonable prices. Work guaranteed.

CHAS. E. DRESSLER, 388 2nd Avenue
Near 23rd Street Take Elevator

COMPENSARC

That's the device that saves Moving Picture men two-thirds on their electric light bills, and yet gives better light. Did you see our ad last week? Well, don't look it up. Just write for our

Booklet 15018

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
1402 Broadway
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA. 738

FILMS FOR RENT

New Films High Class Service

The Pioneer House, With 8 Years Experience and $250,000.00 Back Of It

Write To-day for Terms

EUGENE CLINE
57 and 59 Dearborn St., Chicago

If a certain man named Teddy happened to be in the moving picture business, either as an exhibitor, exchange man or manufacturer, his first act would be to choke old Gen. Flimco to a quick death. He would fight him up and down, fore and aft, morning, noon and night, gouging, kicking, exposing, throttling and lambasting until old Gen. Flimco would beg for mercy. He would see in Gen Flimco a living menace to the success and decency of the moving picture business. Some of you exhibitors have come out of your slumber but there are others who are still eating out of Gen. Flimco's hand. You are lapping up dangerous milk when you could just as well be having pure cream. Why don't you write to me and see what kind of Independent films I can give you? Why don't you learn all you possibly can about the business you are engaged in?

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

Headquarters: 196-198 Lake Street, Chicago
Minneapolis Portland Omaha Salt Lake City Evansville
The biggest and best film renter in the world

ASK US

Now is the time you should increase your receipts. Are you? If not, write, call or wire for an Exclusive Independent Film Service.

NOTE OUR NEW ADDRESS

EXHIBITORS' FILM EXCHANGE

Telephone 1820-1821 Stuyvesant

203 East 15th Street - - - New York City

PICTURE MACHINES EXCHANGED

Exchange your old machine for New and Up-to-Date outfit. We sell all the leading makes. Edison One-Pin, Power's Nos. 5 and 6, Pathe Professional, Edengraph and Motiograph.

STELZER BROTHERS McCook, Nebraska

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS.

Hartford, Conn. S. E. Sherman who has leased Imperial Theater, formerly the Rockville Opera House, has made arrangements for the remodeling of it.

Hummelstown, Pa.—E. H. Condran's new moving picture theater has been completed and will open for business in a short time. The name of the amusement house will be the Majestic.

Wheeling, W. Va.—The new moving picture theater on Market street which for some time has been under the course of completion has been finished and is expected to open shortly.

New York City.—The Circle Theater at Sixtieth street and Columbus Circle have given up running moving pictures and will return to plays.

Reading, Pa.—A new moving picture theater is to be erected on the Hertwig property, located at 819-21 Penn street.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—M. K. Williamson, has taken the management of the Mystic Moving Picture Theater.

Marquette, Mich.—The Lyric Theater has been remodeled and enlarged.

Rushville, Ill.—Henry Clark is preparing to open a new moving picture show here.

Ishpeming, Mich.—C. S. Sullivan, of Calumet, has purchased the Bijou Theater here, and took possession.

Lake Linden, Mich.—Bert Ludwig is making arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here.

St. John, Mich.—Julius Finch and Arthur Pierce have purchased the moving picture theater here from Fred Meehan, and took possession.

Schenectady, N. Y.—Mr. Baber has sold his interest in the moving picture show here to William Taylor of Chicago.

Grundy Center, Iowa.—T. Fuller has purchased the Gem Moving Picture Theater here, and took possession.

Harttord, Conn.—Watson S. Woodruff, of Orange, has bought the interest of A. E. Winchell in the Hyperion Theater here.

Hastings, Mich.—T. C. Palmer and son, of Montpelier, Ind., have bought the Theatorium here from H. C. Ellenberger, and took possession.

Aberdeen, S. D.—A. Charles Gottschalk is planning the erection of a new theater here.

Boise, Idaho.—A. S. Whiteway has been awarded the contract for the erection of the new Noble Theater here.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Charles G. Ross has been awarded the contract for the erection of a new moving picture theater at 1122 West Thirty-fourth street for the Union Square Investment Company.

Newark, N. J.—The Crescent Theater Company has commenced the erection of an addition to its moving picture theater here.

Charleston, Ill.—Ray Purl and associates are preparing to open a new vaudeville and moving picture show here.

Waverly, N. Y.—Rollo Perry is planning to open a new moving picture theater here.

Orange, Iowa.—Fred Pahre, of Newton, Ia., has purchased the moving picture show here of W. E. Stoelk, and took possession.

South Bend, Wash.—F. A. Proulx and William Neuert are planning to open a new moving picture theater here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. J. Margolin is planning to erect a new moving picture theater at 427 South street.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Mr. Clark has opened a new moving picture theater here. It is known as the Mission.

Shreveport, La.—Saenger Brothers are having plans prepared by Clarence King, for a new theater.

Joplin, Mo.—The Star Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are Lee and Maud Sheper and Lawrence Simmons.

Marble, Minn.—E. M. Miles has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Superior Amusement Company will erect a new theater at Superior avenue and East Eighty-fifth street.

Portland, Ore.—John W. Considine of Sullivan & Considine, is planning the erection of a new theater here.

Deerwood, Minn.—Thomas R. Pakenham has purchased the moving picture show here from William Hall, and took possession.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—W. Small will erect a new moving picture theater on Gates near Lewis avenue.

Waukegan, Ill.—Arthur A. Frudenfeld has purchased the Barrison Theater and took possession.

Sterling, Ill.—Hull Scofield has decided to open a new moving picture theater here.

Canton, Ill.—Fred Ross of Moline, has purchased the Variety Theater here, and took possession.

Toledo, Ohio.—Vaughan Glaser will erect a new moving picture theater on St. Clair street.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—The Angel Bros. Theatrical Company, of Clinton, is preparing to open a new theater here.

Springfield, Mass.—The Plaza, one of the latest and best theaters ever erected in this town, has thrown open its doors and will try to please their patrons by running the latest and best films.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Moving Picture Company of America, which already owns and occupies five theaters in this city, are making arrangements for the erection of the sixth which will be established at 333 Market street.

Atlanta, Ga.—Mion Brothers will erect an Alamo Theater here, to cost about $10,000.

New York City.—Arrangements have been filed for the erection of a new moving picture theater at the northwest corner of Amsterdam avenue and Eighty-ninth street.

Springfield, Mass.—Sherman's Family Theater opened up here last week.

Rockaway Beach, N. Y.—The Empire Theater Company reopened its moving picture show at Ozone Park, the same being closed during the Summer.

N. Attleboro, Mass.—The Wamsutta Theater, which has been opened by the Greene Amusement Company of Boston, has been purchased by Arthur Laublas and John Anastus.

Newburyport, Mass.—Jere P. Spillam, who conducted a high class moving picture and vaudeville show at Town Hall last Winter, will reopen it again and conduct it the same as last year.

Fort Pierre, S. D.—Bert F. Halley, of Philip, is preparing to open a new moving picture show here.

Ritzville, Wash.—A. G. Roberts of Mabton, has purchased the Lyric Theater here, and took possession.

Memphis, Tenn.—C. E. Denton will erect a new vaudeville and moving picture theater on Main street.

Galena, Ill.—F. Heer of Dubuque is preparing plans for a modern moving picture theater here.

Chicago, Ill.—C. A. Anderson has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater at 4308 Armitage avenue.

Norristown, Pa.—Mr. Sablosky, has opened a new vaudeville and moving picture theater. It will be known as the "Garrick."

Aberdeen, S. D.—H. L. Walker is making arrangements to open a new airdome here.

Newark, Ohio.—Arrangements are being made by Howard Rathbun, to install a new moving picture theater in South Park place.

Abilene, Kans.—Robert Bradley of this city has purchased the Kipp Airdome at Herington.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Union-Easton Amusement Company has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater at 1510 Union Boulevard.

Houston, Tex.—The Empire Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $6,000. The incorporators are C. E. Morris, R. B. Morris and D. L. Morris.

Hoboken, N. J.—Corse and Joe Payton have opened the Gaiety moving picture theater here.

Watkins, N. Y.—J. S. Dickinson is making arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here.

Toronto, Ont., Canada.—Dr. Shayne, 4 Grange avenue, has secured a permit for a new moving picture theater at 332 Queen street.

El Rena, Okla.—The Lyric Amusement Co., is preparing to open a new theater in the Lambe building.

Nebraska City, Neb.—Frank S. Morse has sold the Empire Theater here to Beecher & Washburne of Kansas City.

Cameron, Mo.—Floyd Hampton is planning to open a new vaudeville and moving picture show here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. Picovsky will remodel the structure at the corner of Seventh and Mercy streets, into a moving picture theater for M. Stieffel.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Biribaum Investment Company is planning the erection of a new moving picture theater on East Fifth street.

Chicago, Ill.—M. E. Albert, will erect a new moving picture theater at 1217 Milwaukee avenue.

Decorah, Iowa.—Wm. P. McClaskey has opened a new moving picture theater, it is known as the Princess.

Angola, Ind.—Charles Elya and Henry Eisley have purchased the Majestic Theater here and took possession.

Mooresville, N. C.—W. D. Brown of this city wants to purchase a new moving picture machine; also rent films.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Fred Barman & Asso., are planning the erection of a new moving picture and vaudeville house to be located at the corner of Eighth and Broadway.

Olyphant, Pa.—Architect John J. Feeney, of Scranton, is preparing plans for a new vaudeville and moving picture show to be erected here by Burgess P. E. Kilkullen.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Architects Dennis & Farrell are preparing plans for a three-story moving picture and vaudeville theater to be erected at the corner of Moneta avenue and Fiftieth street, for J. Frank Ware.

Cairo, Neb.—L. S. McAllister is making arrangements to open a new moving picture show here.

New York City.—King & Salkin are having plans filed for the erection of a moving picture show at 1894 Third avenue, which will cost $5,000.

Somerville, N. J.—The Colonial Theater will open again under the same management and will continue to exhibit the best vaudeville and moving pictures.

Waverly, N. Y.—H. G. Perry has leased a big store in this town and will convert it into a $1,000 nickolet which which will be able to seat about 400 patrons.

Kenosha, Wis.—Jacob J. Disch has purchased a moving picture theater here.

Allentown, Penn.—The New Nickelet Theater here has opened.

New York City.—A new $6,000 moving picture theater is being planned at the southwest corner of Broadway and Manhattan streets.

Williamsport, Pa.—The Orpheum Theater here is now under new management.

Milford, Conn.—Walter C. Gill is planning to erect two new moving picture shows here. One to be located on River street, next to the Milford Ice Company, and the other at Walnut Beach.

Newburyport, Mass.—Burnham and Hapgood have sold their moving picture plant at Rochester.

Bridgeport, Conn.—Plans for a moving picture theater at Main and Grace streets, have been made by Gus Musante who has purchased the vacant lot at the corner.

Pottsville, Pa.—All of the moving picture shows in this town report good business.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio.—Roscoe C. Cuneo, manager of the Star Theater, entertained over 600 school children at his theater free, September 2. It was quite a sight to see the children with their doll babies.

Fishkill Landing, N. Y.—The store at the corner of Main street and Scheuck avenue is being converted into a moving picture theater.

Springfield, Mass.—Arthur H. Sawyer has sold his interest in the Berkshire Theater in the Ryan block, on North street, to Edward Hamilton.

Palmer, Mass.—The Pastime Moving Picture Theater has again thrown open its doors.

Rockland, Mass.—L. D. Bates, who has been connected with a moving picture theater in Quincy, has retired from the position.

Buffalo, N. Y.—William J. B. Haese has filed plans for the erection of a moving picture theater at No. 854b Clinton street, which will cost about $5,000.

St. Louis, Mo.—A $75,000 moving picture theater is being erected here for O. T. Crawford.

Webster City, Iowa.—Major N. P. Hyatt has leased the Orpheum Theater from E. H. Martin and F. M. Rogers.

Ishpeming, Mich.—David E. Rice is making arrangements for the erection of a new moving picture show in this town.

Collinwood, Ohio.—J. F. Usher and E. C. Overs will erect a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here, at a cost of about $17,000.

Baraboo, Wis.—The Orpheum Theater, which for the past months has been in the possession of A. B. Robbins was sold to Messrs. A. J. Malloy and C. A. Booth.

Madison, Wis.—Albert Achele has sold his moving picture theater to Messrs. Samuel Sorenson and Arthur Skibrek.

Gilbertsville, N. Y.—A new moving picture tent show is planned to be erected in this section.

Baraboo, Wis.—A. B. Robbins has sold the Orpheum Theater here to Al Maloy.

Palestine, Tex.—Messrs. Bell & Englebrecht of St. Louis have leased the Gardner building on Oak street and will convert it into a moving picture theater.

Oroville, Cal.—Mr. E. P. Rivers is contemplating the erection of a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

Mapleton, Iowa.—Donald Johnstone of Ida Grove, is planning to open a new moving picture show here.

Laramie, Wyo.—D. C. Titus and Thomas Shelton are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Minneapolis, Minn.—C. S. Green is preparing to open the Princess Theater on Fourth street.

El Reno, Okla.—T. H. Solliday has leased the old opera house on Spencer avenue, and will remodel it into a picture theater.

Fremont, Neb.—W. A. Keaton has purchased the Bijou Vaudeville Theater from J. W. Glenn, and took possession.

Atlanta, Ill.—C. F. Weaver is making arrangements to open a new moving picture show here.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Architects Stewart & Stewart are preparing plans for a new moving picture theater at Hyde Park.

Longmont, Colo.—C. D. Stoddard has secured a permit for a new moving picture theater to be located in the Stuphen building.

Port Lavaca, Tex.—Wilson & Best have commenced the erection of a new moving picture theater on North street.

Red Wing, Minn.—Sam Roberg has purchased the Gem Theater here and took possession.

Portage, Wis.—A. B. Robbine has sold the Orpheum theater here to A. G. Malloy and C. A. Booth.

Stoughton, Wis.—Albert Aichelle has sold his moving picture show here to Sam Sorenson.

Olyphant, Pa.—Mrs. Barbara Ferguson will erect a new theater here, plans for which have already been drawn.

St. Joseph, Mo.—Messrs. Trunk & Heim are working on plans for the remodeling of the old Rollway rink into a moving picture theater.

Weiser, Idaho.—Messrs. Turner & Duke of Caldwell have purchased the Elk Moving Picture Show here, and took possession.

Villa Grove, Ill.—Gilmer McCoy has sold his moving picture show here to Clarence Hepner.

Red Cloud, Neb.—C. W. Burgess and C. S. Holmstead, are making arrangements to open a new vaudeville and moving picture show here.

Charleston, Ill.—J. E. Osborne has purchased the Opera House here, and took possession.

Atlanta, Ga.—Mion Brothers are preparing to open a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Fred Barnum will open a new moving picture theater at the southeast corner of Eighth street and Broadway.

Des Moines, Iowa.—The Fire Marshal has issued an order for the closing of the Mirror Theater until it conformed with the city fire laws.

Milwaukee, Wis.—A new moving picture theater is being erected at Wright and Fratney streets which will cost the proprietor, S. Sulewski, $8,000.

St. Louis, Mo.—The New Colonial Theater, the latest of moving pictures theaters to be erected has at last been completed and has thrown open its doors to the public. The situation of this new amusement house is at Delmar and Euclid avenues.

Indianapolis, Ind.—C. C. Barley, proprietor of the Five Cent Theater here, has been acquitted by a jury on a charge of violating a city ordinance in showing pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson prize fight.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Superba Theater on Canal street is making extensive improvements and additions to the building at present occupied by it. The Nicholas Brothers, proprietors of this amusement house, will expend about $1,000 in general repairs and remodeling.

Ishpeming, Mich.—C. S. Sullivan, manager of the Royal Theater in Calumet, has purchased the Bijou Theater in Ishpeming and will transform it into one of the most beautiful and best equipped moving picture show houses in northern Michigan.

Waterloo, Mich.—J. L. McClinton's Crystal Theater is expected to open this week. All of the latest vaudeville and moving pictures will be shown.

Chicago, Ill.—Lee Mitchell Theater at 325 South Western avenue has been sold to A. E. Atkinson.

Scranton, Penn.—A new moving picture theater will open on South Main avenue within a short time.

Newark, N. J.—Frederick C. Young, manager of the Elite Theater in Market street, has secured a ten years' lease on the up-to-date moving picture theater erected by Lowy, Berger & Finger Company at the southwest corner of Clinton and Jelliff avenues. The theater will be known as the Clintonia and will present all of the highest grade films.

Hamburg, Penn.—The National Theater here is being remodeled and enlarged and will be ready about the middle of October.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A new picture show will be erected at Rockaway and Dumont avenues.

Muscatine, Iowa.—The David Brothers who are the proprietors of a big billiard hall on East Second street, have filed plans for the conversion of the place into a high-grade moving picture show.

Gloversville, N. Y.—Manager Pichier of the Lyric Theater on South Main street has taken a lease on the Star Theater formerly conducted by Van Brocklin and will run all good films.

Peekskill, N. Y.—The New Colonial Theater here has thrown open its doors for business.

Bowling Green, Ohio.—Bowling Green is to have another moving picture theater which will be situated in the Eagle block on North Main street, and will be under the proprietorship of F. E. Long and Lynn Riess.

Harrisburg, Pa.—The Casino Theater here has at last opened its doors to the public.

Lawrence, Mass.—Work has begun for the erection of a new moving picture theater which is to occupy the old location of the Arlington Co-Op Association at Broadway and Hollis street.

Watertown, N. Y.—W. Scott Mattraw, manager of the City Opera House has converted it into a moving picture and vaudeville theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Anderson & Haupt are preparing plans for a new moving picture theater here.

Maquoketa, Iowa.—Messrs. Joe Roberts and Max Wright are making arrangements to open a new moving picture show here.

Little Rock, Ark.—The Gem Amusement Company is preparing to open a new moving picture theater on Third street.

Langdon, N. D.—Mr. Waldron has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Toronto, Ont., Canada.—The Griffin Amusement Company has purchased the Majestic Theater here, and took possession.

Neillsville, Wis.—Will Neff is making arrangements to re-open the Gayety Theater here.

Lima, Ohio.—L. J. Berger and Thomas P. Doyle will erect a new vaudeville theater here.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Charles M. Bagg will remodel the building at 248 Fillmore avenue into a moving picture theater.

Steelton, Pa.—Peter Setteno of Middletown, is making arrangements to erect a new moving picture theater here.

Sheffield, Ill.—Cecil Rollins has opened a moving picture show in the opera house.

Cassville, Wis.—Mr. D. M. Salzer is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Shortal-Culp Real Estate Co will erect a large vaudeville theater on Easton avenue.

Kewanee, Wis.—F. L. Lassek has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Fremont, Neb.—J. W. Glenn and John Miller are planning to open a new vaudeville and moving picture show at the corner of Fourth and Main streets.

Tulaire, Cal.—The Paris Theater Co. is preparing to open a new vaudeville theater on South street.

Brown, Kans.—Dick Fields and William Campbell have opened a new moving picture theater here.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A syndicate headed by Julius H. Zieser, New York, is planning the erection of a $25,000 vaudeville and moving picture theater here. The building is to be located at 404 Gates avenue.

Tilton, N. H.—The Pastime Theater has been opened by Herbert A. Mann.

Le Mars, Iowa.—G. M. Solon has bought from Van Dalfsen & Fowler the White Theater.

Providence, R. I.—Extensive changes and improvements are being made at Bullock's Theater on Richmonds street. A new lobby is being built and the interior redecorated.

Peabody, Mass.—The Olympic Theater is now being operated as a moving picture theater.

Lemont, Ill.—Edward Masks and Charles Brown have rented Klein Hall on Stephen street.

Wheeling, W. Va.—Arthur Snodgrass will open his moving picture palace in the P. P. Miller building, on South Fourth street.

Bellefontaine, Ohio.—Percy Volk has sold the Volk Theater on West Columbus avenue to Frank E. Rutter, who is now in charge. The popular theater has been closed until August 25. The stage will be torn out and rebuilt. The interior will be redecorated, the front will be remodeled and a new picture machine will be installed. The theater re-opened on August 25 under the new name of "The Royal."

Philadelphia, Penn.—The J. D. Allen Company has completed plans for a $10,000 moving picture theater, which D. S. Bader will erect at Forty-ninth and Yocum streets.

Stroudsburg, Pa.—The New Nickelet Theater has been purchased by Homer Everitt.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—A new moving picture theater is to be opened in the building at the southeast corner of Calhoun and Washington streets by the Colonial Theater Company, of Peoria.

New York City.—Work has begun on the erection of a first-class moving picture theater on Westchester avenue, near Beach avenue.

Pittston, Pa.—Charles Repass, who conducts the Family Theater in Pittston, will convert the Sarsfield Opera House into a high-class moving picture theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A permit has been granted for the erection of a high-grade moving picture and vaudeville theater at the southeast corner of Forty-ninth and Yocum streets, to cost $15,000, for D. S. Bader.

Chicago, Ill.—Peter Schuchmann's Theater at Fifty-fifth street has been sold to A. N. Louis.

Chicago, Ill.—Christy & Sandow, proprietors of the moving picture theater at 335 Southwestern avenue, have sold out to Lee Mitchell.

Chicago, Ill.—E. Soling's Theater has been sold to G. Krich.

Nebraska City, Neb.—Colonel Frank S. Morse, who operated the Empire Theater for the past three years, has sold it to Washburn & Beecher, of Kansas City.

Wausau, Wis.—The Majestic Theater has been leased to N. B. Hacket.

Sioux City, Iowa.—A fourth moving picture theater is being planned to be established at 405 Jackson street.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Arthur A. Freudenfeld has purchased a moving picture theater at Waukegan, Ill.

Omaha, Neb.—A new moving picture theater is planned for Fremont by J. W. Glenn and John Miller which will be able to accommodate 900 patrons.

St. Louis, Mo.—Ground has been broken for the erection of a moving picture theater on Eastern avenue which will be able to seat about 1,650 patrons.

Henning, Tenn.—A new moving picture theater is being erected in this city which will have no competitors.

Long Branch, N. J.—W. H. Parker will open a moving picture theater here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Germantown is to have two new moving picture theaters.

Meadville, Pa.—Lyman H. Howe's moving picture exhibition made a hit at the Academy of Music last week. All seats were occupied during the entire performance.

Baltimore, Md.—A new moving picture theater has been erected in this section which will run all of the highest and best moving pictures and illustrated song slides. This amusement house is situated at the southeast corner of Cross and Olive streets and will cost, when completed, about $6,500. The C. W. Pacy Company are the proprietors.

New York City.—The new moving picture theater which was planned for Tenth avenue and Fiftieth street, has fallen through.

Roanoke, Va.—A new moving picture theater is being planned for this town.

Newburgh, N. Y.—The latest rumor in the section is the reopening of the Palatine Theater on Lander street, which was recently sold to some well-known theatrical men.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A new moving picture theater is being erected at 425 South street for A. Margolin.

Lockport, N. Y.—Samuel Kaufman has opened the Majestic Theater at 66 Main street.

Review, N. Y.—The Fifth Avenue Theater is now running first-class vaudeville and moving pictures.

Kutztown, Pa.—At Edwards' picture show here, six reels of film are being shown each night.

Lestershire, N. Y.—The Star Theater opened here last week and is receiving good patronage from its surroundings.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Crystal is a new moving picture theater located on Fifth avenue.

Savannah, Ga.—Another addition to Savannah's amusement houses will be the new moving picture show to be operated at the northwest corner of Broughton and Abercorn streets by F. T. Montgomery, of Jacksonville.

Tacoma, Wash.—Herman Klauber, who is the proprietor of the largest hop yard in this section of Washington, has installed moving pictures to keep the pickers at work. The pickers wander away to the surrounding towns in the evenings and find it hard to get around in the morning.

Glen Cove, N. Y.—The new proprietors of the Vincent Opera House have just closed a successful season at North Beach, L. I., and will spend all of their time looking out for the welfare of their new show. All licensed films will be shown. The prices will be 10 and 15 cents and the house will have a seating capacity of 300.

Stroudsburg, Pa.—The popular moving picture show known as the Nicklett, formerly conducted by Bert Palmer, has been purchased by Homer Everett.

ON TOP AGAIN

CAN'T KEEP A GOOD MAN DOWN. 1,500 REELS. SELECTED STOCK

FIRST SHIPMENT RECEIVED

If you want a cheap service, get in line. Don't pay for run stuff then not get it. Banners supplied.

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE, 300 E. 23rd St. cor. 2nd Ave., N. Y. City

PHONE 1512 GRAMERCY

ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES, 1 CENT EACH.

Up-to-date theaters use them for announcing future programmes, for song chorus slides when the chorus slide is missing, for business advertising slides—in fact, for anything you desire to say to the audience. They are written on colored gelatin with a pen and ink or typewriter. They look well. Anyone can make them. Takes three minutes to make a slide. For three dollars ($3.00) cash with order, I send by express (charges not prepaid) as follows: 24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. F. H. RICHARDSON, No. 6 Bradhurst avenue.

Louise M. Marion's

Novelty of Illustrated Poems

which have made a great hit is again booking for the coming season, in and out of town.

Miss Marion has many new and beautiful illustrations, patriotic and otherwise, made from life models, also most attractive painted posters, and can introduce violin music when desired. Terms reasonable.

Address

L. M. MARION, 321 West 23d Street, New York City

LICENSED RELEASES.

BIOGRAPH.

Aug. 29—The Modern Prodigal (Dr.).....992
Sept. 1—The Affair of an Egg (Dr.).....995
Sept. 1—Muggsy Becomes a Hero (Dr.).....993
Sept. 5—A Summer Idyl (Dr.) 991
Sept. 8—Little Angels of Luck (Dr.).....998
Sept. 12—A Mohawk's Way (Dr.).....991
Sept. 15—In Life's Cycle (Dr.).....997
Sept. 19—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.).....987
Sept. 22—The Oath and the Man (Dr.).....997
Sept. 26—Rose o' Salem Town (Dr.).....998
Sept. 29—Examination Day at School (Dr.)....991
Oct. 3—The Iconoclast (Dr.).....992
Oct. 6—A Gold Necklace (Com.).....576
Oct. 6—How Hubby Got a Raise (Com.).....416

EDISON CO.

Sept. 16—From the Arctics to the Tropics (Scenic) .....
Sept. 20—An Unselfish Love (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Jar of Cranberry Sauce (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Almost a Hero.....980
Sept. 27—Over Mountain Passes (Sc.) 275
Sept. 27—The Footlights or the Farm (Dr.)....725
Sept. 30—Ononko's Vow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 4—More Than His Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Bumptious Plays Baseball (Com.)....
Oct. 7—The Farmer's Daughter (Dr.).....

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 24—The Tout's Remembrance (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some (Com.) 307
Sept. 28—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660
Oct. 1—Patricia of the Plains (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—All on Account of a Lie (Com.)....1000
Oct. 8—The Bearded Bandit (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—Hank and Lank—They Get Wise to a New Scheme (Com.) 302
Oct. 12—Pap's First Outing (Com.).....698
Oct. 15—The Cowboy's Mother-in-Law (Dr.)..1000

KALEM CO.

Aug. 12—The Call of the Blood (Dr.).....940
Aug. 17—The Perversity of Fate (Dr.).....970
Aug. 19—True to His Trust (Dr.).....822
Aug. 19—Running Fire (Com.).....175
Aug. 24—The Romany Wife (Dr.) 980
Aug. 26—The Canadian Moonshiners (Dr.) 975
Aug. 31—A Game with Fame (Dr.).....975
Sept. 2—White Man's Money (Dr.).....980
Sept. 7—Mama's Birthday Present (Com.).....935
Sept. 9—The Cow Puncher's Sweetheart (Dr.).972
Sept. 14—The Little Mother (Dr.).....980
Sept. 16—A Leap for Life (Dr.).....985
Sept. 21—The Japanese Spy (Dr.).....975
Sept. 23—The Conspiracy of Pontiac (Dr.).....975
Sept. 28—The Heart of Edna Leslie (Dr.).....965
Sept. 30—Spotted Snake's Schooling (Dr.).....885
Oct. 5—The Engineer's Sweetheart (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 7—Big Elk's Turndown (Dr.).....930

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Sept. 5—The Healing Faith (Dr.).....990
Sept. 8—Matilda's Winning Ways (Com.)....900
Sept. 12—The Greenhorn and the Girl (Com.)..990
Sept. 15—Mrs. Rivington's Pride (Dr.).....500
Sept. 15—Resourceful Robert (Com.).....450
Sept. 19—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.)....990
Sept. 22—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.).....990
Sept. 26—The Sheriff's Capture (Dr.).....990
Sept. 29—The Path of Duty (Dr.).....990
Oct. 3—The Baggage Smasher (Com.).....990
Oct. 6—Woman's Vanity (Com.).....600
Oct. 6—The Golf Fiend (Com.).....350

GAUMONT.

G. Kleine.

Sept. 13—An Easy Winner 463
Sept. 13—A Powerful Voice (Com.).....486
Sept. 17—Poems in Pictures 391
Sept. 17—A Dummy in Disguise (Com.).....581
Sept. 20—Tactics of Cupid (Dr.) 896
Sept. 20—Sunset (Scenic) 102
Sept. 24—The Reserved Shot (Dr.).....741
Sept. 24—The Times Art Out of Joint (Com.)..252
Sept. 27—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Sept. 27—Too Much Water (Com.).....351
Oct. 1—The Diver's Honor (Dr.).....591
Oct. 1—A High-Speed Biker (Com.).....401
Oct. 4—The Little Acrobat (Dr.).....466
Oct. 4—Her Fiance and the Dog (Com.).....525
Oct. 8—The Dunce's Cap (Dr.).....896
Oct. 8—A Skier Training (Sc.).....100

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

G. Kleine.

Aug. 31—A Cruise in the Mediterranean (Sc.)..420
Sept. 7—Ingratitude (Dr.) 749
Sept. 7—Military Kite Flying at Rheims (Sc.)..256
Sept. 14—The Artisan (Dr.) 457
Sept. 14—The Tramps (Com.) 525
Sept. 21—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.).....699
Sept. 21—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.)..269
Sept. 28—The Quarrel (Dr.) 607
Sept. 28—Reedham's Orphanage Festival 1910 (Sc.) 394
Oct. 5—The Dishonest Steward (Dr.).....699
Oct. 5—City of a Hundred Mosques, Broussa, Asia Minor (Sc.) 296

G. MELIES.

Aug. 25—The Romance of Circle Ranch (Dr.)..960
Sept. 1—Won in the Fifth 950
Sept. 8—Baseball, That's All (Com.).....950
Sept. 15—In the Mission Shadows (Dr.).....950
Sept. 22—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950
Sept. 29—A Plucky American Girl (Dr.).....950
Oct. 6—Billy's Sister (Dr.) 950

PATHE FRERES.

Sept. 24—A Simple Mistake (Com.)..... ...950
Sept. 26—Max Is Absent-minded (Com.).....551
Sept. 26—Colombo and Its Environs (Sc.).....426
Sept. 28—The Hoodoo (Com.) 920
Sept. 30—The Sick Baby (Dr.) 984
Oct. 1—Who Owns the Rug? (Com.) 690
Oct. 1—Southern Tunis (Sc.) 302
Oct. 3—Betty Is Still at Her Old Tricks (C.).490
Oct. 3—Molucca Islands (Sc.).....459
Oct. 5—Mirth and Sorrow (Dr.).....575
Oct. 5—Different Trades in Bombay (Indu.)..410
Oct. 7—Slippery Jim (Trick).....633
Oct. 7—A Life for Love (Tragedy).....351
Oct. 8—An Indian's Gratitude (Dr. 990

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

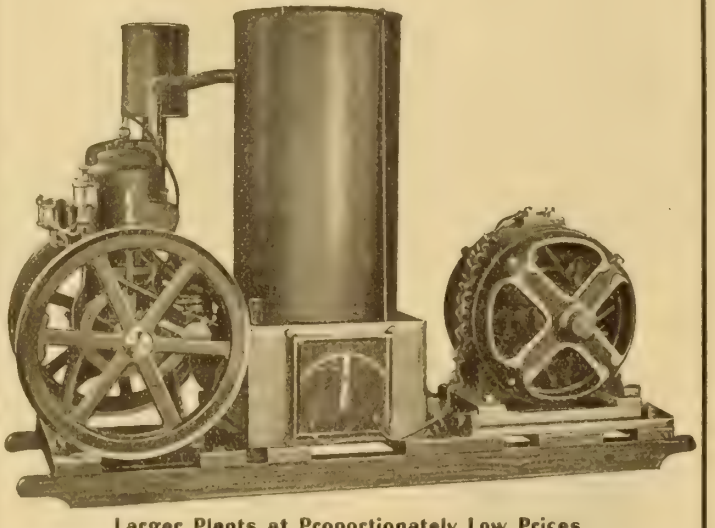
Sept. 12—Little Boy (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 15—The Schoolmaster of Mariposa (Dr.).1000
Sept. 19—Bertie's Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—Big Medicine (Com.).....
Sept. 22—The Sergeant (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Old Swimming Hole.....1000
Sept. 29—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Cold Storage Romance (Dr.).....565
Oct. 3—My Friend the Doctor (Com.).....
Oct. 6—For Her Country's Sake (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—The Sanitarium (Com.).....1000

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Sept. 6—A Rough Weather Courtship (Com.)..400
Sept. 9—How She Won Him (Dr.).....980
Sept. 10—The Three of Them (Dr.).....985
Sept. 13—The Sepoy's Wife (Dr.) 990
Sept. 16—Two Waifs and a Stray (Dr.).....985
Sept. 17—A Lunatic at Large (Com.).....997
Sept. 20—Jean, the Match-Maker (Com.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Modern Knight Errant (Dr.).....967
Sept. 24—Renunciation (Dr.) 999
Sept. 27—Her Adopted Parents (Dr.).....988
Sept. 30—A Home Melody (Dr.).....907
Oct. 1—The Bachelor and the Baby (Dr.)....
Oct. 4—Ransomed; or, A Prisoner of War (Dr.) 998
Oct. 7—The Last of the Saxons (Dr.).....1007
Oct. 8—The Sage, the Cherub and the Widow (Com.) .....

Electric Light Plant Complete

$167.16



Larger Plants at Proportionately Low Prices

Including the celebrated DETROIT KEROSENE ENGINE and DYNAMO OF SUFFICIENT CAPACITY TO FURNISH CURRENT FOR YOUR ARC AND EIGHTY 4 c. p. lamps for illumination.

Total cost of operation from 5 to 25 cents per day. Gives you better light than you can buy. Gives you the same light in the afternoon as at night. Can be operated by a ten year old child.

Can Make Immediate Shipment

DETROIT ENGINE WORKS 406 Bellevue Avenue, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A.

HALLBERG

ELECTRIC ECONOMIZER

SAVES ⅔ ON ELECTRIC BILL
GIVES 50% BETTER LIGHT

MONTREAL, June 15, 1910

MR. J. H. HALLBERG, New York.

DEAR SIR—Please quote price for 250 volt. D. C. "HALLBERG" Economizer. I would say that I have been using your "HALLBERG" for the past two years, and in my estimation this is the only Economizer on the market today. I have not touched it since it was installed, and it has been in use fourteen hours a day, seven days a week.

Yours sincerely,
H. W. CONOVER,
Mgr. Keith's Nickel Theatre

I sell all high grade moving picture machines which I will gladly demonstrate; opera chairs, lenses and all kinds of supplies. Send $1.50 for a set of "HALLBERG" Terminal Connectors. They stop burning out of lamp leads, and my "Spec-Oil" at 35c. a can by mail, postpaid, saves 25 per cent. on the wear of your machine and over one-half on oil bill.

"Electra" Pink Label Carbons.
"Excello" Flame Arc Carbons.

Send for FREE catalogue
No. W-46

J. H. HALLBERG
36 East 23d Street, New York

Comedy and Western

EVERY Wednesday EVERY Saturday

Release of Wednesday, Oct. 5

All on Account of a Lie

(Length, approx. 1060 feet)

A FULL REEL COMEDY! A GENUINE SCREAM!

Always stick to the truth even if your wife don't believe you. That's the moral of this extremely funny farce. If Smith and his friend had not tried to make a lie stick where the truth failed they would not have had all the trouble that supplies the fun in this comedy.

GET THE POSTER

Scene from "The Bearded Bandit"

A Western Picture You Will Feature

Release of Saturday, Oct. 8

The Bearded Bandit

(Length, approx. 1000 feet)

A new film by our new Western Stock Company. Jim Connors, a respected Western ranchman, is at the same time the mysterious "Bearded Bandit," with a price on his head. Shot at a gaming table he confesses his wrongs to his daughter that she may claim the reward, but in loyalty to her father's memory she destroys the evidence he had given her. A stirring dramatic picture.

GET THE POSTER

GREAT FOR THE LOBBY

The Essanay Indian Head Poster Placard, an artistic lithograph, to be used in the lobby of your theatre when you have an Essanay Film on your bill, Order it today. Price 25c. Express collect. Poster Dept. B.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

LONDON 5 Wardour St. W. | 435 N. Clark St. CHICAGO | BERLIN 35 Friederich Str.

Renew your subscription to the Moving Picture World, $2.00.

THE ENTERPRISE MODEL B

Portable Calcium Gas Outfit

Is the only Substitute for Electricity for projecting Motion Picture or Stereopticon views and is the

Only Satisfactory Portable Outfit

because it operates by WATER PRESSURE, IS CONSTANT, REGULAR AND RELIABLE and has no complicated spring valves to corrode, choke up and otherwise get out of order. Is patented.

"OXONE" in SQUARE CAKES is most Satisfactory for the production of Oxygen Gas. Send for particulars.

For Sale by Dealers

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. MANUFACTURERS AND SALES AGENTS 564 and 572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

Monday, October 3.

Biograph—The Iconoclast (Dr.) 992
Lubin—The Baggage Smasher (Com.) 999
Pathe—Betty Is Still at Her Old Tricks (Com.) 490
Pathe—Molding Islands (Sc.) 459
Selig—A Cold Storage Romance (Dr.) 565
Selig—My Friend the Doctor (Com.) .....

Tuesday, October 4.

Edison—More Than His Duty (Dr.) 1000
Gaumont—The Little Acrobat (Dr.) 466
Gaumont—Her Prince and the Dog (Com.) 725
Vitagraph—Ransomed; or, A Prisoner of War (Dr.) 998

Wednesday, October 5.

Essanay—All On Account of a Lie (Com.) 1060
Kalem—The Engineer's Sweetheart (Dr.) 1000
Pathe—Mirth and Sorrow (Dr.) 575
Pathe—Different Trades in Bombay (India) 410
Urban—The Dishonest Steward (Dr.) 690
Urban—City of a Hundred Mosques, Brussa, Asia Minor (Sc.) 296

Thursday, October 6.

Biograph—A Gold Necklace (Com.) 576
Biograph—How Hubby Got a Raise (Com.) 416
Lubin—Woman's Vanity (Com.) 660
Lubin—The Golf Fiend (Com.) 350
Melies—Billy's Sister (Dr.) 950
Selig—For Her Country's Sake (Dr.) 1000

Friday, October 7.

Edison—Bumptious Plays Baseball (Com.) .....
Edison—The Farmer's Daughter (Dr.) .....
Pathe—Slippery Jim (Trick) 633
Pathe—A Life for Love (Tragedy) 351
Kalem—Big Elk's Turndown (Dr.) 930
Vitagraph—The Last of the Saxons (Dr.) 1007

Saturday, October 8.

Essanay—The Bearded Bandit (Dr.) 1000
Gaumont—The Dunce's Cap (Dr.) 896
Gaumont—A Skier Training (Sc.) 100
Pathe—An Indian's Gratitude (Dr.) 990
Vitagraph—The Sage, the Cherub and the Widow (Com.) .....

Classified Advertisements

[Classified advertisements, three cents per word, cash with order; 50 cents minimum; postage stamps accepted.]

FOR SALE—Vaudeville and moving picture theater. OLLIE WILLARD, General Delivery, Youngstown, Ohio.

FOR LEASE—Picture theater, new, might sell. Box 471, Sutton, Neb.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—Sober operator, Power's machine, in 5-cent theater; no Sunday work; permanent position; answer at once. LYRIC THEATER, Parkersburg, W. Va.

WANTED—Expert in developing room, for developing films. Address, M. M., care Moving Picture World.

WANTED—Boy for joining moving picture films. Address, M. M., care Moving Picture World.

EQUIPMENT FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—November 1st, 200 folding chairs. Cost 65 cents each; sell 35 cents. Good condition. T. F. KINIRY, Dreamland, Bellows Falls, Vt.

FOR SALE—1909 Lubin machine, used 2 months; first-class condition; bargain. Address, BOX 398, Cincinnati, Ohio.

FOR SALE—Peerless electric piano; has Roth & Engelhardt action and Holtzer Cabot A. C. motor. Good condition. $150, f. o. b. DREAMLAND, Dubuque, Iowa.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

AT LIBERTY—Operator or manager for moving picture and vaudeville house; New Jersey only; 10 years' experience; stand investigation. C. S. F., care Moving Picture World.

AT LIBERTY—Experienced operator or manager; years of experience in every branch of the business; not afraid of work; sober and steady. Have not been absent from work one day in nineteen months. Can give best of references. Address, M. O., care Moving Picture World.

A-1 OPERATOR who guarantees good work wishes position. Wife is expert vaudeville and picture pianist. Address G. E. GORDON, 401 South Fifth street, Columbia, Mo.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AUTOMOBILISTS, ATTENTION.—Fur-lined coat, never worn; lined throughout with the best Australian mink; elegant Persian lamb collar; cost $175; will sell for $35. Also pair of cinnamon bear robes, $30; cost $120. Write, W. SCOTT, 121 East 27th St., New York City.

Independent Film Stories.

ECLAIR.

THE ORDER IS TO MARCH.—An exceedingly raw recruit is being put through his paces, and at length, wearied by his clumsiness, the drill sergeant orders him to march, adding, "You shall stop when I tell you." At once the "rooky" marches onward, and as the sergeant is called away, and he receives no order to stop, the poor, unfortunate being commences his unending march. He charges into two washerwomen, passes a motor over, collides with a tramcar and finally walks over the parapet into the street below. He is at once carried to a hospital, where he continues his motions in bed. At length the sergeant is summoned, who, grasping the situation, at once orders him to "halt," and the recruit drops at once into a sound sleep.

THE CARMELITE.—Jose, a smuggler, and his pretty sweetheart, Juanita, are seen parting from each other, and the former sets out on a smuggling expedition in which he is assisted by the girl's father. All goes well until, attempting to land with their cargo, the smugglers are surprised by the customs officers and a fierce struggle ensues, after which the whole party is captured, Juanita's father alone escaping, and he brings the news of Jose's capture to the girl. She is horror stricken, for she realizes the severity with which smuggling is punished and she enters a Carmelite convent, after parting with her parents. Shortly afterwards Jose arrives, having escaped from the officials, and learns from her parents that Juanita has taken the veil. He at once goes to the convent and waits until she passes. Realizing the hopelessness of ever seeing his dear one, the smuggler turns away and seeks death as the only resource left him.

CINES

GIORGIONE.—Giorgione, the famous painter, and a poor girl, Cecelia, have fallen in love with each other. An end is put to their happiness, however, by the jealousy of a great lady of the house of Crimani, a Venetian patrician, which grand lady longs for the love of Giorgione, and cannot bear to contemplate his affection for another.

Accordingly the lady procures the services of one Marco da Feltre, an unprincipled man, who succeeds in getting Cecelia under his influence, and by means of threats and other base methods, lures the girl from her home. Bereft of his love, Giorgione falls dangerously ill.

Meanwhile, the vicious Marco da Feltre takes part in a vulgar quarrel in which he is killed, and his death sets our young heroine at liberty. She makes all haste to the side of her lover and reaches there in time to see the expression of recognition and happiness pass over his face, but the poor girl is doomed to utter despair, for the next moment her beloved drops back into the eternal sleep.

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

AVENGED.—John Warren, a prosperous young clerk, is run down by a taxicab while crossing a city street. The chauffeur, Allen, afraid of the consequences of his carelessness, makes his escape when he sees a crowd gathering around his victim. He abandons his machine on a lonely country road, and catching a Westbound train, succeeds in making good his escape.

Six years later finds John, now a cripple, living in a mining town with his devoted wife. Here John, incapacitated from other work, ekes out a miserable existence as time keeper at the mine. Here also, Allen comes, applying for work as a miner. They do not recognize each other.

John, poor and ill, is visited by another misfortune. His beloved wife, who has clung to him through all the years of his adversity, sickens and dies. His one joy in life is taken from him. John refuses to be comforted by Allen, who feels deep sympathy for the poor cripple. While reciting his sad history to Allen, John learns for the first time that Allen is the man who by crippling him, wrecked his life.

At last the vengeance he has sought all these years is within his reach. He raises his gun to end Allen's existence, when a vision of his wife appears, breathing the message, "Vengeance is Mine, sayeth the Lord." John rushes from the house to the grave of his loved one, and there, after forgiving Allen, dies at peace with mankind.

LEON OF THE TABLE D'HOTE.—Leon is a waiter in a cheap table d'hote restaurant and makes desperate love to the fat French cashier, Rosa.

Off on his vacation, Leon decides to pose as a foreign nobleman. At a seaside hotel where he stops, he becomes all the rage.

One of the guests at the same hotel is a beautiful young heiress, Violet Hope, whose designing mother at once conceives the idea of marrying her off to the supposed Count. The plan does not meet with Violet's approval, as she is already in love with a native born.

One day while bathing in the surf, Violet, who is an expert swimmer, comes to the assistance of the bogus Count, who has been knocked over by a breaker, and delivers him safely into the hands of the life guard. The Count at once lays his life and fortune at Violet's feet, greatly to that young lady's disgust and her mother's delight.

In the meantime Rosa becomes acquainted with the doings of her absent lover and traces him to the beach. Finding him in the water, and beyond her reach, Rosa also dons a bathing suit and, after a chase through the waves, captures Leon and forces him to confess that he has been sailing under false colors. He is led back to the restaurant by the triumphant Rosa, while Leon obtains her mother's consent to wed the man of her choice.

IMP

JES' PLAIN DOG.—The man and his beautiful collie are inseparable. Pals are they, not merely master and dog. In their cabin on the frontier, they pass a happy, care-free existence, eating together, sleeping together, working together, the dog performing his portion of the chores.

Then the woman enters into the man's life, they love and marry. The poor dog is forgotten,—he feels lonely and neglected. He is "jes' plain dog."

Then the man's friend appears,—a silver tongued Easterner,—and becoming enamored of the young wife, lays siege to her heart. The struggle is a brief one and she, dazzled by his tales of a bright life in a large city, writes a note of farewell to the trusting husband and follows the tempter out into a world of sin and misery.

The husband returns from his work, filled with the joy of again clasping his loved one in his arms, but finds only emptiness and silence. Looking dazedly about him he discovers the note and slowly reads it. The horrible truth at last dawning upon his benumbed faculties, he pitches forward across the table and buries his face in his arms.

Then the dog, the neglected, forlorn dog, creeps into the cabin and with human intelligence, comprehending his master's grief, mounts the table and crawling forward, lays his muzzle against the man's head. The man's heart is reached, putting out his hands, he draws toward him his one true friend and comforter, his canine pal.

A GAME OF HEARTS.—The young man and his father called by appointment upon the young lady and her father. While the old gentlemen were playing cards, the young people were occupying their time in love making, whispering "sweet nothings" into each other's ears.

Suddenly a terrific clamor burst forth from the adjoining room. The old men were fighting a wordy battle over their game. Rising from the chair on which both were seated the young folks dashed into the other room and separated their belligerent parents. The row ended by the withdrawal of the father and son, the former vowing never to darken the doors of his late opponent again, nor to allow his son to do so either, the other old man angrily pointing to the door.

Here were two loving young hearts torn asunder, and their fond dreams of the future dissolved into thin air. But the lover was not of the give-up kind and concocted a plan by means of which the old men could be brought together. Visiting the girl by stealth, he laid the scheme before her and she entering heart and soul into it, they proceeded to put it into operation.

They each wrote a note to the other, stating that they could never marry a person whose father was such a poor card player. They then exchanged notes and each presented the other's missive to their parent.

This resulted in an exceedingly torrid conversation over the telephone, between the two old codgers, during which a challenge was issued and accepted for another duel at cards.

Again the father and son called at the house of the old man and his daughter and the game opened. Through the skilfull manipulation of the cards by the young folks, each of the old men won a game and both were equally confident of winning the rubber.

Then the young man produced what was apparently a brand new deck of cards, but which was, in reality, a portion of two decks, and the young people dealt them each identically the same hand—the best in the deck. Each saw victory within his grasp and delighted at the prospect, they began playing. Imagine their surprise and horror at the seemingly despicable cheating of the other, when they discovered that each held exactly the same hands. This, of course, led to another row, even more violent than the preceding one, which was finally quelled by the young people, who each took in hand the other's parent, convincing them that it proved neither of them the better player. Amicable relations were again established and the opposition to the marriage of their children was withdrawn by the fond parents.

THE GARDEN OF FATE.—Heronius, a young sculptor, visits the abode of Father Time and begs for fame. Time presents him with the laurel wreath and enters his name in his book. Heronius, returning to his studio, draws the curtains from before his latest work, a beautiful statue of a nude woman, and stands lost in admiration of his own achievements.

Some of his friends and acquaintances call upon him and he, hastily drawing the curtains over his statue, receives them. Some of them desire to inspect his statue, but he prevents them and offering them wine, they drink to his success. Leaving the apartment for a few moments, in order to escort some of his guests to the entrance to his house, one of them, his secret enemy, stealthily enters, and seizing a mallet, shatters the statue to atoms. Returning, Heronius discovers the disaster and falls unconscious.

Heronius, having lost fame, returns to Father Time, who presents him with the red rose of love. Going forth, he wanders through the royal gardens and stops to admire a handsome statue. In the meantime, the young and beautiful Princess Idealia has left the palace and accompanied by her woman attendant is also strolling through the gardens. She passes Heronius, he turns, their eyes meet and love enters into both their hearts. The Princess' attendant orders him away, but he, not to be gotten rid of so easily, follows, and the Princess, finally turning, sees him and dismissing the woman awaits his coming.

He attempts to kneel before her, but she, raising him to his feet, leads him away and they give themselves up to a brief dream of bliss. During their walk they visit Father Time, who presents Heronius with the flower of contentment. He in turn presents it to the Princess, who accepts it.

During this time, the woman attendant has sought out the King and has informed him of his daughter's infatuation for Heronius. The King is very angry and summons the Princess and Heronius to appear before him, the messenger to Heronius being none other than the enemy who destroyed his statue.

The King is seated in state, two of his favorite dancers performing for him, when the Princess appears followed shortly after by Heronius. The King then orders his daughter to be married to Heronius' enemy and has Heronius driven from the palace.

Filled with the most poignant grief, Heronius again appears before Father Time, who this time presents him with the last flower, the flower of death.

Going from the haunts of Time, Heronius is seized by Roman soldiers and chained to a rock on the sea shore, where he is left to die.

The Princess, learning of his terrible fate, rushes off to join him and while on the way Time presents her also with the last flower. Coming upon Heronius chained to the rock, the Princess falls upon his breast and her heart being torn with unspeakable grief, she also expires.

Then Father Time crosses off the names of Heronius and Idealia from the book of life.

NESTOR

THE GOLDEN HOARD.—They called him Tahnidge the miser, and spoke in whispers of the golden hoard hidden away in his little cabin where no one was ever invited; they drew pictures of the old miser greedily counting this gold by a single candle, and wonder how his daughter, the fair Niada, managed to appear so happy.

But could they have peeped into that same little cabin, they would have wondered no longer, for Smith Tahnidge fairly worshipped Niada and delighted in his gold chiefly for the protection it would give his daughter when she should be left alone.

Then, the girl had still another cause for happiness; she and Bob Honer had been secretly engaged for weeks, and now awaited but the approval of her father, which, when he knew Bob thoroughly, Niada felt sure they would obtain.

The miser, in going in search of his daughter, was passing Jim's saloon when the lovers appeared. Instantly a quarrel arose between the men and the result was—one of Tahnidge's heart spells.

This gave Will Danvers, gambler and all around crook, an opportunity to help the old man to his home. But his advances proved quite as fruitless with him as they had with the daughter, and he was compelled to leave without as much as a glance inside.

That night, however, in peeping through the key hole, he discovered where the old miser had hidden his hoard and, from then on, waited but for an opportunity to find the cabin alone.

The opportunity came the next day, for, after intercepting a note to Niada from Bob and learning when she would be away, Danvers stationed himself at the side of the house and the instant Tahnidge stepped outside to call Niada, the gambler darted into the house.

He had no sooner seized the gold, however, than the old man returned—a fierce struggle ensued, which might have proven fatal for the miser had not Bob arrived—for, being told by the boy that Danvers had read his note, the young man had hurried to the cabin to find out his motive.

Tahnidge had scarcely time to thank his rescuer when he sank into unconsciousness, and the gambler, believing he was dead, ran to the saloon for the boys—telling them that Bob had killed the old man in an attempt to rob him.

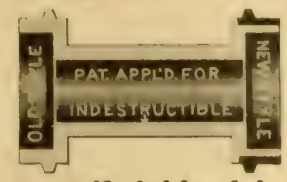
But as they started away with Bob, Niana appeared, and after restoring her father to consciousness, Tahnidge not only righted matters by sending the posse off with Danvers, but gladly gave his consent to the young people's marriage.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

BISON.

YOUNG DEER'S RETURN.—John Scott, a prospector, sells his mine for a large sum of money, and guarded by a posse of deputy sheriffs starts across the desert to the railroad. The party is attacked by bandits and all but Scott are killed. He, badly wounded, makes his escape, and the next day, perishing from thirst, falls unconscious. He is found by a band of Indians, who are prevented from destroying him by Young Deer, one of their number whom Scott had befriended, and who re-

Any Old Worn-Out Machine



that has my improved star, pinwheel and sprocket put in will give better results than a new one. TESTIMONIALS. Two Patents applied for on above improvements.

E. W. LAVEZZI

3042 N. Ashland Ave. Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Theater Manager:

I pay for this white space to draw your attention to my Solar Screen. Its brightness is as this compared to a closely printed page. Do not confound the Solar Screen with aluminum daubed imitations. There is only one Solar Screen and that is made by me and its cost is so little more than that of an ordinary screen that it is as nothing to the manager who wants to put on a better picture than his competitor.

Write me to-day for full particulars and testimonials.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON, 111 W. 132nd St., NEW YORK

LUX FILMS

The World's Best—Bar None

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES

Split Reels give variety, and your patrons want variety. Add to your popularity by getting this reel of the "World's Best"

Auntie in the Fashion

Length 301 Feet—Comedy

Mother's Portrait

Length 531 Feet—Drama

Read those titles again, think of the possibilities and send your order Now.

Do not Forget the Free Colored Lithos.

R. PRIEUR

10 E. 15th Street, New York City

Telephone Call, 3124 Stuyvesant

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

SHERLOCK HOLMES OUTDONE!

WE have been looking forward for years to the time when we could introduce to picture lovers a type of Detective-Film such as other producers have hitherto feared to tackle. After months of real effort, we now announce the First of our Sleuth Series,

Out Monday, October 10, at 7.00 A. M.

The Monogrammed Cigarette

The fearless daughter of a famous detective, who was killed while hunting down a criminal, bravely takes up a mysterious case and not only recovers a fortune in gems but avenges her father's murder. TWENTY THRILLING SCENES follow the main title in rapid succession, each sensational to a satisfying point without being offensive to good taste.

OTHER DETECTIVE FILMS COMING

OCT. 17. THE COPPER AND THE CROOK
OCT. 24. SOLVING THE BOND THEFT
OCT. 31. THE SWEAT-SHOP MYSTERY

GET THE ENTIRE SERIES GET BUSY THIS MINUTE

EXHIBITORS—Write our department for a copy of "FILM FICTION," now in preparation. It's a complete collection of interesting matter pertaining to the leading films of the world.

YANKEE FILM CO.,

334 E. 32d St., NEW YORK

WRITE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO.

Telephone 6170 Madison Square

vives the white man. Scott offers his rescuer gold, but the Indian refuses to accept anything but a watch. Scott reaches his home safely and is joyously welcomed by his wife and daughter. Some time later Young Deer is sent to the government school and makes rapid progress. He wins the championship for the Carlisle baseball team and is honized. Scott's daughter falls in love with him and Young Deer returns her affection. Scott is furious when Young Deer asks for his daughter's hand, and offends the sensitive young man, who at that moment recognizes Scott, recalls the saving of his life and produces the watch. Scott is overcome with remorse and finally decides to let the Indian wed his daughter, but he haughtily walks out of the house, goes back to his old life, discards civilized garments and weds a girl of his race.

THE GIRL SCOUT.—While the emigrants are in mortal combat with the Indians, the Girl Scout gallops wildly for assistance. Coming upon a ranch, the aid of the cowboys is enlisted and they ride at terrific speed to the succor of the whites. In the meantime the battle rages, with appalling losses to the redskins, who are tumbled off their horses by the bullets of the white marksmen. The unequal conflict is ended by the cowboys, and the remaining savages are routed completely. The injuries of the settlers are attended to, and the Girl Scout is overjoyed to find that her sweetheart, though sorely wounded, is not fatally hurt.

AMBROSIO.

THE PIT THAT SPEAKS.—A musketeer in the service of Louis XIII. becomes enamored of the Duke of Beaulin's daughter, who is not indifferent to him, and the lovers, owing to the difference in their social positions, are compelled to meet clandestinely. At a tryst beside an old pit they hear voices, and the musketeer descends, follows a subterranean passage and overhears three courtiers plotting against the king. He vanquishes the trio in a hard-fought battle and secures their incriminating documents. The king rewards him with the title of Duke, which enables him to wed the girl of his choice.

TWEEDLEDUM'S DUEL.—Tweedledum is challenged to a duel, but owing to an overpowering fear, ludicrously depicted, the weapons are discarded, one by one, and two bottles of champagne substituted.

CHAMPION.

HOW THE TENDERFOOT MADE GOOD.—Reckless friends, the inviting bottle and late hours have been the means of ruining many a youth, and especially one who is an only son. Arthur Kane is just such an only son, but fortunately his father turns him out of the house in time to save the boy from further degradation. His mother furnishes him with the means to go out West, trusting in spite of all, in his promise to make a man of himself when away from his evil associates.

Dressed in the height of Eastern fashion, Arthur affords considerable amusement to the cowpunchers as he alights at a small cattle station out in Montana. He doesn't mind this, though, for with his athletic training he feels quite capable of holding his own amongst them.

Learning the location of Judge Lawson's ranch, he at once applies for a job. More in a spirit of fun than because of actual need the Judge places him in the charge of his foreman. The Eastern lad soon wins the good-will of his fellow cowboys, and especially does he prove attractive to the Judge's daughter, Ruth.

They soon become constant companions, and that fact arouses the ire of the jealous foreman, who goads the Easterner until his patience is beyond control. The climax is reached when the surly foreman pours some hot coffee down Kane's back. It takes but an instant to make a wreck of a bunkhouse, and when the Judge hurries in he finds his foreman and new cowpuncher engaged in pummelling each other in the midst of a wrecked room. Boiling with rage, he discharges poor Kane and severely reprimands the foreman.

Packing his grip, Kane is soon on his way in search of a new job, and when nearing a crowd in the street he learns that the Sheriff has been held up and robbed by a notorious outlaw, who has bound him to his horse and sent him back to town. The Sheriff resigns his position and returns the star (his badge of office) to the Judge.

This is the psychological moment to make good and young Kane embraces it. Hurrying back to the Judge, he demands a chance to earn the Sheriff's star by capturing the outlaw. The Judge agrees and young Kane prepares immediately for the venture. Borrowing a girl's outfit from Ruth, the Judge's daughter, he puts it on and is soon cantering along the lonely road. Sure enough he is held up by the outlaw. Spurring his horse, he leads the bandit a merry chase. The outlaw eventually overtakes him, and reaching out, seizes the supposed girl about the waist and swings him onto the saddle.

It doesn't take Arthur long to pull the outlaw's gun from its holster and hold it to his head, and in that position the tenderfoot brings the desperate outlaw into town and thereat wins the Sheriff's star. Of course, incidentally, he captures the Judge's daughter, Ruth. And that is how the tenderfoot made good.

YANKEE

THE MONOGRAMED CIGARETTE. The cigarette has been credited with being the cause of a great many crimes. To the contrary, however, the monogramed cigarette was the means of solving a crime, bringing to justice a thief and the gang that blackmailed the culprit; also sending to the electric chair the murderer of the detective on the case.

While the monogramed cigarette played an important part in accounting for the disappearance of the Waldo jewels, their recovery was entirely due to the efforts of Nell Pierce, the Yankee girl detective.

John Sloan, a lawyer of repute and considerable wealth, was custodian of the jewels, in his capacity of legal advisor for the Waldo Estate.

The secret vault in the library of Sloan's home had been broken into and the jewels abstracted.

Nat Pierce, a Sherlock Holmes type of crime investigator, was retained by Sloan to ferret out the theft, there being important reasons why Sloan did not desire publicity, and therefore kept the loss of the jewels from the police.

Pierce's principal clue was an almost consumed cigarette which he found upon a pedestal, adjacent to the opened strong box. During the course of his investigations, Pierce is set upon by some thugs and mortally hurt, but before he dies sends for his daughter and imparts the facts of the assault to her, as well as information concerning the Waldo jewel robbery.

Nell Pierce was a daughter of her father and had been his companion and associate in many of his cases and was therefore by birth and education well qualified to follow up her father's work.

With only the cigarette butt and its half-obliterated monogram to guide her, she obtained employment in the house of Sloan, disguised as a parlor maid. There she discovered that the cigarettes smoked by Sloan's dissolute and spendthrift son, bore the sought-for monogram, and she also recovered the jewels.

Secreted in a stand of armor located in young Sloan's private room, she overheard a conversation between him and his confederates, which not only disclosed young Sloan as the thief of the jewels, but also that one of the thugs struck the blow which caused her father's untimely end.

Thus Nell Pierce avenged her father's death and solved the Waldo jewel theft.

How she solved the Bond theft is another story, as are also the numerous other crimes unravelled by the Yankee girl detective in the course of making a business of the profession in which her father had been a shining light.

ATLAS.

CURING A GROUCH.—Our friend woke up with a grouch, carried his grouch around all day and took his grouch to bed with him. But it's like any other disease—we know when we have it and we want to be cured.

Our grouch thought he was incurable; had tried every known remedy; he sure was the champion sour-face until he heard of Old Doctor M. A. K. Ulaf.

The doctor's treatment was all he claimed for it; one dose of his famous Risibility Elixir made Groucho a changed man.

He laughed at the troubles of others; he ha-ha'd when people slipped or fell, and guffawed at the argument between the police and the suffragettes, and was even filled with boisterous mirth when arrested and jailed for his hilarious demonstrations.

But "it's an ill wind that blows nobody good." Our old friend Groucho is now known by his family, neighbors and business associates as "General Geniality."

DEFENDER

WILD BILL'S DEFEAT.—Illness has often been the messenger of death, but seldom has it led to the trail of heroism, love and a more contented life. Consumption compels Harry Thornton to go West. Arriving at his destination, a small mining town, he seeks a place to room, and is directed by a barmaid to suitable quarters. Going to the bar to thank the girl for her assistance, Harry meets Wild Bill, who is feared by the entire town, and who invites Harry to have a drink. On account of his condition, Harry must refuse, which angers Wild Bill. He compels Harry to dance by shooting at his feet. Harry's coughing as a result of his exertion causes the barmaid to intercede in his behalf, and Wild Bill ceases torturing Harry. Six months later, Harry, much improved in health, proposes to the barmaid. She tells him he has mistaken sympathy for love. Harry is discouraged. He has been unsuccessful in securing employment, and lack of funds and the blow administered by the girl convince him that his life is a failure, and he determines to end it then and there. He enters his room and is about to kill himself when a commotion in the street draws his attention to the window; he sees Wild Bill shooting up the town and conceives the idea of dying honorably by challenging Wild Bill to combat, which he does. Wild Bill, to his astonishment and the surprise of all, running away. He is the hero of the hour; a collection is made for him by the admiring townspeople, and the girl of his heart offers him hers, thus instilling new vigor in Harry's sluggish veins and making life worth living.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE STORMS OF LIFE. A girl is loved by a cook and a marquis. She returns the affections of the poorer man, but her father swears that she shall have no other husband but the marquis. The young people make up their minds to elope, and a few mornings later she is missed. Years afterwards we see the girl in her home with her husband. A telegram comes saying that her father is dying. She goes home, but is too late to see her father alive. The mother is left penniless. The marquis offers to provide the mother an income provided the girl will marry him. She finally consents, hiding the marriage from the marquis. He dies a few years later, and the girl is reconciled with her husband.

POWERS CO.

THE MUSIC TEACHER.—Carl Faber is a German violinist who neglects his beautiful wife and child for his music. The wife elopes with an army officer, Lieutenant Von Glahn, taking with her the six-year-old daughter Louise. Years pass; the old musician goes to America, where the wife dies. Dead broke, he goes out on the streets to earn a living with his violin. One day while playing on the street, he faints from hunger. His long-lost daughter Louise, now a beautiful young woman, picks him up, takes him to his home and arranges to take music lessons from him. Faber calls and is confronted by Von Glahn, the man who took his wife and child away. He makes the villain confess that the girl is not his daughter. Father and daughter are united and Von Glahn gets his deserved end.

WITHIN AN INCH OF HIS LIFE.—John Terry, a Westerner, compels Richard Craven, a New York broker, at the point of the pistol to return mine stock that Craven had swindled Terry out of. Terry leaves his pistol behind him and Craven accidentally shoots himself with it. Before Craven dies, he writes inside a book that he has been reading a message stating that he shot himself accidentally. The book falls and the message is covered from sight, and Craven is suspected to be the victim of an intentional murder. Later, Marion Loring, to whom Craven had been engaged to be married, goes West. She is rescued in a "hold-up" by Terry, who falls in love with her. Terry is recognized by the former valet of Craven as the man who was with Craven just before he was shot. In a dramatic scene the girl has Terry arrested. Terry is being tried for murder. Circumstances make him appear guilty. In a great court scene we see the foreman of the jury about to announce the verdict when Marion rushes in and shows the book in which she has discovered Craven's statement, and Terry is acquitted. Then, of course, the lovers are reunited.

A MAN AND A GIRL.—Jim Brady loves pretty Katie Rowe, whose father runs a Western hotel. Jim is attacked by a Mexican whose enmity he has incurred and is saved from death by the timely arrival of Bill Spencer, a stranger. Bill meets Katie, who falls in love with him and promptly forgets Jim. A cowboy friend of Jim's discovers Bill making love to Katie and tells Jim. A quarrel between Jim and the girl follows and they separate in anger. Katie rides after Bill, overtakes him and promptly accepts his offer of marriage. They are seen riding away together by Jim's friends, who, not knowing that Bill is married to the girl, follow the couple, swearing vengeance. They enter Bill's home and despite the girl's protests they demand Bill. Just as the cowboys are about to take Bill out to hang him, Jim arrives and recognizes in Bill the man who saved his life. Explanations follow and Jim makes a graceful retreat.

SIMPSON'S SKATE.—After a night with the boys, Simpson is very, very drunk. Two boys on roller skates find him hugging the lamp-post and they wake him and start him off, and then the fun begins. Simpson skates into everybody and everything in his part of the town: over a truck, into a laundry woman, over a bicyclist and then into a pail of mortar. He finally gets home. His wife takes one look at him and then throws him out of the window. He escapes from the second-story window down a plank the carpenters have left, into the arms of a policeman, who arrests him. They are crossing a bridge: Simpson's skates go up into the air and he and the cop land in the river. The finish is a scream. The part of Simpson in this piece was played by Frank Weston, the great English acrobatic comedian and champion roller skater. There are twenty laughs to the minute in this reel.

ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES, 1 CENT EACH.

Up-to-date theaters use them for announcing future programmes, for song chorus slides when the chorus slide is missing, for business advertising slides—in fact, for anything you desire to say to the audience. They are written on colored gelatin with a pen and ink or typewriter. They look well. Anyone can make them. Takes three minutes to make a slide. For three dollars ($3.00) cash with order, I send by express (charges not prepaid) as follows: 24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. F. H. RICHARDSON, No. 6 Bradhurst avenue.

"SELIG DID IT"

Release for Oct. 13th

In the Golden Harvest Time

(A Drama)

Release for Oct. 17th

The Foreman

(Western Drama)

Release for Oct. 20th

Two Boys in Blue

(A Military Comedy Drama)

COMING

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR ROOM

Selig Polyscope Co. — 45 Randolph St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Old Fort Film Exchange

INDEPENDENT

721½ CLINTON STREET

Phone 2987

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs Also seating for Out-of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W.

TEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office: 150 Fifth Avenue

ston Office: 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

BLANK LEADERS

In Black, Red, Green or Any Color

$15 PER 1000 FEET — Guaranteed Against Brittleness

WASTE UTILIZATION CO.

442 E. 166th St. NEW YORK

r Rent—6 reels films with signs and slides, $12. r Sale—50 reels perfect condition films, $10 to $16.50 per reel. Perfect song slides $1.50 per set. el Slide Carriers, can't burn, won't break, 75c. ckets, 9c. per 1,000.

LIBERTY FILM RENTING CO.,

105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

Andrews OPERA CHAIRS

Over 75 per cent. of the finest theaters in the United States and Canada are furnished with them. They are used in 318 of the 406 moving picture theaters in Chicago.

To meet the growing demands for

LOW PRICED OPERA CHAIRS

we have originated a number of styles which, though inexpensive, are characteristic of

ANDREWS QUALITY

Write to Department K for our large Catalogue No. 81, illustrated in colors, which will guide you when contemplating the purchase of opera chairrs.

THE A. H. Andrews Co.

CHICAGO ESTABLISHED 1865

NEW YORK SAN FRANCISCO

ST LOUIS SEATTLE

174-176 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

Correspondence Course. Special rates to the trade, send for free illustrated catalogue.

School class meets every morning and afternoon, with F. H. Richardson of Chicago, as chief instructor. Evening classes meet every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We positively guarantee you a $15 position.

We are selling agents for the Powers' Cameragraph and Motiograph Moving Picture Machines.

We carry a large line of electrical supplies and furnish everything for the theatre.

F. C. TAYLOR

49 West 28th Street New York City

Phone 1405 Madison Square

Canadian Exhibitors

Looking for a first-class film service, write the Crystal Palace Film Exchange for particulars. We handle both Licensed and Independent films and can give you a right up-to-date service. We own and operate the most successful Moving Picture Theaters in Canada.

Located at

141 Yonge Street, Toronto
331 St. Lawrence Blvd., Mont.
27 King Street East, Hamilton

Agents for Powers and Edison Machines

Crystal Palace Film Exchange

141 Yonge Street Toronto, Can.

269 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, Can.

EXCHANGES!

Have you tried our process for renewing your old films

IF NOT

Send us a reel and see what we can do

IF

Your second run reel is in good condition it will help rent your new film

Shipments of fifteen reels returned same day received

Old Reliable Film Renovating Co.

22 Randolph St. :: Chicago, Ills.

Write for References from 75 Exchanges

Lantern Slide

MATS AND BINDING STRIPS

WE manufacture a full line of these goods. Have you tried our GUMMED PAPER LETTERS for making up slides? If not, do so at once and save time and money.

CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES ON REQUEST

The Tablet & Ticket Co.

Chicago, New York, San Francisco

Film Service for All Classes

PRICES TO SUIT ALL

INDIANAPOLIS CALCIUM LIGHT & FILM EXCHANGE

114-116 S. Capitol Ave. Indianapolis, Ind.

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 16—The Sacking of Rome 800
Sept. 19—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Sept. 19—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic).....440
Sept. 26—The Street Arab of Paris (Dr.).....820
Oct. 3—Through the Ruins of Carthage.....660
Oct. 3—Behind the Scenes of Cinema Stage...320
Oct. 10—The Carmelite (Dr.).....670
Oct. 10—The Order Is To March (Com.).....295

CINES.

Eclair.

Sept. 23—Julie Colonna (Dr.) 760
Sept. 25—Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer (Com.)..236
Sept. 30—Giovanni of Medici (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Giorgione (Dr.) 1000

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 17—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....
Sept. 24—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—The Flight Across the Atlantic (Sc.)..
Oct. 1—Bird's-eye View from World's Highest Buildings (Sc.) 235
Oct. 8—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....

"IMP."

Sept. 8—Sister's Sacrifice 996
Sept. 12—Two Daughters 992
Sept. 15—Dixie 986
Sept. 19—Debt 998
Sept. 22—New Butler 994
Sept. 26—Pressed Roses 987
Sept. 29—Annie (Dr.) .....
Oct. 3—All the World's a Stage (Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Deciding Vote (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—The Garden of Fate (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—Jes' Plain Dog (Dr.).....500
Oct. 10—A Game of Hearts.....500

LUX FILMS.

Sept. 22—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Sept. 22—That Typist Again (Com.).....380
Sept. 29—How Jones Won the Championship (C.)380
Sept. 29—Kindness Abused and Its Results (Dr.)531
Oct. 6—Auntie in the Fashion (Com.).....301
Oct. 6—Mother's Portrait (Dr.).....531

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 24—In the Black Hills (Dr.) 960
Aug. 31—The Blazed Trail (Dr.).....989
Sept. 7—The Moonshiner's Daughter (Dr.).....960
Sept. 14—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956
Sept. 21—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963
Sept. 28—Where the Sun Sets (Dr.).....976
Oct. 5—The Golden Hoard (Dr.).....930

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
("Bison.")

Sept. 13—Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Sept. 16—For a Western Girl.....915
Sept. 20—For the Love of Red Wing.....957
Sept. 23—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000
Sept. 27—A Cowboy for Love 989
Sept. 30—The Ranch Raiders.....915
Oct. 4 Young Deer's Return 985
Oct. 7—The Girl Scout 1000

ITALA.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Sept. 17—The Falconer 818
Sept. 24—Foolshead as a Policeman.....500
Sept. 24—The Bad Luck of an Old Rake.....500
Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank 1000
Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank.....1000
Oct. 1—Foolshead Has Been Presented with a Football 431
Oct. 8—Foolshead, Fisherman 500
Oct. 8—Mrs. Cannon Is Warm.....500

AMBROSIO.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Sept. 7—Fricot Has Lost His Collar Stud (Com)
Sept. 14—The Iron Foundry.....900
Sept. 21—The Last Friend.....500
Sept. 21—Molly at the Regiment—Her Adventures 500
Sept. 28—The Virgin of Babylon 908
Oct. 5—The Pit That Speaks.....500
Oct. 5—Tweedledum's Duel 500

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Sept. 13—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Sept. 17—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....
Sept. 24—His Lordship (Dr.).....
Sept. 27—The Taming of "Buck" (Com.).....
Sept. 27—O! You Wives (Com.).....
Oct. 1—The Music Teacher (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—War (Dr.) .....
Oct. 4—The Beechwood Ghost (Com.).....
Oct. 8—Within an Inch of His Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—A Man and a Girl (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Simpson's Skate (Com.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 2—A Fresh Start (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 13—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Not Guilty (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—The Cricket .....
Sept. 23—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.)...
Sept. 27—Home Made Mince Pie (Com.).....1000
Sept. 30—Dots and Dashes (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 4—Leon of the Table d'Hote (Com.)...1000
Oct. 7—Avenged (Dr.) 1000

SALES CO.—FILM D'ART.

July 21—Mateo Falcone 694
July 21—Andromache 356
July 28—The Hidden Place.....900
Aug. 4—The Eagle and the Eaglet.....1000
Aug. 11—Charles Le Temeraire.....518
Aug. 18—Carmen 995
Aug. 25—In the Day of the First Christians..1000
Sept. 1—King of One Day 975
Sept. 8—The Minister's Speech.....500
Sept. 8—The Conscience of a Child.....500
Sept. 15—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.).1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

Aug. 18—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 25—Hazing a New Scholar (Dr.) .....
Sept. 1—Great Marshall Jewel Case (Dr.).....
Sept. 1—That Letter from Teddy.....
Sept. 8—Cowboy's Courtship (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—An Athletic Instructor (Com.).....
Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.)....
Sept. 29—A Schoolmarm's Ride for Life (Dr.)..
Oct. 6—Wild Bill's Defeat (Dr.).....

CHAMPION.

July 13—The Abernathy Kids 1000
July 20—Romance of an Anvil (Dr.) 1000
July 27—Cowboy and the Squaw (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 3—Spitfire (Dr.) 900
Aug. 10—Hermit of the Rockies 900
Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge (Dr.) 900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.) 900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.) .....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.) 900
Sept. 28—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....900
Oct. 5—The Cowboys to the Rescue (Dr.).....900
Oct. 12—How the Tenderfoot Made Good (Dr.).950

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 18—Right to Labor.....998
July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.) .....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless 1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Women of the West (Dr.).....950
Oct. 10—The Monogramed Cigarette (Dr.)....

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.) 450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders 450
Sept. 14—Monkey Shines 500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Sept. 28—Levi the Cop (Com.).....
Sept. 28—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....
Oct. 5—When Cupid Sleeps (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Curing a Grouch (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The S. S. Mauretania (Sc.).....

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart.....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Bill Mason's Ride (Dr.).....700
Oct. 1—All's Fair In Love and War (Dr.)...

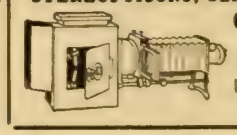
RELIANCE

Oct. 22 In the Gray of the Dawn (Dr.).....

COLUMBIA.

Oct. 1—Rip Van Winkle (Dr.).....920
Oct. 8—Jealousy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—Tracked Across the Sea (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Breaking Home Ties (Dr.).....

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES
STEREOPTICONS, SLIDES, ACCESSORIES.



Chas. M. Stebbins
1028 Main Street,
KANSAS CITY, MO.
Large Line of Edison Goods
Established 1899.

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, October 3.

Eclair—Behind the Scenes of Cinema Stage....320
Imp—All the World's a Stage (Dr.) .....
Yankee—Women of the West (Dr.) .....

Tuesday, October 4.

Bison—Young Deer's Return (Dr.) 985
Powers—War (Dr.) .....
Powers—The Beechwood Ghost (Com.) .....
Champion—Leon of the Table d'Hote (Com.)..1000

Wednesday, October 5.

Ambrosio—The Pit That Speaks 500
Ambrosio—Tweedledum's Duel 500
Atlas—When Cupid Sleeps (Dr.) .....
Champion—The Cowboys to the Rescue (Dr.)...900
Nestor—The Golden Hoard (Dr.).....930

Thursday, October 6.

Defender—Wild Bill's Defeat (Dr.) .....
Imp—The Deciding Vote (Dr.) .....
Lux—Auntie in the Fashion (Com.) 301
Lux—Mother's Portrait (Dr.) 531

Friday, October 7.

Bison—The Girl Scout (Dr.) 1000
Cines (Eclair)—Giorgione (Dr.) 1000
Thanhouser—Avenged (Dr.) 1000

Saturday, October 8.

Columbia—Jealousy (Dr.) .....
Great Northern—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....
Itala—Foolshead, Fisherman 500
Itala—Mrs. Cannon Is Warm.....500
Powers—Within An Inch of His Life (Dr.).....

INFORMATION
Upon all Matters Pertaining to the Motion-Picture Business
CHARGES MODERATE
ALAN J. BACHRACH
P. O. Box 38 Washington, D. C.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices—Best Work—DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

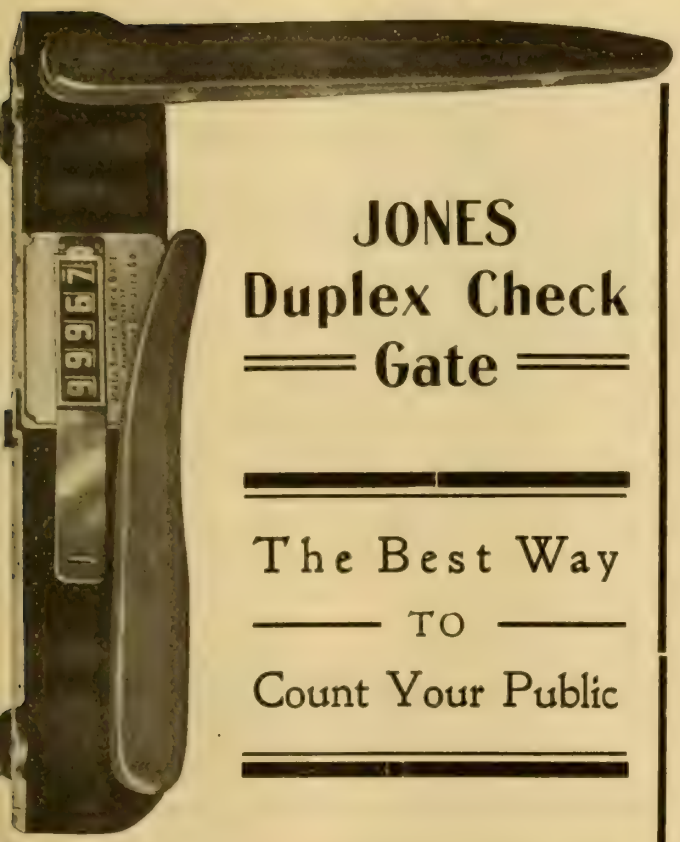
THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

LUCIEN PRÉVOST
MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS : 21 Rue Perdonnet, Paris
WORKS : : : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras
Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)
Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines



JONES
Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way
TO Count Your Public

Manufactured by

JONES
Change Register Co.
INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

BIO CARBONS

This is the Carbon you have been hearing so much about

Whenever operators are gathered together the BIO Carbon is sure to be mentioned in terms of praise. On every hand you hear "Haven't you tried the BIO yet?" "It's the finest carbon I ever used."

The only man who has no praise for the BIO is the man who has not tried it. If you're in the same boat, you're missing something good. Better pin your check for $1.50 to this ad TODAY, and mail to our nearest office for a sample 50 prepaid.

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK - - - - - - 39 Cortlandt Street
PITTSBURG - - - - - - 421 Frick Building
MILWAUKEE - - - - - - 114-116 Huron Street
SAN FRANCISCO - - - - 195-197 Fremont Street

Your Name.....

Please do not forget to write your Jobber's name here

.....

For Rent to Licensed Theatres

ORIGINAL

JOHNSON-KETCHEL FIGHT

2500 FEET

The greatest picture of a knockout ever snapped by a camera. Exclusive American Rights controlled by the Johnson-Ketchel Fight Pictures Co.

A. J. GILLIGHAM, Mgr.
103 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Where He Got His Start

JIMMY—Pa; can I have 25c.

PA—What do you want with 25c. Jimmy?

JIMMY—I see that the THREE STAR SLIDE CO., 56 Fifth Avenue, Chicago are making fine announcement slides for 25c. now.

PA—Well: What if they are, what could you do with a slide, you could not use it.

JIMMY—Oh yes I could: I'd rent it to some 5c. show house. Bill Jones says that's the way you got your start.

Mechanical School For Operators

Conducted by Mr. Al. Kupky at 110 Third Avenue, is open to operators desiring a further knowledge in repairing and setting up all makes of Moving Picture Machines in a machine shop.

Complete Course $10.00

$5.00 STARTS YOU

Call and Investigate

JUSTICE MACHINE WORKS
110 Third Avenue New York City

Lang's Rewinder No. 2

Price, $5.00 Net

Send for latest catalogue

Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

O-O-Ohio.
Oh, You Dream.
You Stole My Gal.
I'm Just Pinin' For You.
Beloved.
There's a Girl up in the Moon.
On Mobile Bay
He got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.
What is the World Without You.
On a Sunday Evening in the Summer Time.
Come Along My Mandy.
Love Sick.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Miror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock; Tripods, Filts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply, special lenses, films and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

Moving Picture Machines

Repaired by skilled mechanics at short notice and reasonable prices. Work guaranteed. All kinds of supplies for Moving Picture Machines.

CHAS. E. DRESSLER, 388 2nd Avenue
Near 23rd Street Take Elevator

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the
Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St., TOLEDO, O.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS FOR Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest New and Second-hand Films Dealers in the United States, both Independent and Association. New Film, from 4c. per foot up, Second-hand Film, from $5.00 per reel up, Second-hand Power's Machine, like new, $115.00, Song Slides, at $2.00 per set up, ⅝ x 6 Electra Carbons Pink Label $19.00 per 1000. Complete List sent free upon request.

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West Broadway and 17th Street New York City

SPECIAL ROLL TICKETS The Big Ticket. Any Printing Any Colors.

5,000	- - - -	$1.25	20,000	- - - -	$4.60	50,000	- - - -	$7.50
10,000	- - - -	2.50	25,000	- - - -	5.50	100,000	- - - -	10.00

Get the Samples Stock Tickets, 6 Cents

NATIONAL TICKET COMPANY - - - Shamokin, Pa.

Advertising Copy must be in hand not latter than Wednesday of each Week

The Solax Company
INTRODUCES
OLD SOL
The Father of Photography

QUALITY
Do good apples insure a good pie?
Does good rare stock insure a crowded theatre?
Never—BUT
Take plenty of money—a complete plant—brains and ability—then keep hustling. That's how we get Quality.

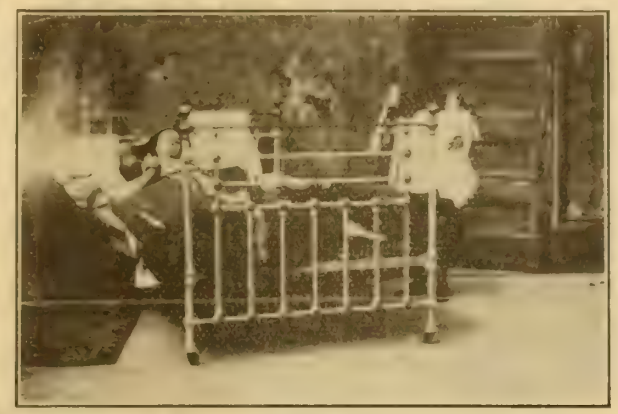
LOOK FOR ME EVERY FRIDAY
—— OLD SOL ——

OUR SALESMAN
Will be around to show you the advance copies
WAIT FOR HIM

BEST PLANT IN UNITED STATES



FIRST RELEASE
A Child's Sacrifice
FRIDAY OCTOBER 14th
HOLD YOUR ORDERS

Solax Company
FLUSHING :: LONG ISLAND

Want Chairs Quick?
Stafford chairs excell all others. We use no three-ply veneers. Why? Not good enough! Five ply is best, and that is why we use them.

Chairs like cut
IN STOCK and GUARANTEED

Ask for Catalog No. 305
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO ILLINOIS

Managers of West Virginia Houses
Write for date for the only pictures of MILLER BROS. 101 RANCH
with complete lecture during progress of pictures
The Greatest Wild West Show Ever Thrown on Canvas
A boost for your house that will always remain a boost. Play on per cent only. Write quick.
FEATURE FILM COMPANY
Temple Theatre Bldg., Columbus, Ohio

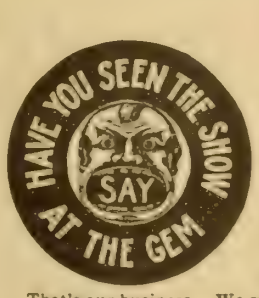
FOLDING CHAIRS
For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.
Write for Catalog No. 2.
The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

ADMISSION TICKETS
Reading—5c.-10c. and ADMIT ONE
Correctly Numbered. Good Paper

Per Roll of 2,000.	$ .20
10 Rolls.	1.90
20 Rolls	3.75

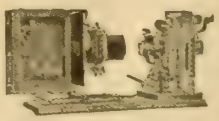
Dissolving Stereopticons and Moving Picture Machines, repair parts for all Machines, Carbons, etc.

ERKER BROS. OPTICAL CO.
604 OLIVE STREET :: ST. LOUIS, MO.
The Moving Picture Theatre Supply House of the West



Buttons
(Celluloid.)
They make a big hit with the children.
We paint any lettering you want and in any size.

BUTTONS and BADGES
That's our business. We make them.
We also make Fobs, Canes and Pennants.
These make good souvenirs. Send for List.
To give full information at first writing, state explicitly what you want and quantity.
AMERICAN BADGE CO.
Factory, 141-143 W. Michigan St., CHICAGO, ILL.



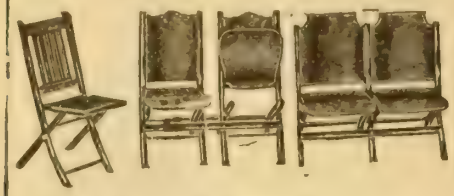
For Sale—1,000 ft. reels film, $5 to $25; used Edison, Power's, Lubin machines, $60; new, $100; odd slides, 5c; sets, $1; Model B. gas outfits, $25; paying picture theatres cheap.

For Rent—1,000 ft. reels film, $1 to $2 per reel. Will buy gas outfits, machines, film. Will renovate film at $1.50 per reel.

H. DAVIS - - - Watertown, Wis.

FRANK H. CRANE
Leading Man
THANHOUSER COMPANY

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

ADVERTISING : ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES

Genre Transparency Company
507 N. Clark Street : : : Chicago

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS

ROLL TICKETS

50,000 for $8.75 — Stock Tickets
100,000 for 13.50 — 9c. per 1000
Terms Cash—No C.O.D.

Canadian Ticket Press, GANANOQUE ONT.

METROPOLITAN SLIDE CO.
123 4th Ave.
Slides of every description.
Advertising Slides our Specialty.

Eclair Films

A TRIUMPH IN PERFECTION

For October 10th

"The Carmelite"

670 FEET

A Heart-breaking Tragedy—A film of the highest rank

"The Order is to March"

295 FEET

A Really Laughable Comic

Cines Films

For October 7th

"Giorgione"

1000 FEET

A Life Problem Teeming with Human Interest—A story that will tug at the heart-chords of the most Passive Audience.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.
CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

IF YOU ARE INTERESTED IN THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS, YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. $2.00.

PACK YOUR THEATRES

By giving a package of good

PEPSIN GUM

TO EVERY PATRON

Costs you 1¼c. per package

SAMPLES FREE

INDEPENDENT GUM COMPANY
2643 East 53rd Street Cleveland, Ohio

WHO'S LOONEY NOW?

Why the man who thinks he's saving money by using Song Slides from a Film Exchange.

WRITE FOR OUR LATEST PROPOSITION

New Address:
Chicago Song Slide Exchange
Sixth Floor, Portland Block
107 Dearborn Street Chicago, Ill.
Dept. 1.

SONG SLIDES

NON-BREAKABLE—NON-INFLAMABLE

Colored Song and Announcement Slides

Patent Applied For

Just the kind of a slide you have all been waiting for. Guaranteed against breaking from heat or the careless operator. Send for list. Made and sold only by the original inventors. None others genuine.

NORTH AMERICAN SLIDE CO., 143 North 8th Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SLIDE SLIDE

SONG SLIDES

SEND IN YOUR BID QUICK

BEFORE THE TERRITORY YOU WANT IS SOLD

For the exclusive City or State Rights for the only moving pictures of

Buffalo Bill's Wild West & Pawnee Bill's Far East

If you want to make big money on an Exclusive Proposition that will stand repeating, get the pictures of the WILD WEST and FAR EAST, combined.

BUFFALO BILL and PAWNEE BILL draw larger crowds to their exhibition than any show on earth. These pictures will draw larger crowds than any ever made, and they will never lose interest. With the 3000 feet of film you can show in any theatre the complete BUFFALO BILL WILD WEST and PAWNEE BILL FAR EAST exactly as it is exhibited in the open arena. You can give a genuine $1.00 show at a low price of admission.

Not only the Wild West but the Rough Riders of every nation, the Far East—all combined make the 3000 feet of film novel and exciting from start to finish—the Greatest Drawing Card in the World.

Seven color lithograph posters. Fine assortment of large size photographs for lobby frames, heralds, cuts, etc. Everything to help you get the money.

Buffalo Bill & Pawnee Bill Film Company

care of MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

111 East 14th Street, NEW YORK

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, 61 W. 14th St., NEW YORK CITY

"SIXTEEN TO ONE"

Is The RATIO of THRILLS Found In Every Inch Of

THE GOLDEN HOARD

LENGTH, 930 FEET. RELEASED WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th, 1910

EXHIBITORS!!

Thanks for your kind letters, your warm praise and your deep interest in NESTOR FILMS. Our appreciation is evidenced in our efforts to give you something better all the time.

We are now equipped with new addressing machines and other up-to-date appliances, and, henceforth, you will receive, week per week, NESTOR'S BULLETIN. If you have sent us your name and fail to get our BULLETINS, please write again. If you have not yet sent in your name, do so at once, as no MAILING LIST, however big, is too big for us to manage.

Brief and to the Point!

"Your Films are Great!"

So write these exhibitors:

HARRY M. PALMER, Mgr., New Grand Theatre, Washington, Ind.

COMET AMUSEMENT COMPANY, 112 E. Ohio St., Pittsburg, Pa.

H. W. MINIER, Mgr. Theatre Comique, 279 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada.

Scene from "THE GOLDEN HOARD"

"THE GOLDEN HOARD" is a Typical NESTOR PICTURE—just the sort that brings us a deluge of cards bearing the simple and sincere comment;

"GREAT! DO IT AGAIN!"

This truly Enjoyable Story of the West, portraying a father's love for his only child, a daughter; his gold-hoarding mania for her sake; the girl's successful romance with a worthy man and the vain plottings of a ruffian, Deserves to be Placed at the HEAD OF YOUR PROGRAM.—GET IT! SEE IT! and you will give this NESTOR GEM the Place of Honor.

STIR YOURSELF NOW! Don't let them bamboozle you! GET what you want—and you CERTAINLY want "THE GOLDEN HOARD." ROUGH-HOUSE TILL YOU GET IT!

SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY

111 East 14th Street, New York

SLEEPING TIME IS PASSED. If Your EXCHANGE Is Not On NESTOR'S LIST, WAKE IT UP INSTANTLY!

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

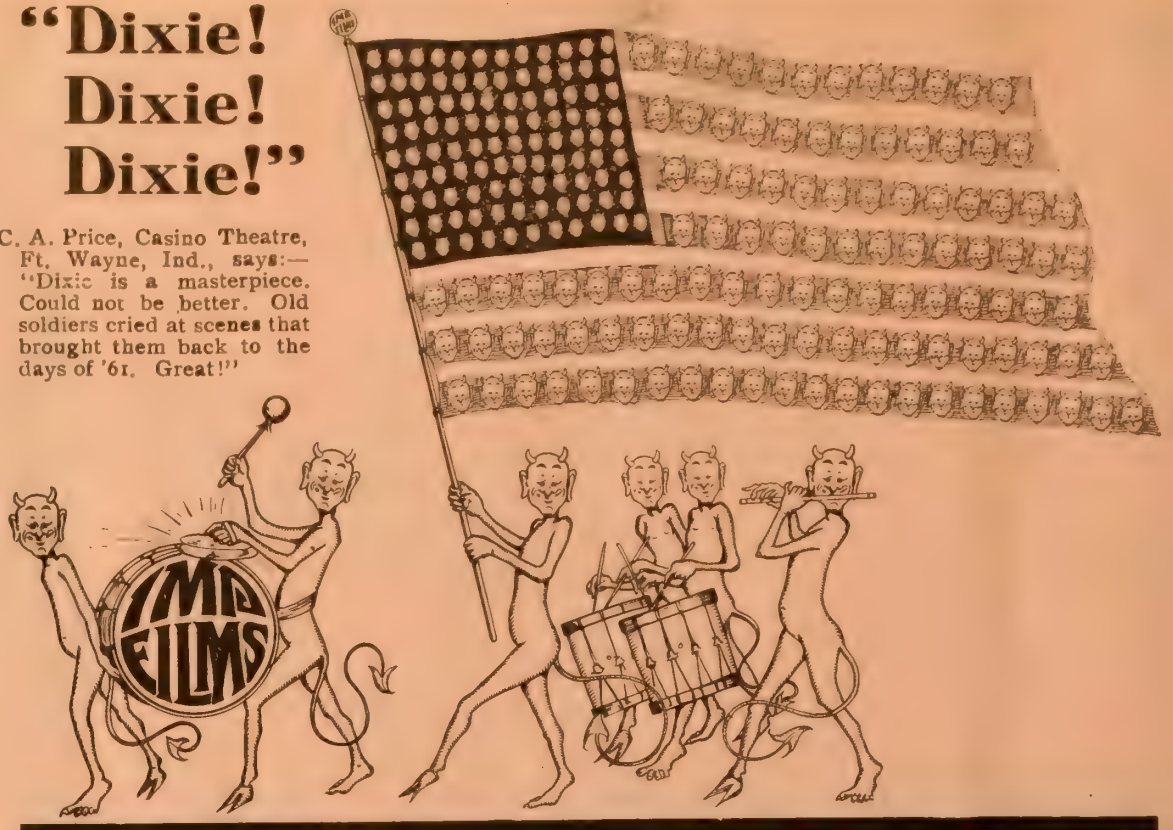
ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO.	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE	602 Dooly Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
CINCINNATI FILM EXCHANGE	315 West 4th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO	Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
DIXIE FILM CO.	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La.
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
EMPIRE FILM EXCHANGE	150 E. 14th St., New York City
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E.	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO.	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE	934 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE	155 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO.	723-34 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
SWANSON, WILLIAM H	301 Railroad Bld'g., Denver, Colo.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO.	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM & SUPPLY CO.	112 N. Market St., Wichita, Kan.

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

"Dixie! Dixie! Dixie!"

C. A. Price, Casino Theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind., says:—"Dixie is a masterpiece. Could not be better. Old soldiers cried at scenes that brought them back to the days of '61. Great!"



Three Imps on Two Reels!

You are going simply wild with delight over our next two reels! You are going to yell for joy! You are going to write your exchange a letter of thanks for supplying you with these two glorious reels! This sounds over-enthusiastic. But when you see the two releases you will say we did not praise them one-half enough. On Thursday, October 13—remember that date—we will produce a full reel entitled

"The Garden of Fate"

The most gorgeous production of years. The settings are lavish. The acting is perfect. The story is great. The costuming is grand. In fact the whole picture is a veritable dream, one which you simply must not miss. We doubt if we can equal it again in many a long month. We urge you to demand it with all your might and main. You'll regret it if you don't!

"Jes Plain Dog" "A Game of Hearts"

Each of these two subjects is 500 feet long. They appear on our split reel of Monday, October 10. Critics who have been given an advance peep at "A Game of Hearts" have laughed till their Adam's apples ached. And when they saw "Jes' Plain Dog" they didn't know which of the two they liked the better. Gentlemen, if you wish to set your patrons on edge with pure joy, do your part by begging, scratching and clawing for our releases of October 10 and October 13.

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP AMERICA

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America.
102 West 101st Street, New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.
All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP AMERICA

JEALOUSY

WHO IS JEALOUS?

The Columbia Film Company is not jealous of anybody. Although we have

Jealousy for release of Oct. 8th

We hope this release will not rouse our brother manufacturers to a jealous frenzy.

THE SAME SUN SHINES FOR ALL

Perhaps it shone kindlier on us when we photoed Jealousy, thus accounting for the fine photography. It is very picturesque and the acting will please, while the story although sensational is not at all objectional, and when the ladies leave the theatre they will be discussing it.

Jealousy and discontent have made the world what it is. If our ancestors had not been jealous and discontented we would still be dwelling in caves and carving pictures on bone instead of making them on film. And we are making them. Pictures that tell, that leave an impression, that will be always features. See our releases and be convinced.

Tracked Across the Sea—Oct. 15th
Breaking Home Ties—Oct. 22nd

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!!

After October 15th, 1910, we will make our productions at Miller Brothers 101 Ranch, Oklahoma!!!!!

And authoritively state we will make the largest and most important productions ever given in the history of the exhibition business. We mean in any branch, for there we will have the true Western Atmosphere, great numbers of real Indians, genuine bronchos with cowboys and every facility for doing the best work. Our dramatic company is composed of many of the most prominent actors and actresses, and in point of elegance of the lady's wardrobe, massive construction of interior scenery, thoroughness of direction, adherence to detail and photography we feel convinced our productions will be classed with the best.

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Sold Through The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

VITAGRAPH

"LIFE PORTRAYALS"

FOR RELEASE TUESDAY, OCT. 11

BROTHER MAN

Intensely Human Drama—Showing how the heart sympathy of two men of opposite life resulted in saving one from a career of crime. Appoximate length, 610 feet.

ACTORS' FUND FIELD DAY

Stars of the Stage as they appeared in their annual out-door games and festivities. Very funny. Approximate length, 387 feet.

BROTHER MAN

FOR RELEASE FRIDAY, OCT. 14

ON HER DOORSTEP

Refined Society Comedy—How a persistent young lover refuses to be dismissed and finally wins forgiveness from the girl of his heart. Approximate length, 967 feet.

FOR RELEASE SATURDAY, OCT. 15

THE LEGACY

Rich Farce Comedy of the homespun kind. The experience of an old country couple who come to the city to live. Approximate length, 982 feet.

If you are not getting our Bulletins, send in your name and address at once. In making revisions a number of names have been dropped by mistake.

USE VITAGRAPH POSTERS. Posters specially made for each Film Subject. Order from your Exchange or direct from us.

The Vitagraph Company of America { NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. PARIS, 15 Rue Sainte-Cecile

Vol. 7., No. 16. October 15, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

THE ORGAN OF THE PHOTOPLAY AND ALLIED INTERESTS.

Publication Offices: 125 East 23rd Street (Beach Building), New York City.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6

THE PERFECT MOTION :: PICTURE MACHINE ::

Used by the best and largest moving picture theatres everywhere.

"The Lyceum," "Crand Central," "Casino," "Gem" and other big houses in St. Louis use No. 6, and I guess it is good enough for me. (Signed)

HENRY HALLWAY
321 N. Second Street,
St. Charles, Mo.

Dated Sept. 16th, 1910.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE G DESCRIBING ALL MODELS

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 NASSAU STREET : : : : NEW YORK CITY

For Thirteen Years the Leading Manufacturers of Motion Picture Machines

"THE FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN" IS COMING!

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man for

A PEACHES—AND—CREAM COMEDY!

Oh, What a Knight!

will mean Oh, what a night for your theatre!—if properly "pushed" and properly projected. SEE WHAT IT IS! Post the synopsis on your "coming Thanhouser" board and print the synopsis on a hand bill. Announce it well on your advertising slides. Be sure your operator has a good light and an O. K. machine when he runs the picture and—OH, WHAT A NIGHT! It's up to you!

RELEASED TUESDAY, OCT. 18th

App. Length, 1000 Feet. No. 152. Code Word, Knight.

OH, WHAT A KNIGHT

THEIR CHILD

RELEASED FRIDAY, OCT. 21st

A THANHOUSER HEART-HITTER

Their Child

is a tremendous human interest subject that will do much to refute the daily press theory that there is naught of the uplifting in the moving picture. THERE'S PLENTY—IN THE PRESENT DAY PICTURE—AND THIS WILL GO TO PROVE IT. The reel is representative of the clean, forceful, film-drama so much in vogue this year; it affords brisk entertainment AND POINTS A MORAL THE WHILE. In a sense it is a problem play, and your patrons will be pleased to solve it.

App. Length, 1000 Feet. No. 153. Code Word, Child

Ask To-Day! Ask To-Day! Ask To-Day!

FOR

The FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN

A Novelty Film for 'Round and During Hallowe'en

RELEASED FRIDAY, OCT. 28th—Ask Your Exchange Man To-Day!

Have you dropped us a card for the THANHOUSER NEWS, "The Exhibitors Guide?" It's sent FREE of CHARGE to anyone who can show connection with the moving picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

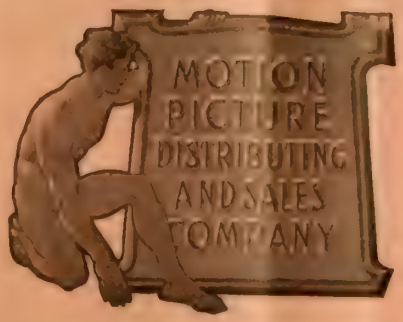
THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Say "Thanhouser" to the Exchange Man

The Sales Co., Agents for United States and Canada.

"THE FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN" IS COMING!



Unprecedented Success

Every day brings intelligent exhibitors to the Independent fold in large numbers. The Trust is frantically trying to stem the Tide of Defeat by the usual, intimidating tactics, but the exhibitor no longer fears Boisterous Bluffs and is now convinced he knows how to run his own business. Our Program is All-Convincing. There is no guess work about the Independent Product of today. It stands out a Mighty Monument to Pluck, Courage and Determination. It speaks for itself.

YOU ARE MASTER OF YOURSELF

Remember that, Mr. Trust Exhibitor. Your intelligence can no longer be insulted. You know you can go independent and your service will show improvement. DO IT NOW.

ORDER OF RELEASE

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
COLUMBIA—Columbia Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.
RELIANCE—Carlton Laboratories.
1st. Release, October 22.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, September 21st, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.

CALIFORNIA.

California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

COLORADO.

W. H. Swanson Film Exchange, 301 Railroad Bldg., Denver.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Consolidated Film Exchange, Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta.
Sunny South Film Exchange, Rhodes Building, Atlanta

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 79 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
H. & H. Film Service Co., 98 Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.
Standard Film Exchange, 155 E. Washington St., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 400 Sykes St., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1230 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1317 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Buckeye Film & Projection Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Capitol Film Service, 422 N. High St., Columbus.
Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Co-operative Film Exchange, 220 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

"RELIANCE" FILMS

First Release, Saturday, October Twenty-Second

"In the Gray of the Dawn"

A stupendous production, with magnificent costumes, superb photography, exquisite toning and beautiful tinting, which, viewed from any standpoint, will rank as the

WORLD'S MASTERPIECE OF MOTOGRAPHY

Portraying the human passions so vividly that the hearts of the characters seem bared upon the screen,—pulsating with love, overflowing with charity and repentance,—and the finale shows the battle fought by a woman with her conflicting emotions, every fibre of her being yearning passionately for the affection of the man who has led her from dubious paths into the light of respectability and proffered marriage,—opening wide to her the gates of earthly paradise,—and her conscience bidding her send him back to his blind fiancee from whom she has unwittingly lured him. To save the man from self-destruction which he threatens in his mad infatuation, and to gain a few moments' respite, she apparently consents to the marriage, and while he dashes joyfully away for a minister she ends her own existence. He returns,—in the gray of the dawn,—and as he fondles the lifeless form of the beautiful creature in a paroxysm of grief, the minister solemnly raises his hand to heaven, saying, "It is the will of God"—presenting a tableau which will live forever in the minds of those witnessing it.

The ballroom scene, where the queen of the demi-monde meets the youth,—the blind girl pining for her loved one,—the clash of the rivals for the affections of the lovely courtesan,—are but few of the intense dramatic incidents portrayed in this subject with faithfulness of detail seldom seen in motion pictures.

MISS MARION LEONARD,
Leading Woman Carlton Stock Company

A compelling story, with a cast of 75 people, the principal roles being interpreted by leaders of the motion picture dramatic field, including

MARION LEONARD — HENRY WALTHALL — GERTRUDE ROBINSON
ARTHUR JOHNSON — JAMES KIRKWOOD — PHILLIPS SMALLEY
FRANCES BURNS

MR. EXHIBITOR: Begin today demanding this subject of your Film Exchange. If, for any reason, you cannot secure our first release, wire us and we will cheerfully give you the name of the nearest exchange who has ordered RELIANCE FILMS.

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES

1 UNION SQUARE : : : : : : : : NEW YORK CITY

Tracked Across the Seas

Columbia Release of October 15th

A picturesque and stirring story of adventure, self sacrifice, and romance. The scenery is the best ever and the photography fine, while the interest of the subject never sags.

It will be a business getter.

Breaking Home Ties

Release of October 22nd

This is a gripper of the heart strings and is bound to please the most critical.

After October 15, 1910, we produce from

Miller Bros. 101 Ranch

In Oklahoma

There we will do the Western and Military Drama in the most spectacular manner with unequalled numbers of horses and riders, correct costuming and good acting.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this move, for it means the productions of reels unsurpassed for magnitude of people and horses, and nothing will be wanting to make them as artistic and impressive as any enrertainment ever offered the amusement going public.

WATCH OUR FIRST WESTERN RELEASE

We will offer the largest numbers of Equestrians ever gathered for amusement purposes. Real Buffaloes, Handsome Wild West Girls, Daring Mexican Vacqueros and the always favorite American Cowboy. In fact this will be a veritable congress of world wide riders. The largest numbers of Indians that ever rode before an audience will vie in supremacy with horsemen from Berlin, English Cavalry Regiments, Dashing Japanese, Fierce Wild Riding Cossacks and a detachment of our own Boys in Blue.

Our dramatic company will equal the above in importance.

Our scenarios have been furnished by notable writers.

Wardrobe, scenery, furniture, properties and everything needed to fulfill the highest ideals of theatrical achievement will not be wanting.

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Selling exclusively through The Motion Picture Sales and Distributing Co.

FIVE REELS A WEEK

Bison  Films

Tuesday; A "Bison" Wednesday, "Ambrosio"
Thursday; "Itala" Friday; A "Bison"
Saturday; "Itala"

2 WESTERN REELS 2

ASK FOR THEM!

"A Cowboy's Daring Rescue"

Bess' sweetheart, Jack, saves her father from being plucked by the card sharps. They attempt to revenge themselves, but are frustrated by Jack; and Bess, detained by them in the mountains, is rescued. Daredevil riding and critical scenes. A reel of action throughout.

Released Tuesday, October 11.

"The Prayer of a Miner's Child"

Appropriating a horse to reach a doctor thirty miles away to minister to his injured child, Jim has an exciting experience with a posse of cowboys who believe him a horse thief, but is released by the sheriff, who learns the true facts through listening to the evening prayer of the miner's child.

Released Friday, October 14.

2 WESTERN REELS 2

GET THEM!

"AMBROSIO" RELEASE—WEDNESDAY, OCT. 12th
"THE BETROTHED'S SECRET"
"TWEEDLEDUM ON HIS FIRST BICYCLE"

"ITALA" RELEASES
THURSDAY, OCT. 13th
"MYSTERIES OF BRIDGE OF SIGHS AT VENICE"
SATURDAY, OCT. 15th
"PAID BOOTS AND STOLEN BOOTS"
"A PEARL OF BOY"

EXHIBITORS: Send your name and address for our mailing list and we will send you weekly a sixteen page book entitled "Film Fancies" giving full synopsis of our films and other interesting matter. Profusely illustrated.

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

New York Motion Picture Co.

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
Lincoln Bldg., 1 Union Square, New York City
CORNER 14th STREET.

Comets Have Tails Cameras Tell Tales

OUR NEXT RELEASE

THE

Tale a Camera Told

TELLS A WELL-TOLD TALE, WORTH SEEING AND TELLING

They say farmers are early risers, but here is a film showing how a riser was taken out of a rube, who was snapped while he napped.

To see a rube outdone is worth your mon, Go get it and don't miss the fun.

REMEMBER

the Release Day of
"THE TALE A CAMERA TOLD"
IS
Thursday, October 13, 1910

DEFENDER FILL-EMS

WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 East 14th St., New York

Sold only throught the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

CAPITOL FILMS

One a Week, but One GOOD One

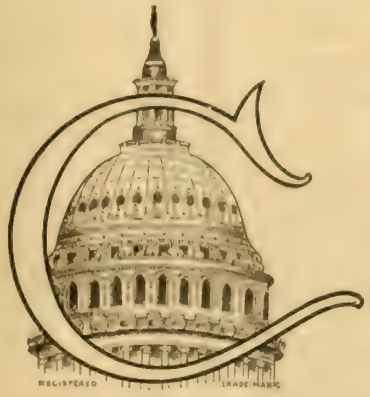
Release October 8th

All's Fair in Love and War

WITH

Col. JOHN S. MOSBY

the famous leader of Mosby's Guerrillas of '61.



Release October 15th

A Shot in the Night

A strongly dramatic production, skilfully interpreted and photographically perfect.

EVERYBODY Get on Our Mailing List for Lithographs, Lobby Hangers and Synopses. Mailed Free Each Week in Advance

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D. C.

SIG G. BERNSTEIN, Gen. Mgr.

Feature Release Saturday, Oct. 15th

A WOMAN'S WIT

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

'NOUGH SED

Release of Tuesday, Oct. 18th

SLEEPY JONES—AND—THE DEVIL

Two Good Howls on One Reel

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

Get on our Mailing List. You need what we have, and we need what you have.

LUX FILMS

The World's Best—Bar None

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES

Split Reels give variety, and your patrons want variety. Add to the popularity of your program by showing the Lux release every week. Order this one TO-DAY.

Bill and the Missing Key

Length 534 Feet—Drama

Runaway Star

Length 413 Feet—Comedy

Released, October 13, 1910

Do not Forget the Free Colored Lithos.

R. PRIEUR

10 E. 15th Street, New York City

Telephone Call, 3124 Stuyvesant

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

Roosevelt Endorses 'Cupid'

DURING one of his famous speeches, Theodore Roosevelt testified to the power of "The Winged Archer," who was the hero of our release of October 5th.

Hundreds of enthusiasts back up "Teddy's" assertions by congratulating us on the superior goodness of "WHEN CUPID SLEEPS."

We're Gingering Up Old Atlas

Everybody pulled together last week and we turned out a pair of comedies that will make Puny Imitators turn tail and scurry for shelter.

(GENTLEMEN BE SEATED)

"We next present to your notice the merry makers from the Atlas Amusement Ateliers." (Apologies to Dockstader.)

The Cat Came Back

Some new exploits of the old film favorite.

A FELINE FURORE

Imperfect Perfectos

A ripple-raiser, built around Alexander Dowie's "Filthy Habit"

SYMPOSIUM IN SMOKE

Both Out October 19 and Wednesday

Get Talked About---Show ATLAS FILMS

Important: We will mail our Lobby Hangers next week. Send us your name and address for one.

ATLAS FILM CO.

10 East 15th Street New York City

GREAT NORTHERN

Release for Saturday, October 8th

"The Storms of Life"

A powerful dramatic production containing an appealing love story which arouses both sympathy and interest for the pretty heroine. Realistic and true to life. Full Reel subject. Don't miss it.

Release for Saturday, October 15th

"SAVED BY BOSCO"

A thrilling story in which an intelligent dog plays an interesting and important part.

"Willie Visits a Moving Picture Show"

A bully comedy all about Willie, a hen-pecked husband—nuf sed.

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Stands for Quality!

Many Big Headliners! Watch for Them!

Help insure your business by having Great Northern films on your programme. No programme is complete without one.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCTIONS

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

Eclair Films

THE ONE BEST BET

For October 17th

A TWO SUBJECT REEL

Dr. Geoffrey's Conscience

659 FEET

A pathetic little story of real life; of real heart interest throughout.

An Indian Chief's Generosity

321 FEET

A story of an Indian's sense of justice, contrasted with a white man's cruelty. A most beautiful film, that will appeal to all classes.

Cines Films

For October 14th

The Mad Lady of Chester

965 FEET

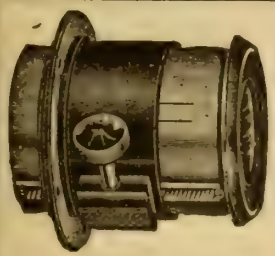
The story of a great love, in which History plays a strong part; a film that holds one spellbound from start to finish.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.

CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

Champion Films are causing more meritorious comments than any other films on the market, and our next release

Stolen By Indians

Released Wednesday, October 19

contains 950 feet of soul-stirring, awe-inspiring Western Drama, of our usual class, in which a mother's love for her child, in their struggle for existence during pioneer days, is pictorially demonstrated.

Scene from STOLEN BY INDIANS

Extract from a Letter Complimenting "CHAMP" Production

DEAR SIR:—If you have photographs of your stock company, I would like to have some of same to exhibit in my theatre, as my patrons all ask for CHAMPION pictures, claiming they are out of the ordinary everyday Western chase and foolish comedy.

(Signed) GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Portland Theatre. 248 First St., Portland, Ore.

SEE "PAST PERFORMANCES" FOR CHAMP FEATURES

CHAMP

THE CHAMP STAMP

CHAMPION FILM CO.

Mark M. Dintenfess
General Manager

12 East 15th Street
NEW YORK, U. S. A.

Laboratories at Coytesville on the Hudson

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company
111 East 14th Street, New York City

Live Men Are On Our Mailing List—Are You

The Urban-Smith Process of Motion Pictures

In Natural Colors

as described by Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S., in the reading columns of the Moving Picture World, of which he is one of the editors, and begins in the October 8th number.

THAT'S KINEMACOLOR

WHICH WE ARE MAKING COMMERCIALLY PRACTICAL

EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS FOR SALE

The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

INDEPENDENT, COMPETITIVE, PROGRESSIVE

UTAH'S ONE BEST BET

Revier Motion Picture Company

TRADE

MARK

WITH THE LARGEST PLANT IN THE WEST

OUR MOTTO

"See Trust Films if You Must, but Try Our Releases First."

The natural scenery of the Mormon State is the equal of any the world over for the production of motion pictures.

Ample capital is available and people of long experience have charge of our production.

We Are Ready---Our Aim The Best

WATCH FOR OUR FIRST RELEASES

Offices:
Majestic Theatre Building
H. REVIER, President

Salt Lake City, Utah

FACTORY:
Sugar House Station

Fairness to All, Privileges to None, Correspondence Solicited

THE REASON WHY

The MOTIOGRAPH is so rapidly DISPLACING ALL OTHER MACHINES is that managers are learning that

IT WILL BOOST THE BUSINESS

more than anything they know of.

DOZENS OF MOTIOGRAPHS have been installed recently to TAKE THE PLACE OF OTHER MACHINES many of which had been USED ONLY A FEW MONTHS.

THE MOTIOGRAPH has been

A BIG SUCCESS FROM THE BEGINNING

Each successive model is an improvement over the preceding one. The moral is DON'T EXPERIMENT. BUY ONLY THE MOTIOGRAPH.

THE BEST MACHINE MADE

WRITE FOR CATALOG

PATENTED AND MANUFACTURED BY

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

564-572 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

J. H. HALLBERG, Agt.
New York City

J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt.
London, Paris, Berlin

UNCLE SAM FILMS
MADE BY YANKEE FILM COMPANY NEW YORK
TRADE MARK

A Sign of Supremacy

Combine Superb Acting, Novel Settings, Perfect Photography and Big Situations with a Story which Throbs and Vibrates with Interest and you have A Typical Yankee Production. It's title is;

THE COPPER AND THE CROOK

Released Monday, October 17

"A new cop," assigned to an East Side "beat" breaks up the noted "Growler Gang" and then befriends the leader after his prison term is served. You can make them "Come Back" with this Big Film. In short,

YANKEE FILMS ARE "BIG SHOWS"

They are Massive, Expensive Productions.

WATCH FOR THESE
OCT. 24. SOLVING THE BOND THEFT
OCT. 31. ROMANCE OF THE SWEAT-SHOP

EXHIBITORS—"Film Fiction" will be mailed soon. Your name and address is necessary.

YANKEE FILM CO., 334 E. 32d St., NEW YORK

WRITE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO.

Telephone 6170 Madison Square

The ALBA Flaming Arc Lamp

Will turn your street into a small "Great White Way" at such a small cost that you will be ashamed to pay it. It is the best advertisement you can get. It brings people to your theatre, and makes them come in when they get there. They simply can't resist the allurement of its cheerful, animating light. It will attract the best class of people—those who would be repelled by the yellow glare of the old fashioned flame arc.

It combines attractiveness and refinement, and enhances the beauty of your theatre in a really artistic manner.

Sold and guaranteed by the owners of the famous BIO Carbon.

BIO Carbons inside, and ALBA Lamps outside, make an irresistible combination.

Ask for our catalog "A"

CHARLES L. KIEWERT CO.

39 Courtlandt Street, New York — 58 Plymouth Court, Chicago
421 Frick Building, Pittsburg — 114 Huron Street, Milwaukee
195 Fremont Street, San Francisco

A GREAT COMEDY

A Summer Flirtation

To Be Released on Wednesday, October 12th

One of the best comedies yet turned out by our American company. Full of snap and ginger and bound to make a big hit.

A FILM YOU CAN FEATURE

41 West 25th Street NEW YORK — PATHÉ FRÈRÉS — 35 Randolph St. CHICAGO

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands.

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3¼ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building, Chicago). Telephone Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 OCTOBER 15, 1910 No. 16

Summary of the Week.

Photoplay, Winning Word in Essanay Contest.....858
Mrs. Clement and Her Work 859
"The Elusive Quality." By Jane Elliott Snow.....860
Amateur Night 861
The Sentiment of the Picture—A Visualization of "The House of the Seven Gables." 862
An Answer to Censorious Busybodies 863
The Drama of the People 865
"Man-About-Town" on Some Recent Pictures.....866
Chicago Notes 868
Vaudeville 868
Operators' Column—Questions and Answers. By F. H. Richardson 869
Race Ridicule 872
The Bergen Airdome, Jersey City 873
Comments on the Films 874
New England Notes 880
Licensed Release Dates 888
Independent Release Dates 894

NOTICE.

The new Western offices of the Moving Picture World, Rooms 307-309, Post building, 160 Washington street, Chicago, are now ready to receive World readers visiting Chicago. Mr. John M. Bradlet, Western representative of the World, will extend to every one a cordial welcome. They will find a complete file of manufacturers' catalogues and a bureau of information on films, theater construction, materials and supplies. They will also find desks and stationery for their correspondence, the services of a lady stenographer and a polite messenger boy to act as their guide or go their errands. We invite every exhibitor or person interested in motion pictures to make our Western office their headquarters when visiting Chicago.

The Usual Thing.

THIRD ARTICLE.

The career of the press agent in the moving picture field has been a brief and inglorious one. It was pointed out in these pages some months ago that the moving picture press agent constituted a danger to the business. Usually he was, and is, a young man with command of a superabundance of words and little or no knowledge of the pictures he is paid to boost for his employers at so much per week. We have been at pains to study the antecedents of some of these enterprising press agents. What they have omitted to learn about the picture is considerable. Yesterday, one was press agent for a hotel, another was writing about clothing, another was doing duty for an actress, etc. In fact none of these press agents was or is a picture man. Time, however, may and probably will, change all this. A young statesman on the other side of the Atlantic was once twitted on account of his extreme youth. He shrugged his shoulders and replied, "I will get over that in time." The moving picture press agent will get over his troubles in time.

The moving picture press agent, so far as he has gone, has been a very good friend to the usual thing. We have made it our business to carefully study many of the press agents' effusions that have been sent to us with regard to current releases, and with these highly colored descriptions in our hands, we have gone and studied the pictures, only to discover what we expected to discover, namely, the view taken by the inexperienced press agent was hardly that which we ourselves could conscientiously have taken. So we came to the conclusion that the press agent in the role of critic, or appreciator, must not be allowed to mislead the readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD any longer, or at all.

There has been far too much of lavish gush and slobbery praise written about moving pictures these last few months. Press agents, advertisement writers and others seem to vie with each other in laying on indiscriminate praise as thickly as they can. What is the result? The exchange man is misled, the exhibitor is disappointed and the public repelled. We know, of course, that exaggeration is an ingrained American habit, but, fortunately, like other bad habits that have characterized a young people, it is passing away. Even in the newspaper press of the country, sanity of expression stands higher in the market than it did some years ago. So it is with the picture. Indiscriminate praise of indifferent productions is working out its own destiny. It has deceived in the past, but it has been found out, and in time it will deceive nobody.

The value of these observations lies in their applications. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not lay open its pages to indiscriminate puffery at the hands of zealous press agents and others. We write our own criticisms and shall continue to do so. Sometimes a criticism in these pages is the result of the combination of two or three minds which have been set on a study of the picture for many years. Those minds may claim to be as well informed and as reasonable as any minds engaged in moving picture newspaper work, theatrical work, or any other branch of work, where the critical faculty, backed up by knowledge, and the ability to weigh "pros" and "cons," is demanded. The chief function of a critic is to appraise in due proportions the merits, demerits, features and characteristics of a picture. This should be done fearlessly and without bias in the interests of the reading public, who have a right to demand that what is printed for their information should be inspired by justice, truthfulness and common sense. Without egotism we may say that this is the policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in regard to its own comments. Those comments are inspired by a sincere regard for the picture no matter who makes it or where it is shown.

It was Pinero, the dramatist, who enunciated the singular doctrine that the chief duty of the critic was to hand out praise, and again praise. Nobody agreed with Pinero. Most people saw the fallacy of his dream. For it is clear that indiscriminate praise is certain, in the nature of things, to be misleading. Let each one who reads this article examine into his own conscience, and he will find, if he is true to himself, that he is a mixture of virtues and vices in varying proportions. If he delude himself with praise and accepts the persuasion that he was entirely good, he would deserve to be called a consummate idiot. No man is perfect. So it is with the picture. No picture is perfect. No picture can be perfect. The best a moving picture can be is to approximate to certain degrees of quality which go to make up a complete whole. The story may be correct in construction, the acting responsive to the author's meaning, the photography the best that modern technique can give, the scenery, the furniture and the accessories the best available. Now where and whenever the scenario, acting, photography, scenery, etc., fail in these vital essentials, it is the duty of the critic to point out for the benefit of the manufacturer and for the information of the reading public. This is what is precisely done in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Unfortunately, however, with so many callow minds in the business there is an inability to realize that there are certain definite standards of quality to which a moving picture may be referred and these people in their ignorance, stupidity, and penuriousness, are content to produce the usual thing: that is, a very indifferent moving picture. The dissemination of this class of picture, we repeat and reiterate, disgusts the public, and injures the business. That is why we again repeat and reiterate we are at some pains to write a third article deprecating the production of the usual thing. After all, this mood of ours in reference to the usual thing is but the logical result of what we have said many times before in reference to the prime necessity of QUALITY—GOOD QUALITY in pictures. It is all as simple as A B C.

So much interest has been aroused by these two or three articles on the usual thing, we have been gratified by such a large volume of approval of what we have written that we feel inclined to take a further step. That is, to eliminate from our weekly comments on the film, all references to the usual thing. In other words, we shall demand, before a picture be written about in these pages, that it approaches a certain standard of quality, a standard of quality which gives hope of better things. The mere fact that a manufacturer with a few hundred dollars at his command produces a film, has a right to critical recognition in these pages, is one that we most emphatically can not allow. In fact we will go a step further, and say that nobody has a right (mark our words, a RIGHT) to comments or write-ups, or whatever you like, in the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. These things are entirely at the discretion of the conductors of this paper, who are animated by a strong sense of duty towards its readers. As we implied last week on our front page, the contents of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD are prepared, printed and circulated, entirely at our own discretion.

"PHOTOPLAY."

Winning Name in the Essanay New Name Contest.

Photoplay is a name which may be applied as a description to the several thousands of theaters where motion pictures are exhibited, according to the decision obtained by the contest judges in the Essanay Company's New Name Contest, the purpose of which was to obtain a more suitable appellative for the phrase "moving picture show." If yours is the Lyric Theater, insert between "Lyric" and "Theater" the name "Photoplay." Out of more than 2,500 names submitted to the Essanay Contest Editor, the name "Photoplay" has been selected. The winner of the one hundred dollars, the reward offered by the Essanay Company, is Edgar Strakosch, of Sacramento, Cal., an exhibitor of motion pictures on the Pacific Coast.

One month from the date of the close of the Essanay contest, Judges George Kleine, Fred C. Aiken and Aaron Jones, made announcement of their decision in the following letter to the Essanay Company:

"Chicago, October 1, 1910.

"Essanay Film Manufacturing Company,

"Gentlemen—After careful consideration of the list of words submitted to us by you, from which we were to select a name which would be descriptive of the entertainment given in motion picture theaters, we have selected the word Photoplay as being more closely descriptive and more easily assimilated by the general public than any other of the long list submitted. While the word is not entirely satisfactory, considering every phase of the question, we were influenced in our selection by the necessity of adopting a term which would be easily remembered, descriptive in character, simple and appropriate. The word Photoplay seemed to us to have better chances of adoption by the public than combinations of more abstruse or technical terms such as kino, graph, drome, cine, etc. One may speak of 'going to the Photoplay' or 'seeing the Photoplay' as the public speaks of 'going to the opera' or 'hearing the opera,' these expressions conveying immediately an accurate idea of the character of the performance. Many of the names submitted show ingenuity and industry and you are to be congratulated upon the great interest which your contest has aroused.

(Signed) "GEORGE KLEINE,
"F. C. AIKEN,
"AARON JONES."

Mr. Strakosch has been connected with the moving picture business since August 26, 1907, when he opened the "Dreamland" at Sacramento, which at that time was the handsomest moving picture house on the Coast. In December of the same year, he added the "Bijou," and in October, 1908, "Wonderland." Prior to 1906 he was connected with leading theatrical enterprises in the East.

The Essanay contest opened about August 1 and closed September 1. During the month more than 2,500 contributions were received. While the majority of these were from the United States, there were also many contributions from Canada, England, Australia, and one from Rome, Italy.

There were three other contributions of the word Photoplay, but in accordance with the terms of the contest the first word received would win the $100. Mr. Strakosch's word was received August 17. There were many other names received which were highly recommended by the judges, but which were ruled out in favor of Photoplay for the reasons expressed in the letter above. A few of these are Kinorama, Photodrama, Mutodramic, Photodrome, etc.

Mr. Aaron Jones, one of the judges in the contest, and with the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, proposes to name a new theater this firm is erecting on Fifty-first street, Chicago, the Photoplay Theater.

"I have decided to name my new theater, now in the course of construction on Fifty-first street, the Photoplay Theater," said Mr. Jones, "and will use the name on all advertising matter for this theater. The Photoplay Theater will be one of the handsomest on the South Side."

Mr. George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, was pleased with the selection made by Judges Kleine, Aiken and Jones, and said:

"I believe the judges have chosen wisely in selecting the name Photoplay from the long list of names, many of which were highly creditable to the ingenuity and painstaking care displayed by their authors. In inaugurating this contest the Essanay Company appreciated the fact that there was a need for a more suitable descriptive name for the so-called 'moving picture shows,' and while the name, Photoplay,' may not be entirely satisfactory, considering every feature of our contest terms, the name is sufficiently descriptive, happily euphonious, and one which I believe will be easily popularized."

Mrs. Clement and Her Work.

Boston Influence in the Picture Field.

Nothing pleases us so much as to learn that the Moving Picture World is very largely read by women—women who are interested in the picture from all of its principal aspects. First of all, subjectively, then objectively. By subjectively, we mean as a technical and artistic production of graphic expression; objectively, as a means of entertaining, amusing or instructing the public. As we have said before, and as we say again this week elsewhere, the influence of good women in the moving picture field is of incalculable advantage and value in hastening the date when the picture will come into its right and full inheritance of being the principal means of entertaining and amusing the Plain People. And not only merely the Plain People, but also the Superior Person, when, or if, the Superior Person can beg, borrow, or steal brains enough to realize that the picture is not a pariah amongst the Arts, but is, or should be, as Arty as the other Arts.

With these few prefatory remarks, we desire to place on record the pleasure that we felt recently in a long talk with Mrs. Clement, who is widely known as the manager of the B. F. Keith Bijou Theater, Boston, Mass. In the World of August 20 we referred in favorable terms to the method of arrangement adopted in the program of this house, where, although moving pictures are shown, the moving picture alone is not presented to the public. The program is shortly this: The best kind of moving pictures obtainable; camera chats; that is, lantern slide lectures on suitable subjects; one-act plays and music; a special effort being made to accompany the pictures with suitable music. In other words, the picture is supplemented by other artistic acts.

In this program we see reflected the mind of Mrs. Clement. If we have analyzed that mind aright, she would be content to show pictures only at her Boston house, but she and others, including ourselves, are more or less cognizant that the position of the picture by itself is not of a sufficiently high average of technical and artistic excellence to satisfy discriminating people, and the public at large. Hence it is that a cultured woman like Mrs. Clement perceives the absolute necessity of supplementing the picture with these camera talks, one-act plays and music. Of course the Bijou Theater at Boston appeals to its own particular audience. We do not say that in other cities, including New York, similar audiences are not to be found, but we do say that there are not many like Mrs. Clement occupying the position of manager of moving picture theaters. Ignorant, obstinate commercialism of a shortsighted, money-grabbing kind, unfortunately rules the roost of the moving picture field to-day. Quick returns, and squeeze the last cent out of the business, as cheaply as possible, is unfortunately the motto of too many of the moving picture people in the game.

The picture is seldom given a fair trial in this country. Exchanges have to take what is given them; exhibitors are in the same predicament. There is little or no power of selection, and Mrs. Clement is very properly emphatic in her objection to a system which limits her purchasing and selective powers. "Why," she asked, "should I be debarred from presenting Kinemacolor to my audiences?" "Why," she further asked, "cannot I have a particular class of picture or particular single picture when I want to show it on my screen? Why, in short, should I be obliged to waive my own individuality and personality in this matter of the selection of pictures?" These, if not Mrs. Clement's exact words, are her sentiments. And they are the sentiments of many thousands of others in the business. It is certainly an extraordinary situation that in a free country you cannot buy what sort of picture you would like. You must not give the public of your best, you must give it exactly what other people tell you to do. To quote Mrs. Clement verbatim: "I am supplied by an exchange that does all in its power to give me the current pictures I wish to run, but under the existing conditions I cannot permanently acquire any picture, I am excluded altogether from exhibiting films of many producers, and there is no way I can stimulate the production of any particular class of pictures I wish to exhibit."

On the vexed question of vaudeville, Mrs. Clement seemed to be of the opinion that high-class vaudeville did not hurt the picture. Vaudeville of this kind in her view was called for, simply because the picture itself was hardly strong enough to attract the public. The pay box tells a story which admits of no refutation. Many houses we know rely almost exclusively upon the picture, but, generally speaking, the American public differs from the English, Australian and other publics, in that it will not stand for the picture alone. But then we all know that Americans like change, variety and plenty for their money.

The impression made upon our minds by our interview with Mrs. Clement was this: that in the interest and the progress of the picture an open market is distinctly desirable. Long ago, in these pages, we predicted the time when such distinctions as Licensed and Independent films would no longer exist, but that the exhibitor, and through him the public, would get, day by day, or week by week, the best pictures that were made. Peripatetic exhibitors, like Mr. Howe, can give their patrons almost exactly what they want. The stationary exhibitor of the type of Mrs. Clement is limited in her choice. For example: Mrs. Clement's mind, like our own, inclines towards the best scenic, industrial, scientific kind of picture. She, like ourselves, would like to take up Mr. Kleine's great catalogue and select films as occasion demands. But this is not possible, according to existing arrangements. Here we think that the progressive exhibitor has a distinct grievance against something, or somebody, somewhere.

"And do, please," Mrs. Clement asked, "use all your influence in the World to suppress the absurd system of daily changes at theaters in New York City and elsewhere." We are in sympathy with Mrs. Clement in this, her objection to these daily changes. We write from experience. Almost before we can realize it, right here in New York City, the picture is put on the screen, is taken off, and vanishes. We have often been to the necessity of tracking it from Fourteenth street to Harlem, from Harlem to Brooklyn or elsewhere. What is true of ourselves, who study the picture largely from business motives, is true also of vast numbers of the public. A and B see a good picture at a house to-day; they tell their friends to go and do likewise. When the friends go to these first run houses, the picture has vanished—an absurd state of things.

We look to Mrs. Clement to æstheticalize the moving picture house. If we had our way we would place the destinies of twelve or twenty of the New York houses in her hands, for we are convinced that her influence would be on the side of beautification, refinement and ideality of quality, both in the economics and administrative conduct of the house, as well as what was presented on the stage or the screen. It is for the widespread influence of such a personality as that of Mrs. Clement that the WORLD is constantly pleading. Shall we call it the Boston influence? For aught we care, the influence may just as well come from Kalamazoo or Mauch Chunk, so long as it is an elevating one. We would even go back on ourselves to some extent and tolerate vaudeville in a moving picture house: 1, if that vaudeville were always good; and 2, if the picture were always shown at its best, and were always of the best. Ditto with respect to the musical accompaniment, its setting and environment.

We are not opposed to vaudeville as such, we only object to it when it vitiates the picture, which, in our observation right here in New York City, it mostly does. Given an ideal picture ideally shown, and we do not fear comparison with vaudeville or any other cheap kind of entertainment which the proletariat, being poor, has to endure. Of course, to ventilate a personal preference we would like to live in an atmosphere of Wagner, Bernard Shaw, Pinero, Maeterlinck, Rodin, somewhere out in Lotus Land. But this sort of thing can only be dreamed of here in New York City. We after all belong to the picture public, and we speak and write as one of the picture public. It was as one of the picture public that we talked with Mrs. Clement the other evening. Nothing would delight us so much as to see Mrs. Clement swaying a sceptre similar to that of our friend West, of Australia and other parts of the world. West runs the picture only in the picture house with enormous success. We think Mrs. Clement can do the same.

"The Elusive Quality."

By JANE ELLIOTT SNOW.

The article bearing the above title in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of August 20, is certainly interesting, and one that will set the reader to thinking, at least it set me to thinking and as will be seen in this article, it also set me to talking, that is, talking on paper.

The elusive quality—what is it? Judging from the article, the elusive quality in the silent drama is something the same as the quality that distinguishes literature from ordinary writing.

Literature, particularly the world's best literature, must not only be well written, but it must deal with at least some one of the great problems of life.

So I take it that the elusive quality in the silent drama is the quality that deals with some great problems in life in such a manner that it will go beyond the canvas, beyond the footlights, out into the very hearts of the audience and set them to thinking about some of the great wrongs under which humanity is laboring, and how these wrongs can be righted.

Now were we to visit the thousands of moving picture theaters in this country to-day and ask the managers thereof what kind of pictures they were exhibiting, they would tell us they were exhibiting such-and-such pictures because the people liked them and there is a demand for them.

Then if we were to go to the film producers and ask them the nature of the films they are producing, they would say we are producing such-and-such films because they are the "best sellers."

Then if we would go back to the original producers, the writers of the scenarios, they would tell the same story. They are writing for the money there is in it. They are trying to please the editor, and the editor is trying to please the film producer, and the film producer is trying to please the manager of the theater.

So it is plainly to be seen that the whole business is governed by the law of supply and demand, or vice versa, by the law of demand and supply.

There is no use to talk about the ordinary moving picture theater standing for a church, or a school, or a reformatory. It will be up to those institutions to determine for themselves what the nature of their exhibits will be, if they have any at all.

The manager of the moving picture theater is conducting the business for the money there is in it. The people want to be amused and he is amusing them. Now the kind of amusement is largely determined by the taste of the people.

The generally accepted rules of society, municipal ordinances, and national laws, all have a tendency to keep the business in the hands of the right kind of people. For these blessings, as well as many more, let us be exceedingly thankful.

The writer of the article in question objects to the rough riders, and Wild West shows, and intimates that some living questions such as the mortality among infants in our large cities and the struggle of the poor, might form suitable themes for the writers of scenarios to work out.

Now it is my humble opinion that great as is the "slaughter of the innocents" in this favored land of ours, no film producers would want any phase of it in a picture designed for the amusement or instruction of the populace; for the reason that the newspapers are full of such stories and life is made up of so many tragedies that when it comes to being amused the darker phases of life must be eliminated.

As to the Wild West shows, the graver classes of our people are certainly weary of them. But it must be remembered that what suits one doesn't suit another; also that rough-riding and Indian forays are just now quite the rage. The small boy has his Indian costume and all the Y. M. C. A's and other organizations for helping boys have gone back to nature and are cultivating the wild life.

The spirit of atavism is in the air. Possibly our First American Citizen has had something to do in the matter.

As a rule, I think the trend of the silent drama is to show that virtue is rewarded and vice punished, but there is a tendency in one direction that I am sorry to see, and that is too many plays have the young lady make the advances. Now the girl who takes the initiative in the matter of courtship not only violates the rules of good society, but she defeats the very purpose she has in view, i. e., the capturing of a lover. This is especially true in real life, for the average man—certainly the man who is worth getting—never wants the woman who falls into his arms.

It is the woman that is hard to win that he is after.

A little miss at a moving picture show, seeing a young girl throw her arms around the neck of a young man, exclaimed: "The girls always hug their lovers, don't they, mamma?" Her little brother sitting near, said: "Ugh! I don't care for that; I want to see some shootin'."

These remarks show the influence of the plays mentioned on little girls, and also the taste of a boy as to what a play should be.

En passant, writers of scenarios are receiving all sorts of advice in these days of the strenuous life. One editor says, "Watch the plays! See what the people want."

A mother, who has been reasonably successful as a writer of scenarios, visited a moving picture theater, accompanied by her son, a young man of most excellent judgment. The "mother" was there to study the technic of the play, also to note what best pleased the audience.

To her surprise and mortification—the latter caused by the presence of her son—the play that aroused the most genuine enthusiasm and hearty encore was one that was suggestive of an unmentionable crime. And this play was put out by one of the leading film producing firms of America.

Before closing this article, I wish to make a plea for plays representing scenes and incidents in medieval and classic times. I feel quite sure that there is a large class of people who take pleasure in witnessing them.

Plays requiring costuming may be more difficult to produce than others, but they usually please.

The carelessly dressed cowboy and the rough brigand may do for a time, but they jar on the nerves if seen too often.

But once more to the text—That "elusive quality" and "here is hoping" that some fortunate writer will grasp and embody it in the form of a scenario that will live and do a grand, a noble work for humanity.

But after all this talk, it is possible that I have not caught the correct idea of the elusive quality and that what I have said has not been at all to the point. If so, will some one enlighten me?

Amateur Night.

By H. F. Hoffman.

Following the activities of the factory inspector of the State of Missouri, there was handed down a court decision that child actors are unlawful in St. Louis, whether professional or amateur, whether they perform for salary or compete for prizes.

Amateur night has degenerated into an awful thing these later years. More often than not it might be called a ribald orgy, or a slaughter of the innocents. The original idea of giving the youngsters a respectful chance to show their talent has developed into an institution of discouragement and wounded feelings. The idea has been very far fetched. For some years we have known that there were "professional amateurs," but now comes the gentleman in St. Louis who organized the "Amateur Trust," and in so doing he attracted the attention of the factory authorities by the very audacity of the thing.

This recent commercialization of amateur performers, together with the addition of "props," has spoiled what in other days was just as funny and which also carried with it the simple frankness of childish endeavor, that was not interfered with by any man with a "hook," and his idea that the "hook" was the only thing in the show. The man who invented the "hook" is the man who brutalized and reduced the amateur night to what it now is: a cheap, low down, threadbare scheme to get money through the pangs of the hearts of children.

Perhaps some of our readers will remember the good old days when we ourselves went on as amateurs. This article is based on experience both before and behind the scenes. Everybody laughed just as hard then as they do now and there wasn't any "hook." For instance, the writer, at the glorious age of fifteen, stood upon the stage of Kohl & Middleton's old West Side Museum, in Chicago. It was amateur night, and yours truly was there in the capacity of basso profundo to the "Ann St. Quartette," best on the West Side averaging fifteen years, bar none (the announcer said).

According to the custom for basso profundos, the deponent stood at one end; next to him was the baritone, then the second tenor, and at the other end was the silver voiced tenor. After a few false starts we got away in a bunch, and from that on could have continued indefinitely, when, for some reason, the silver voiced tenor developed a sudden attack of "cold feet" and hastily withdrew, unbeknownst to the rest of us, who still continued in harmony. Myself and the other two were a trifle perplexed as to why the audience was laughing but did not flinch. Presently the second tenor departed without notice immediately following a head-to-head chord in the close minor. The audience laughed harder and the baritone becoming uneasy glanced around and found himself exposed on the left hand side, whereupon he executed a backward flank movement and disappeared whence he had come. This triple exhibition of cowardice left the passo profundo unconsciously alone with the responsibility of delivering a four-part harmony, with only one voice, to a frenzied audience. Turning for encouragement to comrades who had fled, your humble servant retired amid screams and howls of delight.

The above instance is cited merely to bring to memory the days when there was no "hook." A hook would have spoiled that funny retreat as it has spoiled many a funny get-away. Nowadays the amateur gets no chance to show any ability, owing to the self-importance of the man with the "hook." He is ready on an instant's notice to drag anyone off at the slightest sound from the gallery, in fact the gallery is the judge of everything on account of the noise it can produce. The loudest mouth wins every argument.

Amateur nights as at present conducted simply encourage rowdyism. To be sure it is an inexpensive way of filling a house, but the house always suffers. There is something decidedly wrong in encouraging the ridicule of a boy or girl who is trying to please and who asks only a moment's chance to be heard. There is a pathetic side as well to amateur night, for in the hearts of those who volunteer is a longing and a hope that they may succeed. None of them come with the expectation of being guyed. They are serious and it all means much to them, therefore they should at least be given a chance to open their mouths before getting the "hook." Many a promising little turn is cut off merely on account of a moment's hesitation or temporary nervousness, and perhaps discouraged from ever appearing again.

To many in an audience, the brutal glee of the "roughneck" is a thing that turns them against the practice of amateur night. His keen delight at the distress of a fellow creature is a thing that makes good-hearted people wonder if they are among a savage tribe. Well, indeed, does the writer remember the terrible scoring that was given in the old West Side Museum by the announcer to a number of well-dressed rowdies who had hissed an amateur. He dared them to stand up and show themselves, which they did not do, and he concluded by informing the audience that anyone who would hiss an amateur is not as good as the amateur himself. In other words he protected his little volunteers and saw to it that they got a square deal, instead of subjecting them to unnecessary ridicule and humiliation.

It is not surprising then, in the light of later day happenings that St. Louis should sweep off "Amateur Night" with a broom. The conditions behind the scenes are worse than what is seen from the front. The managers are not discriminating in selecting their talent. As a rule all comers are taken and the stage is crowded. Newsboys and "rough-necks" predominate and it is among these that a mother must take her little girl if she would have the child appear. There is no deference among this lot to woman or womankind, consequently it is not difficult to understand how a talented little girl with an ambitious mother can soon become sophisticated and callous, by mingling with them several nights a week in quest of "prizes."

There is much good talent that is scared away by the rough way in which amateur affairs are conducted as a rule. So long as there is no separation of male and female behind the scenes there are many who will not venture there. It resolves itself into a question of whether it is better to conduct a rough-house, free-for-all, go-as-you-please, get-the-hook, amateur orgy, or whether to be a little more select with the talent and cut out the "hook." There is just as much fun the latter way and it will pay better in the end. At present "Amateur Night" is an unmannerly proceeding because it violates the very first principle of good manners, which is consideration for the feelings of others.

The Sentiment of the Picture.

By Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S.

As I start to write this article I hold in my hand a rose, the perfume of which suggests many reflections: of rose gardens and their attendant incidents in another country. Needless to say the perfume of a rose gives rise to many sentiments. The other evening I was walking along Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue. Unconsciously I was affected by my environment. I seemed to feel something glamorous and atmospheric. I mentioned my sensation to my companion and was given some idea of the peculiar characteristic of this part of New York City, which I had no difficulty in identifying with our own Pall Mall, London, the center of English club life, and just off the realm of fashion —where rank, beauty, wealth preside. That is also Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, New York.

Probably, therefore, this article which is the second under the same caption should be headed, "Sentiment and Atmosphere." The two things are interdependent. The rose and the New York streets of palaces tell the reader how sentiment and atmosphere can be suggested to a stranger in a strange city. I have often wondered, these last months, whether the sentiment and atmosphere of Nathaniel Hawthorne could be suggested on the moving picture screen. Hawthorne was a favorite, nay is a favorite, author of mine, just as is Marion Crawford and other American writers whom I might mention. Crawford, yeu know, in his books, suggests the atmosphere and sentiment of Imperial Rome in modern times. Some day we may see St. Ilario on the screen; also "A Roman Singer," "Saracinesca" and other beautiful works of this lamented writer. Hawthorne always appealed to me as something of a mystic. He was, if I remember aright, American consul at Liverpool, where he wrote the most consummate books having an indefinitely delicate style of treatment and atmosphere all their own. Mere words in this connection fail as a rule to convey one's meaning. One feels Hawthorne. The difficulty arises of conveying your feelings of a man's writings. I presume a cultured New Englander would succeed where the casual Englishman, with no knowledge of New England or the scenes amongst which Hawthorne placed his stories, must inevitably fail. But is not this, then, a tribute to the great writer, indeed to all great writers, that, by the mere power of words, they can so interest their readers that they are moved by the sentiment of the book or the poem to seek out the scenes of the plays or stories or romances and try to react those scenes for themselves? This is just what Christians of all denominations are doing every day. They are trying, with more or less success (less success, I fear), to get into the sentiment of the New Testament. They try to feel it and re-create its atmosphere and environment.

In this article there are reproduced some illustrations of the forthcoming Edison release, entitled "The House of Seven Gables," adapted from Hawthorne's famous novel. To me, at any rate, these pictures succeed in conveying what I would call a sense of what was in Hawthorne's mind when he wrote his book. I seemed to feel Hawthorne when I was looking at the film, and moreover I wanted the characters to speak, or rather more than on most occasions when I am looking at moving picture films. I felt the picture. I had seized the sentiment of it. It was the refined, scholarly Hawthorne on the screen. I would have known that it was a Hawthorne story if the title had not been printed on the film.

Old Matthew Maule is arrested for witchcraft.

Maule's execution. Pyncheon, who coveted his property, being chief instigator.

Maule's curse on Pyncheon discussed by the populace.

The ghost of Matthew Maule appears to [illegible] descendant of Pyncheon.

The photography of this subject is exceptionally good, and the acting and the like accurate. The dressing and the staging, too, are probably accurate. I write probably, advisedly. When these historical pictures are staged there is generally some hypercritical idiot who discovers some minute anachronism. If there is anything of the kind here I am unconscious of it. The picture is a success, although like everything that is good, refined and aesthetic in this world, it is probably above the heads of the sans culottes of Fourteenth street.

Hawthorne already figured on the screen in respect of his "Scarlet Letter." I should like to see "The Scarlet Letter" done by the Edison Company or some other great company. But, then, we have an absurd censorship to face. People are getting so stupidly squeamish in respect of the picture, the philanthropist and others who want us to live their lives instead of our own, have compiled such a large index of expurgatories that the poor film maker of to-day is cruelly limited in his choice of subjects for fear that he is up against one of the ten commandments, or the commandments of the Puritans, those uncomfortable descendants from Crumble's "Fanatics." I just wonder now if the censorious persons who might object to "The Scarlet Letter," would object on like grounds to a moving picture of the Biblical story of the woman taken in adultery. Will Mr. Collier and his friends kindly answer that question? If they object to the Biblical story then they must object to the Bible itself. Is it not so?

It is good for the great film companies to turn their energies to the production of films from classic subjects. It is atmosphere of a good kind which should serve to convince the scoffers that there is a desire on their part to use the picture as a means of conveying the very highest form of silent drama to the people. I think that these efforts on the part of the Edison and other companies, should receive commendation in the general press. I think also that such pictures as "The House of Seven Gables" and others which we could mention should be the means of allaying the misrepresentations about the picture and its influence which American newspaper men allow themselves to print. I think the Edison Company have not done with Hawthorne, even though they feel that the misadventures of poor Hester Prynne must not be filmed. There is "The Blithedale Romance," for example, which would make a very pretty comedy subject

---

An Answer to Censorious Busybodies.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

The sane answer to the proposed indiscriminate suppression of moving pictures is to produce pictures that should not and shall not be suppressed. Picture plays of strong interest can be produced that are not "abominations." The Vitagraph Company has clearly proven this in a modest way. They have demonstrated it in an unpretentious play which everyone liked, called "A Home Melody." No picture displayed in the past two weeks received more applause than this one; it went over, out into the hearts of the audience, without straining or artificiality. The pistol dramas and the war-whoop plays fell flat, were coldly received, while this simple touch of human nature gripped the interest of a mixed audience from the outset. There was no flag-flaunting to get a hand, no labored artifice. People liked it well enough to manifest decided approval, while the "usual thing" ran as stale as ever. Authors are writing plays and manufacturers are setting them forth for a single purpose, to entertain the audience, and "what the people want" is in no such decadent taste as the yellow bill-boards indicate.

Public taste may not be uniformly good, that is not the point, but it is good enough on the average to enjoy and appreciate plays of decency and cleanliness, the low taste is manifestly not theirs, but that of men whose own viewpoint is too limited to permit them to know what is going on in the world. All over this country the trend and tendency of the people is towards self betterment and the superior education of those who will be the nation's bone and sinew twenty years hence. The suppression of undesirable hereditary tendencies, the cultivation of self control, and the shaping of circumstances that exercise an influence on the formation of character, constitute the all-pervading questions of deepest interest, wherever schools and homes exist, throughout the length and breadth of the land. Anyone who disregards live issues of the day, who cannot emerge from the crust of old prejudices, may live and die in his shell as he likes, but when he emerges from it, to flaunt in the face of intelligence and progress all that was flat, stale and unprofitable in the decadence of his own generation, he ceases to be an innocuous has-been. He may only become a tiresome nuisance, devoid of originality and of adaptability to modern conditions, he is a dead cat in the gutter; without evil intention, he is an offensive object.

These dead cats, not the energetic and progressive men in the motion picture business, are responsible for any form of public revolt, be it local or national.

If the people like clean plays, and disapprove of those which are morbid, sanguinary, silly or so low in quality as to be demoralizing, where is the common sense in turning out reel after reel of punk to play on the emotions of a few weak dopes in the great mass who attend the exhibitions? The production of inferior plays has already been tried on the people of this country. There is an object lesson in the Stair and Havlin policy. The finest sort of artistic possibilities exist in motion pictures. Half the effect of stage plays is in the picture presented. The pictures in the Vitagraph play are exquisite. In the first scene we are irresistibly drawn to a family group by the quiet acting and a satisfying glimpse of home life. The actors are well selected and play their parts with fidelity to the truth. The settings are in fine taste. No effort of the imagination is required. We see a home in which there is peace and plenty before the action begins. The contented husband at the piano, the delighted friend listening, the fond mother at the harp, the charming little child singing, each is set forth with cameo-like distinctness. They become engraved in relief on the mind before the supposed tragedy takes place. The exteriors that follow are well selected. Such exteriors are impossible on the real stage. Maeterlinck's great play at the New Theater has met with disapproval because the settings do not follow nature. When, in the Vitagraph production, we follow the deranged mother along the course of a stream, the background is tremendously effective because of its reality.

"A Home Melody" treats of the restoration of lost states of consciousness by suggestion. It is a play of abnormal psychology, but it was instantly understood and appreciated. The theme is one of deep interest and susceptible of presentation in a hundred variations. The limited and temporary lapses of memory open up great opportunities for the playwright and afford opportunity for some fine acting. Recollection of past circumstances and events is something beyond the human will, this is shown every day when we try to recall something which refuses to present itself spontaneously. When the deranged mother sees the child she supposed to be drowned she cannot pick up the lost thread of her own volition, but the link is successfully made by "the home melody." Her mind is restored when the suggestion strings are pulled.

I have referred to this little play largely because it answers the complaint made that motion pictures are undoing the unselfish work of parents and teachers. It is hard work under any circumstances to direct the course of little lives into the right channels, to rouse notions of right and wrong. Children are highly emotional, their desires play a large part in determining their conduct and habits of thought, parents are busily occupied in correcting the impulses of the nascent stage, and the whole country is filled with fathers and mothers who want to have their sons and daughters succeed. They want to equip their sons with ability to battle honorably and with chivalry, the power to do their share without recourse to crooked methods. They want to enrich the lives of their daughters with the sympathy and unselfish kindness which enables woman to promote happiness in home life. Now any cheap and popular form of entertainment, which draws the attention of little and big children, which operates as a detrimental or a destroying influence, becomes a public menace. No injurious influence, be it pictural or literary is above criticism, nor will it stand long against the disapproval of intelligent men and women. No demoralizing influence is worth defending. There is no sense in assuming a defiant, what-do-you-know-about-it air. It is not a question of what anyone knows about it. The handwriting is on the wall.

The National Color Kinemacolor Company, of 82 Wardour street, London, send us a copy of their 1910 handbook, a well-printed, well-illustrated volume of 96 pages. This deals with Kinemacolor in its various phases, scientific and practical. The projector is very minutely described and illustrated. Attention is given to Kinemacolor outfits, cameras etc. It is a useful book for those interested in Kinemacolor. The frontispiece is a three-color reproduction of an Urban-Smith subject, "Picking Strawberries."

* * *

M. W. Shaeffer, proprietor of the Star Theater, Hanover, Pa., has placed an order with J. H. Hallberg, 36 East Twenty-third street, New York City, for a standard "Hallberg" automatic electric Economizer, to replace an inductor which he has had in service for a short time. The superior light with the "Hallberg" Economizer, as demonstrated in a nearby show, so impressed Mr. Shaeffer that he did not hesitate to exchange his inductor for the "Hallberg" Economizer.

* * *

Bill Swanson has again shown his good judgment by opening an exchange in Denver, Col. The exchange, which is located at 301 Railroad building, has only been opened about six weeks and the showing has certainly been far above expectations. Looks like the exhibitors in the Rocky Mountain district are showing their approval by applying to the new exchange for service in bunches. Friend Swanson has taken personal charge of the office during the past few weeks and has made many new friends and customers. The office is buying the releases sold through the Sales Company.

* * *

The State rights for the Buffalo Bill-Pawnee Bill pictures are selling rapidly. Most of the Canadian territory has already been sold. William J. McQuinn, manager for Morrison Amusement Company, at Meaford, Ontario, has purchased the rights for the Province of Ontario. The Canadian Film Exchange, at Calgary, Alberta, have bought the exclusive rights for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. In the United States, Florida, Alabama and Georgia, are controlled by William Oppenheimer, at Tampa, Fla. Texas, Oklahoma, and other Western States have been sold, as well as some Eastern territory. Those wishing to purchase State rights for the Buffalo Bill film had better negotiate for the same at once.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The B. B. Sign Company, Cleveland, Ohio, announce in this issue an innovation which will be of interest to everyone connected with the moving picture industry.

After months of experiment and preparation they are making up 12-foot banners for all releases on a specially prepared sign cloth as soon as the information can be obtained from the manufacturers.

These banners are gotten up in a very attractive manner and can be mailed or shipped in the case with the films without danger of damage, at so low a price that small circuits or exchanges now serving their customers with signs will find it to their interest to get in touch with this firm.

Their force of experts stand ready to give suggestions as to lobby and front display and catchy copy for signs at any time upon request.

They announce a catalogue in course of preparation which will be ready for distribution at an early date, showing any kind of a sign that a theater could possibly use.

ESSANAY REORGANIZE THEIR STUDIO AND PLANT STAFF EXTENSIVELY.

Many changes have been made in both the studio and plant staff of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company during the past two weeks, which cannot but greatly benefit the releases made by this firm. The production department at the big Chicago studio is in the hands of Harry McCrea Webster, stage director, well known both East and West as a man of unusual originality and ability in the theatrical world. An entire new stock company has also been enlisted and productions will shortly prove that no mistake has been made in this direction. Numerous other employees of the studio were also released and better people have been engaged to fill their positions. The printing, developing and mechanical departments also shared in a general change that cannot be otherwise than highly beneficial to the weekly output of this firm. The management also state that their Western company has been largely increased, and is in personal charge of G. M. Anderson, and under his direction, working in Colorado at the present time, making some very excellent subjects which are shortly to be released.

THE DRAMA OF THE PEOPLE

(Editorial from the New York Independent.)

The cinematograph is doing for the drama what the printing press did for literature, bringing another form of art into the daily life of the people. Plays are now within the reach, literally, of the poorest, as are good books and good pictures. The secret of cheapness in art as in other things is mechanical multiplication. So long as a play required for each presentation the active co-operation of a considerable number of more or less talented persons it could never be cheap, and in its better forms it was necessarily accessible to a comparatively small part of the population. But once on a celluloid film a spectacle can be reproduced indefinitely, the good as cheaply as the poor, and superiority is no longer handicapped. The same effect is shown in the field of literature. Among the dollar and a half books published every year there is a large proportion of trash or worse, but the volumes sold for fifty cents or less comprise the world's best literature.

The moving picture shows are in general superior, both artistically and morally, to the vaudeville and melodrama that they have driven out of business. It is a mistake to suppose that their amazing popularity is due altogether to their low price of admission. On the contrary the cinematograph has some advantages, not only over the cheap shows which it at first rivaled, but over any previous form of dramatic art. The most conspicuous of these advantages is spaciousness distance. The stage is at the best but a narrow platform. The characters must dodge out of the wings or pop out of a door at the back. They have their exits and their entrances, but all both necessarily sudden, more "dramatic" than lifelike.

But the moving picture show has a third dimension. The characters have a gradual approach and recession. The railroad train rushes toward the spectator; the horseman rides off through the woods or across the plain until he disappears in the distance. The scene of action is all outdoors. Rejoicing in this release from the limitations of the old drama, the moving picture plays at first were mostly routs. They gave the spectator a run for his money, a chase of comic or tragic character.

The abolition of the painted scenery of the backdrop gives to the drama a sense of reality, a solidity, that it never had before. The mountains and clouds do not now show spots of threadbare canvas. The tumbling waves do not throw up dust. The rocks and trees do not shiver at the touch of the actors. The sunshine is such as never came from calcium or carbon, and the wind that blows about loose hair and garments is not that of the electric fan.

In the al fresco performance of troupes of Summer players one corner of a lawn must serve as scene, helped out by a few potted shrubs and by trees with artificial limbs. The modern manager limits his playwrights to three or four changes of scenery on account of expense and the time it takes to set them. But for the cinematograph there are no such restrictions. There may be as many scenes as in an Elizabethan drama, for the setting may be changed in the twinkling of an eye, or it may be gradually shifted to follow the actors without jar or rumble. The moving scenery of Wagner's "Parsifal" and the treadmill of the race-course plays, which aroused the admiration of our fathers, seem to us absurdly crude and clumsy.

The divided stage, with its broken partition end on to the spectator, may also be sent to the lumber room. The moving picture has it in its power by alternating scenes to show us what is going on simultaneously in two different places, inside and outside a house, for example, or in adjoining rooms. He can vary at will the distance of the stage, giving us a closer view at critical moments. When we would see more clearly what emotions the features of the heroine express or what is in the locket she takes from her bosom we have no need to pick up our opera glasses. The artist has foreseen our desire and suddenly the detail is enlarged for us until it fills the canvas.

On the ordinary stage there is no good way of showing what is being written or read, however essential this may be to the plot. The actor has to read aloud his letter as he writes it as though he was not sure of its grammar. This device is no longer necessary. The incriminating note, the long lost will, the visiting card, the portrait, and the newspaper paragraph are shown to us directly and we do not have to hear of them at second hand. We see instantly what the hero sees when he puts the spyglass to his eye, and what the housemaid is looking at through the keyhole. Ghosts, visions and transformation scenes are accomplished in a manner truly magical, without the aid of the old stage contrivances, the steam curtain, the trap and the deus ex machina. Flying is as easy as walking. Acrobatic feats are unlimited. All miracles are possible, even that most marvelous of miracles, the reversal of the course of life.

The cinematograph theater is international. We do not have as formerly, translations, adaptations and misinterpretations. We have the real play, exactly as presented in Paris, London or Berlin. Villages in the Rocky and Carpathian Mountains look at the same scenes on the same day. Still, in spite of manifolding and syndicate management, some differences of national taste may be observed by one who visits the popular theaters of various European countries. Americans seem to prefer comic incidents corresponding to the usual short story; Germans, the sentimental novelette; English, melodrama; French, passional intrigue, and Italians, classical tales. But in any place one may often have the opportunity of comparing the acting of several different nationalities.

First night performances are no longer the privilege of the favored few. Every moving picture show is an original and unique presentation. The actors have had no time to become jaded and mechanical.

The replica of a painting, though by the same artist, is not esteemed so highly as the original. The three hundredth replica would be thought ridiculous. Yet of such repetitions our drama has hitherto consisted. The cinematograph actors, once their drama is satisfactorily played are released from it and may go about their business of preparing another.

Their achievement has now the permanence of a painting or a statue. Dramatic art may have a true history and make real progress now that direct comparisons can be made with the past. The great actor will still have fame but his head will not be turned by constant personal adulation. It is not the least of the advantages that dead men cannot rise to receive the applause that follows their death-scene.

We expect to see some time a stereoscopic colored speaking moving picture drama and it will be well worth seeing. It will be a new form of fine art not unworthy to rank with the elder arts.

Washington, D. C.—A happening important to moving picture circles, and more especially to the Independents, is the uniting of the Paramount Film Company and the Craft Film Company, under the name of the former, with W. H. Bradley and J. Boyd Dexter as co-managers. This was a wise move with a view of strength for the betterment of the service in this vicinity. There was nothing of the "freeze-out" feeling about it, but the joining of good fellowship. Now the Paramount is fully equipped with everything necessary for complete film service—plenty of good reels, a supply department, repair department and free hand poster service. This last department has become quite a necessity in the moving picture business, and houses who wish to properly announce their plays must have attractive posters in the lobby. The lithographs sent by the manufacturers do not fully satisfy the up-to-date managers. These must be augmented with colored lettering and designs and then there must be other signs and announcements to attract the hurrying public.

* * *

Two of the recent visitors in Washington were P. P. Craft, general manager of the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company, and I. Bernstein, general manager of the Paramount Film Company, New York and Bridgeport.

* * *

The organ and piano duets which form a part of the show at the Colonial, have become exceedingly popular. Whenever plays with a religious sentiment are shown, the organ forms the accompaniment and thus adds much to the effectiveness of the silent drama. The violin and piano duets at the Pickwick are attractive features of this house. Mr. Brylawski is always giving something different to his patrons. W. H.

AMERICAN ENTERPRISE.

That loud rumbling sound in the region around Lake Michigan, like the warning that precedes a volcanic eruption, has been traced to the movements of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Ground is being broken for the erection of a new factory to be ready before the close of this year; meanwhile, American comedies are being produced in the plant of the defunct Phoenix Company, which has been leased for three months, and a company of cowboy actors are setting the natives of Wisconsin talking about their escapades. Truly the American Film Manufacturing Company mean business and we await with interest the appearance of their first release.

Having spent several days visiting the various houses where the latest, and consequently the best, films were introduced, the writer has been allowing himself to reflect upon what he saw, and, in a spirit of naturalness—not criticism—hopes that these reflections upon being reduced to plain words may be helpful to all who read and are interested. There are two things common to all the new pictures which will be mentioned as of first importance, i. e., the scenery and the acting; these are ever increasingly attractive, and are evidences of the fact that the film manufacturers are seeking the best in scenic beauty, natural surroundings and local environment; also in personal presentations there seems to be a persistent desire for realism that is admirable except in the few instances where a little "overdoing" is the apparent weakness.

* * *

"The Footlights or the Farm" (Edison Company) is a film that ought to be shown in every urban and suburban community. No friend's advice, nor pulpit sermon, could appeal so powerfully to the stage-struck girl as this vivid portrayal of the disappointments which befall the majority of those following the allurements of the footlights, besides the prevention of many moral derelicts in the large cities.

In the mirth-provoking pictures "A Jar of Cranberry Sauce" is a most excellent one; peculiarly adapted to both city and country audiences, and again the Edison Company is to be congratulated upon reproducing so acceptable a piece of merriment.

* * *

"An Unselfish Love" and "Ononko's Vow," are two excellent plays; descriptions having been given elsewhere, it only remains for the writer to commend the Edison Company for all these films; they belong to a class giving the Board of Censorship little to do, and affording disappointed fault finders and nagging newspapers nothing to say.

Several Gaumont films next claimed the writer's attention. The striking individualism of these films is hard to classify. Ambiguity versus explicitness seems to be a constant contest in most of the later pictures. Is this intentional? If so it is a question if the perceptive powers of the public may not be rated too highly; and while it is complimentary to suppose that people generally can discern the intent of the author, it is a trespass upon their imaginative powers to compel them to fill in that which is lacking in full explicitness of the subject. "The Diver's Honor" is good, but few are able to comprehend the details of the plot and do not notice the cutting of the air tube by the senior diver whereby the junior diver loses his life and honor is saved. This same ambiguity extends in part to "The Sunken Submarine" and "A Powerful Voice." A few words thrown on the screen at these "dark places" would enhance the value of these pictures. "The Tactics of Cupid" is a good and lively film, the especial feature being the acting of Cupid, a little fellow upon whose work it would seem hard to improve.

"An Interrupted Honeymoon" (maker unknown) is a lively play. The bridegroom being mistaken by a lot of college fellows for a student they were desirous of "hazing," is carried away by them, while the student is by mistake carried away on the train with the bride. Finally reunited, the bride and groom go on their way rejoicing while the student is duly "hazed." The fun occasioned by the incidents afford sufficient opportunities for genuine laughter. It is to be regretted however that this is one of those plays which is sure to be criticised—if not by the press, by those societies which have recently condemned "too much loving and kissing," for here indeed is a case in point. It is hard to say if the actions of the newly married couple on the train are the more absurd or impossible. The writer prefers, for the sake of all young ladies, to call them impossible; as, while people are going to laugh at the excessive and foolish hugging and kissing, a feeling of disgust creeps over one. In this connection it is well to advise all film makers that in the majority of instances, embraces, lovings and kissings are too severe, giving legitimate cause for criticism and bringing reproach upon moving pictures generally. May this censure from within prove sufficient to prevent more censures from without. Further, this free and excessive love making is taken by many as a libel upon young ladies generally; surely they are neither as cheap and as easy as too often predicted; keep them in the natural modesty of their class and they will the more appreciate the truer pictures.

The latest productions from the Vitagraph establishment are up to their usual standard, leaning very much to the serious and with a strong sentiment, but true sentiment is a feature rather than a fault; the nature of the subjects prevents objectionable sentimentalism, and good, thoughtful plays are the result. The similarity of thought in "Two Waifs and a Stray" and "A Home Melody" does not detract from their value if seen at separate times. Although the same strong sentiment prevails, it comes from opposite sources in "Her Adopted Parents" and "The Bachelor and the Baby," producing results which cannot be criticised. Explicitness is one of the characteristics of Vitagraph work, the constant enlightenment of the audience by suitable and timely explanations thrown upon the screen prevent even the slightest ambiguity.

* * *

"Examination Day at School" (Biograph) will, we fear, run foul of school authorities, although a strong lesson in loyalty to the old teacher is shown, we rather fear that the action of the scholars in driving away the new teacher by "rough house" treatment, tacks and spitballs, will not be taken kindly by school authorities. But for the lesson in loyalty referred to, which gives the subject its strength, it is otherwise weak. A visiting inspector cannot discharge a principal, as shown here. In this particular a crudeness is displayed. The same official board which appointed the new teacher could have discharged the old one. The foundation thought of the story is good, but we fear will have to be recast to please school authorities, otherwise we believe Biograph will be criticised in the educational journals.

"A High Speed Biker" (Gaumont) and "Who Owns the Rug?" (Pathe Freres) are two of the latest laugh producers; legitimate fun makers, they are very acceptable and thoroughly fulfill the purpose for which they were intended.

INCONGRUITIES.

Realism is now being sought in many of the large picture houses. The noise of an automobile or train, the firing of guns or the clatter of horses' hoofs upon the hard pavement are some of the accompaniments of the pictures. When timely and sufficiently imitative to be natural they are helpful, if otherwise they give an incongruous distinction not always pleasant. In the Fourteenth and Twenty-third street theaters these accompaniments are fairly successful; there are two severe digressions, however, which call for correction. The first is the everlasting use of the Indian drum. Tum, tum, tum, whenever a picture of Indians is upon the screen, without regard to the suitability of the accompaniment.

One afternoon last week during the scene of an Indian camp in the dead of night, when all were sleeping and silent—a silence in which a white prisoner is to escape—the drummer kept up a violent war tum tum, which not only detracted from the purpose of the picture but jarred the sensibilities of the beholder to whom this piece of realism was distasteful. The second error is during the "ten-minute picture chats." The descriptive reader stands at the wrong side of the stage; taking his position on the left side he faces the wall and must needs turn his face full front to look at and make his voice reach the audience, besides having to look backwards over his shoulder, if he wishes to look at the picture for the purpose of sychronizing his talk with the illustrations. If he stood on the other, or right hand side of the stage, he would fully face the people and besides being plainly and advantageously heard, he could also see the pictures without turning around. Carefulness in these details add greatly to the value of the occasion whatever the subject may be.

This is getting to be a high strung age, when a man can sit and watch his own stomach doing a vaudeville turn on the screen.

I have been living in a kind of jail for many months past. A prey to all sorts of pains and agony of mind and body enduring the torture of the damned. Angry with myself and my fellow men and women. Asking myself whether life was worth living, why I was born, and what is the good of anything. What I have endured in those months would easily put to shame the sufferings which Dante says are endured by the inhabitants of the Inferno. In other words, reader, night and morning I have been traveling on that miracle of modern misery—the New York subway. For I have been living right up town, far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife—and The Great White Way.

* * *

But, thanks be to God, I have escaped and have returned to civilization: that is, I have come nearer the center of things. I feel like an unjustly imprisoned man, who has escaped and is enjoying the sweet breath of liberty. No more uptown for me, or at any rate, no more subway and its excruciating sufferings, which make hundreds of thousands of otherwise sane men and women take a distorted view of human nature. One of the first acts of my release was to walk up Fifth avenue with a copy of The Moving Picture World in my hand, the pink cover of which attracted so much attention amongst the 400 that one of them actually came down to this office and entered his subscription for the paper. A very sensible thing to do. I am considering the advisability of walking up and down Fifth avenue all day long with the paper in my hand, if subscribers are obtainable by the sight of six feet and half an inch of male humanity stalking along that gilded thoroughfare.

* * *

Then, of course, I have made it my business to see if Broadway occupies the same position that it did before I was swallowed up by the excruciating subway. Broadway, bless it, does. Stands Broadway where it did? I repeat, it does. But since I last made that great thoroughfare an object of, if not a daily perambulation at least a constant one, many things have happened. The whole face of moving picturedom has changed and its new face is visible along Broadway between Madison Square and Long Acre Square.

* * *

To be quite serious, business has taken me up and down Broadway several times since my escape from that infamous subterranean torture chamber—I mean the subway—and being of an observant nature, I have not failed to notice that change. Maybe it is due to the fact that your Lux Graphicus is getting a little wiser than he used to be and keener to notice the little things of life—those little things that count.

* * *

I never go up or down Broadway now, this very now, without encountering, always with this pink covered paper in my hands, operators, moving picture actors and actresses, scenario writers, managers and others identified in some way or another with the picture. Whenever I take my seat in my favorite restaurant, be it the humble Child's or Mr. Churchill's, up there beyond Long Acre Square, the sight of this pink covered paper never fails to excite interest in the minds of my neighbors—interest just as great as does the ordinary stage. I may be wrong in this, but I cannot discover the difference in degree if a difference does not exist. Take away a few prominent personalities from the ordinary stage and the rest, to quote the poet, "is naught but leather and prunella."

* * *

These are certain signs of the times which should be set down. Two weeks ago I said that the moving picture had arrived in Bohemia. Every intelligent man or woman knows what that means. Now I go further and say that the moving picture has arrived on Broadway. This week I have been discussing matters of business with some well-known theatrical agents on Broadway identified with large enterprises. Their amazement at the possibilities of the picture is agreeable to witness, and while they were talking about the possibilities of the picture, news reached us that many, many theatrical companies in the country were closing down. One day, outside the Knickerbocker Building, I saw hordes of actors and actresses waiting for something to turn up. That something for them will never turn up. The picture has killed the modern play and the resident actor.

* * *

I want Broadway to realize this and to grasp its full significance. I want the entire theatrical profession, managers, agents, actors and actresses to realize the flawless truth of what I am saying, that the all conquering picture is killing off the indifferent play, and the indifferent actor and actress. The public do not want these things and they will not have them. They want the picture and will have it. True, what they are getting in the way of quality in the picture to-day is not universally the highest. That is bound to come, and when it comes, as it is coming every hour of the day, then the crowd outside of the Knickerbocker building will be so large that the police will have to disperse it.

* * *

Before I am very much older I want the offices of the Moving Picture World on Broadway. As Broadway is the center of things theatrical, so it seems to me destined to become the center of moving picture things. You have a moving picture theater about to open on Forty-second street. There is already one in existence nearly opposite the Metropolitan Opera House. Then, the agents are talking the picture or rather the picture house. Some of them are criticising the picture. The picture is, generally speaking, not so good as it might be, if it is to successfully compete with the ordinary theater. They are also talking good songs, good slides, good lecturing and everything, the best of everything in fact, for the moving picture theater. Broadway, in fact, is interested in the moving picture and when Broadway, New York City, is interested in any branch of the entertainment business, be sure that it is a good thing for that business. What Broadway, New York, does to-day the rest of the world will do to-morrow.

PATHE PROGRESS.

Concurrently with the return of Mr. Carl Laemmle from Europe, a circumstance noted in another part of this week's paper, was that of J. A. Berst of Pathe Freres. Mr. Berst, whose trips to Europe are frequent, always has the gratifying news to give that the Pathe business across the Atlantic is always advancing. To us, who write this, there is something of historical satisfaction in this circumstance, because although we are not familiar with the European end of things in the Pathe factory, yet we were cognizant of the start of the London branch of the business, and have had opportunities of observing its wonderful growth there. The Pathe picture in fact is universal. This, of course, is not to be wondered at, having regard to the fact that Pathe quality is accepted as the standard of picture production. We specially mean this in regard to technique. Opinions may be divided as to the suitability of some of the subjects for all publics. There is a manifest impossibility for one film maker to please everybody. But this fact only is unquestionably clear, that the Pathe quality is unexcelled—we mean technique and artistic quality. As Mr. Berst said to us on a memorable occasion, there is no secret about this, because Pathe spend the money and engage the best talent. The result of this policy of course is obvious. But here in this country we have a particular interest in the Pathe productions. They were, as our readers know, for several years distinctively of Gallic nature. Now they are becoming Americanized. So here we have the gratifying spectacle of a house of French origin getting down to the common sense view of things and producing American subjects for American audiences.

We are so much interested in this point, that recently we have made many inquiries as to the question whether the new Pathe American subjects are popular with the exchanges and the exhibitors. The answer has been unequivocally "Yes." Pathe subjects, in short, have made good. The new Pathe American studio will shortly be in operation. Meanwhile, it is a pleasure to us to congratulate the Company upon the success of the pictures that they have so far released.

Chicago Notes.

The following visited the new Western offices of the Moving Picture World this week: W. E. Soles, Woodstock, Ill.; Miss Lewis, Muncie Film Exchange, Muncie, Ind.; C. H. Betts, DesPlaines, Ill; L. D. Hayes, Canton, Mo.; M. H. DeLano, Sheboygan, Wis.

J. Hayden and F. W. Morgan stopped over in Chicago en route from Australia to New York, from where they will take passage to London, there to open the new London offices of the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, of which Mr. Morgan will act as general manager.

Several exhibitors visiting our offices this week expressed themselves as being unable to understand why the police refuse to permit the exhibition of the fight pictures, but allow the exhibitors to show a film such as the Gaumont "Reserved Shot." They claimed that it was an improper film for ladies and children to see.

The H. & H. Film Service Company, one of the largest exchanges in the West, have sent the following letter to the trade, which is self-explanatory:

"We wish to announce to you that after a great deal of thought and consideration, we have decided to ally our film exchange with the Independent cause. We value our business at present at over $50,000, and if we did not think that the Independent side was stronger, had better prospects, had the sentiments of the people, which is against the trusts, and, in fact, that the future prospects of the business depend on the Independents, then we would have been unwilling to have risked our large capital in such a way and our decision would have been otherwise. We are resigning of our own free will from the Motion Picture Patents Company and inasmuch as we have always kept the rules and regulations without any variations whatever, we are positive that they cannot truthfully cast any slurs on our record during the past."

This, of course, means the addition of an exchange to the Independents that has been looked upon as one of the strongest and best regulated in the West. What the Independent cause needed was a few buying exchanges and it seems as if they were getting them at last.

VAUDEVILLE.

Although much has been said against cheap vaudeville, we deem it our duty to keep up the fight, as we have received much encouragement and we know that hundreds of exhibitors have no regret of having followed our advices.

The ignorant exhibitor claims that the public demands cheap vaudeville. The following experience will show that this is not the case:

Sunday, at 9 P. M., I reached the corner of North avenue and Larrabee street, but when I tried to enter The Ideal, Gilmore's wonderful third-floor theater, I found the stairs already blocked by a crowd of anxious spectators. I crossed North avenue to visit the Janet, the successful Independent theater of the Hyman Bros. Another problem faced me as I could not break the long line of anxious spectators waiting for a chance to enter the home of the mirror screen. Discouraged I walked one block hoping to find a seat at the Orchard and be rewarded with an excellent licensed program. Once more I had to beat a retreat as a line of spectators, fully half a block long, gave me to understand that it would be a long wait.

I jumped on a trolley car and ten minutes later I landed at the corner of Halsted and Madison streets to find a very different story. No crowds waiting on the outside, but barkers doing their best to coax in the promenaders. I visited the Jud Williams Theater—no waiting, plenty of seats, in fact I had a full row of chairs to myself. The other theaters on the same thoroughfare did not look any more prosperous and the barkers, with hoarse voices, met a sort of Waterloo.

The three above named houses, on North avenue, show only good first run pictures.

The houses on Halsted street show not so good pictures, sandwiched between very cheap vaudeville acts.

If crowds were waiting outside the North avenue theaters and the barkers could not coax the promenaders to enter the Halsted street houses, it is a strong verdict of the will of the mighty people—the public does not want cheap vaudeville—the public calls for good pictures.

The will of the people is supreme and the exhibitors find it out at their own expense. The manufacturers will soon find out the same thing if they do not put more care in their productions and if they do not stop faking.

Many persons have been converted to motion pictures because they believe that what is shown on the screen is taken from life. The manufacturers should bear this in mind and not allow their stage managers to fake the productions. The manufacturers should know that the public has been educated and is to-day a very close and keen critic.

When the "Hoodoo" was on the screen, some persons made the remark that the estate of a rich man, of a man the owner of diamond mines, cannot be settled twenty-four hours after his death. It is then faking a picture to show the young man notified that his uncle died on Thursday, no invitation to the funeral, but a request to call on the lawyer for the legacy. The way the legacy is distributed would give the impression that the rich man had died with his money in his pants pockets.

* * *

The manufacturers should welcome such remarks, as they could improve their work and would have a justified reason to jump on the men at the studio. No, the manufacturers are too touchy, they want all the taffy that they can get but do not want just criticisms, they are selfish and believe that they are infallible. This over-estimation of ones self has been the cause of many ruins and even of national disasters. We well remember that if it had not been for the over-estimation of Napoleon III. the disastrous war of 1870 would have not been recorded in the books. Napoleon, as many of our manufacturers, thought that he had the best army, the best management, etc. He had no idea that he was cheated right and left, he had no idea that the shoes manufactured for his army were merely pasteboard shoes.

I do not exaggerate and I will give a little example to show that graft is in full glory in this great industry.

A friend called on me for a loan to buy the wardrobe of an actor on the ground that he could dispose of it and make a little money. I advanced him the money. My friend offered the costumes to one of our manufacturers. The prop man of said manufacturer called on my friend, did not ask to see the goods but asked the price and promised (without looking at the costumes) that he would report favorably to the boss. In the meantime, by mere accident, I notified the manufacturer that my friend had some costumes for sale and if he, the manufacturer, could use them at $40 he would greatly help my friend, who was in need of some ready cash. When the prop man found that I had named the real figure to the manufacturer and that there would be no chance for him to graft something on the deal, he said to the manufacturer that the goods were not worth the price asked for them. The manufacturer, who wasted so much time each month to go to New York to attend the red tape meetings, had no time to look at the costumes, but accepted the verdict of his prop man and did not buy.

This little incident shows plainly that when the manufacturers are wasting their time in meetings to discuss a lot of red tape business and find reasons to be offended as some persons who have the very best of intentions, they cannot watch their factories; they have to leave everything in the hands of employees. We know that no industry can prosper without the eye of the boss. The old adage of "When the cat is gone, the mice dance" can fit many studios, licensed and Independent factories, because if the licensed manufacturers waste too much time on Fifth avenue, the Independent manufacturers are wasting too much time on Fourteenth street.

It is quite time that the manufacturers should step down from their high stool and watch the work a little more closely. The licensed manufacturers should not object when an Independent film is praised. If the film is good why not praise it, as this praise can give a little more ambition to the employees of the licensed manufacturers to do still better. Same with the Independent manufacturers; they should read every word of praise given to a licensed film and take it as a lesson. Both licensed and Independent manufacturers should not object to some just and sharp criticisms of some of their productions, as these criticisms can help them to correct themselves. Without mentioning names, we have several manufacturers who at no very distant date could not make a picture without introducing in it blunders on top of blunders. We remember the New York mounted policemen in the Arctic regions, the boy convicted of a murder from blood stains on a curtain, when really there was no blood in sight, etc. Well, we are pleased to note that these manufacturers are now paying the greatest of care to details and they can thank the critics for this reform.

The manufacturers should be more liberal minded and should, more than ever, pay more and more attention to their studios, if they want to save the motion pictures for the future and if they want to make their present investments profitable to themselves and their stockholders. There is a lot of room for improvements.

J. M. B.

Concerning New York Local Union, No. 35.—New York City sends in the following, signed by a member of the Union: "Since reading the items concerning the Unions of Boston and other cities, I have a few words to say concerning our own organization here in New York City, namely, Local Union, No. 35. I think the Union wants a good stirring up. In the first place, it has no good basis of any kind. As for the Union wage, there is none. You will hear one operator say he is getting $18 or $20, but, if you trace the matter down, usually he is found to be receiving about $15 per. This is not guess work, Friend Richardson. I know whereof I speak. There seems to be no true brotherhood among the members of the Local at all, and they even go so far as to take one another's jobs. I have been in the Local rooms on Fourteenth street when managers called up, asking for an operator. There were plenty of them sitting around playing cards, but would they go to work? No. Instead, the manager, finding he could not get a man at the Local rooms, would have to call up Taylor's and take a school man."

Thus the writer continues at some considerable length. Now, I am not very well posted as to the status of the Union here in New York, that I will admit; but, nevertheless, what I have been told on a great many occasions seems to fit in pretty well with this writer's complaint. Now, gentlemen, if the above complaint is true, or is in any measure true, it is high time something was done to wake up the New York Local, else it is high time the Local went out of business entirely and gave place to an organization that would be of some force and effect. Projection in this city is far below the level of many other cities. There can be no good reason for such a state of affairs. It is a condition that ought not to be tolerated by managers or by the operators themselves. If the old Union cannot do anything or won't do anything, surely there are enough really good men who could get together and form a live, effective organization; and I desire to say right here that the editor of this column is perfectly willing to lend any assistance he possibly can to that end. If any member of the Union thinks this communication, or my comments thereon, wrongs the organization, The Column is at all times open to him to set forth his views, provided it be done decently and in order. Certainly something ought to be done to secure New York City operators better salaries, as well as to induce or, if necessary, force operators to do a better class of work.

* * *

Concerning Gas.—Delhi, N. Y., writes as follows: "I wish to thank you for the position you secured me with Mr. Eger, of Walton, N. Y. I have been with Mr. Eger since August 1 and find him to be a gentleman in every respect. I have had some trouble with film getting out of focus—trouble which seems impossible to remedy. Some films run through my machine fine, but almost every ——— film seems to get in and out of focus. That is, the picture seems to draw back and forth in the aperture. I have tried new tension springs, but it makes no difference. What is your idea regarding the cause of this?

"In last weeks Moving Picture World there was a question in regard to a certain gas generator. Now, I bought one of these and paid $20 for it, but I have been absolutely unable to get light enough for a moving picture, and not even enough for a very good stereo. The outfit merely amounts to four gas burners, mounted together, and a gas generator. You are a wise man to refuse advising moving picture people that gas is a satisfactory illuminant. The most that can be said for gas is that, given a reasonably clear film, you can get a picture; though, of course, if it be a clear film and a small picture, it may be fairly good. The only gas light I have ever used with any degree of satisfaction, however, has been when I used the tanks of compressed gas. Another thing that bothers lots of operators when attempting to use gas is not having a good burner. After you have used the cheap ones a while the hole will get large and they use too much gas."

In regard to the film buckling over the aperture, that same proposition has come up two or three times before and on each occasion it has been the same make of film. I have referred one or two of these letters to the manufacturer of this film but have been unable to discover any satisfactory solution of the difficulty. If your other films run all right, the ——— ought to, and you can guess just as readily as I can why it does not. Be very sure that your tension springs bear evenly and firmly on the aperture plate tracks.

As regards the matter of gas, the writer has been able to get a fairly satisfactory picture by using the gas making outfits. That is to say, using the Model B outfit, which is the only one he has ever tried. This only holds good, however, with a clear film, and the picture not more than 8 feet wide. Of course, it is nothing to compare with electricity, nor have I ever seen any moving pictures projected with gas that could, by any stretch of the imagination, be said to be bright. Now, however, that we have the solar and other metallic surface screens, I believe it will be quite possible to get a very good picture from clear film subjects with gas. In my judgment the gas tanks are best but more expensive in operation. I should like to have a letter from some expert on the use of gas, if any of them will be so accommodating. Perhaps some satisfied user of a gas making outfit will come forward and state his experience in detail giving his method of handling the outfit and the light.

* * *

Boston Thanks 'Frisco.—Boston, Mass., Local Union No. 182, writes: "I hope you will forgive our writing so many letters, but on behalf of Boston Local, 182, I wish to thank you for the notice and for the advice you gave us. I assure you that it is well thought of. We wish to thank the San Francisco Local for their kind words and wish them all the success in the world. We hope to hear some good reports about New York in the near future."

No thanks are due, friends. The Column is for your use, as well as for the use of managers, and we are glad to be of any possible assistance either to operators or managers, organized or unorganized, and I hope that Boston Local will have every possible measure of success. I hope also that it will bend every energy to the improving of the work of its own members. San Francisco receives, probably, the highest wages of any body of operators in the United States, if not in the world. On the other hand, San Francisco operators deliver the goods. You do not see a lot of shadows and jumpy pictures in 'Frisco, but instead you see real projection. That is as it should be: good wages, good work; everybody pleased and nobody hurt.

Presumably you hope to hear good news from the New York Local Union. Well, Boston, I am hoping, too; so it is a couple of hopes. And you can bet there won't anything please me better than to see our hopes come true.

* * *

Nothing Doing.—New York State (name of town suppressed) asks the following question: "I have a ——— machine, with the license plate attached, recently purchased. The reading upon this license plate forbids the use of any but licensed films on the machine. Can the Patents Company do anything should I go to using Independent films? If so, what?"

Now, look here, old man, I want to help all I can, but this is a proposition upon which I must absolutely refuse to be interviewed. I am not a patent attorney and I am not accustomed to playing with fire. Therefore, you will have to excuse me.

* * *

Wiring Problem.—Weatherford, Okla., submits the following: "The Column is a fine thing for operators and managers. It is full of information that will help a fellow out when he is up against it. In fact, I have back numbers from January 1, 1909, and find them to be ready reference all the time.

"I have my own electric light plant, 110-volt direct current, and we have a city plant, 110-volt alternating. Please tell me how to wire up for the city use in case of emergency should my plant break down. Must I get another rheostat, or use the one I have, which is one of those open frame coil kind?"

We thank you for your kind words, Friend Weatherford, and trust The Column will always prove as valuable in the future as it has in the past. I would suggest you send $1.50 for the Operator's Hand Book that will be out very soon.

As regards connecting up to the city plant, all in the world you have to do is to bring the city current in, attaching the wires to one end of a switch on the wall and connect your wires to the other end of the switch, leaving your rheostat and all just exactly as you now have it. You will not, of course, get nearly as satisfactory a light, since with alternating you require very nearly double the amperage, as compared with the direct current, to get anywhere near the same result. Your information concerning your present rheostat is not very ample. I presume, however, it is a 25-ampere instrument. I would suggest that you get another 25-ampere rheostat and wire the two in multiple, as shown in sketch, which shows how to do the wiring. Pull switch 1 and close switch 2 to take current from city plant. Have padlocks on switches 1 and 2 and lock the open one in that position so it cannot be accidentally closed. By opening switch 3 you get the capacity of one rheostat. By closing it you get the entire capacity of the two, which should be fully 50 amperes with A. C. current and 35 to 45 with D. C., according to size of picture. The sketch is somewhat crowded and out of proportion but it shows the idea.

The Phonograph.—Some weeks since I promised my readers that I would have something to say concerning the running of a phonograph. It is quite possible to get very satisfactory service out of a good gramophone, and many such instruments are in daily use in theaters in the smaller towns. Unfortunately, however, not one in a hundred knows how to get good service out of a talking machine. To start with, it must be a good instrument; that is to say, the horn and reproducer must be of the best. Also it should have a large motor capable of running at least eight records without rewinding, since the small motors are more or less uneven in their speed, nor are they fitted with the speed dial regulator, which is essential to good performance. Always get the best possible reproducer and a wooden horn. The writer has an instrument that cost $75, and in his own theater he actually fooled people night after night by having the gramophone behind the piano surrounded by artificial shrubbery and having the pianist accompany the gramophone. That poor old talking machine used to get encored two or three times at pretty near every one of its performances, and many were the demands that the singer come forth, which, of course, the singer did not do. Finally, of course, the fraud had to be confessed and then there was a good laugh all around. I only relate this to show the possibilities of the gramophone. I had a high class singer at the same time who sang the illustrated songs, the machine performing during change of reels, the pianist playing accompaniment very softly.

Having procured a good instrument, great care must be taken in the selection of records. Only about one record in ten is fit to be given house room; that is, the ordinary records, of course, I mean. The operatic records are practically all good, but the average 5-cent theater audience does not and perhaps never will, appreciate operatic music. The writer usually listens to anywhere from two to a dozen records before making a purchase. Having secured your records, try them over carefully at different speeds, and right here is where you will find an enormous difference, particularly in instrumental music, and right here is where the average owner of the phonograph falls down. He puts the record on, fastens in a needle, starts the machine and there his duty ends. If the machine happens to be running seventy-five revolutions per minute, all right; or if it is set for fifty, all right. He does not know the difference. Try your records over very carefully at different speeds and when you find the one at which it sounds best, mark that speed on the face of the record in the center and always thereafter run it at that speed. By paying close attention to these points and expending in records one-half the weekly sum you would have to pay a mediocre singer, you can furnish your audience with really high class music—music that certainly will be more satisfactory than the screeching of the $15 per "singer" (?) so often heard in our moving picture theaters. It is well, where a phonograph is used, to have it behind some artificial shrubbery, or something of the kind; even though the audience knows it is a phonograph they do not like to have the mechanical end of it thrust in their faces, as it were.

* * *

Boston is Good, But Oh! You Gotham.—From Boston comes the following wail indited by a New York operator gone astray: "Just a few lines, Friend Richardson, in regard to the land of promise the State of Massachusetts is thought to be by some of our New York operators. I have been over in this neck of the woods for four weeks now, and although I have succeeded in getting a Massachusetts State license, I have not been able to land a job. I find that in Boston, Brockton, Lynn, Worcester and Springfield, cities in which I have looked for work, the Unions have everything tied up. As a result, the other smaller cities and towns are so overcrowded with operators from so-called schools that one is only offered from $8 to $12 per week of six and seven days.

"I am now chief pilot of an elevator in order to keep the wolf from the door while accumulating the required $4.65 car fare back to 'America.' This is not the Grand Old Bay State for the outside operator that it is supposed to be. In the Union cities everything is O. K., if you can get on the inside, but one has to have a crowbar and a burglar's kit to break in. I want to say right here that although the Union is keeping me out of a job, I wish we had one like it in dear, old New York. The Boston boys, through their business agent, Mr. Corbett, have treated me with every consideration; but Unions are Unions and I do not hold a card. I am not a cry baby and I do not blame them, but would say 'more power to them.' In closing let me utter this warning to New York operators: Keep away from Massachusetts unless you have a good sized roll to live off until you can land a job. As for me, it's back to old New York the first chance I get. I have had enough."

I certainly had a good laugh when I read your letter. But I like the spirit of the man who can write that way under such circumstances. Most men would have "flew off the handle" and have abused the Boston union. The Boston boys are only protecting themselves, which they are, of course, entitled to do. One thing I would say, however, and that is this: Assuming that you can by proper examination prove your ability as an operator, I believe it would be wise for the Boston or any other union to admit you to its ranks. However, there may be reasons for their not doing so, of which I know nothing. Possibly Boston is already overcrowded with competent men and the union feels that their own members should have work before admitting men from outside cities. These questions, of course, may be looked at from two points of view, and I do not care either to commend or criticize the refusals of unions to admit members under certain conditions. The letter will no doubt save many New York operators from experiences similar to your own.

* * *

Solving the Music Problem.—Will L. Woodin, manager and owner of the Orpheum, Orwigsburg, Pa., contributes the following: "Perhaps my experience in providing suitable and appropriate music for the pictures will be of benefit to some of my fellow exhibitors. I will, therefore, briefly set forth my methods. I find in small towns, good piano players are hard to get and keep; especially one that can and will play appropriate music for the picture. I have, however, solved the problem to my own and my patrons' satisfaction by using the automatic piano player which operates from paper rolls. These rolls are changed quite often. By joining a music library I get 312 rolls a year at a cost of $20 per annum, and as each roll averages about four pieces of music, I have over 1,200 different selections each year. It would take the very best piano players one could get to equal such a performance. I do not, however, make the mistake of leaving the operation of this automatic player to a small boy, but have a person with some ear for music combined with a keen sense for blending the music with the picture. As a rule, my wife and I alternate at the piano, and by knowing the subjects we are to run we have no trouble in picking out appropriate music before the show starts. As you know, the effect of the self-playing piano is hard to equal by the best hand work, provided the automatic player is properly handled. If you already have a piano, you can readily purchase an automatic player at small cost, and if you have a trap drummer he can follow the pianola as well as he could the hand player.

"One more subject I would like to mention: I find that the old saying, 'A penny saved is a penny earned,' most emphatically does not apply to the show business. Do not try to save money by having a small boy to run your musical department. Do not try to save by cutting down advertising expenses, but rather by putting more into advertising. I am located in a town of 2,000 population and I think I can show net profits equal to those located in towns of over 20,000. The secret which has earned my success is confined to one word repeated many times, namely, hustle, hustle, HUSTLE, and then hustle some more, combined with telling the people what I have on tap in the way of amusement."

We certainly are obliged to neighbor Woodin for his experience as set forth. Personally, I do not like the automatic piano playing so very well. It is too darned correct. That is to say, it is too mechanical unless controlled and modulated by a competent person at the piano. Still, I realize that for a small town it is a very feasible proposition from every point of view, if handled along the lines our good friend Woodin suggests. Neighbor Woodin also gives us his recipe for success and a mighty good recipe it is, but, as usual, he fails to say one single word about good projection, which is the foundation of his show, of his income and his success. I am hammering away on this "good projection" proposition and I want help. I want some of the rest of you to talk about good projection as well as about good music and other things, though the "other things" be of vital importance.

* * *

The Electric Meter.—St. Louis, Mo., writes as follows: "Will you kindly give us some idea of how the electric meter works? Also how to read it? We all know that it registers Watt hours, but we do not all know where the hour part comes in, inasmuch as there is no clock attached to the meter. Kindly explain this matter as fully as you can, and I am sure you will oblige the readers of The Column."

The recording Watt meter is something of a puzzle to the uninitiated, and I believe, with St. Louis, that an explanation of its workings will be of considerable interest. For the cuts and much of the following information I am indebted to the manager of the New York Edison Illuminating Company:

The meter is a very simple affair, consisting of a small motor which actuates the pointers to the dail by means of a train of gears. This motor is placed in the series with the lamps or motors using the current passing through it. The motor is so constructed that if it were operating under a pressure of one volt, with one ampere of current flowing, it would require, under those conditions, precisely one hour to record one Watt, which would, therefore, be one Watt hour. It, therefore, follows, that if it were working under a pressure of 110 volts with one ampere of current flowing, the Watts being the product of the volts times the amperes the instrument would record 110 Watts in one hour; or if the pressure be one volt with 110 amperes flowing, the record for one hour would be 110 Watts. If, on the other hand, 30 amperes were flowing under a pressure of 110 volts, then in one hour's time the meter would register 30 times 110, or 3,300 Watts. That, in brief, is the way the meter works and records Watt, or kilowatt, hours.

The reading of meters is equally as simple as their operation, and any customer can read his own meter if he so desires, by following a few simple directions which we give for the benefit of interested persons. Electricity is measured by the kilowatt hour or by the watt hour, one kilowatt being equivalent to 1,000 watts.

When attempting to read a meter, first note carefully the unit in which the dials read. On all meters used by the Edison Company, the figures above or below the dial indicate the value of one complete revolution of the pointer, therefore one division indicates one-tenth of the amount marked above or below.

Note the direction of rotation of the dial pointers. Counting from the right on a watt meter, the pointers of the first, third and fifth dials rotate in the direction of the hands of a watch, whereas the pointers of the second and fourth dials move in the opposite direction. Similarly, on a kilowatt hour meter the pointers of the first and third dials move in the direction of the hands of a watch, and the pointers of the second and fourth dials move in an opposite direction. The dials must always be read from right to left, and the figures should be set down as read. Always read the figures on each dial which the pointer has last passed or has just covered.

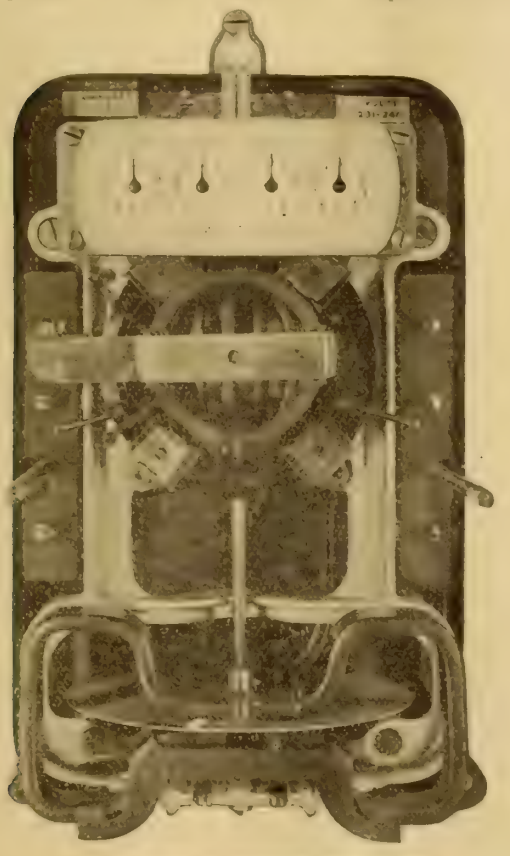
Each dial reading depends on the reading of the one next to it on the right. Unless the one before it has completed a revolution or passed the 0, the pointer which is being read has not completed the division on which it may appear to rest, and still indicates the last figure passed over.

Always ascertain if the register is direct reading, that is, has no multiplying constants. Some registers are not direct reading but require that the dial reading be multiplied by a constant in order to obtain the true reading. This is for the purpose of keeping meters of various capacities uniform in size. If the constant were not used, meters of larger capacity would be much larger and heavier than those of small capacity. If the register face bears the words "multiply by ½," or "multiply by 2," etc., the actual reading should be multiplied by ½ in the first case, or doubled in the second, and similarly for other constants.

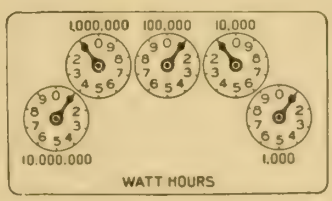
Next multiply the difference between the present reading and that of the last month by the rate per kilowatt hour you are paying, and you have the amount of your bill in dollars and cents.

The accompanying fac similies of meter dials give examples of meter readings which may actually occur in practice. For example, in No. 2, the dial at the extreme right reads 900. The second apparently indicates 0; but since the first has not completed its revolution, but indicates only 9, the second cannot have completed its division, hence the second dial indicates 9 also. The same is true of the hand of the third dial; the second being 9, has not quite completed its revolution, so that the third has not completed its division, therefore we again have 0. The same holds true of the hand of the fourth dial. The last hand (the extreme left) appears to rest on 1; but since the fourth is only 9, the last has not completed its division, and therefore indicates 0.

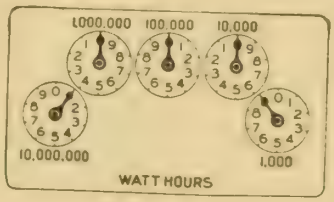
Putting the figures down from right to left, the total reading is 999,900. By similar reasoning the value of other indications may be obtained.



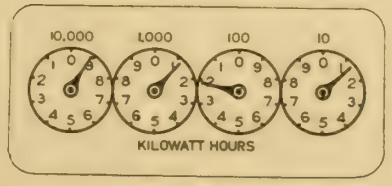
Mechanism of Recording Watt Meter.



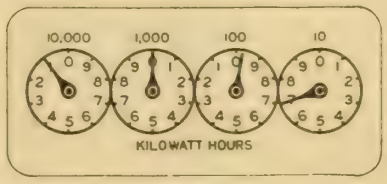
No. 1.



No. 2.



No. 3.



No. 4.

Facsimiles of Meter Dials.

RACE RIDICULE.

Now and then there crops out a crusade against a play that seems to be a deliberate attempt to ridicule some certain race or religion, particularly race. There is very little ridicule of religion of any kind done in a public way anywhere. A year or so ago certain distinguished representatives of the Irish people made strenuous objection in various parts of the country against what is generally known as the "stage Irishman." The agitation became very heated and in a number of instances it went so far as the throwing of missiles at Irish comedians in various parts of the land.

It seems that now the crusade has cropped out against the moving picture with the Jewish people as the plaintiff. From reports that come to us a certain picture has been objected to in Boston on the grounds that it ridiculed the Jewish people. We do not know what the picture was, and for the purposes of this discourse it is not particularly necessary to have the name of it. The principal thing to be borne in mind, in these days of nervous prosperity, is that there are very many irritable people knocking about, and if you are not careful what you say or do you are going to be set upon, even though you never thought of offending anybody.

There is a good deal of hyper-sensitiveness about this race business, and some races seem to be more sensitive than others. Every race has its typical ideal. Washington, for instance, is the typification of all that is good and lofty to American minds. Frederick the Great is the idol of goodness to the German people. Garibaldi ispires beautiful thoughts with the Italian, while Napoleon holds an equal place in the hearts of the French. These men are ideals and the exhibition of their pictures at most any time and place is a symbol of reverence. But typifications do not stop with reverential figureheads. As every nationality has its ideal, so also does it have its caricature. Through a long succession of humorous artists and writers, there have come, as a matter of evolution, stereotyped figures that are recognized everywhere at a glance to be typical of the general characteristics of some nationality, and accepted as a joke at the expense of that nation, even by the natives themselves.

Thus do we come by the well known figure of "Uncle Sam," "John Bull," "La Belle France," etc., but these are mostly political. There is another, or national type, that we all know. The fat German with his long blonde moustache and long stem pipe; the Frenchman with his three pointed whiskers and the shrug; and so on through the whole list of nations and races.

There are funny looking people belonging to every race. Among a whole race of people there is bound to be some similarity, as we know. Therefore, among a whole race of people the funny ones taken together are perhaps so similar that they may be easily embodied into a distinct type. We do not believe a sensible man of any race would deny that there are funny specimens of that race. We do not believe he would deny that there are also characteristic proclivities or instincts that are peculiar to his race. For instance, the Jewish people are noted for their business instinct, while the colored man is noted for his fondness for chicken or watermelon. There is nothing disgraceful about either of these things, so why not admit it, especially if it is true?

Every race is caricatured, and, naturally enough, the best delineators of racial humor are those within the race. Such men as Harry Lauder, who show us the funny Scot, is a Scot himself. All of the best Jew comedians belong to that race, and the same may be said of all the others, especially the Irish, for during that crusade it turned out that the Irish comedians were, as a rule, more Irish in blood than the crusaders themselves. There is no good reason why anyone should find amusement at the expense of one race, and then wax indignant when the fun is poked at his own race. But this is very true, nevertheless. Go to a theater and you will not find an Irishman defending the Negro race from any negro makeup he may see there. You will not hear the Jew protest against an exaggerated German. No, they both laugh with the rest. But turn it around so it strikes home and they are indignant, indeed, which shows that they are one-sided and unwilling to contribute their share to the gavety of nations.

There is no nation on the face of the earth that has been caricatured more than the American, and the best of it we get is done by Americans themselves. If "Mutt and Jeff" were Jewish or Irish characters there would be a protest right away, but being Americans, it is all right, simply because the American enjoys a laugh at his own expense. You never heard an American complain at a tramp character, and yet the tramp is typically American. Also the "Rube" or farmer; the grafter. Looking at the serious side, it is just and fair to say that for every Shylock, Shakespeare wrote a Richard III.; meaning, of course, that he did not spare his own race any more than any other. When it comes to villains in real life, the proportion of them is about the same in every race and nation.

If the picture complained of in Boston included a Jew in the role of a villain, we are not altogether shocked, for such a thing is possible. The Jewish people should reflect that to balance that one Jewish villain they have seen probably several thousands of Christian villains, written and acted by Christians, without any particular disparagement to the race. If the picture complained of contained a funny Jew, we are not surprised, for such a thing is possible. It was a well known Jew who made the remark that "There is nothing in the world funnier than a funny Jew."

This complaint from Boston inclines us to think that the complainant is rather thin-skinned and sensitive, as well as a little inconsistent.

CARL LAEMMLE RETURNS.

"For a member of that pirate crew which will make all the others walk the plank"—we are quoting one of Laemmle's critics—Carl looked singularly unpiratical when we had the pleasure of a little talk with him a day or two after his return from Europe. He struck us as having the capacity of making a very good model for Sunny Jim, for, during his four months' absence in Europe, he has put on weight and a quiet smile that we should think very difficult to rub off. He seems to have created his own special atmosphere of prosperity and success, which dogs him like a shadow.

Mr. Laemmle, during his stay in Europe, appears to have combined business and pleasure. His pictures are going well in British houses, and we hear of them penetrating into Germany and even into remote Russia. This is not to be wondered at, for it is but the merest justice to say that Imp pictures have undoubtedly made good and are improving all the time, as witness the unusual thing in Imp work, which we commended last week.

We were struck, most of all, by Mr. Laemmle's description of a little theater which is being operated on Unter den Linden, Berlin's most fashionable thoroughfare. This house only seats a few hundred. The charges of admission range from twenty-five cents up. It show pictures exclusively. It is full to overflowing all the time, and is a veritable gold mine. Let this be a lesson to American exhibitors, namely, that it is possible to conduct profitably a house on a program of pictures and music only.

Since Mr. Laemmle's absence abroad, the Imp factory, at 101st street, has been started and got into working order. The Imp Company, according to Mr. Laemmle, are contemplating other developments of their business. Mr. Laemmle himself, by the time this article is in print, will have returned to New York on a business mission which will culminate, he tells us, in his permanent residence in this city, for the purpose of watching over his manufacturing interests.

In brief: Mr. Laemmle has become heart and soul a picture man. He loves the business, not merely for the handling and renting of pictures, but for the making of them. We foresaw that this would happen some time ago, and we are very happy indeed to find that the "biggest and best film renter in the world" has conceived a love for the picture itself. When a man, especially with manufacturing interests, likes the picture, has conceived the sentiment of the picture, is vitally interested in the details of it and the minutiæ of the making of the picture, then success is almost a mathematical certainty. As our readers know, we are always glad to open our arms to picture men. There are many men in the business who are not picture men: that is to say, they really know nothing of the picture, do not want to know, and never will know. A picture to them is just so much marketable goods. This is not the case with Mr. Laemmle, who is interested qualitatively in his own productions. Thus with the mind of the man in his work, that mind having been trained by study, observation and experience to a realization of the beauties and possibilities of the picture, we have the happiest combination of circumstances animating the head of an important branch of the moving picture industry.

It is a pleasure for us to note that Mr. Laemmle is so efficiently served here in New York by Mr. Cochrane, and his able coadjutors. He is in the enviable position of having loyal helpers, another valuable adjunct to success. Above all things it pleases us to know that the Laemmle forces are determined to eschew the production of the usual thing. Carl Laemmle talks quality; Tom Cochrane talks quality, thus echoing the policy of the Moving Picture World. With improving quality characterizing the Imp pictures they are bound to add to their success.

THE BERGEN AIRDOME, JERSEY CITY.

Since the above photograph was taken canvas sides have been added and the airdome will remain open as long as the weather will permit.

It remained for the Bergen Airdome of Jersey City to demonstrate the practicability of a canvas covering for large open-air theaters. In the accompanying illustration the reader will get a glimpse of what is probably the largest single piece of canvas ever made. That is a broad statement to make, for one would naturally ask whether it was as large as Barnum & Bailey's canvas. That is not the point; the Barnum canvas covers much more ground area, but it is put together in sections and requires many poles to support it, yet, big as it is, there is not a piece of canvas with that show as big as the one we see in the illustration herewith.

All during the Summer, when other airdomes in the city were closed on rainy nights, the Bergen Airdome was doing a land office business under this canopy. It cost them $500 to have this canopy made and erected. The place seats 1,600, total capacity with standing room filled, 2,300. With a ten-cent admission giving two shows a night it can be readily figured that the place would average at least $300 a night in receipts if the business was good, which it always has been at this establishment. Figure a little harder and it will be seen how this large canopy paid for itself in the first few rainy nights of the season.

The erection of so large a canvas may be considered quite a nervy piece of business. The writer of this article having been for several years connected with the largest American circuses would have hesitated at the idea of hanging so large a piece of canvas without the support of any poles. The great weight of canvas, especially when wet, is remarkable even to those who are used to life under canvas. The effects of wind and storm present themselves vividly to the mind of the old-time showman. But here we see done what an old showman never would have dared to do. A piece of canvas 78 x 90 feet supported without the use of poles.

The canvas is hung from three strong cables extending the length of the plot of ground and so arranged that it can be pushed back out of the way on clear nights. This is the only method by which a canvas could be used for an airdome, as tent poles would interfere with the picture and the view of the audience. There is a certain bigness to it as one steps into this canvas auditorium which is rather impressive. It certainly is wonderfully effective as a sound carrier. When the canopy is spread every word on the stage is heard as plainly as in any well-built theater. Another feature of the canvas canopy, now that cold weather is coming on, is the warmth of it. While the other airdomes have all closed for the season, the Bergen Airdome people have added a canvas side wall to the canopy and expect to continue at least six weeks without any discomfort to their audiences, so far as cold weather is concerned. The canvas canopy is a success from every point of view, and the Clinton Amusement Company, owners of the Bergen Airdome, deserve congratulations and credit from the moving picture men in general for having made such a practical demonstration for the good of the business.

It is not to be supposed that the gentlemen of the Clinton Amusement Company used up all their gray matter in building their canopy. They have clearly proved that they are shrewd theatrical managers in every branch of their work. By offering nothing that was not the very best it soon became worded about that the Bergen Airdome was leaving all the other open-air shows far behind. The talent procured ran into considerable money, it was always worth seeing and never descended to the cheap fill-in act. The pictures were the very best that could be procured. Under these conditions it is not very difficult to understand why the Bergen Airdome has been such a success.

The Clinton Amusement Company is a corporation and the stockholders are so much encouraged by this year's success that it is their intention to open two or more new airdomes in some of the surrounding towns next season. The officers of the corporation are Andrew Fischer, president; S. Hershenstein, vice-president; A. J. Cornwell, treasurer; E. O. Smith, secretary, and W. Hankin, general manager. The canvas canopy was designed by W. Hankin, who is an architect, and was built by Henry Derby, of Jersey City.

Some exhibitors, when they find the [illegible] educational stuff to houses full of sensible business men and their wives, will begin to realize the value of something they do not seem to appreciate at present.

"MORE THAN HIS DUTY" (Edison).

A story dealing with the royal mounted police in Canada, a story from which one cannot escape once one comes under its spell. Scenically it is beautiful beyond description, opening a region little known in this portion of the world and therefore arousing unusual interest. And it represents the work of one of the finest and best disciplined bodies of men in the world. But beyond that the hero of the story develops a higher type of heroism than the mere physical bravery which is required and expected of these men. His heroism is of the moral type, that which goes beyond the physical and lays hold on those intangible, but none the less real, things which constitute the great things of life. In telling the story a high degree of dramatic ability is developed, the story holding one closely from the beginning to the end. The scenery forms a magnificent background and has been selected with an artist's appreciation of the most suitable points from which to make the exposures. Introducing and illustrating the heroism of this magnificent body of men produced in the actual setting where they do their work, the picture is in a different class from "the usual thing" and one which attracts through its dramatic, photographic and educational qualities.

"RANSOMED, OR A PRISONER OF WAR" (Vitagraph).

A war story that is different. Of course the word war conveys the impression of wholesale murder, and all that goes with it, but in this picture a different thing is shown. A father who went through the lines to celebrate his little boy's birthday is captured. When the little chap learns of it he goes to the general, explains the situation and offers his woolly lamb as a ransom. The general accepts the lamb and releases the father. Then the war closes and the general sends the little boy a rocking horse in place of the lamb, which he keeps as the most interesting memento of the war. The attraction of this picture is its human side. It is shown first in the father keeping faith with his little boy. Next it is shown in the general releasing the father upon the little one's plea and his keeping the lamb. The child's part is played with fidelity to childish characteristics. There is that "elusive quality" about the play which raises it above the common run of war pictures and puts it on a plane entirely by itself. It is a graphic representation of one of the effects of war without the representation of the waving banners or the blare of trumpets and rattle of drums. It will help in acquiring the correct view of war, the view which shows what it cost the folks at home. The producers are to be commended and the actors, too, deserve praise for the excellence of their performance.

"The Little Acrobat" (Gaumont).—A record film of what its name implies and as such is a pleasing addition to a program. Perhaps it is not essential that all pictures should present extraordinary dramatic qualities. This one pleases because it faithfully represents the work it is supposed to reproduce.

"The Fiance and the Dog" (Gaumont).—A comedy presenting some amusing situations and offering a diversion in the way of showing what happened when the dog and the fiance got in too close proximity. The picture is amusing.

"Examination Day at School" (Biograph).—Those who are of middle age and went to school in the old country schoolhouse will be carried back through the years when they see this, and will see again the group of children who gathered with him in the schoolhouse back there on the hillside, shaded by maples and elms in Summer, and afflicted with huge cracks that let in the cold blast in Winter. Never mind the cold of Winter only the pleasant memories remain. And this picture brings them all back again and makes them live and move and become real again. The vision will appear over a row of graves, and there will be many gaps in the line of those left behind, but this film will vitalize it, and will reproduce it so vividly it cannot be mistaken. The story of the pupils' love for their teacher and the vigorous method they took to get him back again will add to the interest. But different faces will appear and each individual will live over again his own school days and the pleasant memories will blend with the picture on the screen until somehow it will be the old school reproduced and revivified and all sense of the present will be lost as the reminiscences of the past will overwhelm and encompass him round about.

"The Path of Duty" (Lubin).—Unusual scenic features are accompanied by a story of strong heart interest, one that appeals with extraordinary power. Only sympathy can be felt for the young revenue officer who finds it necessary to arrest the father of the girl he is to marry on the charge of smuggling. But here the girl shows her mettle. She goes after and arrests the real offender, thereby securing the release of her father. Then recognizing that the officer was only doing what he was sworn to do, he is forgiven and happiness sheds its radiance through all their lives.

"A Plucky American Girl" (Melies).—Here is a thrilling railroad story, exhibiting one of those plain American girls as a heroine in a very unexpected manner. Desperadoes attempt to wreck an express, tearing up the rails to do so; but they are foiled and captured because this same plain girl develops such an unexpected sample of grit and gumption, two important features of an individual's make up. The girl's ride on the hand car to another station, breaking the window and sending the message along the wires to a station where the express can be signalled is one of the most thrilling scenes Melies has yet produced. And when it is all over and the dastardly scheme, frustrated by the nerve of a girl, comes to naught, vigorous applause is certain. Photographically the film could scarcely be improved.

"A Kentucky Pioneer" (Selig).—A firm that has so vitalized ranch pictures is capable of still other important achievements and this pioneer picture is in harmony with the excellence of pictures gone before. Pioneer life is suffused with a glamor of romance, even in its sternest features, and in this picture the spirit of romance is well reproduced. The love story helps, and the reproduction of the ancient mode of travel is interesting. It brings back scenes which have passed away never to return. The battle between the settlers and the Indians is a representation of the stubborn character of all those conflicts and is much too realistic to be comfortable. But the pioneers rout the Indians, and peace and prosperity smile upon them. The scenic qualities will attract attention since the mechanical excellence of the film cannot be questioned.

"Ononko's Vow" (Edison).—One of the most elaborate Indian pictures ever put on the screen. It is a story of the famous massacre at Deerfield, Mass., in 1765 and 1704. All exterior scenes were made in and about Deerfield and they faithfully reproduce the scenery in Summer and Winter. It is well, too, that views of this magnificent old town have been made permanent. It is one of the few historic towns which have not been injured by time and the ruthless renovator. The colonial houses still line the principal street, none of them rebuilt or destroyed and the great shade trees still overarch the streets, massive, magnificent, unsurpassed. It was a cruel massacre. History says that, and records of the wanderings and sufferings of the prisoners prove the assertions of history. An incident in the early colonial wars, it has remained as one of the landmarks of the struggle in settlement and freedom. There is a heart interest which holds one's attention and arouses the emotions. There are thrilling scenes when the war whoop of the Indian, the crackling flames of the burning buildings and the shrieks of those who are suffering at the hands of the Indians can be heard, so vividly is the story told. It brings graphically before one something of the dangers which menaced even as considerable a village as Deerfield and it emphasizes anew what it cost to make this land a fit habitation for the millions that are now here. Films like this perform a service of importance. They instruct, and, at the same time, they impress upon those who see them something of the conditions which existed during the struggle for a new home in the wilderness and later in wresting freedom from a stubborn king.

"The Sick Baby" (Pathe).—A rather lively temperance lecture based upon the difficulties of a woman with a drunken

AMERICAN FILM

A Message to Independent Renters

We intend to make and sell the best films that BRAINS backed by MONEY can produce.

We have the BRAINS—backed by Experience—Licensed Experience.

We have the Money—lots of it.

We intend to sell our film on its merits.

The Renters will see our product prior to placing an order.

With our organization and our selling plan we anticipate little difficulty in placing you on our "buying" list.

Watch for our First Release Date. It will mark an epoch in the Independent field.

A Message to Independent Exhibitors

Every man in our factory—our studio—our office is an EXPERIENCED FILM MAN.

We have been making films for somebody else for years.

We likewise made money for the other fellow.

Can't you imagine the worth of the film we will make FOR OURSELVES?

You'll need our film, Messrs. Exhibitors, and you'll need the FIRST RELEASE.

WATCH FOR THE ANNOUNCEMENT

AMERICAN FILM FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Made by

THE AMERICAN FILM MANFG. CO.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK : : : CHICAGO, ILLS.

N. B. Get your name on our mailing list for the AMERICAN BULLETIN husband and a dangerously sick baby. The closing scene, when the medicine has been procured through a curious coincidence and a semi-drunken reveller appears at the door with a huge load of provisions, is pleasant enough. But the climax of incongruity is reached when the visitor reads the husband a homily upon the dangers and evils of drinking too much. The baby recovers, leaving the story without a touch of sadness.

"Patricia of the Plains" (Essanay).—A story of plains life, involving a love affair between a sheriff and a pretty bar maid, and as the third in this triangle a bad man, who is looking for a quantity of bullion left with the girl for safe keeping. The only point of special interest in the story is the finding of the outlaw hidden in the loft by the girl by means of a drop of blood which flows from his wound and strikes the sheriff on the hand. This incident has been used once before, and if memory serves right, twice. Hence it is not entirely novel. At the same time it is interesting and perhaps serves its purpose in this instance quite as well as it would have done if it were new. Apparently most of the principal events have been used in this flood of Western pictures and it is small wonder if an effective scene like this is used more than once.

"A High Speed Biker" (Gaumont).—A comedy which displays some very amusing stunts performed by a high speed biker. Like all comedies of this type it is somewhat rough, but it at least possesses the element of amusing action.

"Who Owns the Rug?" (Pathe).—A problem is here presented which would supply effectual occupation for the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer, and the probabilities are he would eventually acknowledge his inability to solve it. Where three persons purchase a single piece of property, under the impression that no one else has purchased before or will purchase it after, who is the rightful owner? While this picture makes no attempt at an answer it presents the problem in unmistakable terms and leaves the audience deeply interested in guessing the answer.

"Southern Tunis" (Pathe).—A scenic film which graphically presents interesting and picturesque portions of that people. Their customs, their homes, their occupations and their amusements all figure in this picture. One acquires a new impression of this French possession and is really attracted by the attractive character of the film. One views it with much complacency, since the motion picture brings it here and saves the expense and the discomforts of travel to such a distant point.

"The Bachelor and the Baby" (Vitagraph).—A society drama which will rank among those which are strong and which appeal with more than ordinary strength to any audience. It is based upon misleading appearances, the result of which is the breaking off of a desirable engagement. But after the tangles are all straightened out, after the misunderstandings are removed these same misapprehensions lead to a happier marriage. Staging and photography are alike beyond criticism, while the actors perform their parts with a full appreciation of the necessities of the play. There is a sympathetic understanding of the drama's requirements which contributes much to the film's success.

"The Iconoclast" (Biograph).—A helpful picture. Not alone is it good dramatically, but it teaches the dissatisfied that wealth does not bring all that may be wanted. Often the dissatisfied working man has what the man of wealth would give all he has to possess. The difficulty is to make the dissatisfied iconoclast understand this. If the poor man could be made to understand the griefs and heartaches and sorrows which often surround the wealthy the way this man found it, anarchism and the worst forms of socialism would cease. A picture which does so much to clear up a misunderstanding has a reason for existence far beyond the mere matter of amusement. The man entered the house to murder. He left it with a chastened spirit and a clearer comprehension of the heartaches that trouble the rich. And he went back to his home and his work, convinced that his lot was not bad and that he might make it better if he would. It is a sermon in ethics and it deserves wide circulation so its teaching may reach to the confines of the country.

"The Baggage Smasher" (Lubin).—It is to be feared if this film gains wide currency and baggage men see it they will redouble their efforts to smash trunks in the hope that they will find inside a fake lord who is troubling a romantic heiress. The success of this man was so marked that his example may become contagious. For all this, the film is entertaining and tells its story in a lively way. When the fake lord succeeds in impressing the father with his merits it looks like an easy conquest. But even though the girl was romantic she had spirit and was not disposed to accept the lord's attentions. In the end he is arrested through the baggage smasher's converting the trunk in which he was hidden into kindling wood, and the romantic girl and the brawny baggage man speedily marry and live peacefully ever after.

"Betty is Still at Her Old Tricks" (Pathe).—Madcap Betty manages to get the entire neighborhood into an uproar with an assortment of tricks that result in mortification to the persons affected and the destruction of much property. She is fortunate enough to secure an inoffending scarecrow to receive the chastisement intended for her, otherwise she might never have played any more tricks. Betty is a lively individual and her pranks supply amusement for all who see the films.

"A Cold Storage Romance" (Selig).—It is all right to inscribe one's name and address on an egg, but when that egg gets into cold storage and remains there for years conditions change and the romance disappears. It did in this instance, and the unfortunate poet who discovered the egg upon which the romantic miss had written her address ten years before, was so summarily extinguished by the aforesaid young woman's matter-of-fact husband that he scarcely recognized himself. However, this adds to the whimsical humor with which the film abounds. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the film is the suggestion of romantic possibilities connected with the inscriptions upon a cold storage egg.

"My Friend, the Doctor" (Selig).—A snappy comedy in which the Selig players fully maintain their reputations as laugh producers. My friend, the Doctor, is an interesting individual and develops some amusing traits and gets into some amusing situations during the length of the film.

INDEPENDENT.

"Behind the Scenes of the Cinema Stage" (Eclair).—The mysteries of motion picture making are laid bare. Some of the tricks which look so mysterious on the screen are illustrated. Then they show how a scenario is put together. The stage manager is represented at work and the various assistants are shown rushing hither and thither in an apparently heedless way, and finally the finished film is shown. Out of all that jumble comes a good picture, an apparent impossibility, yet it is done many times every day.

"All the World's a Stage" (Imp).—The eternal triangle represented in a troupe of actors where a man plays the love scene with a friend's wife far more unartificially than the friend likes. There is some tense dramatic action which almost results in bodily harm to the friend, but a peace is patched up, and after a lecture by the manager, the husband and wife depart as sweethearts once more. If this film suggests anything it is the universality of Cupid's dominion and the infinite possibilites of the appearance of the eternal triangle.

"Women of the West" (Yankee).—It doesn't seem as though anything new could be said about the West, yet it must be admitted that this company has produced a somewhat different and more interesting picture. To depict the lives of the pioneer women was a happy thought and to make the scenes so thrilling was to add to their interest. The Indian attack is realistic, so much so that one involuntarily starts back in fear. But some of the brave pioneer women defended their homes, while others take a wild ride to inform their husbands and neighbors of the attack and their peril. Is it exaggerated? Not at all. These things did happen many times over and women did perform similar deeds of valor, not once, but many times. And all honor to them for it. The producer of this film performed his work well and the picture will serve to instil into the minds of the present generation something of the difficulty and danger that accompanied the pioneers' work in the settlement of the West.

"War" (Powers).—A pretentious drama for the Powers Company. Indeed, one can scarcely repress a shudder to see it worked out. But it represents war, and because it does it will, perhaps, perform some part in the effort to abolish war. If the real enormity of war, the heartbreak, the grief, the desolation and destitution, can be made prominent instead of the pomp and so-called glory, possibly war will eventually be a thing of the past. And here is a scene that is plain murder, while the wife and child wait at home for the murdered man's return. If these features of war can be made prominent those who see will understand and will exert their influence against its continuation. The picture represents the cold deliberation of it all, not that which is called glory. It should teach a lesson of value.

Real Music That Really Fits the Picture

"MOTION PICTURE PIANO MUSIC"

FIFTY CENTS A COPY.

A Piano Book that contains descriptive Music to fit all probable Scenes, Actions, Characters, etc., shown in Moving Pictures. Composed and compiled by a Professional Pianist of twenty years' experience in Theatrical lines. Brimfull of practical suggestions for the inexperienced Pianist in a M. P. Theater. Descriptive Circular sent free upon request. Book will be sent promptly upon receipt of fifty cents. Address,

FRELINGER MUSIC COMPANY

LAFAYETTE, IND.

Drums, Traps, and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.

272 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.

The Pedal of the Hour

This latest invention eliminates all pedal worries. Produces natural arm struck tone. Ease of action phenomenal. Constructed entirely of metal. Strong and durable. Folds in space 9½ x 3½. Weight only 35 oz. Just the thing for vaudeville. Keep in touch with progress. Write for complete description and testimonials. We have everything you need for your line. We supply Chicago's leading picture houses with drums and effects.

LUDWIG & LUDWIG

134 E. Van Buren St., Room 610, Chicago, Ill.

Xylophones, Orchestra Bells, Chimes, Forks, etc. Send for free illustrated catalogue.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

WURLITZER

Automatic Musical Instruments

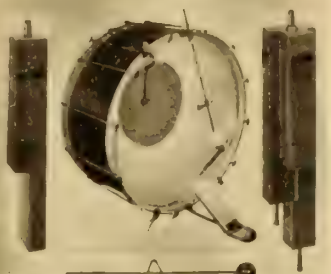
They do the work of expert musicians and reduce operating expense.

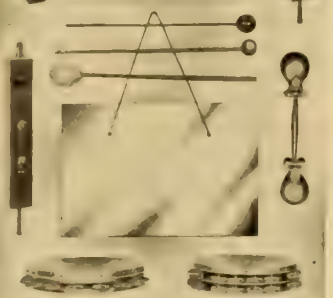
Wurlitzer is the world's largest manufacturer. We supply the U. S. Government musical instruments. Write for big 84-page catalogue showing the only complete line of self-players, from a small electric piano to automatic orchestra representing 35 musicians. Easy payments.

Concert Piano Orchestra.

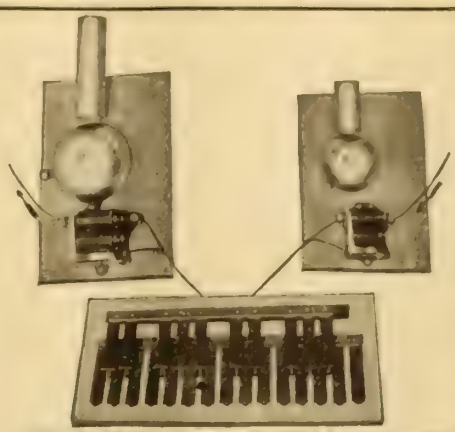
RUDOLPH WURLITZER & CO.

CINCINNATI—117 to 121 E. 4th; NEW YORK—25 & 27 W. 32d (bet. B'way & 5th Ave.); CHICAGO—266 & 268 Wabash Ave.; PHILADELPHIA—1835 Chestnut; ST. LOUIS—912 Pine; CLEVELAND—206 Prospect Ave., S. E.; COLUMBUS, O.—57 E. Main.





WURLITZER



OUR PATENT ELECTRIC BELLS create great enthusiasm in Moving Picture Houses, play from a keyboard as a solo instrument, or as an accompaniment to songs. Twenty-five Bells, two octaves chromatic, including resonators, magnets and keyboard, $75.00.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Moving Picture Pianists

Are you "working up" your pictures? If not, why not? If so, you want some good melodramatic music. Send for free sample page of "Orpheum Collection of Moving Picture Music." Now being used and praised by many of the best houses in the country.

PRICE.....75 CENTS

Also latest cue music (series 1910) for 10 parts and piano.....$1.00

¼ discount on both numbers.

Clarence E. Sinn

1501 Sedgwick St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Sound Effects

In Picture Machine Theaters it is very essential that the imitations and sound effects are of the kind that can be depended upon. We make only practical and serviceable imitations that will give the exact reproduction of the original. We also manufacture Chimes, Tympani, Bells, Xylophones, Drums and accessories.

LEEDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

1055 E. Palmer St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

TO TRAP DRUMMERS

A Limited Time Offer

Special Offer $10.00 — Size Shell 8 x 14, Size Shell 3 x 15

Solid Maple, Rosewood or Walnut, 10 fine plated thumb screw rods, Kangaroo, Angora or Skunk Calf Drum Heads.

We ship with privilege of 6 days trial

E. P. ZEIDLER DRUM CO.

Dept. F. Cleveland, Ohio

Send for my large free catalogue of Folding and Parlor Organs, suitable for use in Moving Picture Theatres.

Address

J. C. KAY

4036 Ellis Avenue, Chicago

"Young Deer's Return" (Bison).—A story in which the racial difference between the Indian and the white man are emphasized. Even though the former miner reluctantly consents to allow his daughter to marry the Indian, the latter understands that it is only because of gratitude, haughtily leaves the house, returns to his own race and weds an Indian girl. All this may be true, but no good purpose is gained by emphasizing these race differences. They exist No one denies that, but who is benefited by showing it in is handled with sufficient originality to make it interesting. this way? There isn't even any dramatic attraction in a picture of this sort. There are too many interesting, entertaining and instructive subjects to make it necessary to select one of this type, and this company has done too well in other pictures to injure their reputation in something so akin to "the usual thing."

"The Beechwood Ghost" (Powers).—A bit of comedy which includes a ghost that appeared at an opportune time and secured a reward of kisses from a pretty girl. Of course such luck on the part of a mere ghost arouses the reflection that almost any man would don a Continental uniform and appear as a ghost if the reward were similar. It is a picture of a house party of merry young people and is entertaining because it seems so natural.

"Leon of the Table d'Hote" (Thanhouser).—A rather attenuated comedy dealing with a waiter who posed as a count at a resort and laid siege to an heiress. But his fat cashier lover appears and frustrates all his schemes, while the heiress weds the man of her choice. The film is too long. Comedy of this character can seldom be carried through an entire reel successfully.

"Annie" (Imp).—The feature of this film is the preservation of a marriage record on the blotter used by the clerk when he wrote it. It is a marriage of objection, the disowning of the young wife by the husband's parents, a deserted baby, and a sudden re-union some years later, at which the reversed marriage record is shown on a blotter. There is much of heart interest and some degree of dramatic power in the picture. Moreover, the actors interpret it with intelligence, adding to its attractiveness. "Annie" should be popular with any audience.

"A Schoolma'am's Ride for a Life" (Defender).—To ride a long distance across the prairie to save a man's life and then to discover that the man whom you save is your old sweetheart would be sufficient to disturb the serenity of any but the most equable temperaments. It is a lover's quarrel and banishment as a beginning, then long separation, and finally an attempt on the part of the girl to undo her unnecessary harshness. A hold-up of a stage is the next kink in the tangle and the accusation of the wrong man who is led away to a summary execution. And the teacher, discovering the facts rides like mad and cuts the rope just as the man is about to swing into Eternity. It is a thriller, and even though it deals with a somewhat worn theme it

"How Jones Won the Championship" (Lux).—It is a comedy with much of activity and surprising stunts in it. The places into which he rides that bicycle and his many narrow escapes are funny, and then, despite all these handicaps, he is first in and becomes champion entirely by mistake and without any real intention of entering even.

"Kindness Abused and Its Results" (Lux).—A fairy tale with a moral. Not all who are befriended become hard and unjust like this man, but some do, and this film will do no harm because it will remind them of the injustice of their acts. The woodman, befriended, forgets what it is to be poor, and treats unfortunates cruelly. But punishment overtakes him, and he is sent back to his chopping again. The moral value of a film of this character cannot be estimated, but it is probably stronger than seems likely. Something about a picture of this character makes an impression deeper and more lasting than many which seem to be stronger.

"The Ranch Raiders" (Bison).—A Western picture of much action and illustrating graphically the swift, stern justice which overtakes such men as these raiders are represented to be. The delight of many audiences, a long, hard chase on horseback, is a feature, and there is a somewhat disconcerting scene when the raiders take refuge in a hut from which they are driven by the smoke from the fire which consumes it, there to meet the justice the cowboys are ready to mete out to them. Some of the action is thrilling, and not fault can be found with the mechanical work, but public sentiment seems to be against this type of picture and we should like to see it supplanted by something else. The Bison films have been as good as any of the Western flood. In fact, they were the leaders among the Independents, and surely a house which has done such excellent work in this direction has sufficient ability to change and lead with something equally as good, but fresh and therefore more interesting.

"Govanni of Medici" (Cines).—Here is a dramatic subject of unusual merit. It tells the life story of a brave and desperate man finally brought low by one who had more strength than he possessed. But before the end there are strong scenes, tense with human passion and earnestness, bearing the unmistakable imprint of strength and power. The drama is well staged and the actors perform their parts with intelligence and discretion. Some of the scenic features are sufficient to arouse interest without reference to the story told.

"Foolshead Employed in a Bank" (Itala).—The old friend of many who like a good laugh appears again in a new role. What he does in the bank will hardly be found in the codes of rules adopted by the bankers' association. But even though that may be true he succeeds in making the people laugh, which may be more important than being wholly solemn about the bank. Foolshead's adventures are many, but they are always funny and he has lightened more than one unfortunate's load of care.

"Rip Van Winkle" (Columbia).—Everybody knows the story of Rip Van Winkle, the man who was so fortunate that he escaped a good many troubles that now confront the average man. But perhaps Rip would scarcely recognize himself in the sumptuous fashion in which he is represented. There is good scenery. There are pretty girls. There are all the numerous attractions which one is wont to associate with Rip, and they are filmed by a master who understands how to interpret them most effectively. It is worth while to put these old, familiar stories on the screen, if it is properly done. But the one who does it must have a thorough appreciation of the story, and understand its dramatic possibilities, otherwise flat failure will result. It is not enough to know the story. How to interpret it must be understood, too. And the more familiar a story is the more necessary it is to interpret it as accurately as possible. Unless this is done the effect is spoiled and the effort comes to naught.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Galena, Ill., was pleased at the invasion of the town by the Selig Company which took several of the scenes for "The County Fair," Neil Burgess' great rural drama. The race which is won by the green horse "Cold Molasses," to the joy of all the charges of Miss Abbey was staged during one day of the County fair, the crowds in the grandstand making the picture realistic. This was taken from an automobile driven around the track in front of the horses.

Dan Grady has opened a moving picture show at Fifteenth avenue and Fifteenth street in Moline, Ill.

Hull Schofield has opened a moving picture show at Rock Falls, Ill.

Thomas Leonard has removed from Virden to Pinckneyville, Ill., from which point he will look after the interests of the eight moving picture houses in Southern Illinois, in which he and John Gardner are interested.

"If you see it at Hyatt's you never saw it before," is the catchline used on advertising matter of Hyatt's moving picture theater at Olney, Ill.

Manager Luedke, of the Star, and Manager Matsen, of the Electric at Waukegan, announce that they will run two reels instead of one for five cents.

A run by the Central Fire company of Elkhart, Ind., drew attention to the benefit performance at the Princess Theater for the Firemen's Benevolent Association. As an appropriate film the public was given "The Fireman's Daughter."

The Gem Theater at Macomb, Ill., has been sold to Frank Logan of that city; J. J. Bloom, the retiring manager, with Peter Richardson of Monmouth, Ill., has purchased the Lyric at Monmouth.

John McMurry and E. Hawkins have sold their moving picture show at Vinitia, I. T., and will conduct the Lyric in Alton, Ill., for W. M. Sauvage.

Frank R. Rockwell, formerly of Decatur is now general contractor for the Colonial Theaters Company with headquarters at Joliet, Ill. This company, which operates a string of moving picture theaters in the Central States expects to add more and Mr. Rockwell is kept busy. He has charge of the construction of the building from the time the ground is secured until the new house is turned over to the manager. The uniform type used by this concern is beautiful and has done much to raise the moving picture show standard in the Central States.

F. H. M.

Correspondence.

"FOR THE UPLIFT OF THE PICTURE."

Cairo, Ill., September 28, 1910.

Editors Moving Picture World:

Gentlemen—Having been an interested "onlooker" of moving pictures ever since the beginning, I have noticed and noted all improvements and to look at the beautiful works of art turned out by nearly all the manufacturers up to the present moment, one would say the limit had been reached. But there is one thing lacking, in my estimation, and that is the stereoscopic effect. We see beautiful films but how much more beautiful they could be made if they had an appearance of real people and we could feel we were witnessing a play instead of a black and white picture.

Until the phonograph and gramophone were perfected up to their present standard, some of the world's greatest singers refused to be "phonogrammed," fearing that the machines would not do their voices justice and so I think when the moving pictures have been so far improved we shall see whole plays on 4 or more reels like acts in a play.

When Maude Adams refused to be filmed as Joan of Arc, she probably had seen some of the junk that had been put on the screen—rain storms, travel ghosts, etc.—and felt that her art was too precious to be caricatured in any such manner; and I don't see how any one could blame her. Had the film end of the business been brought to such a degree of perfection that the actors had seemed like human, tangible beings, I do not believe that Miss Adams would have said no.

Now, Mr. Editor, all this leads up to the object of this article, and that is, to get an outline through "The World" of work that has been accomplished looking towards the stereoscopic effect and whether any effort is being made in that direction, and whether the stereoscopic effect is desirable.

I am not an exhibitor nor even an operator, but an interested "onlooker," and I have some very good ideas on how things should be done and would like (if acceptable to the Moving Picture World) to write an article on my impressions as a spectator: "How I would run a moving picture show." Sometimes the best ideas come from the obscure places and I should like to tell how the Cairo shows are run and what improvements I would make if I was manager of one of my own. Can I obtain instructions anywhere in regard to the manufacture of films, how to develop, tone, print and all the processes in turning out a film? My object is to carry out experiments in stereoscopic pictures.

I trust this article is sufficiently interesting enough to find a place in your paper, and that it may be the means of starting some to think on the betterment and uplift of the picture.

INTERESTED ONLOOKER.

[If our correspondent will obtain the volume of the Moving Picture World for January-July, 1909, he will find his questions answered with regard to the preparation of moving picture films. As to stereoscopic effect: consult Hopwood's "Living Pictures," obtainable of Tennant & Ward, 125 East Twenty-fifth street, New York City.—Eds. M. P. W.]

ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES, 1 CENT EACH.

Up-to-date theaters use them for announcing future programs, for song chorus slides when the chorus slide is missing, for business advertising slides—in fact, for anything you desire to say to the audience. They are written on colored gelatin with a pen and ink or typewriter. They look well. Anyone can make them. Takes three minutes to make a slide. For three dollars ($3.00) cash with order, I send by express (charges not prepaid) as follows: 24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. F. H. RICHARDSON, No. 6 Bradhurst avenue, New York City.

PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS

Take Notice. We have the exclusive rights for the State of Pennsylvania of the

COWBOY AND INDIAN FRONTIER CELEBRATION

Held at CHEYENNE, WYOMING

Write or Wire for Booking

LLOYD & SCHAD, Main Office, 202 E. Sunbury St., Shamokin, Pa.

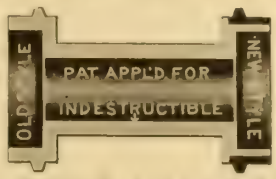
IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In order to complete our files and a number of bound volumes, the publisher of the Moving Picture World is anxious to obtain at least a dozen numbers of the following issues, and for each number received will give a three months' subscription to the World. Kindly let us hear from you promptly. Vol. I., No. 1. Vol. II., No. 10. Vol. II., No. 11. Vol. III., No. 12. Vol. III., No. 23. Vol. III., No. 25. Vol. IV., No. 1.

ATTENTION NEW YORK ALIEN OPERATORS.

All New York Nineteen Hundred and Ten licensed cards, alien and non-alien, will be allowed by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity to remain in full force and effect until one year from date of issue. This means that, for instance, a card issued in March, Nineteen Hundred and Ten will expire March, Nineteen Hundred and Eleven; while one issued in September, Nineteen Hundred and Ten

FOR TWO WEEKS ONLY



300 SAMPLE SPROCKETS

Upper or Lower, each $1.25

JUST TO INTRODUCE MY IMPROVEMENT

E. W. LAVEZZI

3042 N. Ashland Ave. Chicago, Ill.

In answering advertisers, kindly mention the Moving Picture World.

LUCIEN PRÉVOST

MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS, 54 Rue Philippe de Gerard, Paris

WORKS : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras

Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)

Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines

In answering advertisers, kindly mention the Moving Picture World.

Louise M. Marion

Novelty of Illustrated Poems

which have made a great hit is again booking for the coming season, in and out of town.

Miss Marion has many new and beautiful illustrations, patriotic and otherwise, made from life models, also most attractive painted posters, and can introduce violin music when desired. Terms reasonable.

Address

L. M. MARION, 321 West 23d Street, New York City

New England Notes.

The Pastime Theater, of Briston, Conn., is now under the management of R. E. Holbrook, who succeeds Henry Davis. R. H. Norton, formerly sole proprietor of the house, has sold one-third of his interest in the Pastime to his new manager, Mr Holbrook.

The Savoy Theater, of Fall River, was opened to the public for the first time September 26. Julius Cahn will look after the house.

The new Opera House, of Hudson, Mass., was recently opened to the public. W. Barton is the manager of this theater which has a seating capacity of 1,200.

D. F. Conlon opened the new Victoria Theater, Lawrence, Mass. E. C. Earle will manage the house. It is reported that the opening was very satisfactory. The Victoria shows pictures, vaudeville and illustrated songs, charging 10 cents admission.

Twomey & Demera opened the Nickel Theater recently, at Lawrence. Moving pictures and illustrated songs are used solely. J. R. Oldfield, formerly of the Opera House, has been appointed manager of the Nickel.

Work on Morris & Myers new Broadway Theater is being rushed with the utmost speed and it is hoped that the house will be opened about October 10. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,800, and has been built with an eye to beauty and for the comfort of its patrons. The house will undoubtedly be a beautiful one.

The Bijou Theater, of Willimantic, Conn., has enlarged the size of their screen and report their pictures to be clearer and more steady.

The Opera House, of Willimantic, recently opened with Independent films and vaudeville.

The Pastime Theater, of Plymouth, Mass., recently opened for its initial performance. Herbert S. Clark holds the managerial helm.

The new Sullivan Theater, of Pittsfield, is expected to be completed by October 10 and work is being rushed.

Hathaway's Theater, of Fall River, J. J. Shannon, general manager, recently reopened after being dark over the Summer. This house has been thoroughly renovated.

The new Empire Theater, of Bridgeport, Conn., has been opened. This house is conducted in connection with the Keeney Circuit, headed by Frank A. Keeney, of Brooklyn.

The new Music Hall, of Brockton, has been attracting excellent business by using moving pictures and songs—without the use of vaudeville.

Sheedy's Theater, of Brockton, J. L. Owens, resident manager, is doing a fine business running to moving pictures and vaudeville, changing the bill twice weekly.

H. Farrar, of the Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt., recently paid a business visit to Boston and remained a week looking things over. Mr. Farrar states that many improvements have been made in the Comique and that he finds business good.

The Dreamland Theater, of Claremont, N. H., which has been closed undergoing repairs, has reopened under the management of the proprietor, H. V. Daley.

The new Star Theater, of Hartford, Conn., recently opened its doors for the first time. The Star is reported to be cosy and neat.

* * *

Since their very inception some of the moving picture theaters have had the name among the trade of projecting a picture that is steady and bright, while other houses are considered to show poor pictures. These latter houses have considered the matter when it was brought to their attention, but never seemed able to arrive at the cause. They were using as good a quality of films as their competitors. Some of them put the blame on the sprockets of the films, others discharged their operators and tried new ones, still others had their screens repainted. However, these arrangements did not seem to bring forth the desired results. The writer, in common with others interested in this industry, looked into this matter and arrived at the conclusion that the fault was not one of sprockets or of operators so much as it was a fault inherent in the initial building of the screen. It seems hardly credible, but many moving picture theaters on which considerable amounts of money have been spent in decorations, etc., left the size of the screen to mere chance. The screens were built to fill in the entire space of the wall where the screen was to be, and the pictures projected made to fill the screen. It would seem that there must be some definite ratio between the length and width of the theater to the screen. This ratio ought to be reckoned out mathematically by someone expert in that line, not left to chance. The writer noted that one New England theater (the Bijou, of Willimantic, Conn.) recently altered the size of its screen completely, and is now having a big improvement in the projection of their cinematographs. Moving picture managers conscious of the fact that they project poor pictures ought to look to themselves and ascertain whether the cause is one of junk films or of a screen that does not correctly fit their auditorium. HENRY.

BOSTON.

At the annual exhibition of mechanical devices, which takes place at the Mechanics' Building shortly, there will be an interesting display of Edison creations. Among them will be all the inventions perfected by Mr. Edison up-to-date, for the cinematograph.

The Castle Square Theater, of Boston, inaugurated its first Sunday night performance of pictures and vaudeville on September 25. Last Winter the scheme of giving these popular entertainments at the Castle Square, which is devoted to a stock company, was tried and proved a big success.

IN BROOKLYN.

In contrast to the generally poor picture work in Brooklyn, there is one place on Fifth avenue near Fourth street where good pictures can usually be seen. While it is too much to expect many of the latest pictures, there is always one up-to-date film and the others seem evidently selected with care. The large, well ventilated hall is usually well filled with a respectable and appreciative class of people. Soda and ice cream are served if desired and a quiet, homelike feeling is always manifest. The writer is sorry to again have to protest against the poor choice shown in the Fulton Street Theater. One day last week a picture entitled "The Spirit Devil" was shown. It consists of a robbery, a sudden death and a suicide by hangin. It is these pictures and the people who show them which bring discredit upon the otherwise advancing moving picture exhibits.

THE ALIEN OPERATORS.

Another alien operators' meeting was held this week at 10 East Fifteenth street, ostensibly for the purpose of fighting and petitioning the official authorities to repeal the law passed some time ago which debars a non-citizen of the United States to secure employment in the capacity of operating a moving picture machine and its extensions.

So far the officials have granted this: that an operator's license is effective until its expiration. In other words if the date of issue of a license is in March, 1910, the possessor of that license, can legitimately operate a moving picture machine and its extensions until March, 1911, whereupon, if that operator is not a citizen, he loses his position.

Judging the new law from a legal aspect, we cannot perceive why naturalization should have anything to do with the vocation of a resident of Greater New York, and we can only reiterate that it is unconstitutional. We will do as much as possible for the benefit of those who are in danger of losing their position.

"Dare-Devils" is the subject title of fifty hand-colored slides which depict the thrilling incidents of the most hazardous sport in the world—auto racing. The complete set consists of views made at the more famous motor race courses in both the United States and Europe, and show the fatal results which attend time-beating and reckless driving. A more graphic and timely set of slides has never been issued as the eyes of the world are now focused on the daring pilots of the throbbing and pulsing, probably fiend-like racers who raced against time in the recent Vanderbilt contest and will again send their cars careening over the same course on October 15, when the Grand Prize contest will be held. The sixth Vanderbilt cup race was marked by a series of fatalities and accidents second only to the memorable Paris-Madrid race in its tragic results. The dead and wounded marked almost every lap of the famous motor classic, and for this reason the public will be wont to talk and discuss it loud and long. But from a sporting point of view the race was thrilling and will go down in the annals of automobiling as the most hotly contested long distance event ever held. These reasons make "Dare-Devils" of vital importance to the exhibitor, and to those who are fortunate in securing the State rights they should prove a genuine mint. The Dare-Devil Picture Company, of Boonville, Ind., are the manufacturers of the pictures.

FLICKERS.

The committee of Frederick citizens appointed to criticise the moving picture shows has been subdivided into four committees.—Frederick (Md.) Examiner.

Now if they had just made it five committees the entire white population of Frederick would be on the "free list." But then the white man's burden must be borne.

* * *

Film makers started a small riot on a Brooklyn street car with a man-monkey. Stampede, broken hats, torn clothes, screams, curses, faints, complaints. One of the employees gave the name of his firm to the reporters as "The Prudential Moving Picture Company."

We suggest a raise in salary to that employee.

* * *

The Connecticut church where moving picture illustrated sermons are being given should follow up its hand by installing a pay-as-you-enter collection basket just inside the door, with a bouncer for those who show a disposition to pass the ante.—Journal, Lewiston, Me.

Very true; and it might be further suggested that, as far as possible, moving picture sermons should be delivered in glass houses.

* * *

Mrs. Vella M. Bousquet, 15 Arthur street, says the reason she had an attack of hysteria necessitating the attendance of a police ambulance doctor, September 22, was not, as she stated at the time, due to excitement attendant on witnessing a moving picture show, but because of the explosion of torpedoes beneath the car on which she was riding.—Telegram, Worcester, Mass.

A just confession after the storm.

* * *

If they wanted any comedy for that hygienic milk story picture they could have succeeded nicely by putting in some of the early morning sights that the milkman sees.

* * *

Scientists in Berlin have discovered a means of making moving pictures of the process of digestion. It naturally follows that indigestion will also be pictured, and, if these moving pictures go the way of most others, the confirmed dyspeptic will have the comfort of taking his reward disturbance to the vaudeville theater, where he can at least applaud the perfection of some other mental alimentary action.—St. Paul Dispatch.

* * *

The constant objection to this or that moving picture—to fight pictures by the Christian Endeavor Society, to strike pictures by labor leaders—points out an amusing American characteristic. We don't mind having things done in this country half so much as we object to having the record preserved.—Boston Globe.

YELLOW JOURNALISM.

We reproduce herewith some drawings from the Hearst papers in New York City. On the left hand side you will notice by the headings how well the prize-fight news is gathered, and then to make the matter in hand more explicit there are pictures. Yes, pictures, if you please, so that you can better understand just what a left hook and a knockout looks like. On the right you will observe a cartoon picturing Mayor Gaynor as a barker, engaged in the unholy endeavor of boosting for a prize-fight in moving pictures.

We understand, of course, the Hearst explanation that it is the duty of a live newspaper to furnish all the news, reserving the right to comment editorially as it sees fit. Hence the agitation against prize-fights in moving pictures. Not being able to give moving pictures of a prize-fight in their columns, the Hearst papers have done the best they could by giving us what we see here, but you may rest assured that if there were any possible way by which moving pictures of a prize-fight could be given in a newspaper, we should have had them bright and early on the morning of July 15, in the Hearst newspapers.

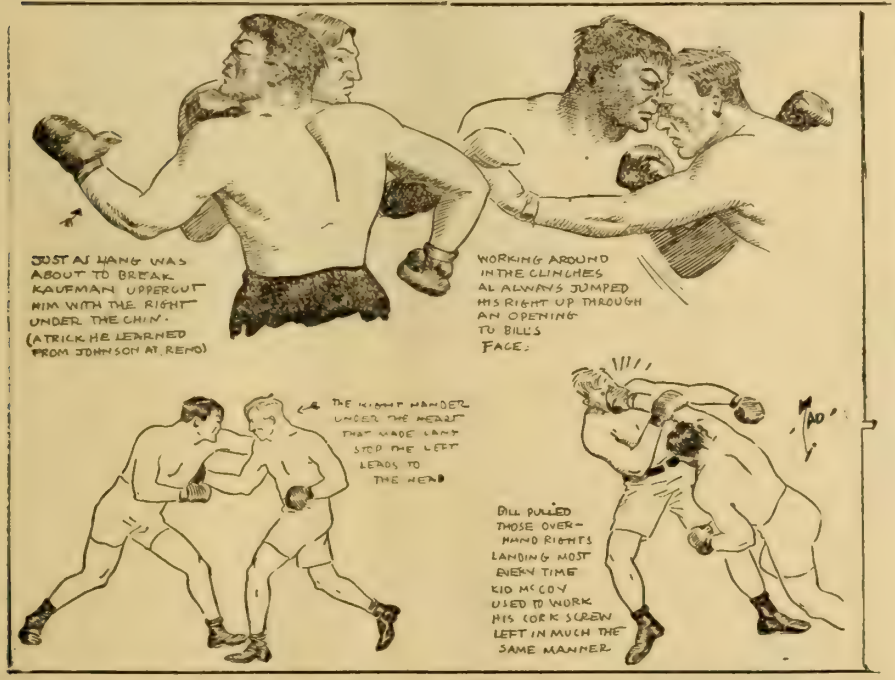
Something about it all that sounds like a crook yelling "Stop Thief!"

12 WEDNESDAY NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL, SEPTEMBER 7, 1910 WEDNESDAY

: Kaufman Has Made Impression With Johnson's Punch

EVENING JOURNAL SPORTS

KAUFMAN IS A BETTER MAN AFTER THE JOHNSON COACHING AT RENO -



JUST AS HANG WAS ABOUT TO BREAK KAUFMAN UPPERCUT HIM WITH THE RIGHT UNDER THE CHIN. (A TRICK HE LEARNED FROM JOHNSON AT RENO)
WORKING AROUND IN THE CLINCHES AL ALWAYS JUMPED HIS RIGHT UP THROUGH AN OPENING TO BILL'S FACE.
THE RIGHT HANDER UNDER THE HEART THAT MADE LANE STOP THE LEFT LEADS TO THE HEAD
BILL PULLED THOSE OVER-HAND RIGHTS LANDING MOST EVERY TIME KID McCOY USED TO WORK HIS CORK SCREW LEFT IN MUCH THE SAME MANNER

The above Cartoon, to which Mayor Gaynor especially refers in his letter, was published in the New York American on July 29, 1910, under the caption, "A New Barker on the Job."

KAUFMAN HAS MASTERED THE JOHNSON UPPERCUT

By Tad.

Kaufman is a very much improved fighter over the Kaufman who met ... After Corbett there were no Barney Gilmores in the slam business. Fitz was one. He was a good fighter and appeared faster than those he met, but

COSTER DEFEATS WAGNER IN FAST BATTLE

SAM LANGFORD EASILY DEFEATS JOE JEANNETTE

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

THAT CHINK AT GOLDEN GULCH.—Civilization has worked wonders for humanity, but like many other benefits it is bound to bring its drawbacks. The tree of civilization has borne luscious fruit, still there is the fungus. The fruit is the development of the mind inducing higher endeavors, which efforts are nurtured by the soul. The fungus is the enemy of the soul: its root is selfishness, its branches thoughtlessness and greed. Charlie Lee, the poor chink, who is the hero of this Biograph story, is made to experience the strength of this disorder in the extreme. Having located at Golden Gulch as a laundryman, his old father is about to take his leave for his home in the Flowery Kingdom. Before going the old man warns his son to cherish his sacred queue, for should he lose that he would be an outcast and disbarred from returning to his native country, which every Chinaman who leaves, looks forward to doing. His father gone, the chink feels very much alone and low-spirited, for though a saffron-skinned Pagan, his soul is white and real red blood pulsates his heart. He takes up a basket of laundry work to deliver and on the road is made to feel the result of two thousand years of civilization, for while passing a gang of cowboys, they pull his pigtail, threaten to cut it off, and roughly handle him until rescued by Bud Miller and his sweetheart, Miss Dean. For this intervention the chink is deeply grateful, and when Gentleman Jack, the dandy, tries to cut Bud Miller out in Miss Dean's affection, Charlie, the chink, keeps his eyes open. Through this the Dandy and Bud come to blows, but are separated by the boys. However, the chink hears the dandy threaten to do Bud at first meeting. The chink resolves to save his friend at any cost. The excitement at the Gulch is the repeated hold-ups of the registered mail carrier, and the effectual evasion of capture of the robber. A reward of $5,000 for his capture is posted, and the attitude of the dandy towards the notice arouses the chink's suspicion, hence he follows him like a shadow. His efforts prove fruitful, for he is a witness to the dandy's operations, who, disguising himself, makes his way to a lonely spot in the road and holds up the mail carrier. At a distance he views the dandy change his disguise and lay out on the ground to rest and gloat over his success. Here stands the poor chink apparently helpless. He is unarmed and with nothing with which to secure his captive. There lays the dandy with his hands clasped above his head. All that is needed is a bit of rope. A thought strikes the chink, but what a sacrifice it means. A sacrifice which will make him forever an outcast. There is no other way, so whipping out a knife, he with one slash cuts off the sacred queue and binds the dandy's hands so quickly that he is taken into the camp before he knows what has occurred. After the excitement of his deed is over, the poor Chinaman then realizes what his condition really is. The reward he receives is made use of in an unlooked for way. When the sweethearts go to his shack they find a note which reads: "Missie Dean alsame Bud Miller too—Charlie Lee wishee much glad you two when alsame one. Hope take money for blidel plesent—Goodby. Charlie Lee went away." With the note is the bag containing the $5,000, but the chink could not be found.

A LUCKY TOOTHACHE.—The title of this Biograph subject would seem paradoxical, but nevertheless it is true that an affair of the greatest moment came out of this case of toothache. Bessie, the new school teacher, arrives at the little Western village, and on her way to the school she meets a gang of cowboys, who having heard of her coming, are spruced up and vie with each other in their attentions towards her. Tom, the "boob," is always frozen out, but manages to land eventually. Boxes of candy and other little offerings are bestowed, until the girl is seized with a jumping toothache. Each one suggests a cure, but without success. The boys depart grief stricken at their inability to relieve her suffering. Tom now appears and offers a cure. He leaves her a note stating if she will submit to his treatment he will guarantee to cure her toothache. She is in such agony that she is inclined to submit to anything, and so, though not knowing what the cure may be, consents. After great preliminaries Tom administers a resounding kiss upon her cheek. Fury! Bessie goes "up in the air good and proper," and is in such a rage that Tom thinks it best to "beat it." Calling the boys, Bessie tells them of Tom's act. The boys agree that he must suffer for the insult. Bessie tells them they must hang him. Upon this command they pursue and capture Tom, and placing a rope about his neck pretend to be about to dispatch him, when Tom begs that Bessie be sent for. When she arrives Tom insists that at her consent he did only what he promised to do in the note. The note is read, and the question put by the boys—"Well, is your toothache gone?" Bessie—"Yes." Boys—"Well, what are you complaining about?" So they leave Tom and Bessie to settle the matter, which they do quite amicably, and the bells are to ring out soon.

THE MASHER.—It is tough to get the name and yet no part of the game. Poor Hiram didn't anticipate the trouble laid out for him when he and his wife went for a stroll in the park. She attired in a loud check waist. There has been a complaint sent to the police headquarters about an impudent fellow who has been annoying the lady visitors to the park with his attentions. Hiram, while seated with his wife, espies a very charming young lady paying him some notice. He thinks he has made a conquest and reciprocates. The Madam catches him and a quarrel ensues, the climax of which sends Hiram to a different part of the park. After he has cooled down a bit, he realizes his fault and starts back to make peace. From a distance he sees the check waist, and making a dash for it gathers the wearer up in his arms only to find her to be an old spinster, who has just been reading of the real masher, thinks Hiram he, and makes after him with a hat pin, calling for aid as she goes. By the time she reaches Hiram, he is on his knees pleading forgiveness from his wife who scornfully leaves him for another part of the grounds. His pursuers witness the end of this scene, and think it another case of annoyance, so he is arrested. Later, the wife, not knowing her hubby's fate, returns to bring about peace. Here is where the real masher appears and forces his attentions upon the wife, who calls for the police. The policeman tells her that if the masher is apprehended he will notify her, so when she arrives home she is met by the officer and escorted to the station house to appear against the miscreant. You may imagine her surprise when she is confronted with poor Hiram. She, of course, will not believe a word he says. Appearances are too conclusive and so the poor innocent victim must suffer for the guilty.

EDISON MFG. CO.

MORE THAN HIS DUTY.—The story deals with the Superintendent of the Royal Mounted, as they are sometimes called in Canada, his spendthrift son and his daughter, who is secretly in love with one of the Royal Mounted men. The latter has incurred the hatred of the son by boldly entering a Western gambling house and ordering him out, thus preventing him from becoming involved in deeper debt with a notorious gambler of that district. The Royal Mounted Police have absolute authority in this part of Canada and of course the son has no means of redress for what he considers a humiliation; but by chance he discovers the sister's love for this man and immediately informs his father of the fact. The Superintendent absolutely forbids her any further communication with Morton, the Royal Mounted Policeman in question, as he does not consider him worthy of her hand because of his station in life, he being only one of the rank and file of the Royal Mounted. After thus getting even with his sister's sweetheart, the boy leaves for a hunting trip.

Two weeks later news reaches the barracks of a desperate robbery committed at Banff, at the local Post-office, whereupon the Superintendent decides to give young Morton a chance to advance his position and win his daughter's hand. Needless to say the two lovers fully understand the opportunity that has been afforded them, and Morton sets out for Banff to capture the criminal. Shortly after his arrival he falls upon a clue to the robbery and starts out in hot pursuit of the robber. The pursuit terminates in a running fight and the wounding of the criminal in the arm. Imagine Morton's surprise and sorrow when he discovers the robber to be none other than the Superintendent's own son.

To bring him back as a criminal means the disgrace of his sweetheart and her father; to fail means his own disgrace and the loss of the woman he loves. He chooses the latter course, however, and the son returns home and remains quiet while Morton reports his failure. Here fate intervenes, and the daughter accidentally discovers her brother's guilt while he is dressing the wound in his arm. Morton is trying to persuade her to keep the secret for her father's sake, when a shot suddenly rings out from the floor above and all then rush in the direction whence it came. The truth is soon revealed by the silent figure of the boy's lifeless body, and the heartbroken old Superintendent silently reaches for young Morton's hand and thanks him for his nobility and self-sacrifice in doing "More Than His Duty."

BUMPTIOUS PLAYS BASE BALL.—That title conjures up unlimited visions of fun before the eyes of those who know Bumptious' disposition, and these visions certainly become realities in the film.

The story begins with Bumptious' confident assertion that (to use the slang of the day) "he wrote the game," and we follow him to the field of action where he proceeds to show the amateurs how it should be played. As it is only a morning practice game "fungo" hitting is in order, and Bumptious ordains to wield the ash; but he fails in several successive, violent attempts to hit the ball and is banished to the infield. Of course the first ball that comes his way goes by him, to the infinite disgust of his pupils, whose remarks are of so unpleasant a nature that he puts on his coat and leaves the field vowing never to help them again.

And then comes the day of the great game, when the home team pits its strength against that of another amateur nine from an adjoining town.

People flock past Bumptious' house, begging him to come and see the sport, but he is adamant. He refuses to take any interest in the game in which such poor players as his critics are to have the leading roles; for one of his critics is to pitch, another is to catch and still another occupies third base. But when they have even gone by, even to the "Gum Chewing" girl, he weakens a little bit, looks longingly after them and finally, putting on his hat, strolls off in that direction, though all the time pretending that he is not going to the game. He does go, however, and occupies a seat in the front row of the grand stand.

We see the pleased anticipation of the faces around him contrasted with his own scornful look, and then we turn our attention to the ball field itself where the critics are at work. They face the fearsome pitcher and, one after another, they go down before his prowess and take their seats on the players' bench. Of course this produces a very disconcerting and melancholy effect upon the "fans" in the grandstand around Bumptious, and the contrast with his own evident satisfaction and even tumultuous joy over the downfall of his critics is something worth seeing. Then, when the game is at a critical point and the home team takes the infield (there are three men on bases and the score is tied)—then it is that the home pitcher throws his shoulder out of joint and has to leave the game.

What can they do? There is no one able to pitch. Some one suggests Bumptious. It is the last resort and, although they hate to do it, they go in a committee to the grandstand and beg him to save the day for them. It takes a long time to persuade him, but finally he magniloquently agrees to help them out. The "populace" cheer him as he enters the field and takes off his cap, bowing modestly and gracefully to them. In the pitcher's box he takes his stand, looks around the bases and prepares to pitch the game to a glorious finish.

Suddenly, just as he is about to pitch the first ball, his attention is arrested. A troubled look comes over his face. He has evidently seen a hoodoo. And then we see that the "Gum Chewing" girl, the only unenthusiastic face in the grandstand, the only one that does not believe in him, has caught his attention at a critical moment. He fumbles with the ball, pitches it feebly, and—it sails into space. We even see it soaring through the clouds miles away, while the base runners scamper round scoring four runs and losing the game for the home team.

The execration of the fickle public on poor Bumptious' head is something terrible to behold, and we see him scampering across the field as though pursued by legions of malevolent fiends.

Then he climbs through a hole in the fence, exhausted, out of breath and discouraged, and the final scene shows his hairbreadth escape from the crowd by climbing stealthily and ludicrously into his own kitchen window while they watch the front door.

Bumptious is always good fun, and in this picture he covers himself with glory—as a fun maker if not as a pitcher. It is one of the freshest, happiest, jolliest of the Bumptious series and is certain to make new friends for our round hero.

THE FARMER'S RAUGHTER.—There is nothing so calculated to excite risibility as the sight of a practical joker who is made the victim of his own plot. This sort of a climax is the big laugh in the "Farmer's Daughter."

The young lady in question is courted by all of the young lads about the country side. Among them is a young chap, son of one of her neighbors, who becomes jealous of her other suitors and plans to prevent them from interfering with his love making. The approach to the farmer's home is across a small stream over which is thrown a log for a foot path. The young chap takes it into his head to soap the log at a certain point so that those crossing after him will be plunged into the creek.

All goes well and our young joker is having things pretty much his own way when his rivals one by one attempt to cross the log and are precipitated into the stream. It is impossible to describe the fun, but the witnessing of it is a series of laughs. Finally when our young friend, in high spirits at having outwitted his rivals, takes his leave of the farmer's daughter, he is so overjoyed that in crossing the log he forgets all about the soap, with dire results. His inamorata witnesses his downfall, and is seized with a fit of laughter.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

HANK AND LANK.—In this instance Hank and Lank step into good fortune quite by accident. Pausing in front of a bargain drygoods store, a young lady rushes up and asks Hank to hold her baby while she goes inside to make a few purchases. Shortly after she returns and liberally tips the little man for his services as nurse.

Lank sees how easily Hank has made his money and resolves to try the trick himself. Hank agrees to help him, but they wait some time and no lady with an infant to hold puts in an appearance.

The scene changes to the lawn of a residence nearby and shows a young woman and her husband about to take the baby out for an airing. The mother insists that she has too much work to do and turns the baby over to her husband with instructions that he be back in half an hour.

The proud young father and his charge are returning home at the appointed time, when two jolly young fellows stop them and invite Father

LIZ'S CAREER

Released Thursday, October 13th

Liz came to the city to look for a job that would enable her to pay off the mortgage and save the home without having to marry the elderly deacon. Liz stood a fine chance of making $500 in a short time, but the fates were kind, and her short career was as remunerative as it was funny.

LENGTH ABOUT 950 FEET

LOOK FOR

THE SIGN OF SUCCESS

Released Monday, October 17th

HEARTS and POLITICS

Hearts and Politics do not always mix, but when the machine boss set a woman to accomplish the undoing of the reform candidate by making love to him, and refusing to marry unless he gave up politics, he didn't count on the little typewriter who loved her employer, and who saved him from the wiles of the adventuress. A good, strong, political story with real heart interest.

LENGTH ABOUT 990 FEET

Send for Free Catalogue of Our 1910 Machine

LUBIN MF'G. CO., 926 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO: 22 Fifth Avenue LONDON: 45 Gerrard Street, W.
BERLIN: 35 Friedrich Strasse

You Know What You Want

You Get It in "Electra" Carbons

PINK ELECTRA LABEL

Write for prices. All orders are filled on a "rush" schedule

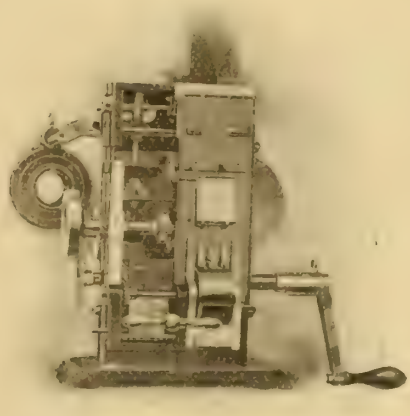
HUGO REISINGER

Sole Importer of "Electra" Carbons

11 Broadway NEW YORK

The "STANDARD"

The Machine That Gives Results



FIREPROOF—FLICKERLESS

The machine now being used at the Budget Exhibit by the City, demonstrating where the municipality's money is being spent.

Write for Illustrated Catalogue—Dept. W.

AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE CO.
101 BEEKMAN STREET - - - NEW YORK

into a saloon for a drink. Father cannot resist the temptation, and when Lank appears on the scene he puts him in charge of the baby and tells him he'll be out in five minutes.

Five, ten, fifteen minutes drag by and Lank yawns. Pulling a pillow from the baby-cab, he makes a bed on the sidewalk and drowses off to sleep.

A moment later he awakens to find the mother of the infant yanking him to his feet and demanding to know where her husband is. Poor Lank suffers a good drubbing at the hands of the irate mother, when the father with his two friends come on the scene. Lank has not waited for his tip, and the Father hurries off after his angry wife.

PAPA'S FIRST OUTING. Contrary to the regular custom in the Smithkins family, Papa is persuaded by mother and the children to take a long needed rest at the seashore instead of themselves. He demurs, pleading a rush of business, but the unselfish hearts will not hear of it, and the next day he is bundled off to the seaside Summer resort.

A week goes by and a daily letter from Father keeps them in touch with the little head of the family. He is having a good time, but longs to be back with them.

It is unfortunate that a stray paragraph in the daily paper sets Mrs. Smithkins wondering what kind of a "good" time Papa is having. The paragraph reads "Lured From Wife and Family by Beach Affinity," and goes to explain how a perfectly honorable family man falls a victim to the wiles of a seashore Circe.

Mrs. Smithkins reads the horrifying news to the children and all are unanimous in their opinion that Father should either come straight home or should be watched. They decide on the latter scheme and a female detective is put on his trail.

Another week passes and the despairing detective is unable to find any evidence against Father. Twice she has seen him absolutely refuse to make eyes, even when he was invited and sometimes his aloofness with the feminine contingent of the place has bordered onto incivility and discourtesy.

Resolving to try the trick herself, she follows Father and after much difficulty she engages him in a conversation. Engaging her most subtle arts she makes him promise her a boat ride and then leaves him for a time to make up the rest of her plan. Her snapshot camera she turns over to a boy with instructions to snap them when she gets Father in a compromising position.

The result of the day's work is a sheaf of photographs picturing Smithkins spooning with the female detective and which are forwarded to Mrs. Smithkins with a long letter, mostly imaginary, in which Father's perfidy is exaggeratedly described.

When Father gets home the photographs are shown him, and what follows is best reserved for the time you see it in the film.

THE COWBOY'S MOTHER-IN-LAW. Nellie Blair the niece of a wealthy ranchman, and an orphan comes to make her home with her uncle, and shortly after her arrival finds that the whole "Circle A" outfit, every manjack on the place, is in love with her. One by one they propose until Charley Martin, better known as "Cayuse" Charley, makes an appeal to Nellie's fancy and wins her consent to marriage.

A short time later they are married and go to live in "Cayuse's" shack. Cayuse is the happiest man in the world, and his ever smiling face strikes the envy chord in the other boys' hearts. As a benedict, at least for the first few months, he proves ideal, spending his evenings at home, "doin'" the dishes or scrubbing the floors to make Nellie's work lighter, but finally his long spell of usefulness ends.

After the first few little excuses to get away evenings, Nellie finds that he does not care much for housework, and when she asks him why he has so neglected her he retorts sharply that he reckons a woman ought to do her own work.

It is only a slight step from neglect to ill-treatment, and one morning, after being roughly abused by "Cayuse," Nellie resolves that she must appeal to her old-time friends to help her in bringing Charley to terms.

The boys are indignant when they hear that Charley has been maltreating their former sweetheart, and endeavor to think of some plan to bring him to time. "Better string him up," one suggests. "Ride him on a rail," says another. "Listen to this," from Pete the Coyote, who has been reading the Lariet Bugle, "Mother-in-Law Tames Vicious Husband."

After reading the item through, all of them suggest that they see Nellie and have her send mother down. They learn to their dismay that Nellie has no mother.

In the end the following plan is adopted. Pete is to disguise as Nellie's mother and is to bring "Cayuse" to time. The outfit is obtained and the big cowpuncher, arrayed in the feminine wig and skirts, would send any man's heart to his throat if he thought of having trouble with her.

That evening when "Cayuse" returns he is even more fretful than before. He does not make much headway, however, before "Mother" puts in an appearance.

The following scenes are extremely funny. "Cayuse" is made to perform all sorts of stunts in the kitchen, and once, when he balks, finds a big forty-four thrust under his nose. In the end he is forced to sign a pledge in which he promises not to abuse his wife under penalty of being shot by any one of Nellie's friends.

"Now, kiss your mother-in-law," says Pete, but when he feels the rough cheek he grabs for his pistol, at the same time reaching for Pete's wig. Pete is too quick for him, and the pistol drops from "Cayuse's" hand.

However, "Cayuse" is cured, and when the film closes we have the intimation that "they lived happily ever afterward."

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

THE LOVERS' MILL. A country miller has several yokels in his employ as helpers in the mill. He experiences a great deal of trouble with them because of the fact that whenever his two daughters appear among the workmen his men neglect their work to pay court to the maidens.

After frequently haranguing his wayward daughters and finding no improvement in their actions he decides upon a more stringent manner of obtaining his desires. He obtains the assistance of several of his neighbors and upon the first occasion of finding his daughters and the workmen "killing time" he and the neighbors bind the group and throw them in the hopper of the mill.

They go through the same processes as are used in making flour from wheat and come out in the huge kneading bins at the bakery. Here, to the consternation of the miller and his new helpers, the granulated particles of the offenders collect into their original forms and the astounded old miller gives his blessings to the lovers.

THE THREE FRIENDS.—A great friendship exists between a cab-driver, his horse, and a pet dog, the first two being of rather advanced age. They are seen starting off for the day's work, and have not proceeded far, when a party of four hail the cabmen. He tells them that his horse cannot carry four, but his objections are quickly overruled, and in they get. While going up a hill, the horse stops, from sheer weariness, but the driver gets out, and after a lengthy struggle they arrive at the top; the strain, however, has been too much for the old man, and just managing to get into the cab he faints away. The dog jumps on the box and cleverly drives to a hospital, where the driver is taken in, but there he dies, the strain having affected his heart. The acting of the dog is clever in the extreme, and the film should be in every theater.

THE ROMANCE OF A NECKLACE.—This film is a dramatization of the most interesting events in the life of Benvenuto Cellini, the friend of Francois I. of France, Charles the Fifth and Pope Clement the Fifth, and the immortal author of the statue "Persee," his masterpiece.

In 1530, in Florence, Count Giaccomo, his daughter Olympia, and Cardinal Beppo, are visiting the studio of the famous artist. Olympia admires a beautiful necklace. Benvenuto, who secretly loves her, makes her a present of the wonderful work. Olympia is engaged to Pompeo, the Pope's jeweler. She returns to her home, where the young man awaits her. When he sees the necklace she has he immediately thinks his rival, Benvenuto, gave it to her.

Pompeo, jealous, swears to kill his rival. He pays assassins to stab him. But Olympia, having heard of the plot, informs her lover, who, in spite of the warning, goes out unattended. He is attacked, but he succeeds in getting away without harm.

Meanwhile, Pompeo goes to Count Giaccomo to tell him that Olympia has eloped with Benvenuto. Hearing this, the Count and Cardinal Beppo take soldiers with them to Benvenuto's home just at the time when Cellini has found that there is insufficient metal in the molds and that his masterpiece is about to be lost.

To avoid this, he takes all the rich silver goods which are in his studio and puts them in the cupola, and the casting is completed. The "Perseus" is saved and promptly taken out of the mold. The Count and the soldiers arrive just at this time. But Cellini does not lose his temper; he takes a hammer and says he will break the "Persee" if they don't stand back. They all go back, and Olympia, arriving, explains to her father what happened.

The Pope is informed and they are all to appear before him. But Cellini has come with his statue "Perseus" which he offers to the Pope. The Pope, to reward the famous artist, gives the nuptial benediction to Cellini and Olympia, in presence of the confused jeweler, Pompeo.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

FOILED BY A CIGARETTE.—Lieut. Brownlow, enraged because the Colonel's daughter prefers a comrade, Capt. Fenton, to himself, listens to the suggestion of a spy that he should steal some important military plans and cause suspicion to fall on Fenton. The spy drugs Fenton's liquor in a hostelry, and Brownlow breaks open a chest in the Colonel's room, takes the plans, copies them, and puts the originals in Fenton's desk. In order to appear at ease to those he meets on the way, Brownlow is smoking as he enters the Colonel's room. His cigarettes have an uncommon mark on them, and he leaves one there. The plans are found in Fenton's quarters; he protests his innocence, and the Colonel is persuaded by his daughter to call in a detective. The latter finds the cigarette, has a friendly smoke with Fenton, and finds his do not correspond. Meeting Brownlow, the detective furtively throws away his own cigarettes, opens the case before Brownlow, and feigns surprise at finding it empty. The other naturally proffers his own supply, the detective takes one and finds that it bears the same mark as the one picked up near the rifled chest. Later, he sees Brownlow hand the plans to the spy, and recovers them at pistol-point. Dashing into the room where Fenton is undergoing court-martial, the detective vindicates the innocent and accuses the guilty. The Colonel hands Fenton back his sword and consents to his daughter's marriage.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE CLOWN AND THE MINISTER.—The noisy hotel was no place for a sick child and when the little troupe of barnstormers came to Stanton's Hole the Minister suggested to the Clown that he bring the little one to the modest parsonage where the quiet would benefit the tiny sufferer. It was hard to leave the baby and assume the motley but Blanco was the star of the troupe and his presence was necessary. Reluctantly he turned away and the audience never dreamed of the aching heart that beat beneath the highly colored costume. Then came the crisis of the fever and the distracted mother sent for her husband. There was still another turn to give but paternal love was stronger than sense of duty and the clown rushed to the bedside where presently the child lay in his strong arms and dropped off into the sleep that, if continued for an hour, meant recovery. Blanco did not dare move when the manager sent for him but there was the hint that if he did not go the cowboys would come after him and the noise would rouse the baby's slumber and sound her death knell. But there was one hope. The minister might assume the garb of the clown and hold them off for a time. It was risky in a country where human life is held cheaply but he did not falter. The precious hour was gained and the child, now on her way to recovery smiled upon the deputation of cowboys who filed into the room while Minister and Clown alike gave thanks.

LIZ'S CAREER.—Liz was a country girl and, it must be confessed, something of a hoyden. Her high spirits attracted the attention of Deacon Slocum who held one of the good, old fashioned mortgages on the dear old homestead and who threatened to foreclose unless Liz would consent to become Mrs. Slocum III. Liz didn't want to become a first wife, let alone a third and there was something about the Deacon't face she didn't like so she told him "No" with considerable emphasis and went to the country to earn the money with which to pay off the mortgage. She got a job quickly, but she lost it with even greater rapidity and an amusing succession of jobs appeared to be greased, she lost them with such startling rapidity. It began to look as though Liz's chances of raising the mortgage were similar to those of a snowball in certain localities when the bill board announcing amateur night caught her eye. Liz entered the contest and did her very best. Her very best was so exquisitely bad that they thought she was about the best "rube comedienne" ever. There was a music hall manager present and he not only gave Liz a job, but offered her a lot of money before he found out that she was not a clever actress, but the greenhorn he thought she was pretending to be. For two months Liz was the rage and when she went home and the Deacon came with the mortgage Liz had more than enough to pay him and he was foiled again.

PATHE FRERES.

THE STIGMA.—A prisoner convicted for his first offense is liberated before the end of his term, subject to police supervision. He returns home to find his wife and child in great poverty and searches for work in vain—his past is against him. Finally he obtains a job in a large factory, but forgets to report himself to the police, and his employer is informed and he is discharged. On his way home he succeeds in saving a little girl in the nick of time from being run down by a reckless automobilist. That night, desperate at the thought of the privation of his wife and child, he breaks into a house. In the darkness he knocks over a statue, and disturbs the owner of the house, who enters pistol in hand. He is about to summon the police to give him in their charge, but at that moment his little daughter steals in, and with a sudden cry of joy, she runs to the burglar, recognizing in him the man who had saved her life. Explanations follow, and the father, grateful and compassionate, is instrumental a few days later in procuring work for the man and starting him afresh in life.

BETTY IS PUNISHED.—Those who know Betty will not be surprised to hear that she has to move. If she lived in New York we doubt if any landlord would stand her in an apartment for 24 hours; in Paris they seem more lenient. She has, however, at last to move, and such an event, as may be imagined, gives her plenty of scope for the exercise of her peculiar talents, and under pretence of helping her father and mother in the arduous business of packing furniture, we find omparative Cost of Light y-Three Methods

A test under identical conditions on a moving picture arc lamp using 1600 watts energy in each case showed the following results:

Alternating Current with G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier	Alternating Current with Transformer	Direct Current with Rheostat
5,000 candle power	3,800 candle power	3,100 candle power
	1,200 candle power LESS	1,900 candle power LESS

The G-E Rectifier Produced 32 to 38 Per Cent. More Light with the same consumption of energy.

The G-E Rectifier transforms your alternating current supply to direct current for the arc with very little loss. It is simple in operation, has no moving parts, and gives close regulation of the arc.

Your Theatre should be Equipped with a G-E Rectifier.

Profit by the experience of the many users of the G-E Rectifier. Learn the whole story—how the Rectifier operates—how its use will benefit your theatre. Sign and mail the coupon today.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

Largest Electrical Manufacturer in the World

DEPT. 53-J

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. 2776

Without incurring the slightest obligation on my part, please send me your illustrated Booklet, telling all about the use and operation of the G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier. Mail me also an information blank to be filled out and returned to you, so that you can advise me how much money I can save, and how much my light can be improved.

Signed .....

Theatre .....

City W-2

Address: GENERAL ELECTRIC CO.
Dept. 53-J. Schenectady, N. Y.

ker causing numerous dire calamities. As a final stroke of genius, she locks her mother in a closet which is to be lowered through the window, and when the men come to effect the lowering by means of ropes, she lends them a willing hand. A sudden jerk, however, drags her and one man out of the window, and both, clinging desperately to the slackening rope, fall with a crash to the ground on top of the closet. The article is immediately shattered into pieces, and Betty's mother emerges from the ruins to vent her just anger on all and sundry. Several passersby stop to aid her, the furniture carriers lay about them vigorously and Betty retaliates, but Betty gets a severe drumming from them all that will make her remember this removal for a long time.

A SUMMER FLIRTATION. Two chums, Jack and Jim, take a room together for their vacation at a summer resort, and both become deeply attached to Dolly. The story opens when they are both attempting to be her partner in a game of tennis, a problem that is only solved when her parents come along and ask Jim to accompany them for a walk round the garden. Jim, to find some excuse that will take him back to Dolly, pretends to hurt his knee, and as soon as the old couple are out of sight runs back in time to hear Dolly make an appointment with Jack for 8 o'clock that evening. To get rid of Jack, he tells him that Dolly's parents require his presence, and he then suggests to Dolly that he take her out for a row on the lake. Jack soon finds out that the message was a hoax, and returns in time to get into the rowboat as it is about to start. Jim refuses to row, and Jack prefers to sit next to Dolly. She, however, not wishing to get mixed up in the scrape, gets out of the boat, and Jim follows and makes an appointment also to meet her at 8 o'clock. Jack overhears this. Both lads depart to their room, and having over two hours to spare, decide to take some sleep. Jack wakes up at 7 and, seeing the boot polish, blacks Jim's face while he sleeps, and then returns to his bed. Jim wakes up later and the same idea occurs to him, and he blacks Jack's face. At 7:50 they are both up and laughing to think what a fool the other looks, not knowing that he himself is in the same position. They proceed separately down the street to Dolly's home, followed by crowds of curious persons and school children. Jack arrives [illegible] first, and Dolly goes into ecstasies when she sees him, and her father looks him down the steps much to Jim's delight, who sees this as he approaches. Jim also then enters and is not recognized at first. He kisses Dolly leaving black marks on her face, and at last is able to explain who he is. They give him a glass and seeing his plight, he goes out vowing vengeance on Jack. They meet in their room, and with the aid of two friends, the beds are moved aside, coats taken off, and a fist fight commences. At this moment each receives a letter from Dolly to the effect that she and her parents are leaving next day for New York and that she has enjoyed her flirtation immensely. Finding out that they were about to quarrel over one who was only trifling with their feelings, they shake hands and make up.

WERTHER. The picture opens with Werther's first meeting and introduction to Charlotte at her home, when he immediately becomes infatuated with her grace and charm. Some days later at a garden party, a spiteful friend of Charlotte's tells Werther that Charlotte is already engaged to be married, and points out to him the engagement ring on her finger. Werther is disconsolate, but calls at her home the next day, where he meets her future husband, Albert. He sees there is no chance of his ever marrying Charlotte. The next scene shows us Werther sitting on a bench and the wedding party passing by. They ask him to join in the festivities, but he refuses. Some days later he passes Charlotte's home, just as Albert is leaving. She asks him in and he takes advantage of the fact to tell her of his great love for her. She is horrified, and flies to her room and locks herself in, while Werther almost knocks Albert down as he goes out. Albert's suspicions are aroused, especially when he finds Charlotte locked in her room. She, however, soon reassures her husband of her undying love for him. Meantime Werther returns home and writes an expressive note to Albert for the loan of his pistols, stating that he is about to take "a long voyage." Charlotte understands, and hesitatingly hands the weapons to the waiting servant at her husband's bidding. The servant returns with them to Werther, who dismisses him, and with his last thoughts of Charlotte goes out on the long journey from which no traveler returns.

This picture, though a tragedy, is most beautifully and perfectly acted and will surely be appreciated by the higher class of audiences.

AEROPLANES IN FLIGHT AND CONSTRUCTION. The first part of the picture shows the works at Hammondsport, N. Y., where famous Curtiss flyers are made. The visitors are taken on a tour through the machine room, where skilled mechanics are working on various parts of the frame. Thence to the wood-turning room, where a man is busily engaged in cutting with a band saw the mystic curves of the propeller. Next we see how the covering is put on the frame laced on, in fact, with thongs stitched through brass eyelets set in the edge of the canvas and also through holes pierced in the frame-work of the ailerons.

Having seen the various parts in the course of construction, we are permitted to watch them assemble a complete machine, tightening the wire stays, fastening the little pneumatic tired wheels in place, mounting the powerful motor, and finally we have a view of this wonderful air craft ready to carry its human freight at terrific speed through miles and miles of space at almost any altitude up to a point where the aviator freezes in the rarefied atmosphere.

Then we are shown with what speed the machine can be dismounted and packed in four trunks ready for shipment. While thousands have seen aeroplanes in flight probably only a few are familiar with the seeming frail construction of these wonderful flying machines. In spite of their light construction, however, they are carefully made, as will be seen in this picture, and the proof of it lies in the fact that a man can project himself into space by means of a few yards of canvas and a wooden fan.

The picture ends with some marvelous stunts in flying by Mr. Ely and "Bud" Mars, the latter performing his hurdle jumping trick and taking several hair-raising dips which Hamilton made famous at the aviation grounds at Mineola.

In view of the widespread interest in aviation this film should be particularly timely and interesting in all parts of the country.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE SANITARIUM.—Charley Wise with a Waldorf appetite on a beany salary finds himself growing unpopular with his landlord as well as other creditors. In fact the sighing breezes seem to whisper "Charley it's your move." So together with Pete, his valet, they decide upon a visit to the country to spend a few days with the rich old uncle. Upon their arrival they find Uncle Jim and Sarah are just planning a trip to Europe and the timely arrival of Charley renders it unnecessary to close up the home as he is placed in full charge with faithful Pete as his assistant and Jim and Sarah are off for the other side.

Charles repairs to the race track and donates the remaining fragments of his bank roll to the other man's better judgment. Pete hits upon a plan to open the palatial home of the uncle as a sanatarium and thus collect a few of the shining shekels that health seekers are always anxious to let loose of. Accordingly an ad is inserted in the daily papers, a sign put over the door, and the rooms are all numbered in regular order, pet city hotel fashion.

The patients begin to flock in like children to a locked show. All sorts, ages, sizes, suffering from every known and unknown malady from Bunions to crying maniac.

Pete was collecting in advance and the place in a few short hours looked more like a cash garden of Blackville Island than a country home. The money was rolling in so fast that Chas. and Pete almost went into hysteria. Just then a telegram arrives from Frisco from Uncle Jim saying that Aunt Sarah had lost her necklace and was returning home that night to find it. To clear the house for her coming was no small job and they encounter all kinds of trouble, compelled to return their money, which has a telling effect on Charles' ambitions. No sooner than this part of the program was completed a second message arrives saying the necklace had been found and they were off for Europe.

Charles had no time to rejoice over the finding of the pearls he was too busy thinking about the money he had found necessary to return to his sanitarium patients.

IN THE GOLDEN HARVEST TIME. The farmers Dickens and Lawson had been contented neighbors for many years and to their great happiness their children Jim Dickens and Helen Lawson were inclined to continue this friendship by a more binding tie. The parents watched the progress of the match with kindly eyes and felt that nothing could interfere with their favorite plan. A sweet breath of purity seems to fill the picture of Sunday on the farm and the "Coming Thro' the Rye."

In the midst of the harvesting of the wheat, a breakdown occurs and Jim is obliged to hurry to the city for repairs. On his way to town, Jim comes to a carnival tent, where all is laughing and dancing and he becomes infatuated with a beautiful young dancer. No one is there to bring to his mind the thoughts of one more lovely on the little farm -he is an easy victim and forgets all but the present.

On his return to the farm, Helen is at the gate to meet him but is turned down by Jim. The sorrowful girl sees him again leave for the city, where he is to meet the dancer. He meets her - and his eyes are opened. He begins to realize the wrong done Helen and returns to the farm. He pleads with his old sweetheart and the close of the picture is a happy one. "When the Harvest Day is Over."

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE SAGE, THE CHERUB AND THE WIDOW.—When you see it in the newspapers you know it is so. "Doctor Arnold, the noted specialist, has given up his practice and rented a cottage at Brightside, where he will pursue his literary studies and research." This is the notice that appeared in the local columns of the home newspaper. We will follow the Doctor to Brightside and learn all about "the Cherub and the Widow."

Doctor Arnold's cottage is the next one to the widow's, and while he is quietly pursuing his studies, comfortably located under the shade of an overspreading tree, the Widow's little girl looks over the dividing wall, calls out to the Doctor. "The Sage" is very much annoyed by the interference. The childish playfulness and desire to make the Doctor's acquaintance gradually wins his friendship. One day the Widow misses her little girl, looks over the wall, and finds her sitting with the Sage having a jolly good time. Shortly after this episode the child is taken very sick, a specialist is called in by the attending physician and they retire to the garden to hold a consultation.

Doctor Arnold, who is in his accustomed place on the other side of the wall, overhears the discussion of the little one's case, acts upon the impulse of the moment, climbs over the wall and offers his services in behalf of his little friend, whom he has learned to love. The physicians willingly accept his services and he is invited to the room of the sick child. He makes a careful examination and diagnosis of her case, and after prescribing for her and watching her, she is soon on the road to recovery and in a very short time is well and about her play as usual.

The most interesting part of this story is the climax. The Doctor learns to love the Widow as well as the Cherub, and it is not long before things become still more interesting—who can guess the rest? The Sage marries the Widow and the Cherub is glad of it.

BROTHER MAN. At the club the young husband receives word that an interesting event is about to occur. Hatless and coatless he rushes home, and after watching and waiting learns that it is a boy. The doctor leaves the house and the happy father falls asleep in a chair.

A burglar climbs up the porch, enters the house and, coming into the room where the man is sleeping, holds him up and takes his watch, and, holding him at bay, searches the secretary and finds a roll of money which he readily appropriates. The young man tells the burglar not to disturb his wife, who is confined in the adjoining room. The thief asks what's the trouble. When told, his sense of manhood asserts itself and he gives back the watch and the money, takes a ten dollar bill of his own asks the child's father to give the ten spot to the kid with his compliments, and tells him he will try to brace up and lead a better life.

He leaves in haste, but is caught by a policeman just as he is stepping from the porch and brought back to the owner of the place. He might have had the prisoner arrested and sent to prison for life, but, remembering the fellow's tenderness for his wife and new-born babe, he feels a responsive feeling of brotherhood which he cannot dismiss from his mind and awakens an interest in the other fellow who has gone wrong but shows evidence of being reclaimed. He tells the officer the man had called to see him on business and he had just dismissed him; the officer begs his pardon and goes back to his post.

Overcome with emotion, the burglar cannot express his gratitude to the man whom he would have robbed. He grasps his hand and thanks him heartily for his kindness. The gentleman gives the fellow his card and tells him he will help him find honest employment and become an honored member of the brotherhood of man.

ACTOR'S FUND FIELD DAY.—It's more fun than a barrel of monkeys. Regular village "cut-ups" are those actor chaps and actresses. They don't keep still a minute when they get loose on the village green at the Polo Grounds.

The band begins to play and the procession starts from Madison Square in "buzz wagons" and keeps moving until they get to the grounds where every actress, actor and actorman in town passes in review before the grandstand of political and social celebrities there assembled. Here they come now: Eddie Foy, Bert Williams, Marie Dressler, Lew Fields, Marshall P. Wilder, George M. Cohan, Victor Moore, Jim Corbett, Tim Sullivan, Joe Humphreys, Emma Carus, Louis Mann, Terry McGovern, Annie Oakley, Irene Franklin and—well, just watch them as they pass by and you can pick them all out.

This show takes in every show in Manhattan and the suburbs. There goes the wild men of Borneo in a Salome war dance. The phonie band is a close second. You can't hear them play any music because they don't. Annie Oakley gives an exhibition of fancy shooting and she does it. Burt Williams and Billy Reeves in a sparring exhibition would make an owl laugh, and the "greased pig chase," just before the pie-eating contest -one was as funny as the other, and then you couldn't stop laughing. The chorus girls played the actormen, and they played them good and plenty, and there were many high balls caught on the fly by the girls in bloomers. Well, to tell you the truth, there were so many things pulled off I couldn't describe them all. Just get a look at this picture and you will get acquainted with the "profesh" and their doings.

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS.

Montgomery, Ala.—David Simon, of Chicago, is considering the erection of a new theater here. He resides at the Gay-Teague Hotel, in Montgomery.

Hastings, Minn.—J. C. Morey has bought the interest of L. A. Cornelison in the Royal Theater here.

Rock Falls, Ill.—Hull Schofield is completing arrangements to open his new picture theater here.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Metropolitan Amusement Company will erect a $100,000 moving picture theater on Broadway, near Wilson street.

Canton, Ill. J. L. Stahlnecker has sold his interest in the Varietie moving picture show here to Fred Ross, of Moline.

Lead, S. Dak.—The Iris Theater Company (Frank Rainey, president) is preparing to open a new moving picture show at the corner of Main and Gold streets.

St. Louis, Mo.—The May Picture Show Company has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $3,000. The incorporators are Jesse James, C. T. Winfrey and W. Jones.

Britt, Iowa.—J. R. Stebleton is making arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here.

South Bend, Wash.—A. F. Prouix and William Neuert have opened a new moving picture theater near Littell.

Palestine, Tex.—Bell & Englebretch, of St. Louis, have opened a new moving picture theater at 288 Oak street. It is known as the "Gem."

Sulphur Springs, Tex.—The Sulphur Springs Opera House Company has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $12,000. The incorporators are D. Thornton, R. B. Carothers and J. B. Thomas.

Mahoney City, Pa.—The Family Theater here made a great hit when they ran the films entitled "The Night Rustlers" and "Rivalry in the Oil Fields."

Newark, N. Y. The Crescent Theater Company here are having their theater remodeled and enlarged.

McPherson, Kan.—A new moving picture theater is being erected for William Strahan.

Thompsonville, Conn. The Sisitzky building is being converted into a moving picture theater for J. A. Lemieux.

Hackettstown, N. J.—A new moving picture theater is being erected in the Apgar Hall by Edward Harris.

Springfield, Mo.—The Aladdin Moving Picture Theater on South street has opened.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Union Eastern Amusement Company has erected a $20,000 picture house at 1510 Union boulevard.

McKeesport, Pa. The Altmeyer Family Theater has been converted into a moving picture theater Brockton, Mass. John Lannigan is to open a new moving picture theater in Canton.

Leominster, Mass. The Music Hall, under the management of Edward L. Billette, has opened for the season as a moving picture and vaudeville theater Buffalo, N. Y. A large site has been purchased on Broadway, near Wilson street, for the erection of a moving picture theater which will cost about $100,000. The Metropolitan Amusement Company are the proprietors of this enterprise.

Norfolk, Va. Arrangements for the conversion of the Pythian Castle Hall into a moving picture theater have been made. The situation of this new amusement house is on Berkley avenue.

New York City.—Plans have been filed for the erection of a first-class moving picture theater to be built on Westchester avenue, near Beach avenue. The program to be given consists of first-run moving pictures and illustrated slides.

Bridgewater, N. Y.—A moving picture show has been built in the Hibbard House.

Los Angeles, Cal. A. S. Hyman and Charles Porczaska are planning the erection of a new moving picture theater on Hill street, to cost about $100,000.

Puyallup, Wash. Huntington & Drack have been awarded the contract for the remodeling of F. A. Stewart's moving picture show here.

Baltimore, Md.—The C. W. Pacy Company have secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture show at the corner of Cross and Olive streets.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Mrs. J. H. Lynde has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater at the corner of Kinnikinnic avenue and Allen street.

Sterling, Kan. W. Cochran has opened the Empire Moving Picture Theater here.

Seattle, Wash. George L. Baker has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Lenoir City, Tenn. Frank Cook and associates are considering the erection of a new opera house here.

Indianapolis, Ind. Dickson & Talmott are considering the erection of a new moving picture theater here.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Ridgewood Realty and Amusement Company is planning the erection of a new vaudeville and moving picture theater at the corner of Covert avenue and Madison street.

Colfax, Wash. Bert Phillips has purchased the Orpheum Theater here from Hamblin Bros.

Ishpeming, Mich. Emma and Alvin Scott have disposed of their moving picture business in the Voelker block, to C. S. Sullivan, of Calumet.

Philadelphia, Pa. The Moving Picture Company of America is planning the erection of a new moving picture theater at 33S Market street.

Asheville, N. C. Carl Davenport has purchased the Palace Theater from Sugg & McLaurin, and has taken possession.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Atlas Amusement Company is having plans prepared by Architects Dugan & Huff for a new moving picture theater.

Bridgeton, N. J.—Ed. B. Moore is preparing to erect a new moving picture theater here.

Benwood, W. Va.—Frank Smith and Norman Voho have opened a new moving picture theater here.

Fresno, Cal.—The Kerman Construction Company has secured a permit for the erection of a new vaudeville theater at J street for the Fresno Theater Company.

Carthage, Ill.—Arthur Weiser is planning to open a new moving picture theater in the Foulds building.

Waverly, N. Y.—Rollin Perry is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Jimmie Georgie, owner of the Star Theater at 410 Market street, is making arrangements to remodel same.

Butler, Pa.—The Lyric Theater Company has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are A. M. Rieber and C. L. Carleton.

Columbus, Ohio.—Architects Richards, McCarthy & Bulford will receive bids until September 27, 1910, for the new Schumacher Theater building.

Chehalis, Wash.—Harrison & Pepin will erect a $20,000 opera house at the corner of Park street and Pacific avenue.

Hermosa, S. Dak.—Edward Stenger is making arrangements to build a new opera house here.

Fitchburg, Mass.—The Cummings Theater Company has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $15,000. The incorporators are Arthur C. Milot, Hubert C. Milot and others.

Lansing, Mich.—Mr. Williams is preparing to open a new theater here. It is known as the Gladmer.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada.—J. M. Nash is making arrangements to erect a new moving picture theater on Notre Dame avenue.

Sterling, Ill.—Shrader & Rethol are planning the erection of a two-story addition to the Family Theater here.

Fargo, N. D.—W. J. Hawk sold his Ideal Theater property in this city to W. D. Kirkman, and the new management will take charge of the house on Monday next. The theater will be closed for repairs and alterations the first half of the week and will hold its opening the latter half. It will be known as the Savoy.

Gilbert, Minn. E. A. Carlson, proprietor of the Grand Theater, which has been under the management of Ilma I. Mattsson, is having the playhouse renovated and will reopen it in the near future.

Eau Claire, Wis. W. H. Rose opened his new moving picture theater, the Lyric, located in the building recently occupied by Howe Store Company, and received a great welcome from his new patrons. The new theater has a seating capacity of 576 and a new middle aisle which is considered to be the largest aisle in Wisconsin, measuring 5½ feet.

Racine, Wis. Announcement has been made that Ernest Klinkert will erect a $100,000 vaudeville house in Racine Junction. It is said that John T. Bartlett, formerly Mayor of Owensboro, has leased a site on Junction avenue and will at once begin the building of a theater for moving pictures and vaudeville.

Toronto, Canada. One of the largest moving picture theaters in Toronto will be erected by Dr. Shayne, of 332-334 Queen street west, which will be known as the People's Theater. It will cost about $15,000 and will seat about 1,000 patrons.

Jefferson, Wis. The store building on North Main street recently vacated by E. H. McKee & Co. is now being remodeled preparatory to opening in the latter part of the month as an electric theater.

Edgerton, Wis. P. D. McCarthy, proprietor of the Lyric Theater in Beloit, has rented the Pollard building on Henry street and will open a picture theater there.

Lancaster, Wis. William Holzmiller is the sole proprietor of the Electric Theater, having secured Benjamin Earl's share. It will continue to be operated in the same successful manner.

Racine, Wis. Dennis Long, for many years manager of the old Belle City Opera House, is preparing to open up a nickel theater on Sixth street, in the building formerly occupied by the Spencer jewelry store. Mr. Long has considerable experience in the five-cent amusement business and will operate this enterprise successfully.

Decatur, Ala. The Lyceum Theater here, which for the past two seasons has been closed to the public, has opened with moving pictures and vaudeville for the season and is receiving a good business.

Kaukauna, Wis. Henry Essler, proprietor of the Empire Theater, closed his establishment for the remodeling of same.

Stroudsburg, Pa. Clarence Dreher has disposed of his interest in the Star Moving Picture Theater to his former partner, R. R. Denny.

Williamsport, Md. A. O. Murray has leased the K. of P. Opera House and will convert it into a high-class moving picture palace.

South Burwick, N. H.—L. Bodreaux has opened a new moving picture theater in Swasey's Hall.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Superior Amusement Company will erect a new moving picture theater at Superior avenue and East Eighty-fifth street, which will have a seating capacity of 750.

Fairfield, Me.—The Columbia Moving Picture Theater has again opened its doors to the public and is running first-class pictures.

Cincinnati, Ohio. A lot has been cleared for the erection of a moving picture theater on Madison road for J. L. Eichhold.

Oyster Bay, N. Y. The moving picture exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson fight at the Lyric Theater last week was poorly attended, to the disappointment of the management.

Corona, L. I., N. Y.—A. Pechette has opened a new moving picture palace on Central avenue.

Northampton, Pa.—The Lyric Theater has again reopened for the season under the new management of E. W. Yale.

Roanoke, Va. The Comet Theater is the latest silent drama house to open in this city.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Built originally as a church building, the little edifice on Halsey street and Saratoga avenue is now being used as a moving picture theater.

New York City. Marcus Loew's new moving picture and vaudeville theater on Seventh avenue and 15th street opened for business on October 1.

Bridgeport, Conn. N. C. Lund will erect a picture theater at State street and Clinton avenue which will have a seating capacity of about 1,500.

Lawrence, Mass. The latest moving picture theater to be erected on Lawrence street, is the New Nickel Theater which is under the proprietorship of Toomey & Demara. Moving pictures and illustrated slides will be the features here.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Ridgewood Realty and Amusement Company will erect a first-class moving picture theater on the northeast corner of Convent and Madison streets.

Lawrence, Mass. The New Victoria Theater, on Broadway, opened its doors to the public and will run all the films that will please the audience.

Philadelphia, Pa. Philadelphia is to have two new moving picture theaters erected; one will be situated at 5123 Germantown avenue and the other at Forty-ninth and Yocum streets.

Long Island City, L. I., N. Y.—Ground has been broken for the erection of a moving picture theater at the corner of Mott avenue and Jones street, for the Aerodrome Park Amusement Company.

Carlisle, Pa.—The two following films made a great hit with the audience at the Orpheum Theater: "The Flag of Company H" and "The Man Who Died."

Waverly, N. Y.—Rallo Perry has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

THEATRES DESIGNED EVERYWHERE

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

THE DECORATORS SUPPLY CO.

2549 Arch Avenue :: CHICAGO, ILL.

Detroit, Mich.—The National Film Company, of Grand Rapids, is to place a large moving picture theater at the southwest corner of Woodward avenue and Montcalm street.

South Amboy, N. J.—The New Nickelette, on Main street, which for the past several weeks has been in the course of erection, is near completion and will be a handsome and comfortable place of amusement.

Montrose, Pa. Fifteen hundred people attended the opening of Borden's Moving Picture Theater at Tunkhannock.

Nashville, Tenn.—A new moving picture theater is being erected on Fifth avenue for W. P. Ready.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A new moving picture theater is being erected on Beverly road, which will be under the management of the proprietors, Charles Schuster and Louis Allmendiger.

Sedalia, Mo.—Herman Lewis has leased the Sedalia Theater.

Macomb, Ill.—Frank Logan has purchased the Gem Moving Picture Theater here.

Eveleth, Minn.—V. P. Vretch is having a new moving picture and vaudeville theater built here.

Milwaukee, Wis. H. S. Miller has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater at 514 Twelfth street.

Milwaukee, Wis. Max Kantek has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater on Lincoln avenue.

Lancaster, Wis.—Will Holzmiller has purchased the Electric Theater here from Ben Earl.

New York, N. Y.—The William Fox Amusement Company has opened a new moving picture theater at 161st street and Broadway. It will be known as the Nemo.

Hancock, Mich. C. S. Sullivan has opened a new moving picture theater in Ishpeming. It is known as the Royal.

Grand Island, Neb. J. J. McCartney and Al Cinous Hayman are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater on West Third street.

Edgerton, Wis.—F. D. McCarthy is making arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here.

Roanoke, Ill. Fred Bodhaine and Frank St. John are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Girard, Kan. Charles Kelso is planning the opening of a new moving picture theater.

Selma, Cal. C. P. Unger is planning to open a new moving picture theater here.

Racine Junction, Wis.—Ernest Klinkert is planning the erection of a $100,000 vaudeville theater here.

Irwin, Pa. Allan Braithwaite and Daniel Miller have purchased the Lyric Nickelodeon from Frank Catson.

Marengo, Ia.—Clyde B. Ramey has purchased the Lyric Moving Picture Theater here.

Washington, D. C.—H. H. Elliott has secured a permit for a new moving picture theater at 1462 Church street.

Independence, Kan.—W. H. Sears is planning to start a new moving picture theater here.

Chicago, Ill. John Colson has secured a permit for a new theater at 1436 Fullerton avenue.

Princeton, Ky. J. H. Settle has opened a new vaudeville theater here.

Davenport, Ia. H. A. Sedini is having plans prepared for the erection of a new moving picture theater in Moline.

Chicago, Ill. The Archer Amusement Association has purchased the property on Twenty-fifth street, near Robey, and will use it for amusement purposes.

Argenta, Ark. J. W. Polser has opened a moving picture show in the Matthews Building.

Coldwater, Mich.—F. H. Murray and C. Myers are making arrangements to open a new moving picture show here.

Cottonwood Falls, Kan.—Copeland Bros. are preparing to start a new moving picture show here.

Ottawa, Ill. Frank Cox has been awarded the contract for the erection of a new moving picture theater at the corner of La Salle and Jackson streets, for S. G. Gay.

NEW INCORPORATIONS.

Chicago, Ill. St. Louis Theater Company; capital, $5,000. Directors: E. S. Mackenfuss, A. A. Chenteau, Jr., and K. Hedlizelle.

St. Louis, Mo. Geraghty Film and Amusement Company; capital, $25,000. Directors: Charles L. Geraghty, William P. Geraghty and Oscar Wemmen.

St. Louis, Mo. The May Picture Show Company; capital, $2,000. Directors: Jessie James and E. T. Winfrey.

New York City.—The Metro Manufacturing Company; capital, $20,000. Directors: Leon Kauffman, Isidore Finkler and Joseph M. Herzberg.

LICENSED RELEASES.

BIOGRAPH.

Sept. 5—A Summer Idyl (Dr.) 991
Sept. 8—Little Angels of Luck (Dr.).....998
Sept. 12—A Mohawk's Way (Dr.).....991
Sept. 15—In Life's Cycle (Dr.).....997
Sept. 19—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.).....987
Sept. 22—The Oath and the Man (Dr.).....997
Sept. 26—Rose o' Salem Town (Dr.).....998
Sept. 29—Examination Day at School (Dr.)....991
Oct. 3—The Iconoclast (Dr.).....992
Oct. 6—A Gold Necklace (Com.).....576
Oct. 6—How Hubby Got a Raise (Com.).....416
Oct. 10—That Chink at Golden Gulch (Dr.) 998
Oct. 13—A Lucky Toothache (Com.).....570
Oct. 13—The Masher (Com.).....415

EDISON CO.

Sept. 23—Almost a Hero.....980
Sept. 27—Over Mountain Passes (Sc.) 275
Sept. 27—The Footlights or the Farm (Dr.)....725
Sept. 30—Ononko's Vow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 4—More Than His Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Bumptious Plays Baseball (Com.)....
Oct. 7—The Farmer's Daughter (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—The Song that Reached His Heart (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 14—The Chuncho Indians (Edu.).....250
Oct. 14—The Stolen Father (Dr.).....750

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 24—The Tout's Remembrance (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some (Com.) 307
Sept. 28—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660
Oct. 1—Patricia of the Plains (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—All on Account of a Lie (Com.)....1000
Oct. 8—The Bearded Bandit (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—Hank and Lank—They Get Wise to a New Scheme (Com.) 302
Oct. 12—Pap's First Outing (Com.).....698
Oct. 15—The Cowboy's Mother-in-Law (Dr.)..1000

KALEM CO.

Aug. 19—True to His Trust (Dr.).....822
Aug. 19—Running Fire (Com.).....175
Aug. 24—The Romany Wife (Dr.) 980
Aug. 26—The Canadian Moonshiners (Dr.) 975
Aug. 31—A Game with Fame (Dr.).....975
Sept. 2—White Man's Money (Dr.).....980
Sept. 7—Mama's Birthday Present (Com.).....935
Sept. 9—The Cow Puncher's Sweetheart (Dr.).972
Sept. 14—The Little Mother (Dr.).....980
Sept. 16—A Leap for Life (Dr.).....985
Sept. 21—The Japanese Spy (Dr.).....975
Sept. 23—The Conspiracy of Pontiac (Dr.).....975
Sept. 28—The Heart of Edna Leslie (Dr.).....965
Sept. 30—Spotted Snake's Schooling (Dr.).....885
Oct. 5—The Engineer's Sweetheart (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 7—Big Elk's Turndown (Dr.).....930
Oct. 12—45 Minutes from Broadway (Com.)....892
Oct. 14—Winona (Dr.) 990

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Sept. 12—The Greenhorn and the Girl (Com.)..990
Sept. 15—Mrs. Rivington's Pride (Dr.).....500
Sept. 15—Resourceful Robert (Com.).....450
Sept. 19—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.)....990
Sept. 22—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.).....990
Sept. 26—The Sheriff's Capture (Dr.).....990
Sept. 29—The Path of Duty (Dr.).....990
Oct. 3—The Baggage Smasher (Com.).....990
Oct. 6—Woman's Vanity (Com.).....600
Oct. 6—The Golf Fiend (Com.).....350
Oct. 10—The Clown and the Minister (Dr.)....990
Oct. 13—Liz's Career (Com.).....990

GAUMONT.

G. Kleine.

Sept. 24—The Reserved Shot (Dr.).....741
Sept. 24—The Times Art Out of Joint (Com.)..252
Sept. 27—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Sept. 27—Too Much Water (Com.).....351
Oct. 1—The Diver's Honor (Dr.).....591
Oct. 1—A High-Speed Biker (Com.).....401
Oct. 4—The Little Acrobat (Dr.).....466
Oct. 4—Her Fiance and the Dog (Com.).....525
Oct. 8—The Dunce's Cap (Dr.).....896
Oct. 8—A Skier Training (Sc.).....160
Oct. 11—The Lovers' Mill (Com.).....292
Oct. 11—The Three Friends (Dr.).....654
Oct. 15—The Romance of a Necklace (Dr.)....995
Oct. 18—Grandmother's Plot (Dr.).....835
Oct. 18—Phantom Ride from Aix la Bains (Scenic) 165

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

G. Kleine.

Sept. 14—The Tramps (Com.) 525
Sept. 21—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.).....699
Sept. 21—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.)..269
Sept. 28—The Quarrel (Dr.) 607
Sept. 28—Reedham's Orphanage Festival 1910 (Sc.) 394
Oct. 5—The Dishonest Steward (Dr.).....699
Oct. 5—City of a Hundred Mosques, Broussa, Asia Minor (Sc.) 296
Oct. 12—Foiled by a Cigarette (Dr.).....991
Oct. 19—In the Shadow of the Night (Dr.)....502
Oct. 19—Tunny Fishing off Palermo, Italy (Ind.) 500

G. MELIES.

Sept. 1—Won in the Fifth 950
Sept. 8—Baseball, That's All (Com.).....950
Sept. 15—In the Mission Shadows (Dr.).....950
Sept. 22—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950
Sept. 29—A Plucky American Girl (Dr.).....950
Oct. 6—Billy's Sister (Dr.) 950
Oct. 13—Out for Mischief (Com.).....950

PATHE FRERES.

Oct. 3—Betty Is Still at Her Old Tricks (C.).490
Oct. 3—Molucca Islands (Sc.).....459
Oct. 5—Mirth and Sorrow (Dr.).....575
Oct. 5—Different Trades in Bombay (Indu.)..410
Oct. 7—Slippery Jim (Trick).....633
Oct. 7—A Life for Love (Tragedy).....351
Oct. 8—An Indian's Gratitude (Dr.).....990
Oct. 10—The Stigma (Dr.).....630
Oct. 10—Betty is Punished (Com.).....351
Oct. 12—A Summer Flirtation (Com.).....990
Oct. 14—Werther (Dr.) 892
Oct. 15—Aeroplanes in Flight and Construction (Ind.) 680
Oct. 15—The Aviation Craze (Com.).....243

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

Sept. 19—Bertie's Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—Big Medicine (Com.).....
Sept. 22—The Sergeant (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Old Swimming Hole.....1000
Sept. 29—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Cold Storage Romance (Dr.).....565
Oct. 3—My Friend the Doctor (Com.).....
Oct. 6—For Her Country's Sake (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—The Sanitarium (Com.).....1000
Oct. 13—In the Golden Harvest Time (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 20—Two Boys in Blue (Dr.).....1000

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Sept. 16—Two Waifs and a Stray (Dr.).....985
Sept. 17—A Lunatic at Large (Com.).....997
Sept. 20—Jean, the Match-Maker (Com.).....1000
Sept. 23—A Modern Knight Errant (Dr.).....967
Sept. 24—Renunciation (Dr.) 999
Sept. 27—Her Adopted Parents (Dr.).....988
Sept. 30—A Home Melody (Dr.).....907
Oct. 1—The Bachelor and the Baby (Dr.)....
Oct. 4—Ransomed; or, A Prisoner of War (Dr.) 998
Oct. 7—The Last of the Saxons (Dr.).....1007
Oct. 8—The Sage, the Cherub and the Widow (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—Prother Man (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Actor's Fund Field Day (Com.).....
Oct. 14—On the Doorsteps (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Legacy (Dr.).....

A Long Felt Want Filled at Last

After Months of Careful Preparation, Anticipating a Big Demand

THE B. B. SIGN CO., Cleveland, O.

SPECIALISTS IN THEATRICAL ADVERTISING

Are Now in a Position to Supply for Practically Every Licensed and Independent Release Since June 1st

DURABLE ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY BANNERS, 3 x 12 Ft., $1.00 Each

On Standing Orders of Five or More Per Week. Single Banners Shipped, Postpaid, Upon Receipt of $1.35

NOT Ordinary "Rag" Signs that Crack Across the Lettering When Folded or Whip to Pieces in the Wind— BUT Signs Made on XX Muslin, Manufactured Expressly for Us, and can be Mailed, or Packed in a Case with the Film

Ready for Shipment 7 to 10 Days Before Release Date. Send Us Maker's Name and Date of Release. We Do the Rest

EXTRA!

We make to order and ship same day, special display banners of every description for vaudeville acts; specials advertising any certain makes; announcements, etc.

Prices for Specials (with reasonable copy): 9 to 12 ft., $1.50; 12½ to 15 ft., $1.75; 15½ to 18 ft., $2.00. Other sizes in proportion.

FOR SPECIAL RELEASES!

We write up catchy displays (with date to order) for all subjects such as "ROOSEVELT IN AFRICA," "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN," "RANCH LIFE," etc.

12 ft., $1.50. 15 ft., $1.75. 18 ft., $2.00.

Get one and sell it to the house that follows yours. Benefit by advance advertising.

FILM EXCHANGES!

Write to-day and arrange for complete banner service that will net you

300 PER CENT. PROFIT.

ALL THEATERS WANT IT.

Enable your customers to cater to both sides of the street. Sure "Business Bringers."

SUGGESTIONS FOR LOBBY OR FRONT DISPLAY FOR THE ASKING

ANY KIND OF A SIGN UNDER THE SUN. Write for Prices

TERMS: Cash with order, or ½ cash, balance C. O. D.

THREE COMEDY HITS

TWO BIG RELEASES THIS WEEK. Release of Wednesday, Oct. 12th

HANK AND LANK

THEY GET WISE TO A NEW SCHEME

(Length, Approx. 302 Feet)

The "Hank and Lank" cartoon filmlets have already gained a wide popularity with the picture fans. This picture is the funniest "Hank and Lank" we have ever issued. Read the descriptions and book quick.

Released with

"Papa's First Outing"

(Length, approx. 698 feet)

With "Hank and Lank" this picture completes a reel of unusually excellent comedy—one of our best of Wednesday releases.

To insure an early booking wire your exchange.

Get the Poster

ANOTHER COWBOY COMEDY! THE FUNNIEST EVER!

Release of Saturday, Oct. 15th

A COWBOY'S MOTHER-IN-LAW

(Length, Approx. 1000 Feet)

This picture ranks easily an equal in laughing qualities to "The Ranger's Bride," "The Little Doctor of the Foothills," and other great Essanay hits. It is positively the funniest ever produced by our Western Stock Company.

You'll want this comedy quick—yell for it!

Posters at all Exchanges. THE ESSANAY GUIDE—Yours for the Asking

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

LONDON 5 Wardour St. W. | 435 N. Clark St. CHICAGO | BERLIN 35 Friederich Str.

THE ENTERPRISE MODEL B

Portable Calcium Gas Outfit

Is the only Substitute for Electricity for projecting Motion Picture or Stereopticon views and is the

Only Satisfactory Portable Outfit

because it operates by WATER PRESSURE, IS CONSTANT, REGULAR AND RELIABLE and has no complicated spring valves to corrode, choke up and otherwise get out of order. Is patented.

"OXONE" in SQUARE CAKES is most Satisfactory for the production of Oxygen Gas. Send for particulars.

For Sale by Dealers

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. MANUFACTURERS AND SALES AGENTS 564 and 572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO

Renew your subscription to the Moving Picture World, $2.00.

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

Monday, October 10.

Biograph—Last Chink at Golden Gulch (Dr.)	998
Lubin—The Clown and the Magician (Dr.)	960
Pathe—The Stigma (Dr.)	990
Pathe—Betty is Punished (Com.)	551
Selig—The Sanitarium (Com.)	1000

Tuesday, October 11.

Edison—The Song that Reached Her Heart (Dr.)	1000
Gaumont—The Lovers' Mill (Com.)	292
Gaumont—Three Friends (Dr.)	664
Vitagraph—Brother Man (Dr.)
Vitagraph—Actor's Fund Field Day (Com.)

Wednesday, October 12.

Essanay—Hank and Lank—They Get Wise to a New Scheme (Com.)	302
Essanay—Papa's First Outing (Com.)	698
Kalem—15 Minutes from Broadway (Com.)	82
Pathe—A Summer Flirtation (Com.)	990
Urban—Foiled by a Cigarette (Dr.)	991

Thursday, October 13.

Biograph—A Lucky Toothache (Com.)	570
Biograph—The Masher (Com.)	115
Lubin—Liz's Career (Com.)	980
Melies—Out for Mischief (Com.)	950
Selig—In the Golden Harvest Time (Dr.)	1000

Friday, October 14.

Edison—The Chuncho Indians (Edu.)	250
Edison—The Stolen Father (Dr.)	750
Pathe—Werther (Dr.)	892
Kalem—Winona (Dr.)	990
Vitagraph—On the Doorsteps (Com.)

Saturday, October 15.

Essanay—The Cowboy's Mother-in-Law (Dr.)	1000
Gaumont—The Romance of a Necklace (Dr.)	995
Pathe—Aeroplanes in Flight and Construction (Ind.)	680
Pathe—The Aviation Craze (Com.)	245
Vitagraph—The Legacy (Dr.)

Classified Advertisements

[Classified advertisements, three cents per word, cash with order; 50 cents minimum; postage stamps accepted.]

SITUATIONS WANTED.

AT LIBERTY—Expert producer of action picture plays with responsible company. Correspondence confidential. HAMILTON, 1028 Fairmount St., Washington, D. C.

AT LIBERTY—First class operator. Six years' experience. Strictly sober and reliable; best of references. Mass. and Conn. licenses. Age 33. E. A. HALL, 50 Columbia St., Swampscott, Mass.

MANAGERS, ATTENTION—A-1 operator and electrician, 6½ years' experience, desires position on the road. Can run stage, operate any machine, and can furnish the best of references. LEO FISK, 279 West 114th St., New York City.

AT LIBERTY—Experienced camera operator or studio manager; years of experience in every branch of the business; not afraid of work; sober and steady. Have not been absent from work one day in nineteen months. Can give best of references. Address, M. O., care Moving Picture World.

A-1 OPERATOR who guarantees good work wishes position. Wife is expert vaudeville and picture pianist. Address G. E. GORDON, 401 South Fifth street, Columbia, Mo.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—Moving picture camera operator; only thoroughly experienced man need apply. Give full particulars as to experience and where last employed. DIRECTOR, care Moving Picture World.

WANTED—Scenic artist of ability. Prefer one experienced in moving picture work. Give full particulars as to experience and where last employed. DIRECTOR, care Moving Picture World.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WANTED—Power's machine; good condition. G., care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—November 1st, 200 folding chairs. Cost 65 cents each; sell 35 cents. Good condition. T. F. KINIRY, Dreamland, Bellows Falls, Vt.

THEATER FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—Modern vaudeville and motion picture theater in a thriving New England city; population 25,000. Opposition minimized because of superior location. Capacity 1,000. Practical business reasons for selling. "BONANZA," care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Picture house seating over three hundred. Two machines, elevated floor, front sign, arc lamps, fans, etc., costing me $2,500 to install. Am forced to sacrifice. Average business $175 per week. Particulars by mail. Full investigation permitted. MANAGER Electric Theater, 569 Main St., Menominee, Mich.

Independent Film Stories.

ECLAIR.

DR. GEOFFROY'S CONSCIENCE. Dr. Geoffroy is the superintendent of a medical home for the treatment of patients suffering from nervous disorders, and among the patients is a young man, who, released on patient's leave from away against the Doctor's advice, is not yet restored to health. Shortly afterwards, the young man becomes acquainted with the Doctor's niece, a young and very pretty girl. Both are attracted by one another, and they become engaged, the former's parents being delighted at their son's choice. When the young girl informs her uncle, however, and shows him her fiance's portrait, he recognizes the patient who was not cured. Immediately he goes to the young man's parents, but the father tells him that professional etiquette must prevent the Doctor's speaking. Uncertain how to act, he waits until the young couple are together, and then, by using mesmerism, produces in the young man one of his fits. As he falls under the attack, the Doctor tells the girl the sad story, and shows her how it was all for the best.

AN INDIAN CHIEF'S GENEROSITY.—A chief of an Indian encampment orders one of the tribe to take his two children to the river. As the boys are paddling, two white men pass, and one raises his rifle and wounds one of the children. The child is carefully carried back to the camp, and when the tale is told, the chief orders one of the braves to follow the "Palefaces." Crouching in the grass, the Indian follows the two men, and sees them ride up to an encampment. Quickly the news is carried back to the chief, and at night the Indians steal upon the encampment and carry off the owner's little boy. When the father discovers his loss, he sets out with two men, one of whom wounded the Indian's son, to the Indian's camp. As they arrive, the chief meets them with his wounded son, and asks the latter to point out who shot him. The child identifies the man, who is dragged away, while the Indian chief at once gives up the white child to his father.

CINES.

THE MAD LADY OF CHESTER.—A great mystery surrounds the Squire of Chester; ever since the Squire returned from his many years' sojourn abroad, his place has been partially closed; never is the house brilliant with entertaining; in fact, it is seldom that anyone save the occupants of the house, and the servants, cross the threshold; the Squire and his little niece live in absolute loneliness. For no one but the owner himself, and one or two trusted servants, knows that part of the grim old mansion shelters a poor degraded creature, hopelessly mad—the Squire's wife!

The Squire is most unhappy; he is bound forever to a woman who does not know him, who would tear him to pieces in a fit of madness, were he to approach her—and he has fallen in love with the beautiful instructress of his young niece. At last, determining to take matters into his own hands, the Squire offers marriage to the young lady, and she, being ignorant of the existence of the mad woman, consents.

Somehow or other, it is borne upon the dull mind of the mad woman of Chester that she has a rival, and she seeks to revenge herself. Evading her keepers, one night, she steals to the room of her husband, and sets fire to the bed; in a few moments, the whole building is in flames. The household is aroused, and the Squire works hard to save everyone, even his mad wife, but she makes her way to the roof, and in one of her wildest fits, hurls herself to death from the very highest point. The Squire sustains serious injuries from his endeavors to aid and rescue the occupants of his home; in fact, he is maimed for life. Seeing his deplorable condition, and loving him with all her heart, the young governess, having learned the whole truth forgives the Squire the wrong he would have done her, and consents to marry him, and be his nurse and comfort all her life.

CAPITOL FILM CO.

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE AND WAR.—Helen Mosby was very happily situated in her Southern home, the idolized daughter of her father, and the pet of the younger set. She had never worried her pretty head with any thoughts of politics—so that, one afternoon, as she strolled with her father in the garden, she was immeasurably shocked when a servant handed him a telegram which read:

"War is declared; your regiment ordered to Richmond. Report at once.

"GENERAL LEE."

However, she took the shock like a true Southerner, and when her cousin, Henry Bowie, appeared, dressed in the uniform of a Confederate lieutenant, she complimented him smilingly on his appearance; then her father joins them, clad in his gray frock coat, sash and sabre, and bids her farewell.

Hardly has her father gone, when Arthur Boone, who has long been in love with Helen, enters the garden. Helen rises to greet him, but draws back in horror as she sees him in a Union uniform. Arthur does not notice this, however, and proposes to her—but Helen's answer is a strong negative. "I can never marry a man who fights in the Union army!" Sadly Arthur leaves, bidding her farewell and shaking hands warmly with Henry, who has long been his friend.

Four years later a detachment of pickets of the Northern army is passed back by Southern sharpshooters under Lieutenant Bowie. Arthur Boone is the last one of the Northerners to retreat; he finds that his ammunition is exhausted, and turn[s] [th]rough the woods, with the Southerners hot after him. Lieutenant Bowie, not knowing that it is his old friend, follows close on his heels.

Right to the old Mosby mansion Arthur runs, and vaults through the open window. Helen Mosby jumps from the chair she had been occupying and levies a gun, which she had picked up, on the Union soldier, when she recognizes her lover. He tells her of his predicament and although she is torn between her emotions of love and duty, love finally conquers, and she hides him in a closet, just as Henry Bowie, sabre in hand, comes into the room. He greets his cousin pleasantly and tells her that they believe a Union officer has entered her house. She shakes her head, but allows him to search, which he does thoroughly, even though the very closet where Arthur is hiding, but in prodding the clothes with his sabre, he missed the Union officer, and goes away satisfied that the officer, whoever he was, has made good his escape.

Then, the next day, the shoe is on the other foot. Henry Bowie is pursued by Union men, under Arthur Boone.

Henry, too, makes for his cousin's house. She hides him, and then steps out onto the porch; as yet, no one is in sight. Rushing back into the room, she hastily dons a Southern uniform that has been in her possession for some time, and then, looking out the window, she sees the Union soldiers surrounding the house. When they have surrounded, Helen, in her man's attire, steals out by a side entrance. They soon discover her, however, and she leads them a merry chase, only to return by a different route to the house, and, gaining on them, reaching the house she tears off the uniform, and when the Union soldiers enter, only a tired little Southern girl stands before them. They demand the prisoner. She protests innocence. Then they arrest her. This is too much for the concealed cousin, and he emerges from his hiding place with a bound, and he, too, is caught in the grasp of the law. Henry is sentenced to be shot. He is guarded by a lone sentry. Helen escapes from her place of imprisonment, and smiling sweetly at the sentry, induces him to look the other way while she has a word with her cousin; she slips him a small piece of wire with which he picks the lock in his fetters. Then Helen goes away and returns in the uniform of a Southern lieutenant. Henry steals away and Helen takes his place. Shortly after the firing squad arrive—then it is discovered that they have the wrong man. When Captain Boone hears of it he orders that they shoot the substitute. Standing erect, they bind her eyes, tie her hands behind her back, and just then, two soldiers enter with Henry. "Let them both be shot!" are the Captain's orders, not noting in his rage that it is his old friend. The guns are levelled. "Ready, aim——" but before the word "Fire!" is given a messenger dashes up and hands a dispatch to Arthur:

"The war is over.

"U. S. GRANT, Commander, U. S. A."

Then Arthur commands the firing squad to halt, and as he approaches the prisoners he is violently surprised to see his old friend Henry. Going to him, he takes both his hands: "Thank God, those bullets were not fired!" Henry explains who Helen is. Arthur turns to her in amazement; saluting, she takes off her cap. Then Arthur holds out his arms, and only too willingly does the little southerner enter them, for in union there is strength.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

BISON.

A COWBOY'S DARING RESCUE.—Hartley is a rancher. His daughter, Bess, is the sweetheart of Jack, a fine, manly fellow. Bosco is a card sharp who inveigles Hartley, while under the influence of liquor, into a card game. Jack catches Bosco cheating, stops the game, and after an encounter with Bosco takes Hartley home, where a scene of pathetic tenderness is enacted with Bess. In revenge, Bosco and his partner carry Bess away. Jack rides in pursuit while Hartley assembles a posse and follows. The two renegades quarrel, and during the ensuing fight Bess makes her escape. As Bosco is about to recapture her, Jack arrives on the scene and a terrific encounter follows, in which Bosco falls over the cliff. In the meantime the posse is riding hard and comes up in time to escort Jack and his sweetheart back. Hartley is stricken with remorse over the trouble his drinking has brought on and takes an oath never to touch liquor again. The last scene shows Jack and Bess at the little church, about to be married, while the cowboys fire their revolvers and cheer them.

THE PRAYER OF A MINER'S CHILD.—In a desperate attempt to reach a doctor to minister to his dying child, Jim, exhausted by a nine-mile run and with still twenty-one miles to cover, appropriates by force the horse of the mail carrier. The sheriff organizes a posse of cowboys who pursue Jim, thinking him a common horse thief. The doctor ministers to the injured girl and Jim is apprehended, but is released by the sheriff, who learns the true state of facts by listening to the evening prayer of Jim's little boy, who had been the innocent cause of his sister's injuries by chasing her, at play, near the mouth of the mine shaft in which she fell.

AMBROSIO.

THE BETROTHED'S SECRET. Counting a maid, and after hearing [illegible] that she is in reality a widow and the mother of a son, Freeman becomes angered and refuses to live with his wife. Some years elapse, and one day the boy sees a motor car coming down the street at tremendous speed and in danger of being struck by a train which is not in view of the occupants of the car. Risking his own life, the boy stands in the middle of the street and by wild gesticulations stops the automobile, just as the train passes by. The occupants of the motor prove to be Freeman and his mother, who accompany the child back to his home. Freeman's surprise is great to behold his wife, and having formed an attachment for her son, he effects a happy reconciliation.

TWEEDLEDUM ON HIS FIRST BICYCLE.—Tweedledum's attempts to master the bicycle lead him into situations both thrilling and comical, and the ride proves most adventurous. He barely escapes with his life, and causes a mad scramble on the part of pedestrians who cross his path.

LUX FILMS.

BILL AND THE MISSING KEY.—Bill and a friend stroll to a cafe, where they are greeted by other friends. Unfortunately, Bill's nose commences to bleed, and after many ineffectual attempts to stop the copious flow, the old-fashioned remedy of dropping a key down the back is tried—with the result that Bill is comfortable once more. But things are slow, and the two merry young men follow two equally merry young ladies to a jolly party in the open air. In the small hours of the morning a cab drives up at Bill's flat, and a somewhat battered individual tumbles out. Bill, after ringing the bell some little time, finds that the door is unlocked, and makes his way up to his room. But he cannot find his key and wakes up the porter. The latter is extremely annoyed and kicks Bill downstairs. Our hero, in a more battered state than ever, decides to spend the night at a hotel, but here, through being unable to pay the necessary charges in advance, he is again flung out. Wearily he lies full length on a public seat, but even here he is not allowed to rest, for two gendarmes appear, and after some rough handling, Bill is put into the cold comforts of a prison cell. A moment later, another equally disreputable person makes a forcible entry, who turns out to be none other than Bill's friend. Bill relates his story and his friend is so annoyed that he hits poor Bill on the nose. Sure enough, that organ commences to bleed, and then the friend remembers where the lost key is. Calling the gendarmes, Bill is turned upside down and shaken until the key falls out, when the two are summarily dismissed from the cell by the indignant gendarmes.

RUNAWAY STAR.—The leading actor is a gay dog, and spends a great deal of his time getting in other people's way and generally making himself a nuisance. But he sighs for more daring deeds, and seeing a chariot standing by, gets in and drives off. Meantime the unfortunate manager of the theater, at the hour for the curtain to rise, has to explain that the leading actor has disappeared, and consequently there will be no performance. A small riot takes place in the theater, and the manager's exit is hurried by a rain of articles from the exasperated audience. The company set forth to find the culprit, and an exciting chase ensues. They follow up the Champs Elysees, where the leading actor has upset a hansom. Past the Trocadero they follow, and then around Eiffel Tower. The actor in his chariot passes a level crossing just in time to miss an express coming along. His merry course continues, during which he upsets a barrow of fruit and many people. Ultimately, tired out, he drives up a passage, and there is captured by the company, to be fined £20 for his little escapade.

AUNTIE IN THE FASHION.—Auntie, a stout, elderly person, receives a visit from a young lady friend, who is dressed in the latest fashion. Auntie is much impressed with the skirt, and when her visitor leaves she informs Uncle that she must have a skirt like that. In spite of Uncle's protestations, Auntie sails off to the dressmaker's, where, with some difficulty, she is fitted with an exceedingly tight skirt, which can best be described as the "last word" in "hobbles." She experiences some difficulty in walking, but all goes well until her troubles commence in the knocking of a cyclist off his machine. Then the fun starts, for Auntie "bashes" into everybody, with disastrous consequences to herself. Finally, in crossing a bridge, she falls into the water, and it is a very battered Auntie who arrives home to greet her husband.

MOTHER'S PORTRAIT.—We are first shown a happy family celebrating the mother's birthday, and the father hangs up her portrait. But the happiness of the little family is quickly broken, for the mother catches a severe cold, which ends in her death. The father, who hitherto has been a sober man, tries to forget his grief in drinking, and the little boy, neglected by his father, sorrowfully kneels before his mother's portrait. The father comes in drunk, and falls asleep over a

For Rent to Licensed Theatres

ORIGINAL

JOHNSON-KETCHEL FIGHT

2500 FEET

The greatest picture of a knockout ever snapped by a camera. Exclusive American Rights controlled by the Johnson-Ketchel Fight Pictures Co.

A. J. GILLIGHAM, Mgr.
103 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE SHOW AT THE GEM — SAY

Buttons

(Celluloid.)

They make a big hit with the children.

We paint any lettering you want and in any size.

BUTTONS and BADGES

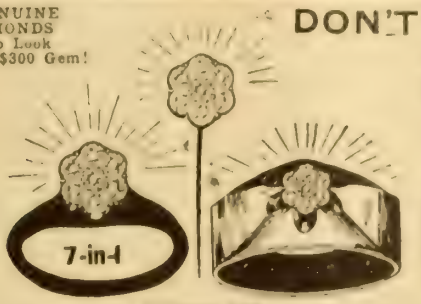
That's our business. We make them.
We also make Fobs, Canes and Pennants.
These make good souvenirs. Send for List.
To give full information at first writing, state explicitly what you want and quantity.

AMERICAN BADGE CO.
Factory, 141-143 W. Michigan St., CHICAGO, ILL.

7 GENUINE DIAMONDS Set to Look Like $300 Gem!

DON'T SEND A CENT

Greatest Genuine Diamond Jewelry Innovation and Sensation In Years. "A $300 flash for $30" cash.



$30 AFTER you have examined the goods in your express office!

Patented 1909.

DESCRIPTION—Each ladies' ring, men's ring, men's stud or scarf pin and ladies' earscrew is set in platinum with SEVEN PERFECT BLUE WHITE GENUINE DIAMONDS, imported direct from Amsterdam by us. The setting of platinum is firmly held in 14k gold and the work is so marvelously ingenious that the seven diamonds seem to blend; GIVING ALL THE FIRE, BEAUTY AND BRILLIANCE OF A $900 DIAMOND. Not the old, flat cluster effect, but the raised setting, TIFFANY STYLE. If you want the most wonderfully beautiful bit of jewelry on the market today, at absurdly low cost, send us a postal card, (but no money), ordering pin, stud or ring (giving size of finger with piece of string), and we will ship at once. Open the package in your express office. If not all we claim for it, keep your money, refuse the goods, and we will pay the express charges both ways. Choice of any article, set with 7 genuine diamonds set to look like one, $30, other sizes at $40, $50, $60.

DIAMOND IMPORTERS STRELITZ BROS. EST. 1874

Columbus Memorial Bldg., 103 State Street, CHICAGO

Gen. Flimco Panic-Stricken!

Denver Post

IBER 26, 1910.

MOVING PICTURE AND FILM TRUST FACES PROBING

Action to Be Started Soon by Government and State Officials.

EVIDENCE IS OBTAINED

Extract From Letter to an Independent in Which Threats Are Made.

Old "Gen. Flimco" is not only the worst-managed but the worst-scared trust in America. Right now he has the worst case of panic-ache a trust ever suffered from. I understand from what seems to be mighty good authority that old Flimco is having a scrap within himself, that his officers can't agree, that each one is blaming the others for the enormous loss of exhibitors from the ranks of the licensed royalty-payers. The number of exhibitors now daily turning independent is something appalling to Gen. Flimco. And on top of that, he is now threatened with a government investigation WHICH WAS STARTED AS A RESULT OF THE FAMOUS DENVER LETTER I PUBLISHED IN MY ADVERTISEMENT OF TWO WEEKS AGO! Read the accompanying clipping from the Denver Post. It tell it's own story and it ought to be meat for your thoughts! Maybe it will act as an alarm clock and encourage you to wake up, protect your theatre, assert your independence and put the boots to the old general. When you get ready, fire me a letter and I'll open negotiations with you concerning the best films and the best service in this wide world!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

Headquarters: 196-198 Lake Street, Chicago

Minneapolis Portland Omaha Salt Lake City Evansville

The biggest and best film renter in the world

bottle of wine. The little boy clambers out of bed, and seizing the bottle, empties its contents out of the window and then hides the bottle. Soon the father awakens out of his drunken sleep and reaches for his bottle. It is missing, and angrily he searches for it. He finds the empty bottle, and drags his son out of bed. The little lad pleads with his father, but the maddened man only remembers his craving for drink. As the boy and man stagger round the room, the father's eyes light on the portrait of his wife, which, to his heated imagination, takes the form of living reality. His dear wife's eyes look reproachfully at him, and, with a sob, the man drops on his knees before her portrait. His better feelings have conquered.

POWERS CO.

A WOMAN'S WIT.—Judge Brown, of Tonah Par, New Mexico, is threatened with death by some bandits unless he releases one of their pals. The judge's daughter, Grace, goes out riding with her lover, Arthur Bray. Her horse runs away and she falls into the hands of the bandits and is taken to their cave. Diaz, the chief bandit, sends word to the judge that he will release his daughter when the judge releases Mandez. Grace flatters the bandit chief by making a portrait of him. She writes a message on the bottom of the picture telling of her whereabouts and tears this part off. Later she persuades the bandit to let her take a walk. She takes the message in her handkerchief to the horse and sends the horse galloping toward her home. Her lover and the sheriff's man find the horse and the message and come to the rescue. A thrilling and dramatic scene follows and Grace is rescued.

SLEEPY JONES.—Jones is a big, good-natured cowboy who would rather sleep than eat. While calling on his girl he goes to sleep and his rival, Sim Thompson, wins his girl away from him. After their marriage Sim takes to drink. To save the wife from abuse of her drunken husband, "Sleepy" whips him and the wife promptly shows her gratitude by knocking him over the head with a rolling pin. Some bad men tempt Sim to help them rob the Wells Fargo money boxes. Jones, who has fallen asleep in the bushes, overhears the plot and determines to save Sim. He warns the express messenger and the stage driver and then he captures Sim and ties him to a tree. The would-be robbers are captured; then "Sleepy" releases Sim and makes him realize what he has escaped. In a touching scene Sim apologizes to Jones before his wife, and all ends happily.

THE DEVIL.—Harry Cutup goes to a masquerade ball dressed up as the Devil. At 4 A. M. he comes out loaded and happy. Imagine what happens when the driver of an automobile wakes up to find the Devil seated in his car. He's off. A policeman turns the corner, sees the Devil. He is off like a streak of lightning. Two robbers have placed a ladder against the house and are about to rob it. Harry comes along just as they are descending with their plunder. One look at him and they are off. Harry climbs the ladder to restore the stolen property. He enters the room of a German and his wife. The wife takes one look at him and falls into a faint. The husband awakes to find himself embraced by the Devil. He dives through the window. Harry puts on the German's clothes and goes home. The husband returns and the wife awakening from the faint thinks that her husband has played a joke on her and she lands into him.

NESTOR

SILVER PLUME MINE.—"Extremes are ever neighbors." So the wise heads nodded and smiled their approval when David Silver's staunch, energetic daughter, Mary, became the bride of the indolent, self-indulged and fickle John Plume.

Mary would arouse his ambition and instil new blood into his veins; and they beamed with satisfaction when they learned that the young wife had already successfully planted the gold bee in his bonnet, and the couple were departing to search for a claim.

The claim, when staked out, they called Silver Plume, and until John was laid up with fever, both husband and wife worked it unceasingly.

Mary, however, was not to be discouraged. Every moment she could spare from John's side was devoted to the mine.

But lack of sleep and proper nourishment was commencing to tell upon her, and it was, therefore, small wonder that upon picking up a piece of quartz in which she discovered free gold, all else was forgotten even the blasting powder and her lighted cap—forgotten until the cap fell and an explosion followed.

Painfully Mary groped her way out—but when at last the miners found and helped the unfortunate wife home, the doctor held out very little hope for her sight.

A letter was hurried off to her father, who answered he would start at once, bringing with him Edith Ausdel, her Eastern cousin.

In the meanwhile, as the fever left him, not only did John's old indolent disposition return, which caused him to gladly dispose of his share of the mine, but likewise his fickleness. Edith Ausdel was a new toy and he gave himself up to a flirtation with her with all the relish of his self-indulging soul.

In the very room with his blind wife the deceitful couple would show their infatuation. However, Mary was not yet blind, she but awaited the doctor's permission to remove the bandages.

At last the permission came, and oh! happiness supreme she could see! Joyfully the little wife parted the curtains to tell her husband and Edith—but, to her horror, beheld her cousin in John's arms.

And he, finding that reconciliation with Mary was impossible, whispered to Edith he would meet her at their old trysting place—and there he waited and waited and waited, while Edith stole quietly out of camp and boarded the first train going East.

CHAMPION.

STOLEN BY INDIANS.—Although the advent of the railroads tended to bring the far West within the realms of civilization, it was still in a comparatively wild state, and still sparsely inhabited, when Mrs. Hardy with her two boys, John and William, aged eleven and seven years, respectively, accompanied by a neighbor and his wife and child, Grace, sets out from her farm in Vermont in a prairie schooner to journey across the country to the Western home already provided by her husband, Peter Hardy.

In his letter to his wife, Hardy has taken precautionary measures by despatching a band of cowboys to take them safely across the Indian infested country.

This detachment is now well on its way within the same territory through which the settlers are journeying, when they scent suspicious signs of marauding Indians. Sending a scout ahead they soon ascertain that a band of Indians are trailing the prairie schooner.

Dashing forward they are soon upon the hostile Indians who have already surrounded the settlers. They scatter the Indians and find them all unharmed. During the excitement they have failed to notice the children, but now little William comes rushing into camp with the alarming news that his elder brother John, with whom he had gone to fetch water from the spring, had been carried off by the fleeing Indians.

A hurried search is instantly made by the cowboys in all directions but all attempts are futile. The heartbroken and frantic family continue their journey westward and arrive eventually at their home.

The grief of the parents when they meet is pitiful and when the last of the cowboys return with sorrowful faces, they resign all hope of finding the lad.

Twenty years roll by, and West has progressed in population, civilization and industry, and little William, now a tall man of 27 years, is engaged to marry Grace, the daughter of that neighbor who so many years before accompanied them across the prairie.

It is while strolling about one balmy evening that they notice the young chief of a group of Indians, who have come to town to form their camp, and it appears rather peculiar in that he is of fair complexion and rather blonde. The brothers, for the young Indian is none other than the stolen boy, gaze at each other and pass on without evincing any signs of recognition.

The following day, Grace visits the Indian camp to inspect the different curios and fancy handiwork. Her friends, becoming alarmed at her absence, hurry to the Indian village and find her in the young chief's tepee. The white folks threaten him, and when he bares his right arm, vehemently asserting that he would rather cut it off than harm the girl, his mother notes the birth mark on his wrist, and recognizes in the Indian her long lost boy.

Following the identification he at first hesitates at the thought of leaving his tribesmen, but later, beset with conflicting emotions, he appeals to the old chief who grants him permission to return to his own people.

On entering his home and seeing his mother weeping before the fireplace for her lost son, he sinks to his knees, and with a great cry from each, mother and son are clasped in each other's arms.

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

POCAHONTAS.—Captain John Smith comes to America at the head of a band of English colonists and settles Jamestown, Virginia. While at the head of the colony Smith makes a trip of exploration into the interior, and is captured there by King Powhatan, the acknowledged head of all the redmen in Virginia. Powhatan orders his prisoner's execution. Just as the fatal club is about to descend, Pocahontas, the favorite daughter of the King, throws herself before her father. She begs so fervently that the white man's life be spared that Powhatan relents and orders his release. Captain Smith returns in safety to his friends.

Later, Pocahontas is taken prisoner by the English, and held as hostage. While a prisoner, she is converted to Christianity, and falls in love with Rolfe, a handsome young Englishman. They are married in a rude little church at Jamestown, and the Indian princess sails away with her husband to England. There she is received with royal honors by King James I., but the foreign flower cannot stand transplanting. She soon sickens and dies, and in her last hours is visited by visions of the home in the wilderness that she would fly back to if she could.

DELIGHTFUL DOLLY.—Little Marie Allen, a penniless orphan, lives with her granddad. Out for a walk, she admires a huge doll in a show window. That night, after her granddad has fallen asleep, she slips out to have another look at the doll. Arriving at the toy shop, she sees that the doll is gone. Unseen by anyone, she enters the store. She finds the wonderful doll and lifts it out of its box to admire it. Hearing a clerk approaching, she becomes frightened and gets into the doll box. The doll rolls under the counter. The clerk sends the errand boy off with the box, thinking it contains the doll, which has been ordered for Daisy Smythe, a rich little girl.

Arriving at Daisy's house, Marie steps out of the box as soon as the room is empty. She removes the doll clothes from the box and admires them greatly. She decides to try them on, and soon a little cap, shoes and garments are on her figure. Then she hears Daisy coming and retreats to the box. Daisy enters and takes the supposed doll from the box, falls in love with it instantly and enthusiastically works its arms and limbs. Marie lives up to her role well, imitating the stiff, jerky movements of the limbs that belong to real dolls.

Then Daisy eats, and Marie grows hungry as she watches. When Daisy sets down her bowl of milk, Marie reaches over and drinks it down. Daisy is amazed when she misses the milk. Marie helps herself to all the food and Daisy's wonderment is amusing to see. Finally Daisy falls asleep in her chair and Marie falls asleep on the floor.

Here she is found by her granddad, who managed to trace her from the toy shop, and Daisy and her mother laugh so heartily over Marie's adventure that they reward her cleverness with—the doll itself!

GREAT NORTHERN.

SAVED BY BOSCO.—A lady goes to the help of a sick woman, and her dog Bosco accompanies her. Reaching the house, she enters, and is received by two evil-looking men; but, taking no notice of them, she makes her way to the woman's bedside. After giving her medicine, she turns round, and sees the two men are lounging round the table where her handbag is lying. She quickly takes her leave. She soon hears footsteps behind, and before she can scream, she is seized from behind and thrown into an old cellar where there is no outlet except a little barred window. In the meantime the two scoundrels have decamped with her handbag containing her money. She sees at the window the faithful Bosco. Having in her pocket a paper, she manages to scrawl a message which she fastens round the dog's neck, and telling him to run off to his master, she awaits the result. Bosco seems to understand, for he rushes home and brings back with him the husband. With the help of the police, the frightened woman is extricated from the cellar.

WILLIE VISITS A MOVING PICTURE SHOW.—Willie, a henpecked husband, is sent out one day to do some shopping. A cinematographer is taking pictures, and Willie takes an active part in a faked fight. The actors, however, do not want his help and he is sent off with a thrashing. By way of consolation, he chats with a pretty girl all in front of the camera. One day he takes his wife to a moving picture theater, and, to his great surprise, he sees his adventure depicted on the screen. His wife is highly indignant, and administers punishment.

YANKEE

THE COPPER AND THE CROOK.—John Walsh was born and raised in the lower East Side—there, as boy and man, he had worked and played, laughed and cried—and the conditions and customs of this vicinity were an open book to him. Early to appreciate the value of an education, he managed to struggle through public school—not a struggle as far as intelligence was concerned—but a struggle to remain in school because of his being obliged to help towards the support of his family. He managed to do more than his share in this respect, by selling papers and doing odd jobs before and after school hours. Arriving at manhood his cherished ambition was realized, for he secured an appointment on the police force. He was that type of young New Yorker who has made the history of the metropolis, in politics, in business and yes, in finance. Skinny Leach was that other type of East Sider who fill our police courts and jails. As a boy he was constantly sought by the truant officer or kept busy eluding the police. As a youth he slept in hallways or wagons, and as a man became the leader of a growler gang, living by levying tribute from inoffensive Chinamen and Hebrews for funds with which to rush the can. It was ordained that these two opposites meet: for when the young patrolman was assigned to duty, his post was located in the vicinity of Five Points and Chinatown. Here is where the growler gang held sway and where Leach ruled. Hazing is not only practiced at West Point, for at Five Points the kid coppers must go through their course of sprouts, and believe us from what we've heard, we would prefer the Army brand of hazing. "The easiest way may be the best," and "You may catch more flies with molasses than with salt." But John knew his people, to win the respect of the gang element you must be a better man. "Hey, fellers, there's a new cop on the beat he soaked me for trying to do Mickey the Boothlack out of the price." That was all that was necessary—such an affront to the gang was not to be tolerated and they proceeded to do the fresh cop; and they almost succeeded, too, but for Mickey the Boothlack and his sister Nell. The gang got John they beat him up good and they finally cooped him up in a Chinese chop suey joint for the new cop gave a good account of himself—as future reference. It was not all one sided, though, the leader of the growler gang can testify. When Mickey reached the station house the reserves had an incentive for haste, for one of their fellows needed help. Copper and crook have no love for each other and it was a merry little war that Chinatown witnessed that day on the street, through houses and on the roofs, that gallant squad of bluecoats took the opportunity to settle many an old score. Leach got his—about five years—ample time and opportunity to reflect upon the error of his ways. We are glad to say that he did—he tried to get work after he had done his bit—but, well a jailbird doesn't always get a show, maybe he is hounded by the police This ex-convict was arrested on general principles and brought before Captain Walsh, and that's why he is an honest hard working man to-day. He did not receive a lecture on the error of his ways—he was given a chance. "If you'll stand for him, Cap, I'll give him a job. Can you drive, young feller? Git up." Leach owns a couple of teams himself now. The other day he delivered a package to Mrs. Captain Walsh—Mickey's sister, how did you guess? and she let him kiss the baby, too. That's an East Side evidence of good will.

ATLAS.

THE CAT CAME BACK.—Mrs. B. had received her annual birthday gift from her husband. This year's remembrance consisted of a handsome jeweled bracelet to slip on the arm, without opening. The surprise and the novelty of the gift had appealed to Mrs. B. and she sat and contemplated what envy her bracelet would create when her numerous dear female friends saw it. Baby Brown was the only other occupant of the room at the time and Mrs. B. had only been out of the room a few moments, when upon her return she found the case empty and the jewel gone. A hasty search failed to locate the highly prized and valuable gift. Mrs. B.'s shrieks for help were quickly answered by their gardener who was at work close by. The cook should have been the first to answer her cry of distress, but Bridget was very busy in another direction. One thing a good cook cannot and will not tolerate and that is interference with her culinary efforts, so that when Miss McCue espied the household cat feasting on the hamburger she was preparing for lunch, her Irish was up in a minute. It was the work of a second to pounce upon the culprit and effect her capture and only another moment to securely confine the thief in one of Mrs. B.'s pillow slips. Pedestrian Pete in search of a handout, was the innocent cause of the cook's mortification, for he had called her to the kitchen door and away from her work. Pete obtained what he wanted, but only after promising the cook that he would take the pillow slip and wicked doggy and deposit both of them in the nearby pond. The gardener was quick to follow the instructions of Mrs. B. and lost no time in reporting the theft of Mrs. B.'s bracelet to the village constable, stopping only long enough to report the matter to neighbor Nevins, whom he passed on the way. This is how Nell knew of the facts so soon. Nell was a sharp, shrewd and well read young miss and had a literary acquaintance with every detective from Nick Carter to Sherlock Holmes. Here was her opportunity to put all her knowledge to good use. Besides the Browns were rich and there was sure to be a reward. To think was to act with Nell, and not a moment too soon, for hearing her approach and realizing that he was discovered, the tramp quickly threw the bag into the pond and disappeared into the woods. "Foiled," cried the girl detective, wading into the pond and recovering the stolen jewel. A quick and clean piece of work, say you, and so it was for Mrs. B. had hardly got through with her last shriek when the female Nick Carter entered and said, "Here is the stolen bracelet." No—don't laugh too soon—cook wanted to know what was in the bag—for sure enough there was the bracelet firmly and securely around the cat's neck. Baby Brown had placed it there. Nellie, the beautiful country girl detective, was handsomely rewarded and so was the cat she received the rest of the hamburger. I wonder what Baby Brown got?

DEFENDER

THE TALE A CAMERA TOLD.—Henry Larkin leaves the farm, with its dreariness, and is off to the city with its sounds and wails, its aches and the little happenings that bring them. Like so many other country youths, he enters the city university with its bewildering sights. Gradually he becomes accustomed to it, to his chums and to the rest of the college fraternity, and to those just outside the pale, those mighty, flighty, flirty college widows, who create for the college chaps some of their joys, some of their pains. He trips in love with one of them: in fact, marries her, and when the foul deed is done, writes home for his rustic father's benediction, which is not forthcoming. A little perplexed, but still stout of heart, he decides to brave the irate patent's presence, and personally sue for the tardy blessing. He arrives home, and after a luckless scene with his father, meets his better three-quarters, and plan and plot, and finally Henry's wife decides to approach the obstinate lord of their destinies as a book agent, and attempts to win his good graces. She not only wins his good graces, but his gracious goodness, to such an extent that father becomes flirty. Woman's charm, the elixir of a June day and its intoxication, feminine lure, the old story, and its usual termination. He kisses her, and his son, just behind with a kodak, snaps the snappy scene. Then, he presents himself and the photograph, and when the father realizes he has kissed his daughter-in-law, he can not wonder why his son had wooed so ardently, and his opposition makes a noise like the sunset and fades.

IMP

MOTHER AND CHILD.—A husband discovers his wife about to elope with a friend, and then forces her to go with him, making her write a note to her child saying that she is going on a long journey. Later the lover reads of a railroad accident, in which many people were killed and telegraphs the husband that his wife was one of the victims. The child mourns for its mother and asks the father to take her where her mother is supposed to be buried. He takes her there and puts up a tombstone. Later the husband falls in love with a widow, which is very objectionable to the child. On one of the child's journeys to her mother's grave, she meets her mother, who has returned, takes her father away from the widow, brings him home and there is a reconciliation.

THE FUR COAT.—A wealthy young man about to leave the house is handed his overcoat by his valet. Thinking it is too warm, he refuses it. The valet hangs it out of the window to give it an airing, and it falls out. A tramp picks it up and takes it to a pawnshop; he loses the ticket, which is found by a young lady; she immediately redeems the coat, takes it to her employer, a poor lawyer, and offers it to him as a present. The husband, afraid to take the coat home, pawns it for a small amount and gives the ticket to his wife, asking her to redeem it for him. The next day the owner of the coat, a friend of the lawyer, calls on the wife and gives her theater tickets and sees the pawn ticket in her hand. He goes to the pawnshop with her to see if it is not his coat. Upon arriving there, he finds it is his coat, redeems it himself and goes away with it. He calls at the lawyer's office to explain the result of the pawn ticket. The lawyer claims it and in the scuffle the coat is accidentally thrown out of the window and the tramp again finds it and pawns it and spends the proceeds for a good feed and drink.

Fredericksburg, Va.—The Casino Company's moving picture theater on Commerce street opened this week and is now doing a good business.

Marquette, Mich. C. S. Sullivan proprietor of a moving picture theater in the Veelker block, is having it remodeled and enlarged.

Farmington, Ia.—H. N. Taylor & Co. will open a new moving picture show here.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The Cincinnati Family Theater and Amusement Company has leased the building at the corner of Vine street and Thorp alley and will remodel it into a theater.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Barhydt & Hoeflier are planning the erection of a new theater here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. R. Jackson is estimating on plans for the erection of a new moving picture theater at Twelfth and Passayunk avenue for Hopkins & Milgram.

Springfield, Mo.—Clarence Burke and T. E. Hornbeck have purchased the Majestic Moving Picture Theater from Acy L. Loyless.

Aurora, Neb.—Mr. Howard has sold his interest in the Lyric Moving Picture Theater here to E. L. Burney.

Andrews OPERA CHAIRS

Over 75 per cent. of the finest theaters in the United States and Canada are furnished with them. They are used in 318 of the 406 moving picture theaters in Chicago.

To meet the growing demands for

LOW PRICED OPERA CHAIRS

we have originated a number of styles which, though inexpensive, are characteristic of

ANDREWS QUALITY

Write to Department K for our large Catalogue No. 81, illustrated in colors, which will guide you when contemplating the purchase of opera chairs.

THE A. H. Andrews Co.

CHICAGO ESTABLISHED 1885
NEW YORK SAN FRANCISCO
ST LOUIS SEATTLE

174-176 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, October 10.

Eclair—The Cathedrille (Dr.) 670
Eclair—The Order is to March (Com.) 295
Imp—Jess' Plain Dog (Dr.) 500
Imp—A Game of Hearts (Dr.) 500
Yankee—The Monogramed Cigarette (Dr.) .....

Tuesday, October 11.

Bison—A Cowboy's Daring Rescue (Dr.) .....
Powers—A Man and a Girl (Dr.) .....
Powers—Simpson's Skate (Com.) .....
Thanhouser—Pocahontas (Dr.) 1000

Wednesday, October 12.

Ambrosio—The Betrothed's Secret (Dr.) .....
Ambrosio—Tweedledum, or His First Bicycle (Com.) .....
Atlas—Curing a Grouch (Com.) .....
Atlas—The S. S. Mauretania (Scenic) .....
Champion—How the Tenderfoot Made Good (Dr.) 950
Nestor—Silver Plume Mine (Dr.) 970

Thursday, October 13.

Defender—The Tale a Camera Told (Com.) .....
Imp—The Garden of Fate (Dr.) 1000
Lux—Runaway Star (Com.) 417
Lux—Bill and the Missing Key (Dr.) 534

Friday, October 14.

Bison—The Prayer of a Miner's Child (Dr.) .....
Cines (Eclair)—The Mad Lady of Chester (Dr.) 965
Thanhouser—Delightful Dolly 1000

Saturday, October 15.

Columbia—Tracked Across the Sea (Dr.) .....
Great Northern—Saved by Rosco (Dr.) .....
Great Northern—Willie Visits a Moving Picture Show (Com.) .....
Itala—Paid Boots and Stolen Boots (Com.) .....
Itala—A Pearl of Boy .....
Powers—A Woman's Wit (Dr.) .....

FILMS FOR RENT

New Films High Class Service

The Pioneer House, With 8 Years Experience and $250,000.00 Back Of It

Write To-day for Terms

EUGENE CLINE

57 and 59 Dearborn St., Chicago

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 16—The Sacking of Rome 800
Sept. 19—The Blind Man's Dog.....560
Sept. 19—The Falls of the Rhine (Scenic).....440
Sept. 26—The Street Arab of Paris (Dr.).....820
Oct. 3—Through the Ruins of Carthage.....660
Oct. 3—Behind the Scenes of Cinema Stage...320
Oct. 10—The Carmelite (Dr.).....670
Oct. 10—The Order Is To March (Com.).....295
Oct. 17—Dr. Geoffroy's Conscience (Dr.).....659
Oct. 17—An Indian Chief's Generosity (Dr.)...321

CINES.

Eclair.

Sept. 23—Julie Colonna (Dr.) 760
Sept. 25—Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer (Com.)..236
Sept. 30—Giovanni of Medici (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Giorgione (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 14—The Mad Lady of Chester (Dr.).....965

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 17—Fabian Out for a Picnic (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Danish Dragoons (Scenic).....
Sept. 24—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—The Flight Across the Atlantic (Sc.)..
Oct. 1—Bird's-eye View from World's Highest Buildings (Sc.) 235
Oct. 8—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 8—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Saved by Bosco (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Willie Visits a Moving Picture Show (Com.) .....

"IMP."

Sept. 8—Sister's Sacrifice 996
Sept. 12—Two Daughters 992
Sept. 15—Dixie 986
Sept. 19—Debt 998
Sept. 22—New Butler 994
Sept. 26—Pressed Roses 987
Sept. 29—Annie (Dr.) .....
Oct. 3—All the World's a Stage (Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Deciding Vote (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—The Garden of Fate (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—Jes' Plain Dog (Dr.).....500
Oct. 10—A Game of Hearts.....500
Oct. 17—Mother and Child (Dr.).....990
Oct. 20—The Fur Coat (Com.).....995

LUX FILMS.

Sept. 22—Only a Bunch of Flowers (Dr.).....596
Sept. 22—That Typist Again (Com.).....380
Sept. 29—How Jones Won the Championship (C.)380
Sept. 29—Kindness Abused and Its Results (Dr.)531
Oct. 6—Auntie in the Fashion (Com.).....301
Oct. 6—Mother's Portrait (Dr.).....531
Oct. 13—Runaway Star (Com.).....413
Oct. 13—Bill and the Missing Key (Dr.).....534

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 24—In the Black Hills (Dr.) 960
Aug. 31—The Blazed Trail (Dr.).....989
Sept. 7—The Moonshiner's Daughter (Dr.).....960
Sept. 14—The Law and the Man (Dr.).....956
Sept. 21—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963
Sept. 28—Where the Sun Sets (Dr.).....976
Oct. 5—The Golden Hoard (Dr.).....930
Oct. 12—Silver Plume Mine (Dr.).....970

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

("Bison.")

Sept. 13—Cowboy's Matrimonial Tangle.....995
Sept. 16—For a Western Girl.....915
Sept. 20—For the Love of Red Wing.....957
Sept. 23—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000
Sept. 27—A Cowboy for Love 989
Sept. 30—The Ranch Raiders.....915
Oct. 4—Young Deer's Return 985
Oct. 7—The Girl Scout 1000
Oct. 11—A Cowboy's Daring Rescue (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—The Prayer of a Miner's Child.....

ITALA.

(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Sept. 17—The Falconer 818
Sept. 24—Foolshead as a Policeman.....500
Sept. 24—The Bad Luck of an Old Rake.....500
Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank 1000
Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank.....1000
Oct. 1—Foolshead Has Been Presented with a Football 431
Oct. 8—Foolshead, Fisherman 500
Oct. 8—Mrs. Cannon Is Warm.....500
Oct. 15—Paid Boots and Stolen Boots.....
Oct. 15—A Pearl of Boy.....

AMBROSIO.

(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Sept. 7—Fricot Has Lost His Collar Stud (Com)
Sept. 14—The Iron Foundry.....900
Sept. 21—The Last Friend.....500
Sept. 21—Molly at the Regiment—Her Adventures 500
Sept. 28—The Virgin of Babylon 908
Oct. 5—The Pit That Speaks.....500
Oct. 5—Tweedledum's Duel 500
Oct. 12—The Betrothed's Secret (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Tweedledum, or His First Bicycle (Com.) .....

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Sept. 13—A Day of Pleasure (Com.).....
Sept. 17—The Pugilist's Child (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—A Husband's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Sept. 20—Aunt Hannah (Com.).....
Sept. 24—His Lordship (Dr.).....
Sept. 27—The Taming of "Buck" (Com.).....
Sept. 27—O! You Wives (Com.).....
Oct. 1—The Music Teacher (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—War (Dr.) .....
Oct. 4—The Beechwood Ghost (Com.).....
Oct. 8—Within an Inch of His Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—A Man and a Girl (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Simpson's Skate (Com.).....
Oct. 15—A Woman's Wit (Dr.).....
Oct. 18—Sleepy Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 18—The Devil (Com.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 2—A Fresh Start (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 13—Tangled Lives (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Not Guilty (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—The Convict .....
Sept. 23—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.)...
Sept. 27—Home-made Mince Pie (Com.).....1000
Sept. 30—Dots and Dashes (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 4—Leon of the Table d'Hote (Com.)...1000
Oct. 7—Avenged (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 11—Pocahontas (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 14—Delightful Dolly 1000

SALES CO.—FILM D'ART.

July 21—Mateo Falcone 694
July 21—Andromache 358
July 28—The Hidden Place.....900
Aug. 4—The Eagle and the Eaglet.....1000
Aug. 11—Charles Le Temeraire.....518
Aug. 18—Carmen 995
Aug. 25—In the Day of the First Christians..1000
Sept. 1—King of One Day 975
Sept. 8—The Minister's Speech.....500
Sept. 8—The Conscience of a Child.....500
Sept. 15—The Temptation of Sam Bottler (Dr.).1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

Aug. 18—Shanghaied .....
Aug. 25—Hazing a New Scholar (Dr.) .....
Sept. 1—Great Marshall Jewel Case (Dr.).....
Sept. 1—That Letter from Teddy.....
Sept. 8—Cowboy's Courtship (Dr.).....
Sept. 8—An Athletic Instructor (Com.).....
Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.)....
Sept. 29—A Schoolmarm's Ride for Life (Dr.)..
Oct. 6—Wild Bill's Defeat (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—The Tale the Camera Told (Com.).....

CHAMPION.

July 13—The Abernathy Kids 1000
July 20—Romance of an Anvil (Dr.) 1000
July 27—Cowboy and the Squaw (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 3—Spitfire (Dr.) 900
Aug. 10—Hermit of the Rockies 900
Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge (Dr.) 900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.) 900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.) .....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.) 900
Sept. 28—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....900
Oct. 5—The Cowboys to the Rescue (Dr.).....900
Oct. 12—How the Tenderfoot Made Good (Dr.).950
Oct. 19—Stolen by Indians (Dr.).....950

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 18—Right to Labor.....998
July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.) .....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless 1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Women of the West (Dr.).....930
Oct. 10—The Monogramed Cigarette (Dr.)....
Oct. 17—The Copper and the Crook (Dr.).....

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.) 450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders 450
Sept. 14—Monkey Shines 500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Sept. 28—Levi the Cop (Com.).....
Sept. 28—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....
Oct. 5—When Cupid Sleeps (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Curing a Grouch (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The S. S. Mauretania (Sc.).....
Oct. 19—The Cat Came Back (Com.).....
Oct. 19—Imperfect Perfectos (Com.).....

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart.....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Bill Mason's Ride (Dr.).....700
Oct. 8—All's Fair in Love and War (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—A Shot in the Night (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Oct. 22—In the Gray of the Dawn (Dr.).....

COLUMBIA.

Oct. 1—Rip Van Winkle (Dr.).....920
Oct. 8—Jealousy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—Tracked Across the Sea (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Breaking Home Ties (Dr.).....

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs
Also seating for Out-of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W.

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office: 150 Fifth Avenue

Boston Office: 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices—Best Work—DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

HALLBERG
THE ECONOMIZER

SAVES two-thirds on electric bill and makes BIG CUT on the first cost of your complete equipment.

I carry stock of all makes M. P. Machines, Opera Chairs and supplies.

Free Catalogue No. W-50

J. H. Hallberg, 36 East 23d St. New York City

UNBREAKABLE SLIDES

Patent applied for

The only manufacturers of non-breakable slides.

WHY: Because we fill all orders promptly. This is no fake ad. We deliver the goods. Try us. Give us your order and see.

Song slides, glass $4.00, unbreakable, $5.00 a set
Announcement slides, glass $30.00 a 100
" " unbreakable 40.00 a 100

All work first-class and work guaranteed.

Send for catalogue of song and announcement slides

THE PARIS SLIDE CO.
932 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.
JOS. C. HUFFMIRE, Eastern Agent
140 ELDERT STREET. BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

For Rent—6 reels films with signs and slides, $12. For Sale—50 reels perfect condition films, $10 to $16.50 per reel. Perfect song slides $1.50 per set. Steel Slide Carriers, can't burn, won't break, 75c. Tickets, 9c. per 1,000.

LIBERTY FILM RENTING CO.,
105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

As the Manager Sees It

This Manager looks prosperous and happy. You will feel the same way when you discard that old juice consuming rheostat and put in a

Fort Wayne Compensarc

It will increase your box office receipts because your patrons will notice at once how much brighter and clearer your pictures are. And what's more, it will

Cut 2-3 from Your Monthly Lighting Bill

That sounds as if we were stretching it, doesn't it? But we are not and just to show you, we will ship you one on 30 days free trial and let you prove it.

If it does not do all we claim for it, ship it back at our expense and it won't cost you one cent.

If this sounds "good" to you, send for our little booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" and find out the particulars.

You are paying the Lighting Company half your profits every day you wait.

Fort Wayne Electric Works
1402 Broadway
Fort Wayne, Indiana

Film Service for All Classes

PRICES TO SUIT ALL

INDIANAPOLIS CALCIUM LIGHT & FILM EXCHANGE
114-116 S. Capitol Ave. Indianapolis, Ind.

Don't Be Intimidated

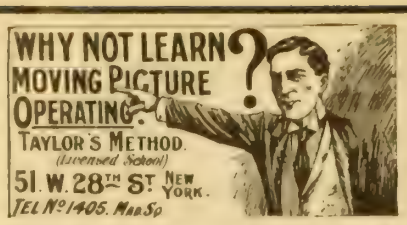
If you are approached by a white-headed kid who peeves about a lawsuit and other slobber, and an imitation American whose long suit is to try to wreck a competitor's machine in order ao sell one he does not understand.

!!! Throw Them Out !!!

They are deceiving you. Both represent houses whose largest stock in trade are bunco schemes and catchpenny methods.

Patronize the House of Merit—the House Whose Word is Worth 100% Net

SWAAB FILM SERVICE CO., Inc.
338 Spruce Street Philadelphia. Penna.



Correspondence Course. Special rates to the trade, send for free illustrated catalogue.

School class meets every morning and afternoon, with F. H. Richardson of Chicago, as chief instructor. Evening classes meet every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We positively guarantee you a $15 position.

We have a Powers' Cameragraph No. 5 in A-1 condition for $85.00 and an Edison Exhibition Model Machine for $60.00

We carry a large line of electrical supplies and furnish everything for the theatre.

F. C. TAYLOR
49 West 28th Street New York City
Phone 1405 Madison Square

Mechanical School For Operators

Conducted by Mr. Al. Kupky at 110 Third Avenue, is open to operators desiring a further knowledge in repairing and setting up all makes of Moving Picture Machines in a machine shop.

Complete Course $10.00

$5.00 STARTS YOU

Call and Investigate

JUSTICE MACHINE WORKS
110 Third Avenue New York City

Lang's Rewinder No. 2
Price, $5.00 Net
Send for latest catalogue
Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

Now She's Anybody's Girlie.
Love Dreams.
O-O-Ohio.
Oh, You Dream.
You Stole My Gal.
I'm Just Pinin' For You.
Beloved.
There's a Girl up in the Moon.
On Mobile Bay
He got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.
What is the World Without You.
On a Sunday Evening in the Summer Time.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Miror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock; Tripods, Tilts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply, special lenses, films and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

William B. Turck

Public Accountant

Monthly Audits Systems Installed
Investigations and Reports

330 EAST 41st ST. NEW YORK

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the
Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St., TOLEDO, O.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS FOR Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest New and Second-hand Films Dealers in the United States, both Independent and Association. New Film, from 4c. per foot up, Second-hand Film, from $5.00 per reel up, Second-hand Power's Machine, like new, $115.00, Song Slides, at $2.00 per set up, ⅝ x 6 Electra Carbons Pink Label $19.00 per 1000. Complete List sent free upon request

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West Broadway and 17th Street New York City

SPECIAL ROLL TICKETS

The Big Ticket. Any Printing Any Colors.

5,000	- - - -	$1.25	20,000	- - - -	$4.60	50,000	- - - -	$7.50
10,000	- - - -	2.50	25,000	- - - -	5.50	100,000	- - - -	10.00

Get the Samples Stock Tickets, 6 Cents

NATIONAL TICKET COMPANY - - - Shamokin, Pa.

Advertising Copy must be in hand not latter than Wednesday of each Week

TEXAS AND LOUISIANA:

WE HAVE SECURED THE EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO EXHIBIT

Cowboy and Indian Frontier Celebration

HELD AT CHEYENNE, WYOMING

in Texas and Louisiana. ¶ Intensely exciting from start to finish, and a sure money maker. Released October 9th. Write for dates at once. See description on page 903, this issue.

TEXAS FILM EXCHANGE, 311 ELM STREET DALLAS, TEXAS

Customer—"Glad to see you, Sol. Come IN and sit DOWN."
Old Sol—"No, thank you, old man. I'm OUT for STANDING orders."
Solax
CUSTOMER
Solax
SAMPLES

Now Open

OUR NEW YORK OFFICE
147-157 Fourth Ave.
(Cor. 14th Street)
German Savings Bank Bldg.
Opposite The Sales Co.

To Accomodate Many of Our Customers, the First

SOLAX

Release

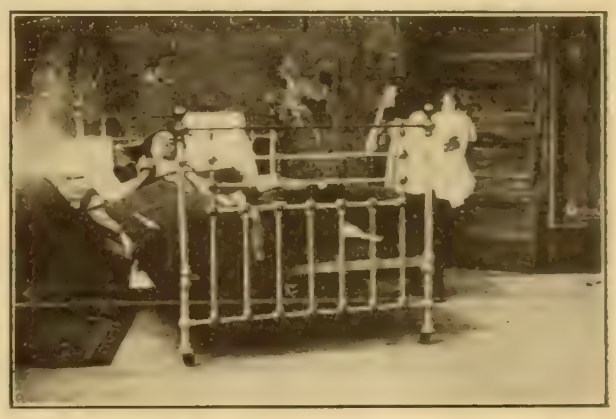
is postponed to

FRIDAY Oct. 21st

SOLAX COMPANY

145 FOURTH AVENUE :: NEW YORK
CORNER 14th STREET

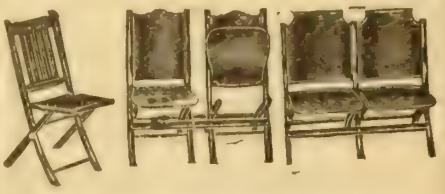
FACTORY AND STUDIO, FLUSHING, L. I.



"A CHILD'S SACRIFICE"—FRIDAY, OCT. 21st

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
THE MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

Old Fort Film Exchange

INDEPENDENT

721½ CLINTON STREET

Phone 2987

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

ADVERTISING : ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES

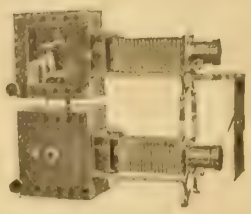
Genre Transparency Company

507 N. Clark Street : : : Chicago



DISSOLVING ERK-O-SCOPE A PERFECT STEREOPTICON

Has been used for five years by the most successful Moving Picture Theatres in the country.

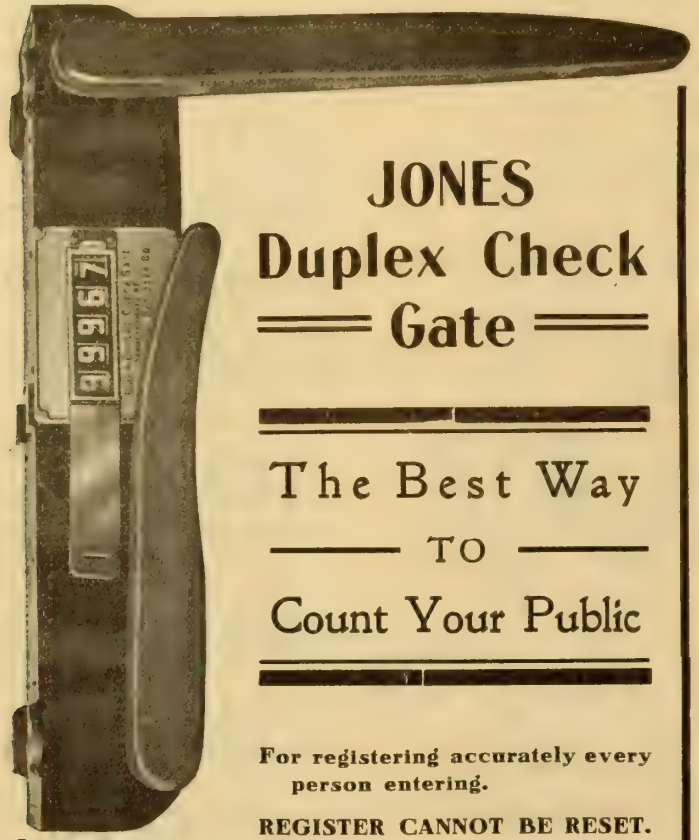
Its special features such as: first quality, well ventilated condenser mountings, high light-tight lamp houses, large doors, new centering device and easy carbon feed, place it beyond competition.

Price Complete with Rheostats, $95.00

We make other Dissolving Lanterns from $50 00 up.

ERKER BROS. OPTICAL COMPANY, 604 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Moving Picture Theatre Supply



JONES
Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way
TO
Count Your Public

For registering accurately every person entering.

REGISTER CANNOT BE RESET.

CAN BE LOCKED INSTANTLY IF REQUIRED.

The forward arm at right angles to case can be removed in a moment by breaking seal, converting, if necessary, an entrance into an exit.

Manufactured by

JONES
Change Register Co.
INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

SONG SLIDE
PRIMER

Oh, see the happy, smiling man;
Who is the happy, smiling man?
The happy smiling man is a wise exhibitor.
Why is he a wise exhibitor?
He is a wise exhibitor because he uses our SONG SLIDE SERVICE

WRITE FOR OUR LATEST PROPOSITION

Chicago Song Slide Exchange
Sixth Floor, Portland Block
107 Dearborn Street Chicago, Ill.

W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Inc.

The oldest and largest Independent Film Exchange in New England

Mr. Exhibitor: When you see your receipts drop, call on us

If you are unable to call, drop us a line and we will convince you that our service is the service you want to increase your business

Don't forget the name and address

W. E. Greene Film Exchange
INCORPORATED

228 Tremont Street Boston, Mass.

IF YOU ARE INTERESTED IN THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS, YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. $2.00.

HAVE WE SOLD YOUR STATE

We have application for rental from exhibitors in unsold territory exceeding $10,000.00 and hundreds of letters from other exhibitors who are anxious to show the pictures on a percentage basis. This assures quick money to the man who buys State rights.

SHOWMEN THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

Write or wire quick the State you want, and if open will quote you price.

An Exclusive Proposition that is Exclusive

Every purchaser of a State right for the Wild West and Far East pictures is required to furnish a surety bond of $1,000.00 to guarantee that the film will be exhibited only in the State purchased. We guarantee you protection.

With the 3,000 feet of film you can show in any theater the complete BUFFALO BILL WILD WEST and PAWNEE BILL FAR EAST exactly as it is exhibited in the open arena. You can give a $1.00 show at a low price of admission.

Elegant seven-color lithograph posters, fine assortment of large size photographs for lobby frames, heralds, cuts, lecture, etc.; in fact, everything to help you get the money.

BILL THE TWO BILLS

Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company care of

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

111 East 14th Street
NEW YORK

EXCHANGES!

Have you tried our process for renewing your old films

IF NOT

Send us a reel and see what we can do

IF

Your second run reel is in good condition it will help rent your new film

Shipments of fifteen reels returned same day received

Old Reliable Film Renovating Co.
22 Randolph St. :: Chicago, Ills.

Write for References from 75 Exchanges

Canadian Exhibitors

Looking for a first-class film service, write the Crystal Palace Film Exchange for particulars. We handle both Licensed and Independent films and can give you a right up-to-date service. We own and operate the most successful Moving Picture Theaters in Canada.

Located at
141 Yonge Street, Toronto
331 St. Lawrence Blvd., Mont.
27 King Street East, Hamilton

Agents for Powers and Edison Machines

Crystal Palace Film Exchange
141 Yonge Street Toronto, Can.
269 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, Can.

Lantern Slide

MATS AND BINDING STRIPS

WE manufacture a full line of these goods. Have you tried our GUMMED PAPER LETTERS for making up slides? If not, do so at once and save time and money.

CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES ON REQUEST

The Tablet & Ticket Co.
Chicago, New York, San Francisco

ROUGH-HOUSE FOR

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, German Savings Bank Bldg., 4th Ave. and 14th St., N. Y.

The "Big Stick" Wins!!!

Be a WINNER by Getting

SILVER PLUME MINE

Released Wednesday, October 12th, 1910

A FULLY ROUNDED AND FASCINATING WESTERN DRAMA IN 970 FEET

MR. EXHIBITOR!

Follow the Crowd!

NESTOR'S MAILING LIST is 7,000 STRONG, Your Name will make it STRONGER. Send it NOW!

MR. EXCHANGEMAN!

Come on!

Join the LIVE ONES on NESTOR'S BUYING LIST. Be ALIVE YOURSELF!

E. C. PORTER, Mgr.
CRESCENT THEATRE, WARREN, OHIO. Writes:-

"Very much interested in your WONDERFUL PICTURES, which are WELL APPRECIATED by HIGHLY SATISFIED audiences. Much SUCCESS and long LIFE to "NESTOR FILMS."

Scene from "SILVER PLUME MINE"

EXHIBITORS!

"Silver Plume Mine"

tells a story as unusual as it is beautiful; it is brimful of GRIPPING HUMAN INTEREST, and you will vote it a REFRESHING NOVELTY.

Consult the synopsis within and ORDER THIS VERY INSTANT! GET IT if you have to wield THE BIG STICK. In giving your patrons this MINE of PLEASURE, you acquire a MINE of SILVER, also NICKELS. Stick "PLUME" in your hat RIGHT NOW!

Sold Through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, 111 East 14th Street, New York

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO	Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
CO-OPERATIVE FILM EXCHANGE	320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
DIXIE FILM CO	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
EMPIRE FILM EXCHANGE	150 E. 14th St., New York City
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE	934 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE	155 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO	723-34 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
SWANSON, WILLIAM H	301 Railroad Bld'g., Denver, Colo.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM & SUPPLY CO	112 N. Market St., Wichita, Kan.

THIS WEEK'S ADDITION:

H. & H. FILM SERVICE, Chicago, Ill.

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

Imps are now multiplying so rapidly that it keeps us humping to fill orders, even in spite of the increased capacity of our wonderful new factory. The "Imp" company will not be one year old until the 25th of this month, yet last week our orders were almost twice as great as we had hoped they would be at the end of our first year. It is the most amazing success in all the history of moving pictures and when you get through analyzing it and looking for reasons, there is but one reason and one answer. It is told in one word:—"Quality." Gentlemen, if you are not getting EVERY IMP RELEASED, you are not getting your money's worth See that you DO get EVERY IMP or else trade with some exchange that will GIVE YOU WHAT YOU ARE PAYING FOR! Now read about our next releases:

"MOTHER AND CHILD"

Released Monday, October 17th. Length about 990 feet. A film you will be intensely proud to show your patrons as a fine example of Independent moving pictures. A great story, a great staging, a great piece of photography and some excellent child acting. Write your exchange every day till you get "Mother and Child."

"THE FUR COAT"

Still another of those delightful Imp comedies. Call the plot foolish, silly or what you will, the fact remains that your patrons will laugh their heads off—and that's what gets you the coin. "The Fur Coat" will be released Thursday, October 20th. It is about 995 feet long. See that you GET IT!

IMP FILMS

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America.
102 West 101st Street, New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.
All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP AMERICA

PICTURE MACHINES EXCHANGED

Exchange your old machine for New and Up-to-Date outfit. We sell all the leading makes. Edison One-Pin, Power's Nos. 5 and 6, Pathe Professional, Edengraph and Motiograph.

STELZER BROTHERS McCook, Nebraska

Moving Picture Machines

Repaired by skilled mechanics at short notice and reasonable prices. Work guaranteed. All kinds of supplies for Moving Picture Machines.

CHAS. E. DRESSLER, 388 2nd Avenue
Near 23rd Street Take Elevator

COWBOY AND INDIAN

Frontier Celebration, Held at Cheyenne, Wyoming

Reviewed and Participated in By COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Exclusive Motion Pictures of the "WEST AS IT WAS"

Said the Wyoming Tribune

"The presentation of the so-called "Cowboy Carnivals" as seen in various travelling exhibitions, put on in stereotyped form by tired performers, gives one but a shallow insight into the excitement that pervades the atmosphere of these wonderful motion pictures, and those judging the "West as it Was" by these poor presentations cannot even imagine the feats of daring and recklessness displayed by these Real Actors in these Realistic Motion Pictures of the Wild and Wooly West."

The Only Western Frontier Films Worth While

Pronounced by everyone seeing them, better than anything the Trust or Independents have ever made.

Genuine--No Show Actors--Realistic

THE FOLLOWING TERRITORY HAS BEEN SOLD:-

Ohio—Michigan—Indiana—New York (except the Greater City)—Texas Pennsylvania—Oklahoma—Oregon—Louisiana—Kansas—Colorado—Washington—Utah—Entire Canada, and Contracts for many other States will be closed this week.

Before the Territory You have Your Eye on is Sold

Wire us for price. Get the best Western Shows ever purchased in Moving Pictures since the Art began.

EXCLUSIVE PROPERTY OF

THE TOURNAMENT FILM COMPANY

TOLEDO, OHIO

EXHIBITORS—Write us for the dates you want and we'll turn them over to the purchasers of our exclusive territory.

DARE-DEVILS

consists of 50 hand colored slides. $75 buys a complete set with the exclusive right to rent and exhibit in your State. Wire, phone or write before the territory you want is sold. THE EARLY BIRD GETS THE WORM.

"For God's Sake Tell Father and Mother I am Alive."

Turned Turtle and Killed Two Spectators and the Car Mechanician.

Dare-Devils in 50 slides, illustrates the thrilling and exciting episodes of the most hazardous sport, auto racing. By co-operating with the various pictorial news agencies of the world, we have been fortunate in securing photographs made at the famous Indianapolis and Atlanta Motor Speedways, Los Angeles Motordrome, Brighton Beach Course, Vanderbilt Course, Daytonia, Florida Beach, Prince Henry Course in Germany, Dieppe Course in France and noted Brooklands Track in England.

Condensed captions of a few of the slides are: The racer turned turtle, killed two spectators and the car mechanician; The dead and dying were lying in an awful heap; They carried the lifeless body of Wm. Borque across the course; Holcomb, the mechanician, never regained consciousness, and died in the hands of the physicians; The car swerved from the course, the driver lost control, and the racer wrapped itself around a bridge post; Following the horrible catastrophe Merz's first words were: "For God's sake tell father and mother I am alive."

Canadian Rights, $150, European Rights, $200

Four Color Slides, 10 Cents Each

SLIDES SENT C.O.D. WITH PRIVLEGE OF EXAMINATION

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO

DARE-DEVIL PICTURE COMPANY

BOONVILLE, INDIANA

The Dead and Wounded

Marked Almost Every Lap of the Noted

Vanderbilt Cup Race

in which the World's most famous shook dice with death and laughed in the face of destruction.

DARE-DEVILS

FIFTY——Hand Colored Slides——FIFTY

SHOWING

Human Life Slaughtered on Speed Lustful Tracks

ONLY EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS WILL BE SOLD

Carried Him Across the Track.

He Was Killed Instantly.

Vol. 7., No. 17. October 22, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

THE ORGAN OF THE PHOTOPLAY AND ALLIED INTERESTS
NEW YORK

Power's Cameragraph No. 6

The Perfect Motion Picture Machine

ASK YOUR FILM EXCHANGE

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" IS COMING!

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man and You'll Get

THE LOVELIEST LOVE STORY EVER PICTURED!

YOUNG LORD STANLEY

Scene from "YOUNG LORD STANLEY" is a nobleman whose innate democracy permits of his doing manual labor when his funds grow low and who, while engaged at his menial labors, falls deeply in love with his employer's daughter, who takes a fancy to him—though he is below her station in life, she thinks. How, when once the tide of fortune runs his way, the young Lord's suit takes an odd turn, and what that turn is, are some of the points the picture explains to perfection.

RELEASED TUESDAY, OCT. 25th

App. Length, 1000 Ft. No. 154. Code word, Stanley

It's Here! It's Here! It's Here!—Released, Friday, October 28th

THE FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN

Scene from "FAIRIES' HALLOWE'EN"

is a wonder-subject that will startle at any time 'o year and which you can use with a lecture 'round about and during Hollowe'en week. If you have'nt a lecturer pass the synopsis to your singer and see if it does'nt enable him to "talk" intelligently on this very entertaining novelty. The film abounds in trick scenes that are highly interesting, and the gyration of the pumpkin-men and the fairies, for instance, are highly amusing. The picture should occupy a high place on your programme.

Released Friday, October 28th

App. Length, 1000 Feet
No. 155
Code Word, Fairy

GET THE THANHOUSER NEWS, THE "EXHIBITORS GUIDE" Sent FREE OF CHARGE to all who can show connection with the Moving Picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR, THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, NEW YORK

Banner for All Releases on Sale by B. B. SIGN CO., Cleveland, O.

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" IS COMING!

WE STAND UNITED

WITH the Sales Company as the market place and the intelligent exhibitors as the buyers the manufacturers must sell their films on their merits. The better the quality the more popular the product. Every exhibitor can choose his own program. Competition promotes prosperity for the sincere producer, and every exhibitor should run his own theatre. You can satisfy the most fastidious audience from our weekly releases.

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company
SOLAX—Solax Company. 1st Release, October 21

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
COLUMBIA—Columbia Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.
RELIANCE—Carlton Laboratories.
1st. Release, October 22.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, September 21st, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.
Great Western Film Co., Kennedy Bldg., Winnipeg, Man.

CALIFORNIA.

California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

COLORADO.

W. H. Swanson Film Exchange, 301 Railroad Bldg., Denver.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Consolidated Film Exchange, Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta.

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 79 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
H. & H. Film Service Co., 98 Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.
Standard Film Exchange, 155 E. Washington St., Chicago.
Chicago Film Exchange, 40 Jackson Blvd., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 400 Sykes St., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1310 Walnut St., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1317 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Co., 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

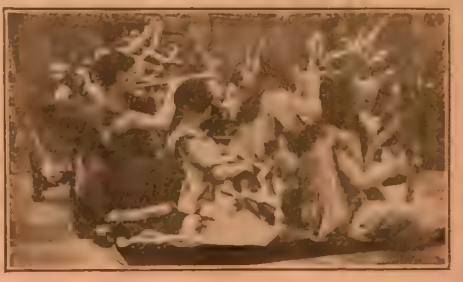
Co-operative Film Exchange, 320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

"Reliance" FILMS



"The Armorer's Daughter"

Released Saturday, October 29th

The most pretentious effort ever attempted in Motion Photography, faithfully depicting the pomp and splendor of Roman feudal times, the magnificence of the palaces, the gorgeousness of costumes and spectacular effects, interwoven into an appropriate, heart-gripping story

PRESENTED BY A COMPANY OF 150 PEOPLE

the principal parts being interpreted by the famous

All-Star "Reliance" Stock Company of Popular American Actors

The exhibition of this subject will mark a revolution in motography, creating amazement in the minds of the theater-going public, who will find that the Carlton Laboratories has attained the pinnacle of success in its endeavors, combining dramatic ability and photographic quality into comprehensive playlets, massively staged at enormous cost. A glance will convince the most casual observer that there are many single scenes whose production has entailed the expenditure of more money than other manufacturers invest in an entire reel.

Maecenas, the son of Tiberius, a Roman lord, is being entertained in a manner typical of the times, surrounded by beautiful women, dancing girls, etc., etc. In an altercation with his companions his sword is broken and is repaired by Vulcan, the armorer. The latter's beautiful daughter, Narania, repulses Maecenas' attentions, which, later, turned into an honorable direction, win her heart, and the two are secretly wed, the union being blessed a year later by the advent of a child. The Eden of the lovers is darkened by the command of Tiberius that his son marry the daughter of a neighboring lord, and Maecenas confesses his marriage to Narania. Persuasion and threats fail to move him from his refusal to renounce his wife. Maecenas is imprisoned and Narania and her child are ordered sold as slaves by the furious Tiberius. Maecenas overcomes his guard, and disguising himself as a peasant, makes his way to the slave market, offers himself for sale, and is purchased by the Barbarians who have bought Narania, and the two, with their baby, are driven under the lash of the whip to foreign lands.

The scenes of royal revelry, the slave mart with the dealers of the world bidding for the victims, the palace of Tiberius, etc., etc., are overwhelming in their spectacular and dramatic perfection.

Marion Leonard as Narania; Arthur Johnson as Vulcan; Henry Walthall as Maecenas; James Kirkwood as Tiberius, and Charles Smalley as the Barbarian Chief, will captivate and hold spellbound any audience witnessing this magnificent subject.

BEAUTIFUL TONING EXQUISITE TINTING ARTISTIC STAGING

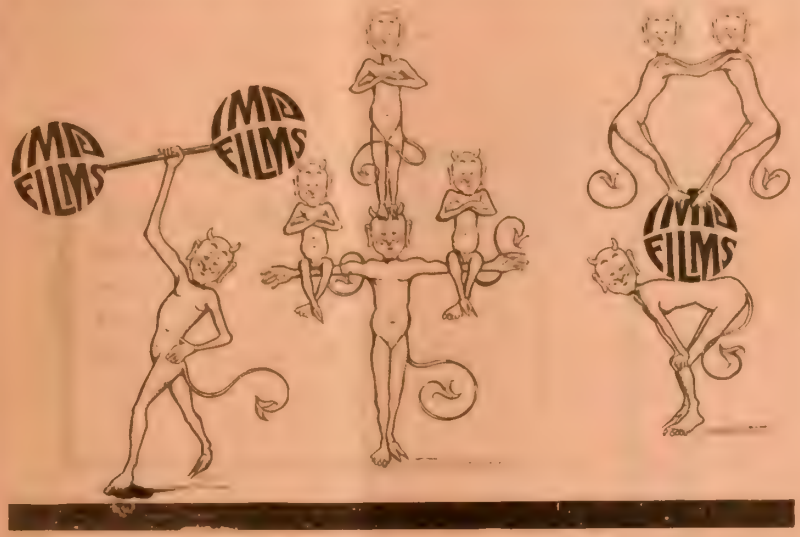
Exhibitors: Demand "Reliance" films of your exchange and insist upon getting them. Feature them with our beautiful lithograph posters, which are furnished free. Don't overlook "In the Gray of the Dawn," Released Saturday, October 22.

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES

1 UNION SQUARE : : : : : : : : NEW YORK CITY

"Imps are ALWAYS the Strongest Attraction!"



Right on the heels of our tremendously successful "Dixie" film and our wonderfully impressive "Garden of Fate" film, we find it a joyful pleasure to announce three more "Imps" on two reels which will make Independent exhibitors feel like jumping to their feet and giving three cheers and a tiger for the busy, enterprising, ambitious "Imp." Whatever you do don't fail to give special heed to our marvelously clear photography nowadays. It's due to the facilities in our new factory. Compare it with ANY OTHER MAKER'S photography and tell us your verdict.

THREE IMPS ON 2 REELS

MONDAY, OCT. 24—"THE COUNT OF MONTEBELLO"—This is a sequel to "Fruit and Flowers" and "The Widow" and will be hailed with keen delight by Imp fans. Keep your eye peeled for the wedding scene in this uproarious comedy (Length, 1,000 feet.)

THURSDAY, OCT. 27—"MENDELSSOHN'S SPRING SONG"—This is nothing less than a marvel. It is one of the most ambitious efforts ever made by a film manufacturer. It shows how Mendelsshon received the inspiration for his famous "Spring Song." Have your pianist play the "Spring Song" throughout the film. Begin asking your exchange for it this very day. (Length, 500 feet.)

THURSDAY, OCT. 27—"THE HOBBLE SKIRT"—If this picture will make you laugh your very back teeth loose, Mr. Exhibitor, what will it do to your patrons who are even better laughters than you are. For the love of fun and profits, get this hobble skirt thing if you have to scrap for it. (Length, 500 feet.)

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP FOR AMERICA

Independent Moving Pictures Company of America
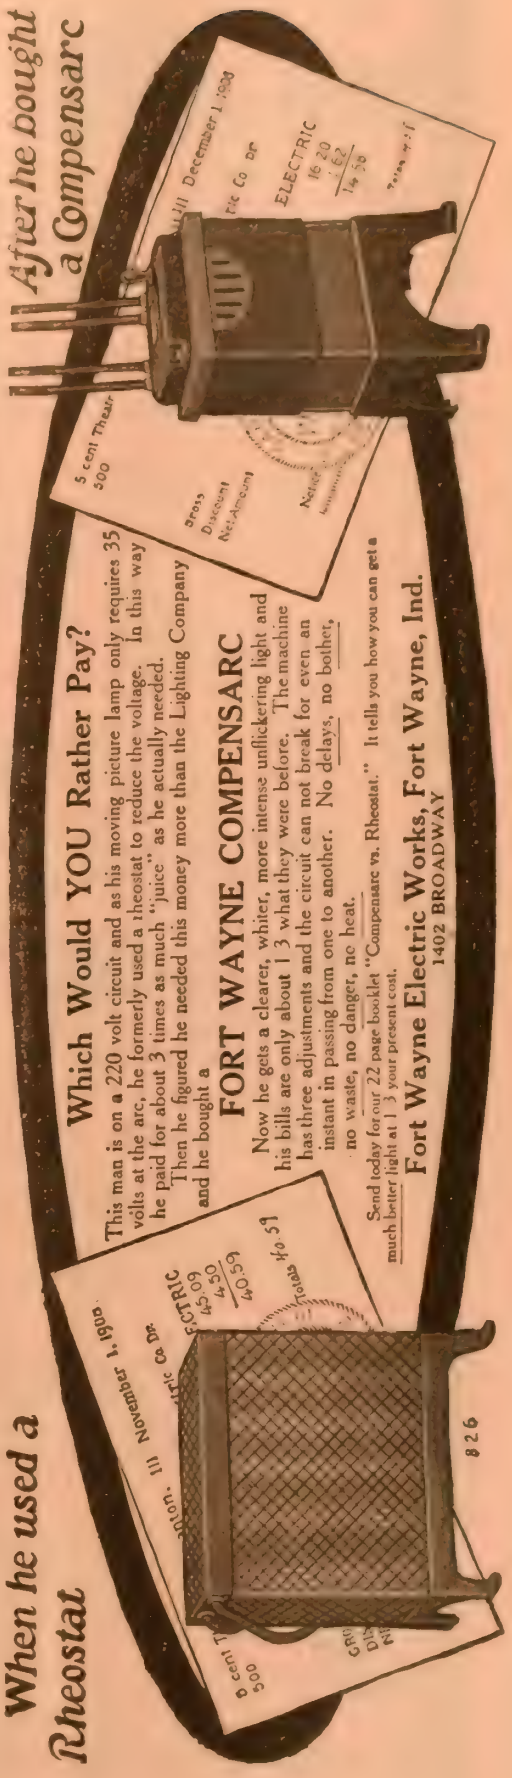
102 W. 101st Street, New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.
All "Imp" Films sold through the Sales Co.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP FOR AMERICA

After he bought a Compensarc



Which Would YOU Rather Pay?
This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.
Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a
FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC
Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1/3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.
Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1/3 your present cost.
Fort Wayne Electric Works, Fort Wayne, Ind.
1402 BROADWAY
ELECTRIC
5 cent Theatre
500
Gross
Discount
Net Amount
November 1, 1909
Total $0.59
826

When he used a Rheostat

FIVE REELS A WEEK

Bison  Films

Tuesday; A "Bison" Wednesday, "Ambrosio"
Thursday; "Itala" Friday; A "Bison"
Saturday; "Itala"

2 WESTERN REELS 2

DEMAND THEM!

The Lure of Gold

A romance with its climax in the desert, showing the terrible privations endured by seekers of fortune in the far west. A western picture staged on real western soil.

Released Tuesday, Oct. 18

The Wrong Trail

Lured into the jaws of death by a misleading sign-board placed on the road by his designing niece and heir, the wealthy Easterner is saved by the cowboys who are sent on his trail by the sister of the designing girl. A strong Western drama.

Released Friday, Oct. 21

2 WESTERN REELS 2

FEATURE THEM!

"AMBROSIO" RELEASE—WEDNESDAY, OCT. 12th
"TWEEDLEDUM'S SLEEPING SICKNESS"
"EXCURSION ON THE CHAIN OF MONT BLANC"

"ITALA" RELEASES
THURSDAY, OCT. 20th
"THE CALUMNY"
SATURDAY, OCT. 22d
"FOOLSHEAD BETWEEN TWO FIRES"
"THE FALSE COIN"

EXHIBITORS: Send your name and address for our mailing list and we will send you weekly a sixteen page book entitled "Film Fancies" giving full synopsis of our films and other interesting matter. Profusely illustrated.

Our pictures are distributed exclusively by
The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

New York Motion Picture Co.

1 Union Square New York City

Wednesday of this week we celebrated

A Legal Holiday

We commemorated the discovery of great wondrous America by daring Christopher Columbus.

Every Day We Are Making Discoveries

EVERY day more exhibitors are discovering that Defender Films are blazing the trail for crowded houses and healthy pocket-books.

OUR NEXT RELEASE

The Heart of a Cowboy

Released Thursday, October 20 will relate pictorially how a

BUCKING BETTING BRONCO-USTER

has his heart lassoed by a sweet little novice at the game of love.

Don't lose any sleep over it, but if you are wide-awake, get it!

DEFENDER FILL-EMS

WM. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 East 14th St., New York

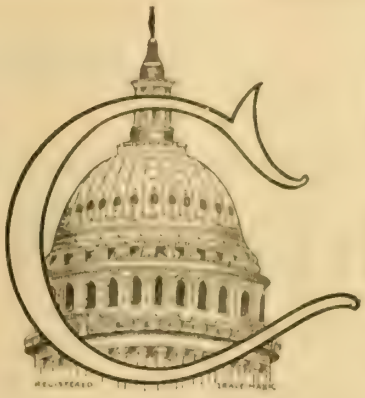
Sold (out weekly) by the Sales Company.

CAPITOL FILMS

October 15, 1910

A Shot in the Night

A reel that is bound to please. As good as the best. better than the rest.



October 22, 1910

Why They Signed the Pledge

A mirth provoking comedy picturing the difficulties encountered by two bibulous business men.

When you buy Capitol Films, you are just putting the finishing touch to your programe. Do it NOW.

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D. C.

SIG G. BERNSTEIN, Gen. Mgr.

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

Released, Saturday, Oct. 22d

HEARTS OF GOLD

A great human interest drama, the scenes of which are laid on the most picturesque farm in this part of the country. In this story pathos and true comedy alternate in holding the interest.

The Plot That Failed

Western Drama

A jealous woman devises an ingenious scheme to win the man she loves from a rival. The lover after a most thrilling ride comes just in time to defeat the plot.

The Lord and the Lady

A Comedy

A crook gets hold of a letter introducing Lord Castlewood to Mrs. De Smythe, and be poses as the Lord. The maid of Mrs. De Smythe poses as a lady. Most amusing complications follow.

Released, Saturday, Oct. 25th

We are receiving hundreds of letters from exhibitors praising the high quality of the stories, acting and photography of our pictures, and assuring us that their patrons are demanding POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

A NOVELTY IN PICTURES

Film makers sometimes enthuse over an idea and spend a lot of time and money to transfer it to a film. We've done that very thing and are pleased to offer the Independent exhibitor the first production of its kind ever attempted by an Independent-American Manufacturer.

ISSUED WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26th

"A Touching Mystery"

(FULL REEL SUBJECT)

An East Indian Yogi, his magic charm, the vanity of woman and her terrible punishment; the awful destruction which followed in the wake of her mad flight through New York's busy thoroughfares, all go to make up one of the strangest, most perplexing yet humorous subjects the world of motion pictures has ever seen.

A TRIUMPH IN PHOTOGRAPHY—DON'T MISS IT

IMPORTANT—In the near future, ATLAS FILMS will comprise High-Class, Sensational Dramatic subjects, interpreted by a specially selected acting company under personal directions of a noted producer.

ATLAS FILM COMPANY

10 East 15th Street : : : : : : : New York City

GREAT NORTHERN

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Stands for Quality!

Release for Saturday, October 15th
(2 ON 1)

SAVED BY BOSCO

A thrilling story in which an intelligent dog plays an interesting and important part.

—— AND ——

WILLIE VISITS A MOVING PICTURE SHOW

A bully comedy all about Willie, a hen-pecked husband—nuf sed.

Release for Saturday, October 22nd

THE ARTIST'S LUCK

A pictorial production of absorbing interest that will appeal to everybody.

EXHIBITORS: Our new "Time Table" (trade bulletin) is just off the press. Send in your name and address at once and receive a copy before the supply is exhausted

Many Big Headliners Coming! Watch for Them!

Help insure your business by having Great Northern films on your programme.
No programme is complete without one.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCTIONS

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

Eclair Films

THE FILMS THE EXHIBITOR DEMANDS

For October 24th

A TWO SUBJECT REEL

Saved by Her Dog

Length, 485 Feet

One of the Most Beautiful Dog Stories ever produced. It is pathetically touching in every phase, and cannot but make its appeal to all classes, and especially to all lovers of animals.

THE

Absent Minded Doctor

Length, 515 Feet

A veritable WHIRLWIND of Excitement—The FUNNIEST Film of the Season.

Cines Films

For October 21st

The Last of the Savelli

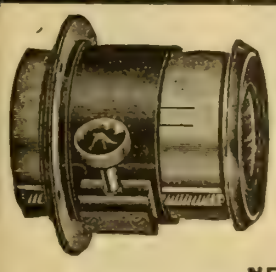
Length, 890 Feet

A Powerful Production, wonderfully acted. The usual CINES quality of scenery, etc.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.
CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

CUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

A Champion

:: ALWAYS DRAWS A CROWD ::

WHY NOT

Make your theatre a headquarters for the exhibition of

OUR CHAMPION?

We can let you have a new one every Wednesday

OUR NEXT CHAMPION

Released Wednesday, October 26

Will be greeted with a laugh from beginning to end, for it contains 950 feet of the CLEVEREST comedy ever exhibited, and is guaranteed a sure cure for a grouch.

Every mail contains letters complimenting Champ production. We would like to have your criticism.

SEE "PAST PERFORMANCES" FOR CHAMP FEATURES

CHAMP

CHAMPION FILM CO.

Mark M. Dintenfess
General Manager

12 East 15th Street
NEW YORK, U. S. A.

Laboratories at Coytesville on the Hudson

THE CHAMP STAMP

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company
111 East 14th Street, New York City

Live Men Are On Our Mailing List—Are You

The Urban-Smith Process of Motion Pictures

In Natural Colors

as described by Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S., in the reading columns of the Moving Picture World, of which he is one of the editors, and begins in the October 8th number.

THAT'S KINEMACOLOR

WHICH WE ARE MAKING COMMERCIALLY PRACTICAL

EXCLUSIVE STATE RIGHTS FOR SALE

The Kinemacolor Company of America

EXECUTIVE OFFICES AND FACTORY:

ALLENTOWN, PA.

Upon appointment, we make private demonstrations at Allentown, Pa., or at our New York City Office, 516 5th Ave., corner 43d St.

INDEPENDENT, COMPETITIVE, PROGRESSIVE

UTAH'S ONE BEST BET

Revier Motion Picture Company

TRADE

MARK

WITH THE LARGEST PLANT IN THE WEST

OUR MOTTO

"See Trust Films if You Must, but Try Our Releases First."

The natural scenery of the Mormon State is the equal of any the world over for the production of motion pictures.

Ample capital is available and people of long experience have charge of our production.

We Are Ready---Our Aim The Best

WATCH FOR OUR FIRST RELEASES

Offices:
Majestic Theatre Building
H. REVIER, President

Salt Lake City, Utah

FACTORY:
Sugar House Station

Fairness to All, Privileges to None, Correspondence Solicited

THE OPERATOR'S FRIEND

Is Found in the New 1910 Model MOTIOGRAPH LAMP HOUSE and ARC LAMP

1.—ABOUT TWICE AS LARGE AS OTHERS.
2.—Whole Side of Lamp House Opens.
3.—Big Heavy Lamp has all Screw Adjustments.
4.—CAN'T STICK OR BIND.
5. It cannot drop down.
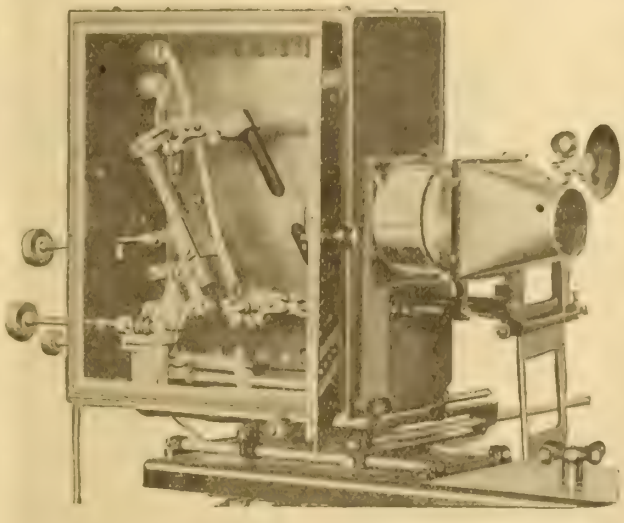
6.—Has Extra Heavy Interchangeable Carbon Clamps. No More Breakage.
7. Has Milled Carbon Seat which doesn't break the carbons.
8.—Has Wire Binding Posts way back from arc, and on side of lamp next to operator.
9. Has Auxiliary Wire Clamps. Prevents broken and burned off wires.
10.—ADJUSTABLE TO VERTICAL OR ANGULAR POSITION WHILE ARC remains central with lenses. No other lamp does this.



11. Can furnish Top Carbon Adjustment Fixture.
12. Can furnish Universal Carbon Clamps to set Carbons at any angle.

No Other Lamp Approaches It. Patent applied for.

REMEMBER the Motiograph Mechanism, Lamp House and Arc Lamp, every part and the whole are

The Operator's Delight.

And it's the only machine that has the wonderful Double Cone Shutter that makes such brilliant pictures and the only reliable Automatic Fire Proof Shutter.

Our 1910 Catalog will tell you about it and the Testimonials from enthusiastic users will convince you that you should use no other. Write for them.

MANUFACTURED AND JOBBED BY

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

J. H. HALLBERG, Agt.
New York City

564-572 W. Randolph St.,
CHICAGO, U.S.A.

J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt.
London, Paris, Berlin

AGAIN TRIUMPHANT!

Every YANKEE RELEASE touches some responsive chord. Exhibitors are writing us the kind of stuff we're working like Trojans to merit. Letters come in daily which prove we're MAKING FILM THAT TELLS."

Here's an example from an "old timer."

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 5th.

YANKEE FILM CO., New York.

GENTLEMEN: The Ind. Western Film Exchange of Portland sent me your "WOMEN OF THE WEST" as a trial shipment. I put out the poster and the people began to gather around waiting for me to open up. Before I had finished my first reel the house was filled, every seat being occupied and over fifty people waiting outside. This is the first time this ever occurred and believe me I got busy with the wire to Portland and told them to add YANKS to my first run.

There surely is some class to that picture and business has increased wonderfully over last week. I am sure it is due to the film. Keep the good work up and be sure to continue your fine toning and tinting. Every time it went through the machine the audience applauded vigorously. Mail me the posters direct so I am sure to get them. I hope this is not asking too much. Wishing you all kinds of success, I am,

Yours sincerely, W. G. SPURRIER, Prop., Savoy Theatre

NEXT BIG ISSUE—AN EXCITING DETECTIVE FILM-PLAY

"SOLVING THE BOND THEFT"

With Nell Pierce, the "Yankee Girl Detective," as Thief Catcher-Extraordinary and her thrilling experiences with Jimmie Ventine, the Vault Wrecker.

Length about 990 Ft. Magnificent Posters Free. Bulletins Now Ready. Send Us Your Address.

YANKEE FILM CO.,

334 E. 32d St., NEW YORK

WRITE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO.

Telephone 6170 Madison Square

To Motion Picture Film Manufacturers

Mme. Pilar-Morin

The World's Foremost Moving Picture Artiste

having concluded her engagement with the Edison Company, is at liberty to accept offers for producing and appearing in

Refined, Artistic, Well Acted

Motion Picture Films

Mme. Pilar-Morin, besides appearing herself in the picture plays, is in a position to furnish original scenarios; well trained moving picture actors and actresses; and to undertake the entire artistic supervision of the productions.

Address for Terms and Interview

MME. PILAR-MORIN

Care P. O. Box 226

MADISON SQUARE STATION, NEW YORK CITY

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3⅛ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building, Chicago). Telephone Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 OCTOBER 22, 1910 No. 17

Summary of the Week.

The End of the Anti-Immoral M. P. Society..... 918
Naming the House..... 918
The Cinematograph in Official Places..... 919
Theodore Roosevelt: The Picture Man..... 920
Motion Picture Economics. By Chicot..... 921
The "Change Daily" Abuse. By C. W. Lawford..... 922
What the Nickel Theater Does..... 925
"Lux Graphicus" wants more sport pictures..... 926
New England Notes..... 927
Notes from San Francisco..... 927
Operators' Column—Questions and Answers. By F. H. Richardson..... 929
Effective Method of Advertising the Theater..... 932
Patents..... 932
Correspondence: Micro-Cinematogarphy—The New Name, "Photoplay"..... 933
Comments on the Films..... 934
Improvements in Projecting Machines—The Motiograph 940

NOTICE.

The new Western offices of the Moving Picture World, Rooms 307-309, Post building, 160 Washington street, Chicago, are now ready to receive World readers visiting Chicago. Mr. John M. Bradlet, Western representative of the World, will extend to every one a cordial welcome. They will find a complete file of manufacturers' catalogues and a bureau of information on films, theater construction, materials and supplies. They will also find desks and stationery for their correspondence, the services of a lady stenographer and a polite messenger boy to act as their guide or go their errands. We invite every exhibitor or person interested in motion pictures to make our Western office their headquarters when visiting Chicago.

Exploration and the Picture.

The other evening we had the pleasure of being present at a meeting of the Explorers' Club in New York City. The Explorers' Club is composed of men who make exploration either the business or the hobby of their lives. The members are travelers, who visit the unfrequented parts of the world, collect data and useful information regarding them, and then recount the story of their explorations before their fellow members, and through them make the information public to the world at large. On the occasion of our visit, Mr. Chapman, of the American Museum of Natural History, gave the members an account of a journey to less frequented parts of Mexico, illustrated by many excellent lantern slides, showing the flora, the fauna, the manners and customs of the country; especially in mountainous regions. We understand that the work was undertaken at the instigation of the American Natural History Museum.

After the lecture was concluded, Mr. Chapman had projected on the screen a series of moving pictures of rare birds, taken in their natural haunts. It was most instructive to see how cleverly the moving picture photographer had succeeded in not alarming the birds, and in showing the habits and manners of these beautiful creatures. Mothers feeding their young, and many other incidents, including flights, and all the aerial gymnastics which a bird is capable of, were shown on the screen. We have never seen such an interesting collection of bird life in motion and we hope Mr. Chapman, who is an enthusiastic naturalist and photographer, will continue his work in this direction. We understand that he is greatly interested in the moving picture for recording the life of the natural history kingdom. On the same evening we saw a fine picture of Mt. McKinley obtained on a recent expedition.

The moving picture camera in the hands of an explorer or a naturalist, is a valuable ally in his work. No exploring party to-day is complete without a moving picture outfit. There is an enormous amount of work done in this way, which never comes before the general public, and certainly does not find its way into a moving picture theater. Arctic expeditions, African hunting, private exploring parties in the old world and the new, are always equipped with moving picture cameras. Now it is a Shackelton who brings home moving pictures of the Antarctic; now it is a Wellman who, crossing the Atlantic in his airship, provides himself with a moving picture camera for making observational photographs en route. We are not quite sure that Mr. Wellman really has equipped himself with a moving picture camera, but if he has not, he should have done so.

In conversation with Mr. Chapman, he deplored the fact that the picture camera is not used as much for scientific purposes as should be the case. Still for all that motion photographs figure largely in the hands of scientific workers. As we have pointed out many times in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and as we have always insisted, the scientific moving picture seldom falls below the drama, comedy or humorous picture in public interest and appreciation. Take, for example, these bird pictures: they were so good, so human, so realistic, that they would have driven any audience in this country into raptures of delight. Yet, oddly enough, by force of circumstances, the general public do not see these beautiful pictures.

The End of the Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association.

The Presbyterian Ministerial Association at its weekly meeting last Monday morning refused to endorse the application of the above-named association in its desire for a special State-wide censorship. The merits or demerits of moving picture work were not considered, but the fact that the representative of the Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association had no credentials, neither could he mention the name of any responsible or representative person as being associated with the movement, seemed to suggest the work of an agitator.

There is, however, the bare possibility that a secret and underhand backing of yellow journalism may be responsible for the movement now unmasked. It is a pity that true reform work should suffer by such deceit and hypocrisy as that shown in this recent attempt to work up a spurious sympathy of the churches. Other ministerial associations which were led to endorse this work have now been enlightened, and the fact that by false pretenses they were misled will make them more careful in future. We are glad to have been the means of exposing this flank move on the part of a dishonest foe and express the desire to co-operate with all honest endeavors to raise and purify the standard of moving picture work.

Censorship.

Perfect or satisfactory censorship is impossible! By this I affirm that any censorship which is intended to be perfect or satisfactory is absolutely impossible in that it is a desire to control the human mind and ideals. In public censorship three parties have to be taken into consideration: the censor, the censored and the public; it is common knowledge that in matters relating to the public the people themselves claim to be the "court of last resort," and will never surrender their "sovereign rights" to any other than a delegated body. As between the censor and the censored there is sure to be a clash of ideals and opinions, so that ere long a board of arbitration would be necessary to decide their differences, which board in public affairs would be the public itself, so that a return to the people would become necessary. Thus far we have referred only to the broad principles of censorship. Applied censorship now comes under our consideration, as, for instance, the censorship of moving pictures. If moving pictures, why not theaters, especially the vaudeville, the very questionable vaudeville? Or the newspapers, or such of them which have proved recreant to and unworthy of the trust imposed upon them by the "freedom of the press," having by word and picture degenerated into a vileness degraded and degrading?

There are many other opportunities for censorship, but "class legislation" is unknown to free American institutions, so that any discrimination even against the moving pictures would be met, we believe, with a popular protest. Differences of opinion not only will always exist, but are really necessary, as proven in the commercial, political and religious world, and the endeavor to force the ideas or opinions of one upon the other has resulted in more trouble than any other common cause.

The regular laws of the land, together with enlightenment, education and culture, are in themselves sufficient censors for all right-thinking and right-acting people, and in public as well as in private, transgressors of those laws know to their sorrow that they cannot err with impunity. The unmoral, the immoral or the criminal find themselves hedged about by the protection society demands. Added to this protection there is the strong, high-minded sentiment in every community which is sufficient a guarantee of proper discrimination in all public expressions or exhibitions. It is an evidence of weakness and a pitiable confession of degeneracy for any party or community to be constantly seeking new laws to control them, reducing the intelligent human family to animals which must constantly be fenced in lest they wander away.

We have too much faith in the high standing of moving picture people and in the public than to admit for one moment that they in any sense need the officiousness of a censor. Rather, it would seem, is the curb more necessary upon those who seek to forge into links of law all the vagaries of their narrow, impractical, distrustful minds. W. H. J.

The Name of the House.

The recent decision in the Essanay name contest has brought the word "Photoplay" into prominence as a suggested descriptive name for the moving picture theater. Elsewhere in this week's WORLD there is also printed a letter from the Rev. W. H. Jackson, criticising the selection of the name. When the Essanay Company announced their contest, we thought that a short article devoted to the subject would be welcome to our readers, but we deferred writing it until after the decision had been arrived at, as we did not wish to present even the appearance of desiring to influence or prejudice the judges in their decision.

It is an old saying that you can lead a horse to the water, but you cannot make him drink. Probably the simile will apply in this case. The selection of the word "Photoplay" in a contest by no means assures its general acceptation in the moving picture field as a descriptive name for a theater. We write "general" advisedly. We have not the smallest doubt that many picture theater owners will adopt the name, which we concede is ingenious, and applicable enough, so far as it goes. But does it go far enough? That is the question.

Any number of names are available to describe the moving picture theater—names built upon a root idea. Take the case of the moving picture machine. On page 187 of Hopwood's "Living Pictures," there is given a list of names applicable to the machine. This takes up sixteen lines of print. All are applicable, but none has been generally adopted. It is probable that the parallel applies to the nomenclature of the moving picture theater.

We have Nickelodeon, Nickelette, Moving Picture Theater, Motion Picture Theater, Vaudette, Lyceum, Orpheum, Palace, Coliseum, Theatrograph, Cineograph, etc., down a tolerably long list, excluding words built upon a root principle, such as Diorama, Motordome, Aerodome, and the like. Not one of these can be considered generally applicable or satisfactory inasmuch as it never has been generally adopted.

We would like to ask whether a distinctive name is necessary. We are inclined to think that the more dignied plan to follow is that followed in the case of the ordinary theater. Now, a moving picture house is as much a theater as an ordinary theater. It provides entertainment in the shape of plays, music and the like, and therefore it is entitled to the older appellation of "theater." Why, then, not follow the same rule in naming the moving picture theater, as is done in the case of the ordinary theater? Let us cite a few instances that occur to us, drawn from Broadway and its vicinity. On Fourteenth street we have the Unique, the Dewey, the Bijou Dream, the Fourteenth Street, the Comedy, all distinctive names identifying moving picture houses. On Twenty-third street there is the Bijou Dream, on Broadway there is Gane's Theater, the Circle, the Nemo. And there are many others throughout the city of New York, and other places, bearing their own distinctive names. Hence it will be seen that in the minds of many the idea that we have is felt and put into practice. It comes to this, therefore: that there is no real necessity for a distinctive name applicable to all theaters.

Consider what an enormous fund of names the moving picture theater manager can draw upon. His source of inspiration is just as great as that of an ordinary theater manager. He can use a proper name to distinguish his house, just as Belasco, Wallack, Palmer, Hammerstein and other names have been used. Then there are, of course, special names, such as the Gem, the Alcazar, the Alhambra, the Imperial, the World, the Empire, the Grand, and so on down an almost indefinite list.

With these facts in mind therefore, it seems to us that there is no real necessity for the provision of a special descriptive name for all moving picture theaters. All the same, however, we shall be glad, as we say elsewhere, to have the views of our readers on the subject. We applaud and commend the Essanay efforts and enterprise in this direction. They have stimulated interest in the matter—an interest which we desire to sustain. We conclude by asking our readers to answer this question: "Which is the best way to arrive at the name of a house?"

The Cinematograph in Official Places.

The City of New York is at the present time holding a most unusual exhibition called the "Budget Exhibit." The nature of this new departure is an exhibition of all the city departments, having for its object the attainment of the highest possible results, scientific as well as practical; together with financial economy. It is also intended to give the public a thorough knowledge of, and insight with familiarity of the numerous civic methods of governing so large a city. Daily lectures are given and it is here the moving picture is proving its new found value; life descriptive illustrations of the police, fire, health and other departments, together with such valuable explanations by the Board of Education as can best make the public acquainted with and appreciative of its educational workings. Testimony has been given to the fact that unique and interesting as the "Budget Exhibit" may prove, its chief value lies in the great help in the lectures only made possible by the moving pictures. This is only another of the many and constantly increasing opportunities for proving the valuable nature of such exhibition work. We have no doubt other cities will follow the example of New York, also in educational institutions the reproduction of the civic lectures will be of great value.

THE MOVING PICTURE IN HIGH COMMERCIAL LIFE.

At the annual meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute, which will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria this week, one of the features of the meeting will be a series of moving pictures of the famous Gary steel plant, showing the process of steel manufacture from the crude ore to the finished product. Ex-Judge E. H. Gary will deliver the address which the pictures are to illustrate. This is another advance made in cinematographic work, and, in the hands of the greatest steel plant in the world, means much for the great appreciation which those high places have for the scientific and educational value of the illustrative powers of the moving picture. Truly its power is unlimited.

Manufacturers and department stores are now finding profit in the use of moving picture exhibitions illustrating the manufacture and selling of goods. Great interest is thus manifested, as both makers, buyers and sellers become familiar with each other as well as with methods.

A Prominent Independent Personality.

Two months ago, there or thereabouts, Mark Dintenfass formed one of a little moving picture circle of which the conductors of this paper were segments. Never mind where the circle met, suffice it to say, that it was not far from the center of things: that is, somewhere between Fourteenth street and Twenty-third street. Mark, the head and front of the Champion Film Company, was the recipient of many admonitions on his rashness in working in a torrid August. "Quit releasing," he was told. "I won't," he replied. "I shall go on making." And he went on, the result being that to-day he is making exceedingly good moving pictures in the photographic sense, is selling all he can make, and will sell more. He stuck to his job and, in the words of a mutual friend, "he is game." The MOVING PICTURE WORLD likes game men.

We like Mark. Underneath a somewhat bizarre personality, he conceals a good heart and a delightfully genial disposition. He is an acquisition to the business, for he is a straight man and a gentleman. The first time we met Mark, he talked single tax. He still talks single tax in the intervals of making films. Mark's competitors like him. We were going to say that his enemies like him, too, but then, he has not any enemies, except, perhaps in the impersonal sense, the writer of this little article. For Mark thinks that we always ought to be writing about his pictures. He seems so amazingly indifferent to the fact that there are other pictures on the market besides his. But not all of them are as good as his. This is quite true.

Mark's genesis in the business was not unattended by difficulties and obstacles. He is surmounting them all. To know Mark is to like him. We believe that there are hundreds if not thousands of exhibitors throughout the country who would buy Mark's pictures because they like Mark. But when both picture and producers are good, the combination makes for unmitigated success. We hope the blithesome Mark will be long spared to illumine the moving picture field with his unique and mercurial personality.

TWO OHIO EXCHANGES CONSOLIDATED.

The Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315-317 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and the Buckeye Film and Projecting Company, 300 Arcade building, Dayton, Ohio, have consolidated, for the purpose of getting a more adequate supply of films. The new company is to be called the Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Company, with a capital stock of $100,000.

The demand for films has so increased in the past several months that the firms working separately could not supply adequate service. They have also taken over the French Film Restoring Company, giving the new company exclusive privilege of using their process, which is a great advantage to them. The said Restoring Company can take a film that has been used but a short while, put it through their process and make it look like new. As very often films but a few days old will show scratches, this being eliminated in the future, is a guarantee that their customers will secure a clean, up-to-date service and an unlimited supply of films at their demand.

The new company have placed standing orders with the Sales Company for the following makes of films: Reliance, Imp, Bison, Thanhouser, Powers, Yankee, Nestor, Defender, Eclair, Atlas, Champion, Ambrosio, Lux, Itala, Great Northern, Columbia.

The officers of the new company are as follows: I. W. McMahan, president; Richard D. Hanish, vice-president; Je eoamoMsnr .H shrdcletaoinucfmJk wyp . cm cm cm Jerome M. Jackson, secretary, and Fred C. Amer, treasurer.

Theodore Roosevelt: the Picture Man.

Colonel Roosevelt is the modern Admirable Crichton. He does everything that a man can do, and does it well. Some biographer of the future will have a stiff job—Mr. Roosevelt does so much. The most talked of and written about man in the world, it seems at the first blush as if there could hardly be anything fresh to say or write about him. To use a current locution, he has been everywhere and has done everything—except proclaim himself American Emperor. If he did this it would surprise nobody. He may go one better than Julius Cæsar, and accept an imperial crown on the steps of the Capitol at Washington. Good Republican Americans may scoff at the feasibility of this idea. Yet it is only a few years ago that, in modern republican France, an ambitious French general had the French people at his back and with a little more daring might have had himself proclaimed Emperor and overturned the Third Republic. What is possible in old France is surely possible in modern United States.

But a truce to politics! We want to present Colonel Roosevelt to the readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD as a picture man: that is, one in sympathy with the best aspects of the picture. All the world knows that for many years he has been a mighty hunter. He has been photographed times out of number, both in the stationary camera and in the moving picture camera. He has been well advertised by photography. All the world knows that he is a very ardent naturalist; that he has made a scientific study of the fauna of many countries, besides shooting it down. Then he and his are good photographers. He himself takes photographs. So does his son, Kermit. And, of course, Princess Alice has used the camera.

On his recent African hunting trip, Colonel Roosevelt figured in many a photograph. First of all there were the photographs made by his own entourage headed by his son. Then there were the photographs, stationary and moving, made by press correspondents and others. Amongst the latter was Mr. Kearton, who is a friend of Colonel Roosevelt. The Kearton Brothers are good photographers and also great naturalists. Their work in the photography of rare natural history subjects attracted the attention of the great opponent of nature faking years ago. Richard Kearton has been a guest at the White House. Cherry Kearton during his recent stay in this country also met the Colonel and was a fellow guest with him at the New York Press Club when Mr. Roosevelt took occasion to compliment Mr. Kearton on his very fine moving pictures of lion hunting. Said he: "To have got these pictures with a cinematograph is a thing that has never before begun to be approached. You have witnessed a really phenomenal record of a really phenomenal feat."

It is this endorsement of the value of the moving picture in natural history work that in our minds enrolls Colonel Roosevelt amongst picture men. He is something more than a picture personality: he is A PICTURE MAN. That is to say, he adds the enormous prestige of his public endorsement to the scientific value of moving picture photography in natural history work. It gratifies us greatly to think that Colonel Roosevelt found time, in the midst of his many engagements, to be present at an exhibition of natural history moving pictures. By that act he enrolled himself amongst the friends of the picture.

The picture has not so many friends that it can afford to ignore the extreme value of Mr. Roosevelt's commendation, even though that commendation be devoted to scientific work. When vested interests, when the press, when the pulpit, when the law and learning come out, as they frequently do, to malign and defame the picture, we have the greatest man of his time present at a moving picture exhibition, and saying kind things about the scientific value of kinematography. In drawing particular attention to this circumstance, and in rating Colonel Roosevelt as a picture man, we think that besides doing our duty, we are also doing a service to the business as a whole, which must profit and be stimulated by the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is at least sympathetically disposed towards it.

Colonel Roosevelt has certainly had, and certainly is having, a great and, it must be said, a historic career. He is one of those men of whom, as we have hinted, the future historian must take decided cognizance. His is such an overmastering personality that we go the length of expressing the hope that moving pictures of him may be preserved in safe custody for future reference. What would the public of this country give to-day to see Abraham Lincoln or George Washington in their habits as they lived, in moving picture form? Don't you think they would cheerfully pay the small sum for admission to any theater in which such pictures were shown? Don't you think the student, the historian, the biographer, the patriot would be glad to see moving pictures of these great men? Surely so. It is the same with Mr. Roosevelt. In time to come people will want to see what the Apostle of Strenuousness was like; how he looked; how he comported himself. Of course we hope that Colonel Roosevelt will give the moving picture photographer many more opportunities of making pictures of him. The world without Colonel Roosevelt would, indeed, be a dark and dismal place.

Colonel Roosevelt has shown himself such a firm friend of the plain common people that we are sure he would be interested in knowing that the picture does not reach them unhampered by restrictions such as characterize the sale of oil and other commodities. He would probably be surprised to know that the owner of a moving picture theater in this land of freedom is not free to buy in an open market; is not free to show what pictures he likes; that, in fact, the poor man's theater is not free; that millions and millions of American people find obstacles to their perfect enjoyment of the picture. Probably, in due course, Colonel Roosevelt will become aware of these circumstances, and with characteristic bluntness may denounce and criticise them. There is a woeful ignorance in high quarters as to the position of the picture in the world of entertainment. One day this week we were in conversation with Congressman Young of Washington. The statistics that we gave him with regard to the picture, and its relation to the public, amazed him! So do many other facts with regard to the picture when they are brought to the attention of persons in high places.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

We desire to state that, in conformity with recognized newspaper usages, all copy and cuts for advertisements in the Moving Picture World are received subject to the approval of the publishers, and that they are accepted for insertion absolutely without condition, expressed or implied, as to what appears in the reading portion of the paper.

Motion Picture Economies.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent (Chicot).

It used to be said of Mr. B. F. Keith, when his "million dollar" vaudeville theater in Boston was new and almost a matter of national importance, that he was "a man who would spend twenty-three cents to take in a quarter."

It is improbable that Mr. Keith ever was required to make such an outlay to draw patronage, but it is beyond question that he very largely owes his position in the amusement world to-day to his policy of being willing to pay out money for the little things wherein other managers economize.

That's the point. This is not a story about Mr. Keith and his shows. This is a question as to whether the wrong sort of "economy" pays the motion picture exhibitor, and the answer is "NO" in double capitals before the question is considered.

This, of course, does not mean all motion picture theater proprietors, but there is no amusement enterprise wherein so small a percentage of proprietors are trained showmen. Some of the clever men of to-day are purely the product of the picture house: men who have grown up with the growing business from the days when a vacant store, a few second-hand opera chairs, a picture machine, a screen, and an understanding with some music publisher about a pianist who would play the firm's music and sing the firm's illustrated songs, constituted the sole requirements to the starting of a nickelodeon.

The business long since outgrew its early limitations and to-day the man who makes money with pictures must be willing to spend some. In all lines of business endeavor there are short-sighted individuals who gauge their cleverness by what they save rather than by what they make, and nowhere does the short-sightedness of this policy become more markedly apparent than in the picture business, where it is so easy to save ten dollars and not realize that it means a loss of many times that sum.

More than that, some of these economies reflect upon the entire business and, unfortunately, do not react solely upon the economist who is more of a miser than a showman.

Take, for instance, the matter of house fronts. There are literally hundreds of thousands of people who would be attracted to motion picture exhibitions could they be convinced that beyond the squalid fronts were to be found the domains of a modern fairyland; that they could pass the faded swinging doors and find themselves transported from the tropics to the poles, from the Rockies to the Alps, in the twinkling of an eye. To them the motion picture theater is a "joint," an ephemeral affair with dirty floors, vermin-infested walls and filthy seats occupied by disorderly children indulging in unspeakable practises.

These are the people who nod their heads approvingly when they read the newspaper "crusades" against the pictures and who endorse the strictures upon the stories of crime—real and pictured—that are enacted within the walls of the "nickel theater."

In a sense they are not to blame. They are told that the picture plays abound in murders, robberies and all other crimes of the catalogue and they believe it, for have they not seen these very crimes pictured upon the gaudy second-hand posters that day after day are hung in the lobby, irrespective of what the current bill may be? The title of a really artistic production in which well-known players appear in a play that would not give offense to the sternest moralist, may be appended to a glaring bill in which a very young hero is depicted finishing off his tenth victim with the last bullet in his six-shooter while with his left arm he supports the interesting heroine who looks like the leading woman of an old-fashioned burlesque show.

People are not to be blamed if they not only shun such resorts but approve of campaigns against them when the proprietors of these lesser places seem determined to create the impression that their houses are but one degree higher in the scale than the resorts inelegantly termed "dumps" in the East and "honkatonks" in the West. A little paint, the more industrious application of the broom at more frequent intervals, the use of crisp, especially printed posters displayed in neat frames, and a little attention paid the supervision of employees, would not cost more than five or ten dollars a day and it would bring permanent trade greatly in excess of that sum.

Patent screens cost slightly more than the ordinary drop of canvas or muslin. It is a useless expense—the home-made screen is more economical—and yet the patent screens permit more light in the auditorium (another "expense"!), and had houses been sufficiently lighted in the past two or three years we would not hear the hundredth part of the present clamor against the pictures and the screens would have paid for themselves and their renewal a thousandfold in the adults who do not care for the dimly lighted halls and from children who obey careful mothers and keep away from picture shows on general principles.

As one matron expressed it, she knew that children under age were not admitted to most places, but she had heard so many horrible stories that she was afraid to permit the kiddies to get a taste for the shows, even under her chaperonage

Then, too, the light auditoriums that would have kept down the offenses that undoubtedly are committed in spite of watchful care where care is exercised, would have detracted from the whimpering appeal of the crafty small boy that he learned crime from the pictures. The authentic stories leave judicial officers the more ready to believe any complaint against the pictures, and the small boy has his cry out and goes free while the judge wastes time telling the reporters all over again what dens of vice all picture shows have become and the real showmen suffer with the economist.

But almost as important is the question of the operator. Operators may be had for as little as $12 and $15 a week and that cuts something off the expense bill. It may mean a lot to the man who runs a store show and who finds that his auditorium is seldom full. Ten or fifteen dollars saved on the operator and twenty on the film service may mean the difference between profit and loss when figured out on a piece of paper, but does it?

For the more generous sum a real operator might be procured, a man who would keep his shutter always properly set, who would handle his "juice" so as to get the whitest crater with less current waste than the "ham," and his pictures would be so much better that it would need no tenth-rate vaudeville to meet the competition with the "man down the street." A thirty-dollar man would be a real economy; a service not too old would bring larger audiences, but cheap junk, all aged films projected by an incompetent operator, drives trade from the house, and while the immediate result is a lessened expenditure, the eventual result is a lessened taking. Is that an economy? It would not be so bad were the individual manager the only sufferer, but the whole picture business pays.

The young man of the neighborhood who runs the machine while the regular operator gets his dinner and who renders the service free for the privilege of hanging about the place the rest of the evening, may save the salary of a relief if there is no one about the house who can handle the light, but there may be some stranger in the supper show who could be made a regular patron by a good show and he may stamp indignantly out, assuring himself that the crusaders are right, that pictures do hurt the eyes to an appreciable extent. It's a salary saved but a patron lost. The patrons mean more in the long run.

Then, too, the volunteer usher is a poor economy. He's usually a good-looking young chap, well-known in the neighborhood, and he seems to bring trade, but unless he is watched he is liable to bring the wrong sort of trade, and the unpaid servant is never amenable to discipline. The proprietor winks at the little lapses and never knows how his house is being talked about in the neighborhood until it is too late and either the trade is driven away or there is an open scandal that wipes it out overnight.

The cheap pianist is still another evil against whom too much cannot be said. In one New York house the pianist and drummer who constituted the "orchestra" used to have perfectly lovely times racing with each other to see who could play faster than the other, and if the heroine decided to die about the time the musicians were coming down the home stretch and the drummer was tapping out "Turkey in the Straw" faster than the pianist could finger it, the heroine had to die to what one leader used to call 4:11:44 time. It was fun for the orchestra and it didn't hurt the pictured heroine any, but the audiences did not seem to like it, and finally the manager allowed another $10 on his music and hired a pianist less sporty but with more music in her soul and finger-tips.

It is not contended that the house seating 300 can give as many small services as the house with 1,200 seats and double the admission fee, but the man who pays five cents is entitled to see the best the manager can offer, and if he does not get it he goes where he is assured better treatment. One of the reasons the larger house is gradually supplanting the store show is that it is more apt to be run by a showman who knows when to economize and when not to, and of these the more valuable knowledge is when not to. A $30 operator is cheap, one at $15 is not; special half-sheets at 15 cents are cheaper than stock whole sheets at 6 cents; a $25 pianist may know how to play, the one at $10 is a beginner—and you can't pay too much to your film service man.

And one thing that doesn't cost much is personal attention. Sit in the audience sometimes and find out from the comment around you what is liked and what is not; find out if the springs of the seats are getting broken or if the veneer is cracking until it reminds you of the cellar door of childhood days. Try to make the front of the house look as much like a regular theater as you can and then you won't have to practise economy; you'll be well able to afford reasonable salaries to good people.

The "Change Daily" Abuse.

Its Origin and How It Has Affected, and Will Affect, the Future of Moving Pictures.

By C. W. Lawford.

Did you ever notice this sign adorning the front of an amusement emporium: "Program—The biggest and best show in the city—three reels of the LATEST pictures and an Illustrated Song for 5c.," or this beautiful combination of words: "ENTIRE CHANGE OF PROGRAM DAILY"? Just how many times I have seen these alluring signs it is far beyond my usually good memory to recall, but it has been several, I can assure you.

"Three reels of the latest pictures, changed daily," sounds ordinary and not unusual to the layman or the public, but how does it sound to the exhibitor, the exchange man, and most particularly the manufacturer of to-day, and how will it sound to these same factors, and how will it affect them in days to come? Let us talk it over a little and diagnose this fast spreading epidemic.

First, why is this "Latest pictures, changed daily," policy in evidence, and what started it? Both easy questions and with only one answer: COMPETITION, together with short-sighted business ideas and poor showmanship, coupled with inexperience and ignorance of some exhibitors. Their insane desire to "put the other fellow out of business," instead of forming mutual agreements among themselves, has allowed their brains to run away with their common sense and foresight. I have asked several exhibitors why they run the "very latest" pictures in their small town, and why they "change every day." They answer invariably that they are obliged to do this to keep ahead of the other fellow, and besides they have so many patrons that come, or would come, every night if they saw different pictures. Mr. Manager and Mr. Exhibitor, God gave you a set of brains to think with, to figure with and to plan with, and yet you will persist in being led around by the nose and follow every wind that blows, never stopping to think of the consequences. You will read or hear of some other exhibitor in some other town doing such and such a thing or exercising such and such a policy, and you immediately go and do likewise, never stopping to think that towns differ, theaters differ, audiences differ, and that the situation or conditions in one town might be entirely different in your own and thereby demand a different remedy, and because an exhibitor in a little "tank" town of three thousand or under changes his pictures every day you, Mr. Shortsight, get the idea into your head that your town of ten or twenty thousand is crying for the same thing and that that is all you need to pack your house at every performance and put the rollers under your opposition's feet. But you find that the rollers do not stay under your opposition's feet, for suddenly he becomes as WISE (?) as you are and he changes HIS pictures every day, and on top of this contracts newer pictures than you are running, adds another reel to entice the public and possibly adds another song to his already long program, thus going you a few better and leaving you in the same position you held at the start. Then you sit up nights figuring how to get ahead of him again and—well, what's the use of writing the finish? any fool with half an ounce of brains and reason can see it, and if you cannot see these things, which are as plain as the nose on your face, get out of the game and give those with ability, experience and common sense a change to progress instead of clogging and choking the field like a garden full of weeds.

The more you give the public the more they want, and while I firmly believe in presenting good, clean pictures and well sung melodies, and, if necessary, good, clean vaudeville, there is no more sense in running "first run" pictures outside of the big cities, or changing every day, except in the very small towns, than there is of taking poison because your patrons soon get tired of coming every day. Then again, you give the people the impression that the pictures are slapped together and shoved on the market or they couldn't be produced so fast, and, still further, a GOOD picture, like a good play, will stand more than one day's exhibition and I would suggest that if you feel you must change every day, ease up on the exchange man and the manufacturers, as well as do yourself a little justice, and leave on the good pictures, taking off the poor ones, and do the same with your songs. You do not change your vaudeville every day; why should you change your pictures? If the people will come the second day to see some of the rotten vaudeville acts that are shoved into some picture theaters, they will certainly come again to see a particularly good picture and will even stand for the poorer pictures and await the time for the better ones to go upon the screen. It is not the "same people every night" that supports your theater, not by any means, although they help; it is the quality of your show Monday night that sets your audience talking and induces them to go outside and advertise for your Tuesday night house.

If the popularity of the picture as an entertainment is going to last, the methods have got to be "showmanlike" and the output considerably checked and given more dignity, and in this the exhibitor is the biggest factor.

CENSORSHIP.

Says the Winnipeg "Saturday Post," on a subject of some interest all over the country: "The establishment of a censorship on the moving pictures which are to be offered at the various theaters in Winnipeg dealing in this class of entertainment is not a step which will be regarded with any disfavor by the theaters themselves. These theaters are only too glad to give a clean, respectable show, and they themselves are fairly severe censors of their own moving picture films. Any regulation which will have the effect of strengthening their hands in maintaining the standard of the moving picture shows will be welcomed by the various managements of these popular entertainment houses."

The Moving Picture World believes the above to be the attitude of the moving picture theater managers not only of Winnipeg but of every other city in Canada and in the United States. With very few exceptions these managers are business men, and for them to pursue any other policy, which would result in antagonizing the very public on whom they depend for patronage, only shows the kind of tactics and reasoning adopted by a section of the yellow press in their vicious and malicious attack on this increasingly popular form of public entertainment. The Winnipeg "Saturday Post" is evidently one of the great majority of newspapers having no sympathy with the comparatively few papers of the "yellow type" which have, for some time past, been filling their columns with falsehoods about the moving picture. The Moving Picture World voices the sentiments of all connected with the industry in its contention that the moving picture to-day is by far a cleaner form of entertainment than the modern offerings of the theater and vaudeville stage.

Miss Gladys Hulette, who will be remembered as "Puck," in the Vitagraph rendering of "Midsummer Night's Dream," and who starred with Mme. Pilar-Morin in Edison's "Japanese Peach Boy" and "Little Waif's Christmas" and other notable films, is now a star on the living stage. She is now appearing as "Tyltyl" in "The Blue Bird," which is having a phenomenal run at the New Theater.

MISS ADRIENNE KROELL.

The American Film Company Star.

Miss Adrienne Kroell is the name of the leading lady of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Her physical fitness for the position will be obvious when it is mentioned that in 1907 she won the International beauty contest of the St. Louis Republican. In her theatrical career Miss Kroell acted with Virginia Harned, Amelia Bingham, Henrietta Crossman, Wilton Lackaye, James K. Hackett and other stars. The young lady is said to be a clever and versatile actress. We have every hope and belief that she will carve out fame and distinction for herself on the moving picture stage under the American Company's banner.

I have been roaming about town and find nothing excitable, but much to the unrestable—except something that occurred on Tuesday of the past week. At the eleventh hour we find a moving picture operator figuring in one of the most dare-devil shooting scrapes that ever took place in the city of New York, either before or since its incorporation as the Greater City. It is a case of unequalled circumstance. A man leaves a place to murder. The cowardly victim seizes a twelve-year-old pedestrian and uses him as a safeguard. The shot is fired. The boy is killed and the coward escapes. The man who fires the shot is chased to quarters and finding himself covered, shoots out his own brains. This is the story as given by the newspapers. It is objectionable, possibly, for two reasons: It is not illustrated and the children cannot read.

* * *

The newspapers go into detail in regard to the shooting and take great care to show the best photograph of the unfortunate boy that was killed. It shows great enterprise! It shows great progress! The man intended to be killed escapes, and not a newspaper man can locate him. They locate a photograph of the unfortunate victim—at the home of the lamented parents. The only other two things these enterprising newspaper men locate are that, first, the murderer kills himself, and second, he was the operator of a moving picture machine. Brave, enterprising, evidence-seeking newspaper men.

* * *

The mainspring appears to be to put odium upon the moving picture people. The fact is that the man who shot the boy by mistake was not an operator in a motion picture theater. He was an ex-inmate of the Elmira Reformatory. The man operating the airdome at the corner of 110th street and Park avenue, declares that he worked for him but one week. If the deceased was a regular operator the authorities would have found upon his body a duly authorized licensed card. Did they find it? If they did there would have been no doubt about his identity. If they did not, then he was not an operator of moving pictures and they should not be smirched by any unwarranted statement. The murderer and suicide may have operated a moving picture machine at some time. He may also have operated a wheat threshing machine about the same time. But the sensational fact that at some time he operated a motion picture machine should not be given the prominence that is given to the prejudice of the moving picture business as a whole.

* * *

The bad faith of the daily press in connection with the moving picture business is shown by its failure to take advantage of facts and I will endeavor to show the reporters (if the editors shoulder the blame upon them) where they have been lax in putting the facts before the people: The murderer and suicide, Henry Greenwald, was a man to whom a license as an operator for 1910 should not have been issued. He was an ex-convict. An ex-inmate of the Elmira Reformatory. It is a subject for investigation as to how he secured his license as an operator for 1910. This is a matter for official investigation.

* * *

If I am not mistaken, Greenwald was sent to the Elmira Reformatory for stealing reels of films and other accessories from a certain moving picture place on or near the Bowery. If I am not mistaken four of them were arrested and convicted for this offense. All of them were sent to the reformatory. Why did any of them receive a license? I will admit that to err is human, but since you must prove the place of your birth, you should also be required to prove your foundation for character.

* * *

I cite this case only in view of the current agitation regarding the censorship of films. If such an irresponsible character can secure a license as an operator through municipal control what hope have we for an effective moral censorship control of pictures?

* * *

Rev. Lyman Abbott, Felix Adler, Rev. Charles F. Aked, Rev. S. Parker Cadman, Andrew Carnegie, John Bates Clark, R. Fulton Cutting, Andrew W. Edson, Robert W. de Forest, William M. Ivins, V. Everit Macy, Robert S. McArthur, Rev. R. Heber Newton, Rev. John P. Peters, Jacob H. Schiff, Samuel Schulman, Isaac N. Seligman, Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, Anson Phelps Stokes, Oscar S. Straus, Robert Watchorn, and Stephen S. Wise are mentioned as members of the advisory committee of the National Board of Censorship of motion pictures. We refer to but some of the members. We would ask the stringents to compare the few names with the enrollment of the proposed Board of Censorship. This request is not made with any reflection upon either the integrity or responsibility upon any member of the present Board of Aldermen, or any Board of Aldermen that may succeed it, but is a challenge to the skeptics and agitators. We regret that space will not permit a full publication of the advisory committee, but would suggest that for further information the interested parties communicate with the People's Institute, 318 East Fifteenth street, New York City. The present committee on censoring moving picture films consists of Matthew P. Adams, Henry V. Andrews, John Collier, J. B. Cowen, F. S. Crofts, Mrs. Ruth Dolese, Joseph F. Driscoll, Burt B. Farnsworth, George A. Hall, Otto Kaufmann, Mrs. Augusta Prescott, Mrs. Josephine Redding, Dr. Arthur Shoemaker, Mrs. F. L. Stratton. What three members of the Board of Aldermen could be selected to cope with this committee on the question of propriety or morality? Can any committee of three be found? Is the People's Institute a failure, or is a foundation being laid for graft?

* * *

Owing to the tension which has been created by the daily pounding of the daily press on motion pictures, I feel that I should rest my case with regard to the local situation. But regardless of developments, in the near future I propose to show that the attacks made have not been as much in the interests of morality as they have been to further endtending to soothe disappointed feelings. In other words the battle against the pictures is not made in good faith.

PROGRESSIVE SELLING PLAN.

The American Film Manufacturing Company, the New Independent Film Manufacturers, Very Progressive.

S. S. Hutchinson, the president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and A. M. Kennedy, the general manager, departed from Chicago, Saturday, October 8, with several positive prints of their first production. Your representative was shown the itinerary of the trip contemplated by both of the officials of the American Company and it appears that they unquestionably will realize on their anticipations in connection with visiting each and every Independent film exchange man in the United States, and in sufficient time to allow the Independents to purchase the American film without overloading their stock. In an interview with Mr. Hutchinson he had the following to say relative to their publicity policy:

"Mr. Kennedy and myself have worked out a publicity plan that we consider will create a furore among the exhibitors. I am not in a position, at the present time, to divulge the details of this campaign, but suffice it for me to say that the demand for our films, our first release as well as the subsequent ones, from exhibitors, will be sufficient to assure each and every Independent film renter in the country that the American film they may purchase will not be lying on their shelves on account of lack of demand. I have just had the pleasure of viewing several positive prints, among them our first two releases, and I can consistently say that I was extremely pleased, in fact astounded, at the photographic quality and the good production evidenced in these reels. My experience as an exchange man and covering a period of over five years, I am of the opinion, places me in a position to be able to judge from the exchange man and the exhibitors' viewpoint the worth of a moving picture, and I unhesitatingly assert that the film being manufactured by our company will create an epoch in the progress of the Independent cause."

What the Nickel Theater Does.

Editorial in Kansas City "Star."

How long since you've been to the nickel theater? Have you ever been at all?

Get that good little family of yours together this very evening and go. Never mind which theater you choose, take the one that's nearest to where you live and go out for a pleasant, good natured, instructive evening—for five cents apiece. Put on little sister's new Fall hat. Help mother button little brother into his brand new Fall suit, tell grandpa to get out his best glasses and go—all of you, from the baby up.

O, yes, they allow babies in the nickel theater. You'll even see a good old family dog or so lying down under the seats waiting for his folks—that's the beauty of the nickel theater,—it's meant for the people, just the plain every day people like you and me and the rest of us. You don't have to spend an hour dressing when you want to go there and nobody is going to turn an opera glass on you and wonder where on earth you got that hat and what you've done with your diamonds. You'll not only have a good time at the nickel theater, but you're apt to learn something, too.

Ten to one those moving pictures will take you down to Panama to let you see them building the big canal, or over to Africa to hunt lions, or down South to watch them picking cotton, or up to Alaska to slip up along a great seal beach and look at the old leader seal marshaling his flopping flock up to the rocks. Maybe they'll take you out into the scented orchard to watch the farmer making cider and perhaps you and grandpa and little brother won't have a good time, talking over the maneuvers after you've seen the pictures of life in the American army in the Philippines.

Don't stay at home and think over what a mean partner you've got or how unreasonable your customers are. Don't lean over the fence and talk about the neighbors; get out—get out of the narrow rut—out of the stifling slavery of fixed ideas—and take your family with you. If there's anything in the show you don't like, drop the manager a post card and tell him about it; he's anxious to please you and the rest of the neighbors.

Don't let him show your boys murder pictures and slum pictures. Don't let your little growing girl sit and watch pictures of things that she only half understands and goes home and wonders about. Keep the nickel show in your own neighborhood clean—keep it honest—keep it wholesome. It's part of your children's schooling, remember, and part of your own, too.

Encourage the manager to have a little good music along with the pictures, lively tunes, rag-time and some of the old songs once in a while, too. Nobody's a bit worse for humming the refrain of "My Old Kentucky Home" under his breath once in a while, and if there's anything that'll make you think of the days when you believed in people and thought the world was just a great big play-ground, it's to sit and shut your eyes and join in the chorus of "My Poor Nellie Gray"—even if you don't dare sing above a whisper. The nickel show is as much a part of our lives as the gas range and the street car. Let's keep it clean and wholesome and honest and decent and let's help to make it prosperous—you and I and the rest of the neighbors.

Come along, let's all go to the nickel show—and learn something.

THE 1910 ELECTRICAL SHOW.

Exhibitors and operators are manifesting a great interest in the New York Electrical Show, now going on at Madison Square Garden, in New York.

The management of the show are running a continuous moving picture performance in the concert hall, and the Brooklyn Edison Company is operating four machines in their exhibit in the gallery.

The Edison Manufacturing Company, of Orange, N. J., occupy booth 40, where they are demonstrating their new improved Model "B" machine with outside shutter. This exhibit is under the personal supervision of John Pelzer, manager of sales for the Edison Manufacturing Company, and he has taken especial pains to show an exhibit representative of the high perfection now attainable in motion picture production. The successful manner in which the outside revolving shutter eliminates flicker, and enhances the attractiveness and vividness of the picture, is attracting much favorable comment from the visitors to this booth, which is constantly surrounded by interested operators and exhibitors. All of the six machines in operation at the Garden are of the Edison Improved Type "B" Underwriters' Model, and the well known Edison Carbon is being used exclusively in these exhibits, on account of the extremely steady light produced, and the exceptional whiteness of its color.

Both the Edison Manufacturing Company and the management of the show have spared no pains to make the motion picture productions representative of the highest development in the art, and this is appreciated by the general public, many of whom have commented upon the fact that pictures were produced with a perfection that they had scarcely believed possible.

The show will undoubtedly give the moving picture theater a prestige among the best class of people, that it has heretofore not enjoyed in the fullest degree, and the entire moving picture trade will undoubtedly receive a great impetus from the results of the electrical show. Operators and exhibitors, who are patronizing the show in constantly increasing numbers, find it an excellent means of keeping in touch with modern developments of their business. No one interested in moving picture production can afford to miss the opportunity afforded by the Electrical Show, and time spent in the inspection of the exhibits to be found there will certainly be well spent.

ESSANAY TO FILM THE PHILADELPHIA-CHICAGO BASEBALL GAMES.

"Who will win the pennant?" is the universal question this week. The Essanay Company are also pennant winners and for the third consecutive time will film the world's championship baseball series. This was announced last week by the National Baseball Commission.

The 1910 series pictures, if the elaborate arrangements and plans of the Essanay Company are successful, will prove of even more interest than the two great films released by this firm in 1908 and 1909. Several photographers of the Essanay staff left for Philadelphia the early part of last week to make ready for the first two games which will be played in Philadelphia. Camera stands are being erected, while every facility for obtaining ideal views have been arranged. Nothing but bad weather can possibly prevent successful results. The Essanay Company's arrangements for filming the games are perfect. Several camera men will be on the field in Philadelphia for the opening game and for the game the day following. Returning to Chicago, motion picture cameras of the Essanay Company will obtain the best plays of the final games. Announcement of the release date of the picture will be wired to all the licensed exchanges in ample time for the exhibitors to be informed. Special arrangements have been made at the Essanay factories to obtain prints of the films within the least time possible, probably within twenty-four hours after the terminating game. A few weeks previous to the release of the 1909 series picture the Essanay Company released the remarkable "Taft in Chicago and at the Ball Game." This film showed excellent views of President Taft on his visit to Chicago last September, his welcome by 10,000 school children, his arrival at the National League Base Ball Park and showed him in the grandstand vigorously applauding and also on the diamond shaking hands with the players.

Two baseball comedies by the Essanay Company, namely "The Baseball Fan" and "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," further establish the supremacy of the Essanay Company in the field of sports.

A FOOL THERE WAS.

A fool there was ran a picture show.
(Even as you and I).
When he bought the place he did not know
Just what was needed to make it go,
So he added a "feature act" or so
(Even as you and I).

Oh, the coin we lose and the friends we lose
While the public hungry stands
Seeking its fill of the picture show
(And now we know what's a picture show),
With our fortunes in its hands

The fool had bought a good machine
(Even as you and I).
But the man in the loft was cheap and green
And poorer pictures never were seen,
Till everyone shunned that particular screen
(Even as you and I)

F. H. M.

The red corpuscle of sport is in my blood. There are very few phases of sport open to the ordinary, everyday man like myself in which I have not either participated or witnessed. I have swam, walked, ran; I have cycled, played cricket, football, golf; I have sailed, played billiards, skipped, tennised, badmintoned, archered. I have played bowls on a Scottish green; quoits in a London back yard. I have never rode or shot, but I have shouted myself hoarse when a winner of an Ascot Gold Cup has passed the post. I have lured the elusive trout from his aqueous lair. I have been present at a cock fight, and my face was not unknown at the National Sporting Club, in London.

* * *

Although silver gray is beginning to tinge my raven locks, the love of sport, for sport's sake, remains as strong as ever in me. Only the other day my heart leaped with joy when I saw two teams of West African "men of color" playing cricket, and playing it very well, indeed, in Van Cortlandt Park. And of course the baseball fever is slowly but surely attacking me. Next season I am convinced that I shall be a fan or a bleacher. Indeed, life to me without the sporting element, either in the field or in everyday affairs, would be intolerable. I like running risks and taking chances. I like to see other people doing the same.

* * *

So do most of us. The love of sport is inherent in the Anglo-Saxon race. The American branch of Anglo-Saxondom is quite as sporty as any other branch of it. Can it be wondered at, therefore, that in the moving picture theater, sporting subjects should be so popular? It was love of sport that was at the root of the enormous interest which the Jeffries-Johnson fight created throughout the world. I do not say that the Jeffries-Johnson fight was a sporting event in the best sense of the term; but it was an attempted manifestation of sport, and it drew crowds who like to see a couple of evenly matched contestants fighting things out to the bitter end, in a frank, manly, honorable, fearless manner.

* * *

To my mind we do not see as many sporting subjects on the screen as we ought to. Sporting life is the life of the world in one of its by no means unimportant phases. For sport, true sport, is recreation. It improves the body, which is, after all, but the casket of the mind. It is axiomatic that if the body is sound and healthy, the mind will be correspondingly healthy. Is it not easy to argue, therefore, that a wholesome indulgence in sport, or athletics, or physical exercises or the Isthmian games, call it whatever you like, becomes a duty of mankind? It is so easy that if I were to pursue the point I might be accused of writing platitudes. But Lux Graphicus is never platitudinous, as all my readers know.

* * *

These reflections are suggested to me by the announcement that the Essanay Company are to make films of the baseball games between the champions of the American and National Baseball Leagues, namely, the Philadelphia Athletics and the Chicago players. The series of pictures will be released in due course, and as they are to go through the licensed houses, many hundreds of thousands of people in the country will see the pictures. And in passing I notice that the Essanay Company are making comedies with baseball as the motive. I am glad to know this.

* * *

Some time ago I, amongst others, congratulated the Essanay Company upon their enterprise in making themselves the comedy house par excellence. It became an article of faith with me, and with many others, that when I went to a moving picture theater and saw the familiar Iroquois head on the screen I was about to see a delicate piece of comedy work. I was seldom disappointed. I hope that the Essanay Company will always be noted for this class of picture. For the comedy of life and manners is perennial. Life itself is mostly comedy, punctuated by, or ending with, a tragedy or drama. So, in making comedy subjects, the presiding spirits of the Essanay Company show a nice perception of the fitness of things.

Now I am possessed of the idea that my friends in Chicago are specially laying themselves out to make moving pictures of sporting subjects. I hope I am right in this. If they can make baseball subjects, they can make sporting subjects of other kinds. What an enormous field is before them! Take, for example, my favorite pastime, or sport, of golf. Very difficult work with a moving picture camera, as the clubs are swung with almost incredible rapidity, and the flight of the ball is not easy to follow. In fact it requires an exposure as rapid as 1-1,200th of a second, all the circumstances being of the most favorable. But the incidents of a contested twosome or foursome at golf would look well on the screen.

* * *

I omitted to mention, amongst my sporting experience, that I was a rowing man. This leads me into the realm of aquatics or water sports. What a world of subjects lie here before the moving picture camera! Yacht racing, boat racing, water polo, all the beautiful life of the water. How well it looks on the screen. How beautiful were those Urban-Eclipse pictures of yacht racing in the English channel. I hope the Essanay people will give us some of these pictures next Summer.

* * *

I question very much whether these pictures come under the heading of topicals. A topical picture, to my mind, simply represents an event or function which may occur today, is filmed, shown and is forgotten in a week. Such, for example, as some of Mr. Roosevelt's many appearances. But sport is not for a day, but for all time. It is of permanent interest. Why, in various parts of the world, they are looking even now at the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, and they will continue to look at them for a long time to come. Let us cast our eyes over the sporting events of the past season, or of the present one, when football, hunting, skating, ski-ing are imminent on the North American continent. See the almost illimitable wealth of subjects which these offer the moving picture camera. If the Essanay Company are determined to lay themselves out to become the moving picture photographers of sporting subjects, it seems to me they will easily assure themselves a rich annuity and a vast number of patrons who will give them their support, so long as they make the pictures.

* * *

My main object in writing these paragraphs is, first of all, to encourage the Essanay Company in their sporting program, and then to put in a plea for more variety in the program of the moving picture theaters. Sporting subjects shown on the screen, from a horse race to a baseball game, never fail to secure appreciation and applause. But we do not see enough of those subjects; we see too many stupid cowboy and Western themes, of which people are getting heartily sick. There is much false sentimentality about these things; they are becoming intolerable. Western life is not at all romantic. Cowboys are not heroes, and even the poor Indian is apt to pall. We have had enough of these things. So away with them.

* * *

But while the red corpuscles flow through the veins of a man, woman or a child, they will never tire of sport in some form or another. It is the excitement of life—sport. It is the sauce and piquancy of existence. This being thus, and such, and I being as sporty as they make 'em, I conclude with a grouch and a grumble. Which is this: that in the programs of licensed and Independent films published for the week ending October 15, not a single, solitary, blessed sporting subject was included. With which state of things, I beg to express my unbounded dissatisfaction, adding the hope that my Essanay friends, in Chicago, will take the hint and in future give us as many sporting subjects as the exigencies of business and opportunity will allow.

The Great Northern Film Company's new "Time Table" is a neat trade bulletin, illustrated and printed in colors, containing much interesting news pertaining to the company's films of both past and future releases. Copies are sent to exhibitors free upon request.

New England Notes.

The Olympic Theater on Bowdoin square, Boston, has instituted several radical changes of policy. This house was formerly running five reels of licensed films, four acts of vaudeville and two illustrated songs. Admission was 10 cents. However, as anyone purchasing a ticket at the box office was given a ticket worth 5 cents on their next trip to this house, it practically was on a 5-cent basis, except for such patrons as entered for the first time. Hereafter, four reels of film will be used, all of which are first run, one vaudeville act and one illustrated song. Admission will be on a straight 5-cent basis. Lasky Brothers, the proprietors, have had poor luck in their enterprise. The house is under very strong opposition, and the location is hardly a good one. The house hereafter opens at 1 P. M. This does away with the need of having two shifts of help on the payroll. The house may prosper under this new regime, but it is a doubtful question.

The General Film Company, through their Boston head, Mr. Marson, has issued some more or less interesting facts. It seems that the exhibitor in Boston can have his films changed bi-weekly—and no oftener. It is also hinted that in the near future all houses in Boston proper can purchase two kinds of film service only—either all new, or all old reels. The number to be preferably four reels. It seems that Manager George I. Appleby, of the Star Theater, Tremont row, was the first man to contract for four new reels from the General Film Company. During the Summer, Manager Appleby was the only one in Boston using no old reels in his program. Whether his success with this idea has inspired the Film Company's idea of renting only these two kinds of service, is not known.

The World's New England correspondent is sorry to make note of the fact that a serious evil is creeping into the industry hereabouts. Some houses keep a painter on the premises who sketches the films to be featured in the lobby. This has ben done for some time. Little by little these paintings have become so bloodthirsty and gory that some notice ought to be taken. Practically all the paintings show scenes of drunkenness, robbery, arson, or some such actions. It was rumored in Boston very recently that a complaint had been sent to the City Hall by some citizen, naming the theater and describing the painting. Everyone knows that the motion picture has much to contend with from people who crusade against it for no reason whatever. Therefore, everyone interested in this industry should be all the more careful that everything is above reproach. These paintings certainly are not a step in the right direction, and those accountable for them ought to consider the matter. We hope this little pointer will be sufficient, and that it will not be necessary to hold the guilty managers to disgrace in this journal. The writer understands that the manager of one of Boston's film exchanges stated recently to a Boston picture man that he was going to take this matter up.

The Lowell (Mass.) Opera House had its first opening to the public recently. James Carroll, formerly of Bangor, Me., is the resident manager.

Mr. Houseman, one of the proprietors of the large Olympic Theater, Lynn, is smiling these days, as he reports business even better than last Fall. Mr. Houseman is changing his film service. He formerly has run films averaging about ten days old; from now on, however, the Olympic will show licensed films three days after regular release dates.

L. N. Wood, of Montpelier, Vt., is sole owner of the Savoy and Palace theaters of that city, as he recently bought out the interests of his partner, J. F. Dobb. The Palace has been renovated and completely overhauled.

The Palace Theater of Fall River (William Stecker, lessee and manager) was recently opened to the public with a big bill of pictures and songs.

Toomey & Demara, running the Academy at Lowell, and the Nickel at Lawrence, are playing to big houses, and the S. R. O. sign is often needed. The Nickel has been enlarged and completely renovated.

A. H. Sawyer has sold his interest in the "Berkshire Spa," a moving picture and vaudeville house at Pittsfield, to Ed. Hamilton. The latter will operate the house himself, as soon as it has been completely renovated.

Jacob Levine opened the Lincoln Hall Theater recently at Newton Highlands, one of Boston's suburbs. Straight pictures and songs are used.

The Orpheum Theater of Rochester, N. H., was opened by Merril & Bray with the triangle of pictures, songs and vaudeville.

Boston.

The Palace Theater did a nice volume of business during the latter end of last week—and lost the front of three labor. It seems that the porter of the Palace was sent with $905 to the headquarters at the Premier Theater, where Mr. Brooks, Boston member of the Automatic Vaudeville Company, holds forth. The $905 looked awfully big to the porter, and he has departed for unknown regions. As the report is prevalent that this money was the receipts of the theater's Saturday and Sunday business, exhibitors are looking over their books to see how this amount sizes up beside their business on those two days. The Palace neither denies nor affirms that the lost receipts were from those two days' business.

Manager Johnson, formerly of the Premier Theater, Washington street, is no longer to be seen there. Mr. Wolf is now in charge of the Premier and Liberty, while Mr. Mosher handles the company's two downtown theaters, the Comique and Palace. HENRY.

NOTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

The creditors of the Theater Film Service Company have petitioned Judge De Haven to declare it an involuntary bankrupt. The office is at 78 Second street, and is engaged in selling and leasing moving picture films. The corporation has assigned its property, valued at $5,000, to the Acme Film Exchange. The petitioning creditors are the Biograph Company, Essanay Manufacturing Company, Kalem Company and Selig Polyscope Company.

The struggle between the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company and their new rival, the City Light and Gas Company, for business, has led the City Company to furnish General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifiers free of charge to all exhibitors who take current from them. The only condition is that new tubes be furnished at any time the rectifier is returned.

The Victory Theater, on Sutter street, which has been closed for the last year, opens on October 1 as a 5-cent vaudeville and picture house. C. B. Lashy will be house manager.

The Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association held a busy meeting last week and elected officers for the following year. Mr. Herzog, of the Silver Palace Theater, was elected president; M. Davis, of the Davis Theater, vice-president, and Norman Hall, secretary and treasurer. With such progressive men in office the exhibitors are sure to have a prosperous year.

Chas. Keeler, the widely known writer of both prose and poetry, and a prominent member of the literary colony of Carmel-by-the-Sea, has gone into the exhibiting business. Mr. Keeler's theater should not be confounded with the ordinary moving picture theater that caters to the public, as Mr. Keeler has informed the Berkley (Cal.) Board of Education that a portion of each program will be devoted to pictures that will have an educational value and which will stimulate and interest in art and industry. The Board has officially endorsed this and will attend in person. As this Board is composed of members of the faculty of the University of California, this is all the more remarkable and denotes a remarkable uplift in the picture business of the Coast.

The Board of Censorship of the Coast cities has arrived at a decision which seems to mean, in effect, that the pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno, hitherto barred may hereafter be displayed freely, so far as any interference by the official censors is concerned. Among those present at the meeting were J. C. Astredo, of the Juvenile Court and the Playgrounds Commission; Miss Edith Hecht, of the Federated Women's Clubs, and T. P. Riordan, of the Police Department. All agreed that the ordinance under which they are appointed is not sufficiently strong and specific to authorize them to forbid the display of the fight pictures. Taking into consideration the recent ruling of Police Judge Shortall in favor of "Tex" Rickard in his fight against legal prosecution in the same connection, the Board decided that it would not be justified in arbitrarily assuming the authority to condemn fight films. It will now rest with the Mayor and the Police Department to act if the display of the films is to be forbidden here. In view of the fact that Mayor McCarty has made the statement that he will not allow the pictures to be shown, his action is awaited with some interest.

The Valencia Theater, built by J. Chas. Green at a cost of $200,000, and conceded to be the most beautiful theater in the West, which proved a failure as a stock and combination house, has become permanently a moving picture theater, the Summer season having proved highly successful.

F. R. C.

THE MOVING PICTURE IN JAPAN.

The moving picture is most popular in the land of the chrysanthemum and in nothing is the trend of the people's thought more clearly and definitively shown than in the program that is most popular. At the outset one is struck with the fact of a race, such as the Japanese, taking up so modern an idea as the moving picture and treating it in a way so clearly and emphatically Japanesque. It is hard for an Occidental to be just to an Oriental. Our standpoints are so diverse that, while we are agreeing, we seem to be at daggers drawn. For instance, do as I have done, get some educated Japanese to sing, and the result is one is bewildered and vice versa; so are they when we sing. Our Mozart, Beethoven, Haydn, etc., are, as a Japanese friend said, "Mere noise." Our viewpoints are different, but in the moving picture world Japan takes a stand that is clear cut and individual. The films, for the most part, are English and foreign. The people are intensely interested; that is to say, that the so-called higher class, like our own, pass by such things, but the backbone of the nation—the common people—go in crowds. The price for the show being lower in large cities than in country places.

The operators are, to a large extent, Japanese; this is an important point, because it means that there is an intelligent concept of the picture and one does not see a wounded or dying person flit across the screen at fifty miles an hour, as we do. A censorship is exercised over the films, and our films of the brutal order can not be shown there.

The chief point is that the Japanese, while a humorous race and fond of the dramatic, do not care for these things in films. They are intensely patriotic. But in the moving picture they do not—in the main—care for what has been; but for what other countries are doing and what may be.

I have read these paragraphs over to Japanese friends and they tell me that is their opinion: Japan does not want pictures of Geisha girls and fun, but moving pictures of shoe making, street casting, surgical operations, in short, the educational work of other lands. This point I would like to insist on as a most distinctly Japanese characteristic. The immense power of the moving picture is nowhere shown more clearly than in Japan. The people there are demanding and getting the purely educational end.

One must not overlook the Japan of the future—the children. Here the stories of the army and navy and the wrestling schools are the favorites. In other words, young Japan wants fighting; grown up Japan wants to know how other lands work and make money.

The position in Japan is summed up in a nutshell. T. Koboyashi, a Japanese business man, said to me: "Moving pictures are a most important factor as a moral teacher. There is nothing to compare with them." Before closing I would like to say something of Japanese pictures shown here. It would appear that if a girl sticks on a kimona, imitates a mincing step and waves a fan, that is Japan! I have just seen a film with Japanese actors kissing. Mr. Editor, the story was supposed to be a drama; my Japanese friends and myself sat in a theater and thought it was the greatest comedy we ever saw.

EDISON CAMERAMEN BUSY AROUND THE CITY.

There was excitement around the Flatiron Building the other day; people crowding each other to see what was wrong. Somebody killed? Run over by the street car? Look, there is the ambulance and mounted policemen dashing by at full speed! Somebody must have been hurt awfully bad, and they are rushing the unfortunate to the hospital. It is a woman, may be! Oh, it is getting worse every day here in New York. These taxicabs and cab drivers make life a hardship to the poor devil who has got to walk. Well! But what is this? Look at the man on the top of the express wagon turning a handle! "Goodness!" says a young lady, "that's the moving pictures and we will all be in it."

"Step lively there! Get a move on! Don't block the street!" And the mounted policemen try to get some control of a crowd that grows in size and interest for every minute. "Well, we must try to get out of here, and get another position," says the man with the camera to his assistant. "Eddie, call the captain!" "Say, Captain, have the car over there stop in the sunshine, and we will go over on the other side." Off they go. The camera is focused, a new magazine attached. "Eddie, get your handkerchief ready. All right, give the sign." Far away on the other side, down at the Berlitz School, the ambulance is waiting. Eddie is waving. There it comes now at a breakneck speed, and up almost under the camera, not ten feet away, dashing by. All is over. The cameraman puts down his machine. The officers ride up to the wagon and the captain and Mr. Cameraman shake hands. "Was it all right? Did you get a good picture?" All the policemen want to know something about the picture. Well, it must be something unusual! "What's the game, Bill? What's going to be the name of yer picture?" from one of the kids in the bunch to our friend, Eddie. "The Life of a New York Policeman, my boy." And Eddie and his boss get ready to depart. Well, of course, being a humble representative of this paper, we immediately tackled Mr. Cameraman; that is, as soon as we got a chance to get within speaking distance, which was no easy task in a crowd of some thousand people. Well, we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. White, of the Edison Company, and the hubbub all proved to be over one of the scenes from "The Life of a New York Policeman," one of a series of stirring pictures which the Edison Company will shortly release.

THE PRINCESS OF MILWAUKEE.

Beautiful Home of Pictures Built by Thomas Saxe—High-Class in Every Detail—Finest in the West.

Promoters of moving picture theaters have found a model for the ideal picture theater in the Princess Theater, Milwaukee, Wis., one of the Saxe enterprises of that city. The Princess represents an outlay of $60,000, is fireproof throughout and equipped with every modern appliance in vogue in the better grade of theaters.

To Thomas Saxe this new era in the life of the motion picture is due. Mr. Saxe is a thorough believer in the uplift movement and for that reason and with the purpose of having the finest motion picture theater in the West he invested in the Princess. Seating 900 persons, in opera chairs that might be expected in a first-class combination theater, and other innovations, such as electric fountains, ladies' retiring rooms, dressing rooms with attendants, girl ushers in cadet uniforms, an intelligent lecturer, a $5,000 pipe organ operated by the best organist in the city, an orchestra of seven pieces, vocalists of reputation, not mere singers, the Princess since its opening, December 17, has never known a performance when every seat was not occupied.

The Princess occupies a lot 50 by 150, the interior arrangement being so inviting that the first visit is an invitation to come back the next day. Contrary to the heretofore prevailing ideas, the Princess is elaborately decorated and ornamented from the mirrored lobby to the picture frame, which is flanked by two practical private boxes, reserved for the use of the lecturer and singer. The color scheme is principally cream and gold, with borders and friezes in an American beauty shade of red. The lighting scheme is carefully worked out so as not to be flashy and is in keeping with the decorations and furnishings of the entire house.

The electric fountains are met upon entering the lobby, a mirrored and paneled entrance of elegance and taste. This leads to the foyer, spacious and handsomely furnished. The exterior, while partaking of the spectacular in its night effect, a necessary element for a motion picture theater as well as the more pretentious and higher priced place of entertainment, is refined, although brilliantly lighted. The front is substantial and the entrances and exits are independent of each other, so that entering and retiring patrons do not meet.

Beveled plate glass mahogany doors, capped with ornamental cathedral glass canopies, mosaic sidewalks and floors, in lobby and foyer, maintained in the highest standard of cleanliness, make the Princess entrance a model, which every manager who has seen it complimented Mr. Saxe for the ideas of development and improvement that he has injected into the business.

KANSAS CITY BUSINESS NOTE.

Would this Have Been Written Two Years Ago?

Kansas City supplies several hundred moving picture houses in this city and hundreds of others in the surrounding territory. This industry has grown to such an extent that the quarters of the largest local establishment have been outgrown and larger have had to be secured to accommodate the growing trade. The development of the moving picture industry has been an industrial sensation, and Kansas City has rapidly become the headquarters of the growth of the industry in the West.

The growth of the moving picture and film business in Kansas City has been phenomenal, and it is gratifying to note that it is the largest places that are enjoying the greatest prosperity and are being compelled to increase their facilities.—Kansas City Journal.

Centreville, Ia.—Pewthers & Bon, proprietors of the Lyric, have also purchased the Majestic Theater. It his been remodeled and the name changed to the New Lyric.

Lenses Again. From my good friend, A. W. Crowe, Watertown, S. D., comes the following: "In the article by Geo M. Pringle, St. Paul, Minn. (Moving Picture World, September 24), it is set forth that, by placing a slide in the carrier the picture will be inverted long before it reaches the objective (stereo.) lens. Here is a simple test which I think will knock that all on the head: Take a couple of cover glasses and place a piece of colored gelatin in half of the slide, either the top or bottom half, binding the same into a regular slide; now place this slide in the carrier and turn on the light. Hold a piece of black paper in front of and close to the objective lens, slowly moving it away from the lens toward the curtain. As you move the paper away, carefully note the change in position of the color which takes place about five or six inches from the front of the objective lens. Take a strip of mica and put it in front of the aperture plate in place of films so you can keep the light on it, first coloring the mica so that one-half of the aperture is colored and the other clear. Now make the same experiment that you did with the stereo. lens and you will find that the color will invert itself at about the same distance. I think that Pringle is right about the objective lens having nothing to do with inverting the picture: it is done by the condensers.

"Here is a little experiment for some of the boys that have trouble with their take-up: I have had one running a year now, and in all that time it has never given me a moment's trouble. Take a small motor (I am using a 16-inch fan motor) with a 2-inch pulley out of a small iron pulley block placed on the end of the motor shaft where the fan was. Having fastened the motor in proper position, belt it to your take-up and allow your motor to run its capacity speed, the belt to slip on the pulley with just enough friction to take up the film. The speed of the motor is what equalizes the pull at start and finish. When you thread the take-up be sure there is no slack left in the film before starting your motor, else you are very likely to jerk the film in two. I have a switch fastened to the baseboard back of the lamp-house, which cuts the motor in when I pull the lamp-house over to motion picture side and cuts it out when I put the lamp-house on the stereo. side. Hoping this will help some of the boys, I will add, Long live the Trouble Department and its editor! and close with best wishes to all the readers of The Column."

The motor scheme is all right, neighbor Crowe, and I have myself used it on several occasions, though I did not belt directly from the motor to the take-up, preferring rather a train of speed-reducing pulleys. Very likely, however, your way is best.

As to the lens matter, I do not just exactly understand what you are talking about. You say in one place that the colors invert themselves six inches in front of the objective lens, and then you wind up by saying that the objective lens has nothing to do with inverting the picture. I guess you will have to come again in that matter and make it a little clearer. The Column readers, however, will doubtless find much interest in making the experiment suggested, and I shall be glad at any time to have intelligent discussion on the matter of lens action.

* * *

Abuse of Films.—It has on several occasions been called to my attention that in New York City the operator, more often than not, has nothing to do with the re-winding of films, making of patches, etc., it being a requirement of law that all re-winding be done outside of the operating room. Ordinarily this might be considered as a boon to the operator, but the practical result of it is that re-winding and the making of patches is done by boys, ushers, or even in some instances by a janitor. What happens to the film, under such conditions, is not a difficult matter to surmise. We all know there is enough damage done to film in re-winding when the re-winding is done by operators who at least are supposed to know something about the handling of film, and have at least some smattering of knowledge as to how a patch should be made. But when these matters are placed in the hands of men or boys who know absolutely nothing whatever about a moving picture film, it is little short of an outrage—an outrage not only to the film, but an outrage to the amusement-seeking public who will be obliged thereafter to pay money to view it. There is no really valid reason why re-winding should not be done in the operating room, where it would at least be under the eye of the operator. All this talk about the danger of fire is pure piffle and bunk. I am not so very well acquainted with the history of the moving picture affairs in the City of New York, but in Chicago, with between 500 and 600 moving picture theaters, I believe I could count on the fingers of one hand the number of persons who have been seriously hurt, or even hurt at all, in moving picture theater fires since the very inception of the business. One man, I believe, if my memory serves me correctly, died from injuries received in an operating-room fire, but he was himself the operator and the fire did not extend beyond the operating room. Not a soul in the audience was injured or even badly scared. So exceedingly scant has been the fire scare material that even the newspapers which, as a general proposition love the moving picture theaters about the same way a good live tom-cat loves a dog, have quit flourishing the fire alarm.

* * *

Testing and Other Things.—New York City, N. Y., asks the following questions:

"(1) When testing for a ground, if the test wires are connected from one carbon arm across the insulation to the body of the lamp and the test lamp lights, does it mean that the connected carbon arm is grounded or the other one?

"(2) I have found from experience that on A. C. with a transformer, when the lamp is grounded (even on one arm) it will not light, while with a rheostat it does, even when both arms are grounded.

"(3) When there is a spot, or the condensers are set in loose or slanty, will that have any effect on the picture?

"(4) What makes one side of a picture out of focus a little on a ——— machine?"

(1) The ground is in the opposite arm from the one to which you connect. You will see this if you stop for a moment and think. If the current is leaking across the insulation of the arm to which you connect, your ground wire would merely add to the flow of the current somewhat. But if the leak is on the other side when you attach your test wires, you form a circuit across the insulation of the other arm, which, of course, lights your lamp.

(2) I have not noticed anything of this kind and did not know it was true. If it is, I should be glad to be set right in the matter.

(3) I do not know exactly what you mean by this, but presume you refer to condensers being loose in their casing, or out of square with each other. This would, of course, have some effect on the light, though not necessarily very much. The condenser lenses should always be set square with each other and held reasonably firm in their mounting.

(4) There are a number of things which might cause the picture to be out of focus a little on the left side with the machine you name, and it seems to be quite a common fault with that machine. I have found several things to be responsible for it in different cases. One quite common cause is the cooling plate or gate setting too close to the edge of the aperture; in other words, the gate being out of center with the aperture.

* * *

Lenses.—Brooklyn, N. Y., writes as follows:

"(1) Is there any mark on the projection lens by which you can tell what size picture it will give on a certain throw?

"(2) How do you adjust an Edison shutter, and which side is the shutter, the solid or the perforated?

"(3) We are told to use either two 6½ or two 7½ condensers. What good does it do us to know the focal length of the projection lens?

"(4) You told us to use the thinner, 7½-inch condenser next the light, while Mr. Kline, the optician, told me emphatically to use the 6½ nearer the arc and the 7½ on the outside. How do you explain that? That is only to prevent breakage, otherwise it is immaterial which way they are used."

(1) There is no mark on a projection lens by which you may ascertain the size picture it will project at a given distance. Multiply the throw in feet by the EXACT width of the aperture in fractions of an inch and divide by the width of the picture you wish in feet. The result will be the equivalent focus of the lens you need.

(2) The solid wing of the Edison shutter is the one you must use. Loosen the shutter on its spindle and turn the machine fly-wheel in the direction it normally runs until the intermittent sprocket completes its movement and the cam pin has emerged from the star wheel by half its diameter. Now hold the fly-wheel perfectly stationary and slip the shutter around on its spindle in the direction it normally runs until the solid wing of the shutter just begins to open the aperture. This is, or should be, right. Tighten the shutter slightly, put in a film and try it. If it is not just right, slip the shutter a little until all travel ghost disappears and then tighten the shutter on its spindle. Before starting to set the shutter, set the framing lever midway of its travel.

(3) The theory of the condenser and the relation of condenser to projection lens is that the equivalent focus of each should be the same. This, however, is impractical. We use two 7½, two 6½, or one 6½ and one 7½, according to which gives the best results. Some operators use nothing but 7½-inch condensers, and I guess they are not very far from right, either. There is no benefit in knowing the focal length of your projection lens, unless you wish to figure the size picture it will project at a given distance, or wish to match it with condenser lenses.

(4) I do not explain this matter at all. It is up to you to believe whichever one you choose. It is reason and common-sense that the thinner lens is less liable to break under expansion and contraction than is the thicker. As I understand it, it makes no difference in projection effect whether a 6½ lens be in front with the 7½ behind, or vice versa, it being the equivalent focus of the combination which counts, and the E. F. is in either case the same. Perhaps I am wrong in this, but that is the way I understand it.

* * *

Trouble Galore.—Putnam, Conn., pours forth this tale of woe: "As this is the first time I have troubled you, I trust you will excuse me if I ask too many questions. I am using a ——— machine and find I get a flicker on the left-hand side of the screen; also that side of the picture is a trifle out of focus, although my machine is square with the curtain. I have recently put on new tension springs, aperture plate, and intermittent sprocket, so that none of this apparatus is worn. It seems that the star wheel side of the sprocket sets higher than the other side, thus causing the film to bear only on one side of the intermittent sprocket. If I set it lower or raise the other side it will not run. As I have it now, the machine runs easily and smoothly without any jumping. Perhaps this matter may be simple to you, but I spent all last Sunday over it, setting the sprocket in every conceivable position, but without any beneficial result. I am also having trouble with my light. I get a yellow streak down both sides of the screen and only white in the middle. I have moved the arc to and from the condensers, but the result is the same, except that when the lamp is clear back I do not get a large enough spot except by using the jack-knife set for the carbons. I have to move the lamp right up to the condensers to get a large enough spot; have a 7½ condenser in front with a 6½ behind, which seems to give the best results of anything I have tried. The yellow streak only shows when there is reading matter on the screen, as the shade of the yellow is very light. The pictures look good, all right, but this does not satisfy me, as I want the best. Do you think two 7½ focus condensers would be better than what I am using? I have a 60-foot throw with a 12-foot picture. Will add that I am working on 110 volts A. C., using a Compensarc. Have been using the same make of machine for three years and have had no trouble with it, so presume the fault must be my own and will not follow the example of the bad workman and blame my tools.

"Would also like to ask your opinion with reference to New York examination. I went down to New York, registered lived there two weeks waiting to be examined, and then failed. I do not know to this day what caused the failure. I was asked only three questions, as follows: (1) Would you use a No. 0 wire or No. 1 wire if you could get no other? I replied that I would, and that I would use any size not too small to carry my amperage. They asked me what I considered the proper size and I said No. 6, but that I would use No. 8, although nothing smaller. (2) What would you do if you went into a place and found 220 volts pressure? I replied that I would connect two rheostats in series if the law allowed 220 volts to come into the booth. He told me he was not referring to the law, but wanted to see if I knew how to connect. The examiner then required me to thread a No. 5 Power's. As I have used this machine, I am sure I made no mistake. I hold a license in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Providence, R. I., and naturally I was a little put out at my failure, as I particularly wish to work in New York."

The Column, friend Putnam, is for your use to ask as many questions as you may wish. As to the picture being out of focus on the left-hand, having some flicker on that side, I really do not know exactly what to say to you. I get quite a number of complaints of that kind with this machine and so far have not been able to discover any cause for this fault except (a) machine being out of square with the curtain; (b) gate being out of line with the aperture so that the edge of the gate or cooling plate comes quite close to the aperture edge, thus interfering with the light; (c) tension spring setting over too far and interfering with the aperture. I am looking carefully into that matter now, and as soon as I discover anything will set it forth in The Column. As to one end of your intermittent shaft being higher than the other, you have established a condition which cannot now be changed except by installing a new cam, star and intermittent bushings. The star and cam are, of course, worn on a bevel, and when you undertake to change their relation you do not get good results. On the other hand, running the machine as it now is, is very hard on the film. Are you sure it is the fault of the sprocket? Possibly the film itself is out of line. You can tell this by framing the dividing line between two pictures down into the aperture and seeing that it appears square on the curtain. If not, then you must square the film instead of the sprocket. It is not at all likely, however, that this latter is the case. As to the yellow in your light, quite possibly it is due to the carbons you are using. You must get as good a crater as you possibly can and get that crater to face the condenser as squarely as possible. Do not try to use the crater on both carbons. Confine yourself to the crater of the top carbon and bend every effort to get that as perfect as possible. That is my system and I have been very successful with it. See to it that both your condensers and projection lenses are perfectly cleaned and well polished. It is also possible that the yellow is due to fault in the set of your carbons. You say that the 6½ and 7½ condensers as you now have them, give the best results. In that case, I would say that they are best, since it is results you are looking for. Always use a combination of condensers that produce the best picture; that is all there is to that particular proposition. Two 7½ condensers ought to be all right, but if the 6½ and 7½ are better, by all means use them.

As to the examination, I am inclined to think you must be mistaken. You answered one question wrong. You should not have said you would use No. 8 wire, since that is only rated at 33 amperes, whereas you are now allowed to use more current than that in New York City, and on none of them is the high contact less than 50. Most certainly, however, the examiners used very poor judgment if they turned you down on that one wrong answer.

* * *

Curtain Coating.—Minneapolis, Minn., asks what I consider the best water-color coating for a plaster curtain.

The best thing I know of is English whiting mixed with water and fish glue, to which has been added a little ultramarine blue, enough so that it looks a trifle blue in the pail, but be careful not to get too much. There should be enough glue to prevent the coating from rubbing off easily. English whiting may be had of any wholesale drug store at about 10 cents per pound, and five pounds is more than ample for any curtain.

* * *

A Bunch of Trouble.—Chehalis, Wash., starts off by saying: "Here's a bunch for The Column." After giving very complete information as to the kind of current, etc., he enters a strenuous complaint against a certain machine, which said complaint seems to be entirely justified, but which it would be both unfair and unprofitable to publish. I think, friend Chehalis, you have one of the earlier types of the machine complained of. I have, in your behalf, written the manufacturers of the machine and I am quite certain they will make the matter right as soon as they possibly can. With the later type of machine, I do not think you will have any trouble at all. They will probably send you a new framing carriage, which will obviate the difficulty.

* * *

That Little Matter of Candle Power.—Steve Ross, Chief Operator, Alpine Hall Theater, Tarrytown, N. Y., sends in the following interesting communication: "In a recent issue of the Trouble Department, Bemidji, Minn., explained his way of calculating candle-power of the arc lamp. His method is wrong, since the candle-power of a lamp cannot be calculated or figured at all, but it must be measured, and this (measuring) is nothing less than a comparison with the standard candle-power. The United States standard is a candle that in one hour consumes 120 grains of spermaceti wax. The measuring or comparing can be done only with an instrument called a photometer, of which there are many different kinds. I show one of the simplest in the attached sketch. It is based upon the law of the inverse squares, and enables one to compare the relative intensities of two lights (the standard and the one to be measured) by finding at what distance they furnish equal illumination.

"1 and 2 are the lights being tested, the rays of which fall on the surfaces of prism (3). The standard light is set at a given distance from one side of the prism and the light to be measured is moved forward or backward until both sides of the prism appear equally illuminated to the eye of the observer located at (4)."

The above is perfectly correct. I was well aware that this was the way to measure candle-power, but did not set the matter forth, because it is impossible of application by the average layman. I only base my ideas of candle-power of the projection arc lamp on the fact that the average street lamp consuming ten amperes of current, is supposed to furnish 2,000 candle-power. My comments on the Minnesota letter are self-explanatory. We, however, thank neighbor Ross for his excellent letter and trust we shall hear from him again in the near future.

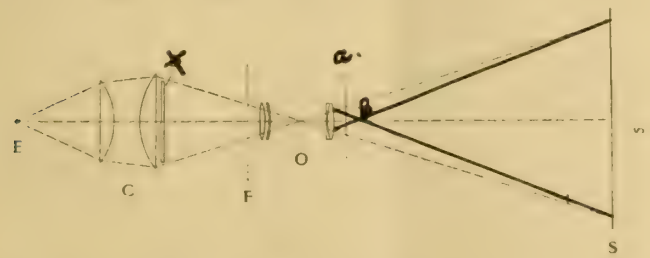
* * *

Can Owners Belong?—Cleveland, Ohio, writes as follows: "Can a moving picture theater manager or owner, or part owner, belong to the moving picture operators' union? Don't you think that such a person would most likely not be a desirable member of a labor union? That is to say, don't you think he would not be with the rest of the men when it would come to a question of increase of wages? My own view is that owners are better out than in the union."

Well, Cleveland, there is not very much I can say to you on this subject, except that it is a matter that must be handled according to the laws of the international and the local union. Personally, I do not believe it wise to have employers or part employers in a labor organization, but it is not up to me to say what the Cleveland union shall do in such a matter. This same question has been a bone of contention in several different labor organizations in the past and it has, so far as I know, invariably resulted in the final withdrawal or expulsion of the employers from the union.

* * *

Light Rays.—Lewis. M. Townsend, Operator, Cornwall Opera House, Penn Yan, N. Y., submits the following: "I believe if some of the operators who are studying the matter of where the light rays cross, would take into consideration the fact that a moving picture lens focuses two different objects they would have less trouble. My own idea is the Bausch & Lomb diagram recently published in the Trouble Department, which I have altered some, is correct for slides but not for motion picture work. Here is my idea: The moving picture lens focuses the condenser at point 'A' (where the outside shutter, if any, should cross the rays) and at the same time focuses the aperture plate ('F') at point 'S.' the screen. The rays from the condenser focused across inside the lens at 'O' and rays from aperture plate focused across in front of lens at 'B.'



"I am not in favor of smoking in the operating room, but just take out the film, light the lamp, open the gate and blow smoke in front of the lens and then I would like your comment on the above. I do not say that the light rays cross in this manner, but merely that it is my idea of the same. I have been using a curtain or screen painted with aluminum for something like three years and want to know if there is any patent which can prevent me from still using same."

Well, neighbor Townsend, you have certainly got me this time. Frankly, I cannot figure out what you mean by "condenser focused" and the "aperture plate focused." I print your communication and the sketch accompanying it for the benefit of all. Perhaps some of The Columnites will be able to grasp your meaning, and, if so, good may come of it. As to the curtain, there is a patent existing in favor of A. L. Simpson, covering all metallic surfaced screens. Said patent has never been adjudicated, but all the same it is on record and any violator is liable to prosecution by the patentee. Whether his contention would be upheld is a matter only for the courts to decide.

* * *

Connecticut State Police Annual Report.—The recent report by the Connecticut police shows the following: Inspections made of theater buildings and operating booths, 482; buildings and booths provided for moving picture exhibitions, 120; operators examined, 262; operators licensed, 165; fees received from operators, $504; fees received from inspection and approval of booths, $600. From this it would seem that but a very small percentage of the buildings and booths met approval and that quite a number of operators failed to get through, more than one-third of the total number being rejected.

* * *

Operators' Union Active.—Local Union No. 5, Moving Picture Operators, Scranton, Pa., is quite active and has had a grievance committee out calling on owners and proprietors of moving picture theaters of that city, asking scale of wages and working conditions as follows: Recommendation of the union for closed shop and an eight-hour workday with a minimum weekly wage of $20, 35 cents an hour overtime; $18 a week for a day of six to seven hours; $15 a week for a day of three to five hours; $18 a week for vaudeville houses giving two performances per day, $20 where there are three performances daily; $4 per night for operas and entertainments. The union agrees that its members shall give one week's notice before quitting a job and they ask a like notice from their employers. They demand that six days constitute a week's work.

We have not at hand information as to how successful the boys have been in their endeavors to better their conditions. The demands, however, seem to be quite reasonable and it is to be hoped that the owners have seen their way clear to meet them.

WARNING.

It has come to my notice that a certain film exchange in Portland, Ore., is advertising an operators' handbook purporting to be by F. H. Richardson, the price named being $1.00. I wish to say that, so far as myself is concerned, this is merely the reprint of a small booklet I put out some two years ago, of which 61,000 copies were given away free of charge by the exchanges. The booklet was very brief, and is now, more or less, out of date. If sold at all, it should not be sold for over 10 cents per copy. Intending purchasers should not confound this with the Managers and Operators Handbook which is now being published by the Moving Picture World, and which will be ready for distribution at an early date.

DETROIT, MICH., NEWS.

The Windsor Film Service, of Windsor, Ont., has purchased the Canadian rights for "Frontier Celebration," held at Cheyenne, Wyo.

J. Segrist has purchased the Grand Theater and is making extensive improvements before the grand opening.

Detroit now has forty-nine moving picture theaters.

The vaudeville artists have formed a union, and it is not meeting with approval with the exhibitors here.

Detroit is soon to have another Independent film exchange. "Pat" Powers knows.

Wm. F. Klatt is building a $26,000 theater, on Gratiot avenue. Work is being rushed and the opening is Thanksgiving.

The Dixie Airdome has closed for the season.

W. Harris' Airdome, Flint, Mich., is closed.

The Garrick Theater, formerly a vaudeville house, is now playing stock and moving pictures between the acts and is meeting with success. The Gertrude Shipman Company are holding the boards.

A. M.

AN EFFECTIVE, INEXPENSIVE METHOD OF ADVERTISING THE THEATER.

The rapidly increasing competition in the moving picture field is putting many exhibitors at their wits' end for attractions to engage and hold the attention of the fickle public.

While it is undoubtedly true, that in the long run the best advertisement that the exhibitor can have is the providing of entertainment of consistently high class, it is also necessary to give much attention to the attraction of pleasure-seekers into the theater, for the first time. The form of attraction that first suggests itself is the employment of elaborate lighting, either by means of signs, festoons of incandescent lamps, or high candle-power arc lamps. Perhaps the most effective way of illuminating the elaborate theater fronts now in vogue is the flaming arc lamp. It illuminates and brings out the architectural details in a way that is impossible with any other form of illumination, and has the further advantage of being strikingly visible at a distance of several blocks, illuminating the adjacent street so effectively as to have an irresistible attraction for the casual passer-by. It is well-known that there is no single feature as capable of developing traffic in the street as plentiful illumination, and as the possible customers of the moving picture theater are in direct proportion to the number of people passing by on the street, it is evident that the lavish use of light is by far the most telling advertisement that the exhibitor can use.

A telling illustration of the value of light in increasing traffic in a street is the recent experience of a Fifth Avenue Merchants' Association in New York City. Prior to this experiment the street, while ordinarily well lighted, did not begin to compare with Broadway, and the merchants decided to conduct an actual test of what might be expected by increasing the illumination in this street. The count of the passers-by at a certain point, showed that prior to the increased illumination about 400 people passed during a certain period of time, and during the corresponding period of time after the increased illumination had been provided, a trifle over 1,100 people passed the same point. In this particular instance the increased illumination drew nearly three times as many people into the street as had formerly been the custom.

While no figures are forthcoming regarding the actual increase in business obtained, it is at least reasonable to say that the increase in actual purchases during this period, was easliy in proportion to the increased traffic in the street.

The most serious disadvantage under which the flaming arc lamp has labored heretofore has been the fact that the light was of a reddish yellow color, which in many cases failed to prove attractive to the fair sex, on account of the rusty appearance assumed by dress-goods under this color of light, and it was possible to obtain a white light only by sacrificing the greater part of the illumination, as in the previous types of flaming arc lamps, white light could only be produced at a great loss in efficiency.

Another disadvantage of the previous types of flaming arc lamps has been the extremely complicated mechanism necessitated by the fact that it was necessary to feed the carbons in converging paths, which practice has never gained favor in America on account of the complications involved. The lamps were also very difficult to trim, the carbons being very long and slender, and subject to a great deal of breakage, and it was necessary to place them in the lamp with great care so that the metal veins contained by each carbon might be in the proper relation.

All these objections have been eliminated in the Alba Flaming Arc Lamp, which is the highest development of lamps of this class. This lamp produces a pure white light, equal in volume to that obtained by the old-fashioned yellow flaming arc lamp, and uses vertically aligned carbons, in accordance with the established American practice, and these carbons containing no metal veins, and being short and thick, are subject to no breakage whatever, and the trimming is exceedingly simple.

The cost of operating the Alba lamp is very low, being about 15 cents per hour for two lamps, including both current and carbons. Unlike the old-fashioned yellow flaming arc lamp, there is no obnoxious glare; on the contrary, although the light is fully equal in volume to that given by the older type of lamp, it is soft and mellow. It is being used with excellent effect by hundreds of moving picture theaters, and exhibitors in general express the opinion that it is the most effective advertisement that they have ever been able to secure. The economy of the Alba lamp may be better understood when we say that two Alba lamps costing but 15 cents per hour to run, will produce as much light as 4,000 incandescent electric lamps.

It is perhaps not too much to say that there is no advertising feature that can even be compared with it in cost, that will approach it in effectiveness and the power to attract the public. It would appear that the average person possesses almost as strong an inclination for light as the proverbial moth, and exhibitors may profit by this weakness. Thanks to the Alba lamp, light is now so cheap that the smallest exhibitor may use it lavishly, and the results obtained are certainly out of all proportion to the expense.

RECENT MOVING PICTURE PATENTS.

[Specially compiled and selected for the Moving Picture World.]

Patent Issues of October 10, 1910.

972,142. MOVING PICTURE MACHINE. Edward H. Sperberg, Chicago, Ill., assignor to the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, Ill., a corporation. Original application filed April 17, 1909, Serial No. 409,465. Divided and this application filed December 2, 1909. Serial No. 531,031.

The combination, with a film driving shaft having a helical channel in its surface, of a film driving sprocket rotatably mounted thereon and provided with a longitudinal keyway adjacent to the shaft, a sleeve on the shaft, having an annular groove in its outer periphery, a key on its inner portion for engaging the channel of the shaft, a longitudinal feather key for engaging the keyway of the sprocket, and means engaging the annular groove, whereby the sleeve, feather key, and sprocket are rotated with respect to the shaft, substantially as described.

971,890. PROCESS FOR PRODUCING COLORED FILMS FOR ANIMATED PICTURES. Gustav E. Hoglund, Chicago, Ill., assignor to Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, Ill., a corporation of Illinois. Filed August 10, 1910. Serial No. 512,240.

The process of coloring animated picture films, which consists of dividing a film into series containing a selected number of pictures, cutting out a selected image from each picture, each corresponding picture of the series of pictures having a like image cut out therefrom, superimposing the stencil thus formed over a duplicate film of that from which the stencil was made, said latter film having a tinted background, and applying selected coloring matter to each exposed part of the film lying below the stencil, thereby producing a film having a general color for a background, each picture having an image thereon of a color distinct from the background, the colors blending when the pictures are projected to produce a completely colored picture.

971,317. FILM REEL FOR MOVING PICTURE MACHINES. Thomas Sharlow, New York, N. Y. Filed April 6, 1910. Serial No. 553,834.

971,898. MOVING PICTURE MACHINE. Jeremiah Keller, Chicago, Ill., assignor to the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, Ill., a corporation of Illinois. Filed November 27, 1909. Serial No. 530,130.

In brake mechanism for moving picture machines, a brake wheel positively connected with the film driving mechanism, a brake shoe adapted to engage the brake spring, a spring connected with the brake shoe, and a stop for retaining the brake shoe in normal position, in combination with a lever mechanism for tripping the brake shoe, and a film contactor adapted to engage the lever mechanism when the tension on the film is reduced, said film contactor normally retained in non-operative position by the tension on the film.

971,155. MOVING PICTURE MACHINE. Albert E. Smith, New York, N. Y., assignor to the Vitagraph Company of America, New York, N. Y., a corporation of New York. Filed October 11, 1909. Serial No. 521,975.

In a moving picture machine, the combination of a member having an opening therein through which the beam of light is projected, rollers for guiding the film over said opening, shafts mounted on opposite sides of said opening, two rollers on each of said shafts, belts running on corresponding rollers on said shafts and co-acting with the edges of said film to guide the latter in its movement over said opening, means independent of said belts for moving the film intermittently, a shutter for obstructing the light when the film is moved, and a single means for operating the shutter and said film-moving means, said belts being moved solely by their co-action with the film when the latter is moved.

W. H. Goodfellow, formerly head of the Detroit Film Company, is now manufacturing automobile tires

Correspondence.

MICRO-CINEMATOGRAPHY.

New York, October 11, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Relating to your article about "Micro-Kinetoscope," I believe you have struck the keynote of something which will interest the public highly from different points of view and which at the same time deviates from "the usual thing."

I would like to communicate on the subject with a firm interested in the matter and beg you to make me acquainted with the name of such a firm.

Thanking you in advance for your kindness, I am

Yours very truly,

MAX MEYER, M.D.

14 East 120th street.

[If our correspondent will communicate with George Kleine, 52 State street, Chicago, he will probably obtain the information he desires.—Ed. M. P. W.]

FROM A TEXAS EXHIBITOR.

Fort Worth, Texas, October 6, 1910.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—If I may be allowed the distinction of saying a word through the columns of the best picture show publication which has ever been published, I take pleasure in asking you to mention one Gottfried Rodriguez, a young Hollander who is making a tour of the world. In his native country he is sporting editor of the Amsterdam "Telegram" and he is touring the world on behalf of that paper, incidentally making his expenses by lecturing and exhibiting lantern slides of his journey.

I was very fortunate in meeting this young Hollander upon his arrival in our city, and as he had his eye out for a good picture show and I was looking for something out of the ordinary, I just engaged this young globe-trotter to deliver a series of lectures and exhibit a number of his most excellent slides, and he not only proved an immense attraction but entertained several thousand people who are regular patrons of my show. Other exhibitors should be on the lookout for him.

I wish to say for the business in this city that it is on the run for the better right now, with a good bright outlook for this Fall. This city has eleven picture shows, ranging from a $10,000 house down to $700, with a prospect of two or three more up-to-date houses.

Any mention you may see fit to make of this letter will be greatly appreciated by an ardent reader of your paper.

Yours truly,

W. S. TURNPAUGH,
Manager Dixie Theater, 1200 Main street.

THE NEW NAME, PHOTOPLAY.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Sir—Having read in the current number of your paper the decision of the judges in the Essanay contest giving us the name "Photoplay" as their selection, will you kindly allow me through your columns to express both surprise and disappointment at the result?

It is with pleasure that I read that the judges express themselves as "not being entirely satisfied," as this excuses them for not giving us a better name, if this, according to their ideas, was the best of those sent in; therefore it must appear that the fault still lies in the fact that the right name is yet to come, rather than a criticism of the judges, who no doubt did the best they could under the circumstances, and whose services must be appreciated.

The first fault with Photoplay is that it is entirely lacking in dignity; it is too exceedingly commonplace; its parallel in the theatrical world would be Stageplay, a word that would not be tolerated for a moment.

The etymology of the word is a crude blending which prohibits the elevating of moving picture work higher than playing, "playing is to play," and makes it impossible to remove the cinematograph away from playing or amusement.

I am perfectly aware that it will be argued that a name was only wanted for "a moving picture show." This, then, requires another name for moving picture work when applied to science, art, education or religious purposes, so that as the matter stands now we must have at least two names whereby moving pictures are to be known in the future. Again it was suggested that the contest was for the purpose of giving a name which would designate a "Moving Picture Theater." "Photoplay" from the very start proves so inefficient that one of the judges declares he must add "Theater" to make it complete, and instead of having a name that means a moving picture place, we have only a name that designates the nature of a theater. It seems impossible that among 2,500 suggested names there could not be found one that suggested "a moving picture theater." There appeared, Mr. Editor, in your issue of August 20 the correspondence of what the name should be. You will find by referring to that article that Photoplay fills some of those requisite conditions, take the one, for instance, that the new name should be "universal"; Photoplay is incapable of translation to any other language. Go the world over, you will find the name "Theater" alike everywhere; a similarly universal name should be given to our valued moving picture. In France, for instance, where much that is most valuable in the cinematograph found its origin, "Photoplay" is meaningless, therefore those interested in moving picture work, who travel, will need a vocabulary for a new name in every country. In this particular we have lost a great opportunity, for we might have had the honor of selecting a world name placed to America's credit.

The judges seemed to have erred when excluding all names such as graph, kino, etc.; by so doing they at once excluded both language and scholarship, because, let it be remembered, that "play" belongs to neither language nor scholarship.

Thus in a summary we have in "Photoplay" a name that does not mean a "moving picture theater" but only designates that the theater has moving pictures; second, "Photoplay" means only moving pictures in a theater and does not mean moving pictures in any educational capacity whatever; third, "Photoplay" has its only conception in and application to idiomatic English and cannot become universal; these conclusions make the selection extremely unfortunate.

I beg to refer again to the article of August 20, and hope that a name may yet be found to fill those requirements, and would suggest a contest (free from financial reward) which will produce the name our much-prized moving pictures so worthily deserve. The judges should be from America, England and France at least, and the name should be one complete in itself and big enough for the world.

Yours very truly,

W. H. JACKSON.

[There is considerable force in Mr. Jackson's letter. With him we hardly think that the question of selecting a new generic name for the picture house has been definitively settled, although "Photoplay" was in the circumstances an ingenious selection. We think this matter of so much interest that we invite our readers to let us have their views on the subject. There is room for an entirely new coined word. The case of the word "Kodak" as describing a universal camera occurs to us. There are other and similar cases. A coined word descriptive of a moving picture theater would be a very valuable asset to the business.—Ed. M. P. W.]

FROM AN OHIO EXHIBITOR.

Columbus, Ohio, September 11, 1910.

Editor of the Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Seeing so many varied opinions in your valuable paper on Independent and Association films, I want to say that I have been using Independent films from the day I opened, April 29, 1910, until the present and shall continue to use Independent films until the end of my career as a moving picture showman.

On the 10th of October I had the extreme pleasure of seeing two reels of the American Film Manufacturing Company, through the kindness of Mr. Kennedy, and can heartily say this, that I consider them as good and will go further and say they were better than any Independent films I ever saw, and if they continue to put out the rest of their subjects like those, they shall be the "top notchers" of the Independent.

The photography was great, and the characters were superb and I congratulate the American Film Company on their work and wish them continued success.

Yours truly,

JOHN BEKRAS,
Manager Hippodrome.

The New Park Street Theater, Adams, Mass., has opened under the management of James C. Sullivan.

The Pleasant Theater of Springfield, Mass. (Ed. Lynch, manager), is doing a big business with the aid of talking pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Lynch is a great boomer of the talking picture.

"Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some" (Essanay).—Though this is a short comedy it is a good one. These friends give an extremely funny exhibition of their idea of "duding up" and when the process is complete the friends of the gentlemen are quite ready to declare that their view of the process is sufficient to set a mark for operations of that character. It has been well said that good things are done up in small bundles. In this instance a funny picture has been put in a short length of film.

"Curing a Masher" (Essanay).—The education of a specimen of the genus masher is made the important feature of this film, and when the delectable young woman finishes Mr. Pest's course of instruction he is quite ready to admit that experience makes a business of teaching and that her lessons are seldom forgotten. Mr. Pest is a sight as he follows the young woman from store to store and is transformed into a pack animal for bringing home her purchases. And then, after all that, when he arrives at her home her athletic husband is waiting for him, equipped with the paraphernalia of prompt ejectment down four flights of stairs. Mr. Pest makes his ignominious exit in a tangle of hose and immediately swears an oath never to tempt fate in the form of a pretty woman again.

"The Hoodoo" (Pathe).—If all hoodoos could be smashed with such profitable results, probably less fear of these unwelcome influences would be felt. The little idol created a lot of trouble for a time and it kept Augustus busy escaping from its unwelcome attentions, but when broken open it disclosed wealth enough to dazzle one of greater mental capabilities than Augustus. Finally the hoodoo was anything but a hoodoo.

"Reedham's Orphanage Festival, 1910" (Urban-Eclipse).—A good record photograph showing the orphanage and what occurs at one of its festivals. There is much life, much of pleasant life in it, even though it is a picture of unfortunates. It will illustrate very graphically the way such children are cared for in modern times.

"A Gold Necklace" (Biograph).—A comedy of errors with a loaned necklace, lost in the grass, as the basis for them all. One and another got it, either by purchase or force, and not until all managed to get together and be introduced was it possible to untangle the maze in which the principals had lost themselves. The situations are humorous because they are unexpected and each one develops spontaneously without much assistance from the others.

"How Hubby Got a Raise" (Biograph).—A short comedy, presenting the methods adopted by Mrs. Knowit to assist her husband in getting a raise. Whether this should be accepted as good comedy, or as a travesty upon the efforts sometimes exerted in this direction, one can scarcely decide. It seems almost too bad to virtually accuse a woman of such poor judgment, yet this is what the film does, even though it is done under the guise of humor. The collapse when hubby is discharged because he lives beyond his means, is something long to be remembered.

"Woman's Vanity" (Lubin).—The hobble skirt is outdone in this picture. Perhaps the principal point of interest is what happens when the supposed white girl raises her veil: the mashers discover that she is black and promptly fall off the dock. As a travesty on the hobble skirt this picture has interest.

"The Golf Fiend" (Lubin).—Jones insisted upon playing golf regardless. Finally they all became tired of his performances and gave him a chase he will long remember. He doesn't play golf any more. The picture gives a graphic reason, one that would be accepted as conclusive by almost any fiend, whether golf or something else.

"Billy's Sister" (Melies).—Billy accidentally kills a bad man—no loss, of course, but the bad man's gang determine to lynch him. Warned by a friendly Indian girl, Billy, with the aid of his sister, escapes. Then she, dressed in his clothes, leads the gang a chase and when they prepare to lynch her she allows her hair to fall down, disclosing who she is and how badly they have been deceived. The picture says they let her go. But they must have been different from most bad men. Under most circumstances somebody would have been lynched, and it wouldn't have made much difference to them who. Here they allow a girl to get away from them without a gesture of opposition, even though she was instrumental in helping the one to escape they were after. It is very nice and quite like a Sunday school, or some other peaceful organization, to allow the girl to go; but it will be generally recognized that a rescue of some description would have been necessary in the original scheme.

"For Her Country's Sake" (Selig).—A story of the Revolution, the scene of which is laid in an inn near Valley Forge. There are numerous interesting scenes, particularly those where the soldiers of the two armies are shown. The denouement is impressive. The girl gives her own life to save that of Washington. The tragedy is made apparent when Washington appears in the room after it is supposed he has been killed. And when the father discovers that his own daughter has been killed by the assassin the scene is almost pitiful. Perhaps this did not occur. In fact, it probably did not. But it might, and like "Rigoletto" the scheme miscarried and the man's own child was murdered. If the play is not pleasant it is at least strong.

"Bumptious Plays Baseball" (Edison).—Perhaps no character in motion picture making is funnier than Bumptious. His confidence in himself is refreshing and his accidents and disappointments are wildly humorous. Here he is derided and ridiculed until he actually has a chance to make good. But just before he accomplishes it his ever-present hoodoo appears, and he doesn't succeed. The personality of the various players and the people in the grandstand are interesting, representing faithfully the various types seen about a ball game.

"The Farmer's Daughter" (Edison).—A pleasing comedy subject with an ending as humorous as it is unexpected. Here is a pretty girl, and perhaps pretty should be considered in this instance in the superlative degree. Of course, it is inevitable that she should have suitors, a number of them, in fact. One is determined to have her, and to clear the way he devises a plan whereby he is able to dispose of them all one after another. Yet he cannot stop its operation in time to prevent it working on him and he, too, goes the way of all the others. The ending is so bright and altogether unexpected that it adds much to the enjoyment of the film.

"Slippery Jim" (Pathe).—A trick picture, full of lively scenes. If ever a thief bothered the officers like this one, they would have good reason to become discouraged. Some of the disappearances are so unexpected and so cleverly done that they add much to the film's attractiveness. The evolutions on the bicycle in midair, with the reflection showing in the water, are particularly catchy. Others are only less so. And at the end, when the thief walks out through the iron bars and leaves his warders safely locked up, one almost feels as though he had earned his freedom by his cleverness.

"A Life for Love" (Pathe).—A tragedy that has dramatic qualities. It is a tale of ardent love, a revengeful father and a half-witted young man who loves the girl in his confused, idiotic way. And when the father schemes to murder the lover, the half-witted youth is set to watch him by the girl. Faithful to his trust, he and the father are found dead at the foot of a precipice, locked in each other's embrace. Faithful to his trust, he gave his life for the girl he loved. A man with all his mental faculties could have done no more.

"The Last of the Saxons" (Vitagraph).—A spectacular production dealing with the episode in English history by which Harold, Duke of Wessex, came to the throne in 1066. Then came William the Conqueror, who defeated Harold at the Battle of Hastings, where Harold was slain, and William came to the throne on Christmas Day in 1066. The picture has to do with the love affairs of Harold and Lady Edith. The magnificent ceremonies connected with the betrothal are produced with care. Then comes the political necessity of marrying Princess Aldyth. But Harold and Lady Edith keep in communication. She is the one who bids him a mournful farewell just before he starts for the fatal battle, and she it is who searches for his body among the slain after the battle ends. Perhaps this is the most elaborate picture of the week. How accurately it may reproduce the scenes of which it treats the writer cannot say. Yet it has all the appearance of accuracy and it is produced

"At the Sign of the Flying A"

AMERICAN FILMS

TWO REELS A WEEK

Release Days: Wednesday and Saturday

First Release Wednesday, November 2nd

"Romantic Redskins"

Superb photography—splendid acting—an enthralling Indian story. A film in other words that befittingly heralds the introduction of a new—but experienced—Independent film manufacturer to the Independent field.

Second Release Saturday, November 5th

"The Lure of the City"

A melodramatic picture of such intense interest that it will set a standard for comparison in this class of film. Photography superior to anything the Independent market has heretofore offered. Full and detailed stories of both of these Introductory Features will be found on another page of this Journal.

Two Hundred Dollars in Cash Prizes to Exhibitors, Operators, and Patrons of Moving Picture Shows who View this Film—Write the Contest Editor.

Your exchange will have these films—ask them to book you in advance.

AMERICAN FILM FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Manufactured by

THE AMERICAN FILM MANFG. CO.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK : : : CHICAGO, ILLS.

with so much care that it seems safe to accept it as historically correct. Love stories are the same whether the principal characters be royalty or peasants; but the costuming and the staging afford opportunities to acquire knowledge of the life and customs of that time more graphically than would be possible by long reading. Here is where motion pictures perform a service which cannot be equalled.

"The Bearded Bandit" (Essanay).—A stirring Western drama presenting as its principal character a man who is at once ranchman and bandit. When a price is placed on his head, as ranchman he smilingly consents to the marriage of his daughter and the sheriff as soon as the officer shall have captured the bandit and receives the reward. Then he goes out and holds up a stagecoach. Later, shot in a saloon, he turns over the evidence that he is the bearded bandit to his daughter so she may claim the reward, but through loyalty to her father's memory she destroys the evidence and never tells. It is a simple story, yet so strong is it in the telling that one enters into its very spirit and forgets for the time that it is only a picture. The only certain thing about the ending is that the bandit was never captured. It is a good story and well told, and is an excellent study of character. It is so interesting and different from the run of Western dramas that its subject can be overlooked and the picture enjoyed as a pleasing dramatic production.

"A Skier Training" (Gaumont).—A graphic illustration of what these hardy men undergo in preparing for what seems like a sensational method of locomotion. The skier is an object of great interest, and this picture, representing the training it requires to make him successful, will be long remembered.

"An Indian's Gratitude" (Pathe).—A story of the gold time in California. While the picture is beautifully done and the scenery is attractive, the story possesses no particular interest. Indians have been known to show gratitude like this, but who ever knew an Indian, even hard pressed, to fall over a precipice? Sometimes they have jumped over to escape their pursuers, but for one to fall over is sufficiently rare to be a novelty. One is ready to rejoice with the white men when they get back their gold, and one may enjoy the chase, part of which is over virgin land and part in canoes. These scenes are picturesque and attractive. Perhaps the picture performs something of a service in depicting characteristic scenes in California in the early days, but aside from that one can scarcely commend its dramatic quality.

"The Sage, the Cherub and the Widow" (Vitagraph).—A refined comedy, telling a charming love story and developing numerous interesting situations. Acted with all the ability which characterizes the work of this capable company, and staged with skill, the picture presents an opportunity for pleasant diversion. It has much laughing interest, maintaining this interest throughout. The amusing experiences of this trio are well worth seeing and dull indeed is he who does not enter into the spirit of the picture and accept it at its value as an amusing enterprise.

"The Chink at Golden Gulch" (Biograph).—Perhaps if everyone could see such heroic self-sacrifice in a Chinaman as this one displayed, the aversion which most men feel toward them would disappear. It is doubtful, however, if such unselfishness and generosity abide in more than an occasional individual. The picture is not up to the Biograph standard but is an interesting study in human nature, well acted and clearly photographed.

"The Clown and the Minister" (Lubin).—A touching picture, presenting the dilemma of an actor who is called upon to leave a sick child just at the crisis, and do his turn upon the stage. But the minister rises to the occasion. He assumes the clown's costume and saves the precious hour and the little life is saved. That is all there is to the story; simple, you will say, and dealing with the homely things of life, yet there is a quality about it which goes straight to the heart and one suffers with the father while he watches over the little sufferer as her weak breath flutters between returning strength and extinguishment. And when it is over and the troupe learn what has been done, reverence is clearly stamped upon each countenance as the father and minister both give thanks. It is a daring picture, yet, one has no less reverence for the minister who donned the motley than before. On the other hand, one looks upon it as a human thing to do, and one's heart goes out involuntarily to the man who dared to do it.

"The Stigma" (Pathe).—Only a motion picture, yet it emphasizes the cruelty with which civilization treats its convicts and their unfortunate families. They serve their sentence, but the stigma is ineffaceable. It follows them to the grave. No matter if those dependent upon them starve. The same thing holds good. Not everyone is so fortunate when he breaks into a house, after vainly trying to obtain honest employment, as this one. Not always does he have a brave act to his credit and someone to plead for him. The picture tells the story too graphically to be altogether comfortable. It ought to help in arousing a sentiment in the mind of the public against the enormity of this offense. Sympathetically acted, this picture is more than it claims to be, and its influence should be helpful.

"Betty Is Punished" (Pathe).—At last Betty comes to grief. Her activities at last force the landlord to order her out, and the removal is the direct cause of her punishment. The exercise of her peculiar talents is such that she succeeds in causing a calamity, and then comes a drubbing she will long remember. Of course it is a funny picture. It couldn't be anything else with Betty in it, but there is rather too much smashing and rough-house to make it particularly desirable. However, most audiences like this sort of a comic and they show no particular objection to breaking up the furniture. There are, though, other types of humor more desirable and quite as funny.

"The Sanitarium" (Selig).—The young man who transformed his uncle's palatial residence into a sanitarium and the calamity which compelled him to pay back the money his patients gave him, are so graphically told in this picture that one is almost ready to sympathize with him. Misfortune seemed his lot and his woebegone looks after the last dollar has been paid back and the last patient has departed, and the telegram comes saying that his uncle will not be back, would melt the most stony heart. The picture is acted with spirit and the personality of the Selig players pervades it so strongly that it is especially attractive. It is a comedy which develops its humor through unexpected situations and good acting, and the result is almost one continuous laugh.

"The Song that Reached His Heart" (Edison).—A story that will touch the hearts of many because it brings back long forgotten, or only dimly remembered scenes wherein some old and favorite song has played an important part. The visions which it brings to the lumberman in the Canadian Northwest could probably be duplicated in one way or another by every middle-aged man or woman. Perhaps not always with the glamor of the romance exhibited here, but in some way. The phonograph, too, has an important part, and as the familiar strains of "Annie Laurie" pour from the instrument the man's visions are all of the long ago. Then comes the romance, which is well told and somehow does not seem improbable. If the old song, heard in the room above, prevented the man from committing a crime, it is probably no more than the same song has done before. And after it is over and the lovers are reunited one's imagination may run riot in the happy possibilities of the future. The setting is in the Canadian Northwest and the picture is well worth seeing for that alone. Giant trees, lumber camps and lumbermen and an outlook on the grandeur of that scenery. Apart from the interesting story, this picture is worthy of commendation. It is a welcome addition to Edison's series depicting the life of that new and rapidly developing section of the world.

"The Lovers' Mill" (Gaumont).—A colored trick film which will attract more than the average attention. Briefly, it runs four lovers through the hopper of a mill where they are subjected to the same processes as is wheat when it is made into flour and moves forward into the bakery. There the particles reunite and form again the original persons. The story is merely sufficient to add some zest to the picture, or give a reason for its existence. The scenery is picturesque, the views of the old mill offering many suggestions for excellence in pictorial work. The coloring is well done, adding to the film's other attractions.

"The Three Friends" (Gaumont).—A picture in which the principal feature is the clever acting of a dog. After his master, a cabman, has fainted in his cab, from weakness, the dog mounts the box and drives to a hospital. The Gaumont dog has acted in many films before, always with satisfaction, but never better than in this one. The action of an animal always interests and pleases and the cleverer it is the more pleased will the audience be. No manager will make a mistake if he includes this picture in his program.

"Brother Man" (Vitagraph).—A new-born babe is made the unconscious influence which turns a burglar from his evil ways and sets him on the right path once more. And the father, even after the burglar has forcibly entered his house, refuses to cause his arrest and agrees to help him to obtain honest employment. "And a little child shall lead them," is true, no matter what the circumstances may be. Around the babe the brotherhood of man asserts itself, and

Real Music That Really Fits the Picture

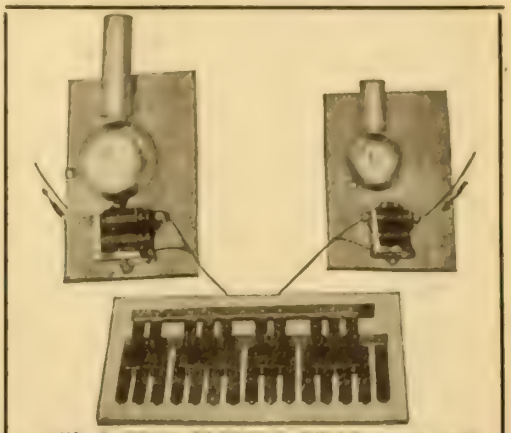
"MOTION PICTURE PIANO MUSIC"

FIFTY CENTS A COPY.

A Piano Book that contains descriptive Music to fit all probable Scenes, Actions, Characters, etc., shown in Moving Pictures. Composed and compiled by a Professional Pianist of twenty years' experience in Theatrical lines. Brimfull of practical suggestions for the inexperienced Pianist in a M. P. Theater. Descriptive Circular sent free upon request. Book will be sent promptly upon receipt of fifty cents. Address,

FRELINGER MUSIC COMPANY

LAFAYETTE, IND.



OUR PATENT ELECTRIC BELLS create great enthusiasm in Moving Picture Houses, play from a keyboard as a solo instrument, or as an accompaniment to songs. Twenty-five Bells, two octaves chromatic, including resonators, magnets and keyboard, $75.00.

J. C. DEAGAN

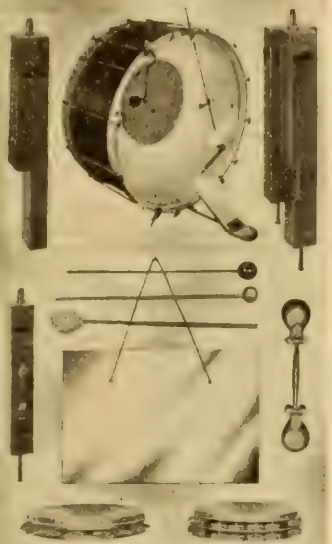
3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Drums, Traps, and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.

272 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.



The Pedal of the Hour

This latest invention eliminates all pedal worries. Produces natural arm struck tone. Ease of action phenomenal. Constructed entirely of metal. Strong and durable. Folds in space 9¼ x 3½. Weight only 35 oz. Just the thing for vaudeville. Keep in touch with progress. Write for complete description and testimonials. We have everything you need for your line. We supply Chicago's leading picture houses with drums and effects.

LUDWIG & LUDWIG

134 E. Van Buren St., Room 610, Chicago, Ill.

Moving Picture Pianists

Are you "working up" your pictures? If not, why not? If so, you want some good melodramatic music. Send for free sample page of "Orpheum Collection of Moving Picture Music." Now being used and praised by many of the best houses in the country.

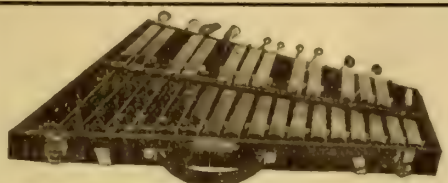
PRICE.....75 CENTS

Also latest cue music (series 1910) for 10 parts and piano.....$1.00

¼ discount on both numbers.

Clarence E. Sinn

1501 Sedgwick St., CHICAGO, ILL.



Xylophones, Orchestra Bells, Chimes, Forks, etc. Send for free illustrated catalogue.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Sound Effects

In Picture Machine Theaters it is very essential that the imitations and sound effects are of the kind that can be depended upon. We make only practical and serviceable imitations that will give the exact reproduction of the original. We also manufacture Chimes, Tympani, Bells, Xylophones, Drums and accessories.

LEEDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

1055 E. Palmer St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

WURLITZER

Automatic Musical Instruments

They do the work of expert musicians and reduce operating expense.

Wurlitzer is the world's largest manufacturer. We supply the U. S. Government musical instruments. Write for big 84-page catalogue showing the only complete line of self-players, from a small electric piano to automatic orchestra representing 35 musicians. Easy payments.

Concert Piano Orchestra.

RUDOLPH WURLITZER & CO.

CINCINNATI—117 to 121 E. 4th; NEW YORK—25 & 27 W. 32d (bet. B'way & 5th Ave.); CHICAGO—266 & 268 Wabash Ave.; PHILADELPHIA—1835 Chestnut; ST. LOUIS—912 Pine; CLEVELAND—206 Prospect Ave., S. E.; COLUMBUS, O.—57 E. Main.

WURLITZER

TO TRAP DRUMMERS

A Limited Time Offer

Special Offer $10.00 — Size Shell 3 x 14 / Size Shell 3 x 15

Solid Maple, Rosewood or Walnut, 10 fine plated thumb screw rods, Kangaroo, Angora or Skunk Calf Drum Heads.

We ship with privilege of 6 days trial

E. P. ZEIDLER DRUM CO.

Dept. F. Cleveland, Ohio

Send for my large free catalogue of Folding and Parlor Organs, suitable for use in Moving Picture Theatres.

Address

J. C. KAY

4036 Ellis Avenue, Chicago

thoughtfulness for others in misfortune or surrounded with adverse conditions, hovers, unbidden, yet none the less effective.

"Actors' Fund Fair" (Vitagraph).—A travesty upon the actors and actresses known to every theatergoer in the country. And the stunts they do and the funny things they offer will keep an audience laughing from the beginning to the end. It is lively, true to the life, and reproduces so many strange and unexpected features that your audience will want to see it again.

"A Home Melody" (Vitagraph).—A picture deep in heart interest. It shows how a mother's reason is restored when she hears again an old melody which had once been her favorite. The theme is not new, but it is handled with unusual appreciation of its dramatic possibilities and the actors have interpreted the drama with a sympathy which it would be difficult to equal. Great care was exercised in the staging and in the grouping in the various scenes, giving them an artistic character which is out of the ordinary run of pictures of this type

INDEPENDENT.

"The Virgin of Babylon" (Ambrosio).—Staged to represent ancient Babylon, this picture presents some dramatic elements which will hold the attention. Monarchs have long committed similar acts of injustice, and more than one has ordered his innocent victims to execution because his will was thwarted, but few ever saw ferocious lions fawn at the feet of the prisoner. Superstitious awe taking possession of him, the girl was released and restored to her lover while her would-be executioner paid her homage.

"Levi, the Cop" (Atlas).—A funny film which will keep them laughing. Levi is a cop who deserves all he gets. Some of the situations in which he finds himself are extremely funny, and the entire film is a laugh-maker.

"The Laugh's on Father" (Atlas).—Of course it is, and when you see this short film you will join with the others in recognizing that fact.

"A Western Girl's Sacrifice" (Champion).—While this picture is strongly dramatic it suffers somewhat because a similar picture was put out by another firm a short time ago. Whether it was merely a coincidence, or whether one or the other producer was duped into accepting a scenario already used by another, one cannot say. But with location changed this is the same story as was told in "The House with the Closed Shutters," which was released August 8. The working out is through a Western story of horse-thieves, and the girl falls while impersonating her brother to permit him to escape. The acting is reasonably good, and there is a touch of sacrific which goes straight to the heart. It was a sacrifice indeed, but it saved the family honor.

"Wild Bill's Defeat" (Defender).—A little novelty is introduced into this picture by the fact that a consumptive sent West for his health unexpectedly becomes the hero of the town. Despondent and ready to commit suicide, he conceives the idea of challenging the bad man of the place to a duel, and the bully runs away. Then things begin to come the hero's way and he discovers that suicide is wholly unnecessary. Because of this novel situation the film can scarcely be considered in the same category with other Western films, but stands by itself more interesting and showing a phase of life not heretofore familiar to motion picture patrons.

"The Deciding Vote" (Imp).—This political film, presenting a phase of political scheming far too common, may, perhaps, offer an explanation of the reason some legislators go wrong. Under these circumstances men are few who could have withstood the temptation. Whether the man did right in accepting the bribe and voting the other way, is a nice question which needs careful consideration to decide. Probably almost everyone will say that he did right to vote against the scheme. But in that case he had received money under false pretenses and was on the other horn of the dilemma. It is a subtle question, and right now, when political questions obscure all else, it is well to stop and look it over for a time. Perhaps it will exert an influence upon some of the political manipulations now in progress

"The Girl Scout" (Bison).—A Western picture with emigrants and Indians in a battle, while the girl scout goes for aid. She and the cowboys do some wild riding to get to the scene of the conflict, which they do, and the battle ends with the Indians defeated. This is a sanguinary disturbance. Indian after Indian falls from his horse, dead, and many of the unfortunate settlers are wounded. But the girl scout discovers that her lover is alive even though his wound is bad. Apart from the riding this picture is like most of the other Western films pouring from the producers and has little to commend it. Redskins and settlers were generally in some sort of trouble, hence it has ceased to be a novelty. If these pictures were devoted to the interpretation of some historic incident, or depicted something of the early life on the plains apart from the inevitable and more or less sanguinary battles, they would be of greater value and would add to the knowledge of those who see them.

"Where the Sun Sets" (Nestor).—A picture of self-sacrifice, representing what is often true in families where one brother or sister seems to bear the brunt of the battle for all the rest. It is one of those little domestic pictures that get very close to what is real in life, and afford a fresh view of what the human heart is capable when it is at its best.

"Giorgione" (Cines).—A love tragedy involving a painter, Giorgione; a poor peasant girl and a high Venetian lady who loves the painter to distraction. She has the poor girl spirited away, but the jailor dies and the girl escapes and arrives just in time to see Giorgione fall back dead, after one look of recognition. It is a love tragedy purely, and this brief description covers its salient points. The acting is good and considerable care has been exerted in the staging. The photography is not always as clear as it might be, but in only minor places is this true, and these faults could be easily corrected.

"Avenged" (Thanhouser).—A tragedy based upon a taxi-cab accident which cripples a man whose life ever after is a struggle with adversity. The two men come together after the death of the unfortunate's wife and the injured man determines to seek vengeance, but is deterred by a vision of his dead wife. Rushing away to her grave, he dies there. Possibly the dramatic qualities of this picture are sufficient reason for its existence; but it has no other reason. It is not entertaining. It is not instructive. It cannot amuse. The shadow of death pervades it and the horror tragedy is its principal factor. It is such a departure from the usual Thanhouser that it seems as though the regular producer was absent when it slipped past the company's censor.

"Jealousy" (Columbia).—The title suggests all sorts of possibilities, yet it will be admitted that jealousy has been an important feature in human development. Without it nothing would have been done worth while in some directions, though in others it has wrecked homes and has despoiled governments. The story here told is sufficiently familiar to be readily understood, and as a first release the film may well be classed as good. Circumstances are so influential in the development of themes of this character that perhaps some of the success is due to propitious circumsances when it was produced. Fortunately the story is not objectionable, though at times it borders rather closely upon the objectionable line. However, it is safe to say that those who see it will talk about it to their friends, and every manager understands full well the advertising value of a feature of that sort.

"The Storms of Life" (Great Northern).—A picture of considerable dramatic interest, yet offering disagreeable suggestions. For a girl to leave her husband because he is poor and contract an illegal marriage with a marquis, a former lover, who agrees to give her mother a home, is not the pleasantest sort of a picture, even though it may be true. And then later comes reconciliation with her husband. If the picture is intended as a story of what is done in some instances, it has merit. If it is intended as a drama merely, the suggestion offered is not the best. The plot might have been worked out in a way to save the stigma of selling herself which attaches to the girl. The acting and photography are not to be criticised, but one does not like the character of the story.

"Foolshead, Fisherman" (Itala).—Once again this comedian appears in an interesting role. If there are any fishing stunts which Foolshead does not employ, probably he would be glad to be reminded of the omission. And then what he catches! Not every fisherman is so blessed, nor, perhaps, would they care to be. But the picture is what it purports to be, an excellent comedy, and as such deserves commendation.

"Within an Inch of His Life" (Powers).—It opens in New York in a sensational scene, ending in an accidental discharge of a revolver which looks to the outside world like murder. Then the picture shifts to the West, with a stage hold-up, an accusation of murder, a thrilling court scene with a sensational denouement when the man's own statement that he shot himself is discovered and produced in court by the girl just in time to prevent his condemnation for murder. It is one of those thrilling stories that somehow touch the heart and keep one up to a pitch of intense excitement all the time. Both acting and photography are excellent, each performing its part in the presentation.

"The Order Is to March" (Eclair).—A comedy representing a recruit who got the order to march and continues it, no matter what the obstructions, until he lands in the hospital. And then not until he gets an order to halt does the forward motion cease.

"Jes' Plain Dog" (Imp).—Ah, yes, who and what is it that follows a man through life and after death faithfully guards his grave against the approach of an enemy? Jes' plain dog. Who is it that shares prosperity, or hunger and cold alike, content if he may only be near his master? Jes' plain dog. The Imp people have embodied this in a film that will strangely stir the emotions and will leave few moist eyes in the house. Forgotten and forlorn, the faithful dog is turned aside for the new wife; but she proves faithless and it is the dog who becomes the man's comforter. It has been so before. It will be so again. "Jes' Plain Dog" will touch a responsive chord in more than one bosom, and men and women will go home, better because they have seen this reproduction of unswerving devotion. The film is well worth while.

"A Game of Hearts" (Imp).—A mix-up over a game of cards and a proposed wedding which after a couple of furious altercations between the old men over their card games were amicably adjusted and the young people received their parents' blessing. The pleasure of this film is in the acting, which is especially good and offers opportunities for the actors to exhibit their abilities, which they do admirably. The story itself is not erudite or deep. Neither is it tragic, but it illustrates some prevalent traits in human nature and develops apparently impossible conditions, but the settlement is peaceful, and what is of more importance the young people's plans are not permanently impeded.

"The Monogramed Cigarette" (Yankee).—A genuine detective story, begun by a man who was killed by the men he was following, and was continued by his daughter, who runs them to earth. A portion of a monogramed cigarette was the only clue, but the girl runs down the criminals, recovers the stolen jewels and sends her father's murderer to the electric chair, all from that one slight clew. It is thrilling and interesting, and like all stories of that type abounds in stirring situations. Acted with discretion, the film is one of the best of this type in some weeks.

"A Cowboy's Daring Rescue" (Bison).—A Western picture representing card-playing, gambling, drinking, an abducted girl carried away by two men, a man over a cliff after a lively fight with the girl's lover, and finally a wedding, or a near wedding.

"A Man and a Girl" (Powers).—A rather thrilling picture. The story is just a series of misunderstandings, with opportunities for some gun play and a development of complications over love affairs. However, the girl marries the man she wants and the threatened annihilation is averted.

"Simpson's Skate" (Powers).—Frank Weston, an English acrobatic comedian and champion roller skater, plays the principal part in this and the stunts he performs on rollers while apparently drunk, set a new standard for trick skating. The wildest imagination would not go far wrong in allowing its flights to suggest possibilities in skating.

"Pocahontas" (Thanhouser).—It is an achievement of note to get so famous a character as Pocahontas on the films, and this company has accomplished it with fidelity to legend In other words, the story as it is understood is faithfully depicted in this picture. It is needless to go over it. Perhaps, too, it is not well to look too closely at its production Probably no one can tell exactly what was or was not done, if, indeed, the story is anything more than a romance. In producing the picture the actors have represented scenes as they are understood, and in doing that they have pleased a majority of those who will see it. The different characters are represented in harmony with the popular conception of them. Historic legends, which may mean much or little are always interesting reading and they are even more interesting when put on the films. The photography is good, and the background has been selected with care. The Thanhouser people are particularly happy in reproductions of this character and their reputation has gained by this latest addition to their list.

"How the Tenderfoot Made Good" (Champion).—A lively Western picture, acted with spirit and photographed with precision. It represents possibilities in the tenderfoot which were actually developed in more than one instance. When the tenderfoot brings in the outlaw in an original way and wins the sheriff's star his troubles are over and whatever the ranch affords is his, even to the judge's daughter. And that is how this tenderfoot made good. Some of the ranch scenes are excellent, presenting correct views of those interesting places. The humanity in the picture is an important factor in its popularity, however.

"The Pit that Speaks" (Ambrosio).—A title that arouses one's interest, and the story, as it develops, offers more than the usual interest which attaches to melodramatic stories. A poor soldier, in love with a duke's daughter, discovers plotters against the king, vanquishes them in a lively battle, secures the papers, is rewarded with a dukedom and marries the girl of his choice. Who can work out any better story than that? A fight is always interesting, and when one man singlehanded kills everybody in sight, there is a feeling of exultation and one feels like shaking hands with the invincible hero. But he got the girl, to him the main feature of his career. But even though all this is true, the film doesn't rise above "the usual thing" in any place.

"Tweedledum's Duel" (Ambrosio).—Here is a suggestion well worth following. Tweedledum is challenged to a duel and accepts. But when it comes to the selection of weapons a sense of fear oppresses him and one after another they are discarded, finally closing with the selection of two bottles of champagne, surely two more harmless weapons could not be found.

"When Cupid Sleeps" (Atlas).—A lively comedy which represents the difficulties that arise when Cupid sleeps and fails to keep his numerous slaves in subjection. All goes well when the little god is vigilant, but once allow that vigilance to relax and the mixup that follows beggars description. This film depicts it graphically and completely. But when he wakes and begins to sentence his unruly subjects there is consternation. And probably they won't do so any more.

"The Cowboys to the Rescue" (Champion).—Here is another Western picture with cowboys, gamblers and other accessories of what is apparently popularly supposed to represent a Western tale. To be sure these were frequently a part of the picturesque landscape, but there were others in the West. The girl in this picture, from a gambler's assistant, eventually changes to a loveable character, and her reversal, when she discovered her love for the young man her relatives were fleecing, followed by her spectacular holdup of her father and brother to make them disgorge, and then her listening to the young man's mother, are all admirably conceived and dramatically carried out.

"The Golden Hoard" (Nestor).—A love story with a miser and his gold, a gambler who wanted it and a heart spell to afford opportunity for the gambler to falsely accuse an innocent young man. But it worked out right in the end and the father gave his consent to the young people's wedding.

"Curing a Grouch" (Atlas).—If that Risibility Elixir is procurable in quantities to make it commercially important, the inventor can insure himself a fortune by selling it to unfortunates who may be seriously afflicted. The man with a grouch frequently requires some sort of vigorous treatment and this one got his; but it was effective and after the treatment he was so changed his best friends did not know him. No longer afflicted with a grouch he indulges in such continuous and unseemly hilarity that he is put in jail, but even that does not quell the risibility that wells within him. And from sour face he becomes the embodiment of geniality.

"The Steamship Mauretania" (Atlas).—This firm departs from its line of comics to present a scenic feature, presenting an excellent picture of this famous steamship. The subject is well photographed and affords opportunity for those unacquainted with steamships to acquire a reasonably accurate idea of one.

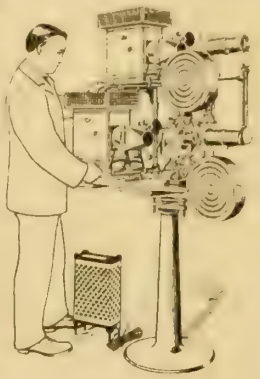
"The Betrothed's Secret" (Ambrosio).—To base a drama upon the fact that a supposed girl is a widow with a son seems rather far fetched. Whether a man would refuse to live with his bride or not under such circumstances is a question which others may determine. But the reason doesn't seem satisfactory. It looks like a manufactured reason which probably would have no counterpart in real life. When the boy saves the occupants of a flying automobile and a reconciliation follows the author possibly atones for his lack of strength in the story.

"Tweedledum on His First Bicycle" (Ambrosio).—Whoever has seen a man trying to master the bicycle will appreciate this snappy comedy. The stunts the rider performs and the way he clears pedestrians from his path is a caution to beginners. The movements of the man and the wheel are naturally performed and furnish a few minutes of unadulterated fun.

Improvements in Projecting Machines.

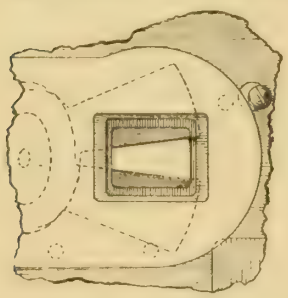
THE MOTIOGRAPH.

It is with much interest that we note the great amount of energy and expense that is being devoted toward the production of machines, etc., for the projection of better pictures, and especially the results obtained by a concern that has, we believe, been most active in this direction during the past three years. Not content with having introduced many original improvements and having made their machines a marked continuous success from the beginning, and even in the midst of the most strenuous efforts to keep pace with the demand, the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company are introducing twenty-two valuable improvements and accessories for the Motiograph Motion Picture Machine for 1910.

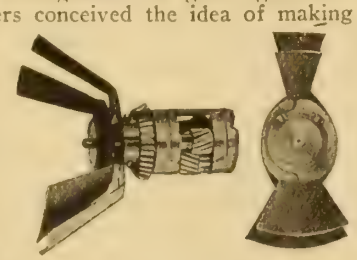


The Motiograph was first placed on the market in the latter part of 1907. It was something of a departure from what was generally known on the market in that it was the first of what is known as the enclosed type, having the gears and other working parts enclosed so as to prevent the intrusion of dust. It was also provided with an enclosure for the star and Geneva parts, which operate in an oil bath.

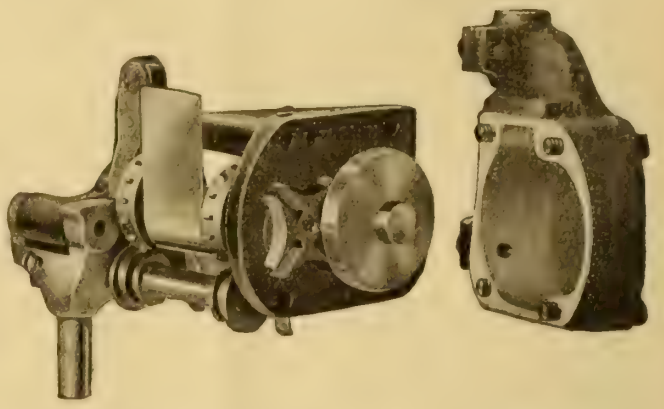
One of the special features of this new machine was what is known as the double cone shutter, which consists of two separate wings operating in opposite directions, each wing carrying an auxiliary or interrupting wing. By operating in opposite directions, the speed with which the opening and closing of the light aperture was accomplished was very much reduced, by which reduction the period of illumination was increased and the period of darkness largely decreased. This is a strong factor in the production of more brilliant pictures and the elimination of flicker. When the machine first made its appearance, these shutters were revolved in opposite directions by the use of what is known as mitre gears, the gears being placed in a hollow tube or casing, which casing was fastened into the frame of the machine and held in place by a single screw. One of the shutter wings was mounted on a hollow shaft, the other on a solid shaft that passed through the hollow shaft, and on each of these shafts was a mitre gear. Operating connections between these two shafts and the main gearing was obtained through a short shaft with a bevel gear on each end.



While the above described arrangement of gears gave excellent service, the manufacturers conceived the idea of making a special effort towards quick interchangeability of parts, referred to in their catalogue as the "quick take-down," and the parts described above were the first to receive attention. The improvement on these parts consists of using four spiral steel gears, all contained within the casing, so as to make it complete within itself. Then the connection is made with the main gears through a large bevel gear at the end of the casing. This arrangement permits this entire casing with its pair of shutters to be removed by the removal of two screws.



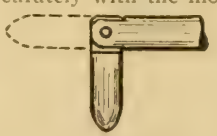
Another feature of the Motiograph was that the framing device which carries the intermittent sprocket and Geneva action could be removed for interchangeability by the removal of a single bolt or rod, and lifting the framing device from the front of the machine; the front plate of the machine being held in place by a spring, it was easily removed, but as a further feature of convenience, the provision is made this year for removing the framing device from the right hand side of the mechanism. The opening through which the framing device is removed, is covered by a plate which is held in place by a spring catch. By removing the framing device from the side, there is no interference from the shutters.



The crank pin which passed through the shaft in the 1909 model has been dispensed with, so that when the gear bridge is removed, by loosening three screws, the crank shaft may be immediately withdrawn. The shutter drive shaft on the new model is made in two parts, an important feature of which is that the gear bridge and most of the gears may be removed without disturbing the shutters; that is, without getting them out of time with the intermittent sprocket.

A new film tension consisting of two shoes, or pressure bars, and a spring, furnishes a uniform tension through almost the entire length of the aperture plate. Each pressure bar is entirely independent of the other, but at the same time they are both held rigid and firm, which contributes much to the steadiness of the picture and prevents wear.

A new means has been provided for the adjustment of the double cone shutters, so as to time them conveniently and accurately with the movement of the intermittent sprocket wheel.



A new reel shaft clamp, as shown in illustration, provides a most convenient means of changing reels. The end of the shaft is jointed and is held in position by a spring plug. By turning the clamp at right angles, the reel is held in position, while turning it to a point in line with the shaft, the reel may be removed.

In the 1909 model the sprockets were made of brass, and while the teeth were of such shape and the quality of the material was such that they wore for a long time, the later improvements consist of solid steel sprocket wheels, which has probably doubled the wearing qualities.

A one-piece balance shaft and ball socket dispenses with any possibility of those parts coming loose.

One of the features of the Motiograph is what is called a swivel base, by which the mechanism may be turned on its sub-base to any desired angle for examination, adjustment, etc. The clamp for this sub-base on the 1909 model was on the top of the base. This year it is placed underneath, and the hand wheel by which it is clamped, has been very much enlarged.

The fireproof film magazines have been made considerably larger, ample room having been provided for films that may be considerably in excess of one thousand feet. The reel arms have been made longer to accommodate the larger magazines.

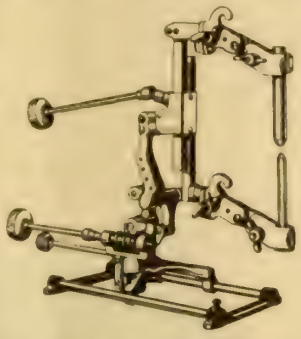
Provision has been made for the use of a shutter in front of the lens, this improvement having come into somewhat general use. The manufacturers claim that its principal advantage is for the use of extreme short focus lenses, and while a shutter in front of the lens makes a very smooth picture, its brilliancy will not compare with that of the double cone shutter, because of the greater amount of illumination that is saved by the use of the double cone shutter.

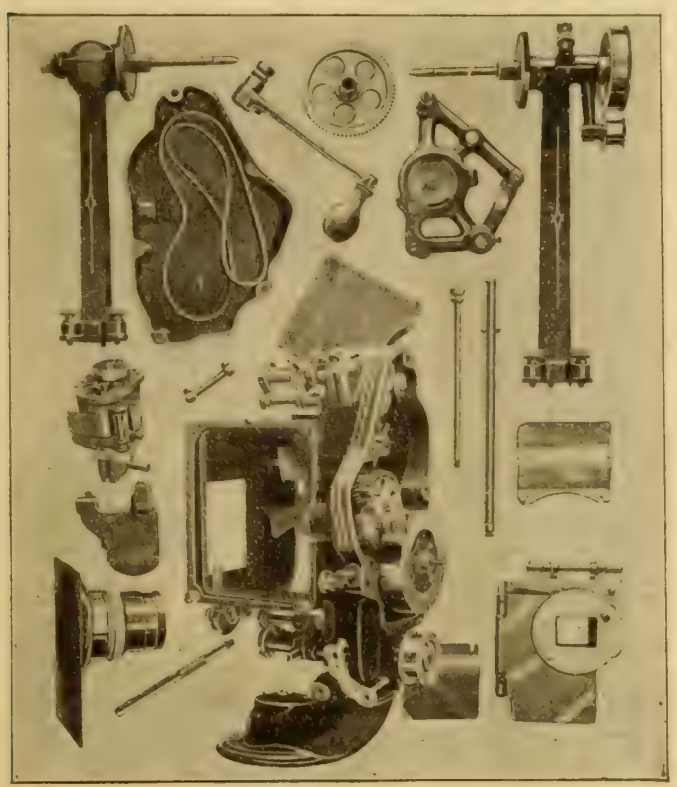
One of the important improvements and one that is very much appreciated by the operator, is the extra heavy arc lamp of new and special design, and the very large lamp house with an extremely large door that covers almost the entire side of the lamp house. The arc lamp is nearly double the weight of the last year's model, which model was heavier than the average. The new arc lamp is made on a new principle. The vertical movement is obtained in a manner that does not permit of any sticking, as it operates on two pivots, so to speak, and is brought into its various positions by a threaded screw instead of a rack and pinion. It is not possible for it to either stick or drop. The cut herewith gives a fair idea of the 1910 model lamp, but it does not give an idea of the proportionate weight and the principles of operation.



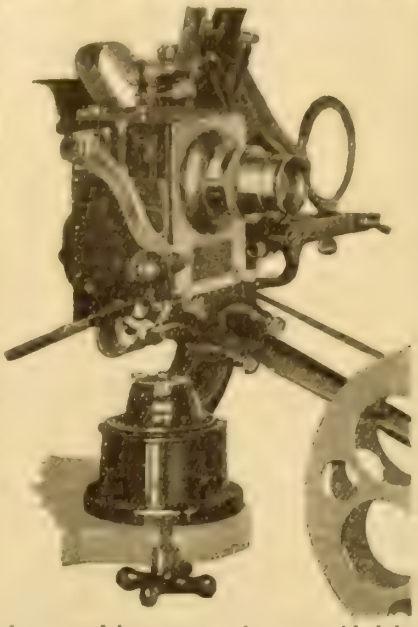
A fixture for the adjustment of the upper carbon is a very important feature. By the use of this fixture, the upper carbon may be set forward or back with relation to the lower carbon, by which adjustment the arc may be changed so as to secure the best illumination possible.

An attachment, called the Universal Carbon Clamp, may also be had for this arc lamp, which attachment permits of the carbon being set at any angle and securely and firmly clamped in position.

To provide for the prevention of the breaking of the wires at the point where they connect to the arc lamp, the auxiliary wire clamp has been added. This auxiliary wire clamp prevents the bending strain from coming at the point of contact with the binding screw, and distributes it more evenly throughout the entire length of the cable that is on the inside of the lamp house.



Another feature is that the insulation, instead of being placed at a movable joint, has been placed at a point of the lamp where there is no movement, that the insulation is not disturbed and will probably never give out. Instead of the carbon clamps being fastened at the insulating point, they are held in place by two screws forward of the insulating point, and may be very quickly and easily changed in case of accident, which, however, is not likely, owing to the carbon clamps being very heavy and strong, and being made of such material that there is little likelihood of their sustaining any damage.



The V-shaped seat in the carbon clamp for the reception of the carbon, instead of being left rough as it comes from the foundry, or being filed to shape, is finished on a milling machine and is perfectly straight, which makes it possible to clamp the carbons securely without danger of breaking the carbons.

A very important advantage claimed for the improvements on the mechanism is that the mechanism may, with the assistance of only a screwdriver, be stripped of most of its parts and reassembled in about ten minutes. This makes it possible to take the mechanism apart for cleaning or other purposes with the least possible inconvenience, and is a feature that is very much appreciated by those operators who have used them.

Chicago Notes.

The following exhibitors visited the new Western offices of the Moving Picture World this week: C. D. Caster, Swastika Theater, Benton Harbor Mich.; A. J. Slater, Star Theater, Barrien Springs, Mich.; C. E. Eckels, Stratton Theater, Hobart, Ind., and Princess Theater, South Haven, Mich.; A. G. Hoof, Lyric Theater, Rockford, Ill.; C. O. Berger, Orchard Theater, Chicago; W. O. Runcie, Cheltenham Theater, Chicago; A. G. Rider, Lincoln Park Theater, Chicago; L. M. Seavert, Ogden Theater, Chicago; T. W. Furniss, of the Brunswick Company, operating houses in Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.

* * *

Owing to the dissatisfaction among the exchange people occasioned by the manufacturers selling their posters direct to the exhibitors, it is asserted that hereafter posters will be supplied to the trade only through the exchanges. No posters will be furnished by the manufacturers except in cases where it is absolutely impossible to obtain them from the exchanges.

We are in receipt of an invitation from President Fred. E. Havill to attend an open meeting of Chicago Local No. 145, to be held Thursday evening, November 17. All managers, exhibitors, union and non-union operators, exchange men, or any one interested in the moving picture industry will be cordially welcomed to this meeting. Chicago Local is endeavoring to create a feeling of closer relationship among picture men, and hope through the exchange of opinions and views on different subjects, to be able to assist in the uplift of the business.

Our visiting exhibitors sometimes have us "up a tree" with questions regarding films and film service. This week we were asked by several parties "what becomes of the titles? And especially the title for the second subject on a split reel?" It is aggravating for the audience to see a picture without a title, and nine cases out of ten they blame it on the operator. Some operators make slide titles for the first subject on a reel, but as one remarked, "I can't see through the center of the reel to find the title on the second subject," so naturally it is run without. We are not positive, but it would seem that the film without a title has been neglected by the inspectors in the exchanges, and if that is the case, why are so many neglected, and why so often. We are anxious to know "what becomes of the titles?"

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

THE BROKEN DOLL. Joe Stevens came out West to court fortune prospecting in the mountains. He has met with more than fair success and writes his wife that she might join him as soon as she could. Wishing to surprise him, she and their child appear before him unannounced. On the day of her arrival a party of Indians from a reservation nearby visit the village to procure supplies. Among them is a little Indian girl, who, being an unfavored child, is very roughly treated by her mother. The poor tot has never known a kind word or attention. Approaching the cabin of Stevens, the little Indian beholds Joe's child playing with a very pretty doll. The doll fascinates the Indian girl and Mrs. Stevens persuades her daughter to give it to her. This act of kindness, the first the poor little child has ever experienced, so overwhelms her with gratitude that she is at a loss to know how to express it. However, her little heart pulsates with a new energy, and she leaves her new found friends all aglow with thanks. Meanwhile, the Indians have been making a round of the stores and one of them is cruelly assassinated by a drunken rowdy. The Indians, vowing vengeance, return to the reservation with the lifeless brave. A council of war is held, during which the little one appears with the doll in her arms. One of the Indians seizes this effigy of a white baby and hurls it over the bank, and when the girl climbs down and regains it she finds it hopelessly broken. Heart-crushed, the little one buries it in true Indian fashion, and as she is prostrate before the tiny pyre she hears the noise of the war dance. Hastening to the scene she realizes the grave danger of her first and only friends, and runs off to warn them. She isn't any too soon for the infuriated Indians are starting out. Joe dashes through the village arousing the inhabitants, and although the redskins have devastated and burned outlaying property, they meet with powerful resistance at the village proper and are driven off. Everyone is loud in their praise for the little Indian child and are anxious to know her whereabouts. Alas, they will never know, for the little one, wounded during the conflict, has just strength enough to reach the little grave where she falls, making it a double one, and her pure soul parts with the little body sacrificed upon the altar of gratitude.

THE BANKER'S DAUGHTERS.—The crook is ever possessed of an element of subtlety and inventive ingenuity, which, if exercised in worthy efforts would be highly commendable. Fate, however, always ethical, is unceasingly conspiring against a successful consummation of his sinister efforts. The apparent wealth in the suburban home of Mr. C. W. Bourne, the banker, has excited the cupidity of three members of the under-world. They therefore concoct a scheme to gain an entrance. First of all, they would learn the layout of the house. This they do by disguising one of their number as a messenger and delivering a fake package at the house. He reports to his comrades, and entering a large trunk, the other two dress as expressmen to deliver it with human contents. But there is another thing to be effected; that is to get the banker, who is the widowed father of two daughters, out of the way. This they do by sending the following telegram: "Come to New York at once. Big shortage. Cashier has committed suicide. Coulter." At the time of the arrival of this telegram, the banker is presenting his youngest daughter, who has been ill, with a beautiful diamond necklace. This little surprise he effects to lift the girl's spirits. Of course, he is loath to leave, particularly as the men servants are off for the evening. Still, the message is urgent and seems plausible, so he goes. Shortly after his departure, the trunk is delivered, and though there is some question, his oldest daughter receives it into the reception room, thinking it another of her father's surprises, she not knowing what had called him away so suddenly. The invalid sister is resting in the room next the reception room, while the sister is in the reception room admiring her sister's present before a mirror. Suddenly she sees the reflection of a hand protruding from the trunk, which is now slightly open. The man inside hears her move and the hand is drawn back. She pretends not to notice this occurrence while hurriedly writing a note to Martha, the maid, dispatching her little niece, who happens to be in the room at this moment. This note reads: "There is a robber in the room. Telephone for police and keep quiet." As the child passes through the adjoining room, the invalid sister insists upon seeing the note and after a parley gets it. Rushing to the telephone, she calls the police headquarters. The desk man is dozing, and it is with difficulty she makes him answer and understand. When he does, he acts quickly, sending four officers on a mad rush to the Bourne mansion. Meanwhile, a thrilling scene is being enacted in the reception room. The man having gotten out of the trunk, renders the girl helpless, admits his accomplices and the three are ransacking the place when the police enter and capture them. At this moment the father returns, having found the message a fake, so the little family is thankful that nothing more serious has happened than the shaking up of their nerves.

EDISON MFG. CO.

THE SONG THAT REACHED HIS HEART.—Away out in Western Canada we see a man of brawn and muscle made rough and rude by his life and surroundings buying a phonograph, and with his pals seated of an evening listening to the old songs of long ago. The sight of the joy and pleasure it brings into their lives is only a make-believe representation of what gratitude the world owes Thomas A. Edison for his wonderful invention. Alone we see the lumberman listening to the song of "Annie Laurie," and as the strains of that dear old song sink deep into his heart the past comes before him, and he sees his mother seated at the old organ, father with his evening paper and his pipe, while beside him stands his boyhood sweetheart singing this old song. As the vision fades he tries to cast off his sweet spell, and seeks forgetfulness at a gambling table in a nearby hotel.

The threads of fate have drawn the singer of the song of the earlier scene to this same hotel, and just as the lumberman is about to commit the crime of theft the notes of the song reach him again from above, where she is staying. Drawn by the charm of his spell he listens outside her door, and while listening discovers a plot to rob the girl within. The subsequent events reveal his bravery and the saving of her life, which act nearly terminates his own; but ere the picture is brought to its dramatic close we discover that the singer is none other than his boyhood sweetheart, and we feel that "The Song That Reached His Heart" will eventually find its echoes in the chime of wedding bells.

THE CHUNCHO INDIANS.—The Chuncho Indians, about whom this film is built, were formerly the most savage of all the known tribes of South America. They inhabit the Perene Valley, which even at this late day is accessible only by mule back or pack train. Some twenty years ago an English syndicate purchased from the Government of Peru one million two hundred and fifty thousand acres of land in the most fertile districts of the great Perene Valley, and as a result great coffee plantations now grow where formerly there was nothing but dense tropical jungle. The Chuncho Indians through the invasion of their domain have been weaned from the pursuit of war, taught the value of a peaceful life and carefully trained in the art of coffee cultivation and harvesting, thus becoming useful members of the community.

In our picture we see them on their way down the mountain on a pack train, passing along the narrow margin of difficult mountain trails, going through gorges of unusual tropical beauty and over the curious swinging bridges, which indeed swing so much that we are almost alarmed for the safety of the men and animals crossing them. After being shown the somewhat curious way in which coffee is cured and prepared for shipment, we now visit the Indian as he appears in more of his natural state. On very curious native boats, which seem so badly balanced that the least little false move would seem to throw one off his equilibrium so that one wonders how they manage to keep afloat at all, we see the Indians take their regular trips on the river, navigating their craft with a skill and grace that could not be surpassed in a boat built on the most scientific plan. Finally we land with the party and are shown a typical view of a Chuncho home, the father and mother surrounded by all the members of the family.

THE STOLEN FATHER.—The early scenes show the struggle of a young woman in New York to obtain employment and support herself. It becomes evident that the search and the struggle are anything but easy for her, and that she is penniless and perpetually near the stage of desperation. Walking into the park, she sits down on a bench and tries to think over the situation and find some solution. As she sits there an old gentleman, evidently a traveler, comes along and being weary, perhaps not feeling well, sits down not far from her. In taking his handkerchief from his pocket a large and well filled wallet drops to the ground. The girl observes it and, stooping, hands it to the old man, but not until she has noticed that it seemed to contain a very large amount of money.

Not very long after, when she is again engrossed in her own thoughts, the old gentleman makes a desperate but vain effort to speak to her, and she only comes out of her reverie when he collapses in a heap against the back of the bench. Jumping up she goes to his aid but is unable to obtain any response. She calls for help, and some passer-by summons an officer who makes an examination of the man and assures her that he is not dead. He asks her if the man is her father. Seeing the helpless old gentleman there before her and knowing that he possesses the means to care for himself and for her, and knowing further that as he cannot protest no one else will be the wiser, the girl yields to the temptation and tells the officer she is the old man's daughter.

They place the old man in the ambulance and she has him carried to the big front room in her boarding house. As she is in arrears already for her own rent the landlady naturally demurs at another member and demands evidence that her rent will be forthcoming. Having gone thus far, our little heroine takes the wallet from the old man's pocket and pays the rent for the two rooms, carefully returning the wallet to its owner's pocket thereafter. The latter scenes show how she cares for the old man, how he very slowly recovers and how his own funds provide for his own care and for the maintenance of the girl who has become his self-appointed nurse.

One day while she is reading to him we see her start at some notice in the paper, and on the screen appears an advertisement from a man in England who is in search of his father, a traveler who disappeared shortly after landing in New York and with a considerable sum of money. Our heroine at once realizes that this must be the son of her helpless charge, and the temptation assails her to remain silent and continue to enjoy the prosperity which has meant so much to her and saved her from apparently impending disaster. After a short mental struggle she decides to be true to herself and write a letter calling the son to America.

Now the old man who has been under her care so long has recovered more than she suspects, and has gradually passed from a stage of suspicion to one of regard and finally affection for the girl who has nursed him back to a semblance of health. He sees the paper, understands what it means to her and sees her write the letter, thus triumphing over her temptation. And then the son comes, and she feels that her term of office has expired and that there is nothing for her to do but go back to the weary search for employment, the following of help-wanted ads. in the papers and the besieging of the offices where girls are employed. She hands him her account of the moneys expended and says "goodbye" to the old man.

And then she gets a surprise, for instead of being helpless he comes and stands before her, shows her the result of her nursing in his recovered strength. She is glad but still feels that she has no longer a place in his life. They ask her to stay; she points to his son. Then the son, understanding the father's mind and perhaps seeing the beautiful face and sweetness of the girl who has done so much for his father, adds his own invitation to that of the old man. The picture closes with a happy trio and a promise of good days to come for them all together—perhaps of a love story which will grow to a wedding not so many days or months ahead.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

GRANDMOTHER'S PLOT.—The granddaughter of a farmer is in love with one of the farm hands, a fine, manly looking fellow, but the farmer sits on the little affair with great suddenness. Her grandmother, however, remembers that she herself was young once, and focusses her brain on the subject. The plot is hatched, and the maiden is to become ill, and the doctor is to be sent for; then, when he arrives, grandmother will let him into the deep business, and he prescribes accordingly. All happens as was planned. The old farmer sends for the doctor; the grandmother buttonholes him as he arrives, and tells him the tale. Consequently, the farmer is a beaten man, as with all three against him he has to give in, and does it with a very good grace. The film is of fine photographic quality, and interest is sustained throughout.

THE CHEAT.—A strong film, but not too dramatic. A young woman has a great affection for a man residing in the same hotel. Her affection is much misplaced, however, for the feeling is not returned. Thinking he has been playing with her, she determines to revenge herself, and finds for this a ready helper in a man also staying at the hotel. He places in the young fellow's pocket some playing cards, and that same evening at the Casino, when these two are playing cards with a party, the young fellow is accused by the man of cheating, and the cards being found on his person, he is shown out. From that date his life is a misery, but his uncle, certain of his innocence, offers a reward for information, as to who placed the cards in his nephew's pocket. The real culprit being in want of cash comes forward, gets the money, and confesses his guilt, and is compelled by the angry old man to accompany him to the Casino, and publicly announce the fact.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

IN THE SHADOW OF THE NIGHT.—A family of wandering basketmakers are camped upon the edge of the city in which they market their wares. At the time our story opens the mother has just returned empty-handed, from a day of peddling. A series of such days has already depleted their meagre stores to such an extent that her report comes in the shape of a calamity.

Now their little son volunteers to make an attempt to secure at least food in return for some of their basket work and takes some of the lighter pieces with him to a wealthy neighborhood in the city.

Here his apparent poverty wins for him the friendship of a rich youth who helps him by supplying food, then follows at a distance and learns the straightened circumstances with which the little fellow is surrounded. The little child of wealth now returns to his home and under the cover of darkness steals a well-filled purse from his father and carries it to the camp of the basketmakers,

DOUBLE BILL ALL COMEDY

Released Thursday, October 20th

Hawkins' Hat

Hawkins hides his money in his hat to keep it from his wife. She does not dream that he won at poker the night before and gives the somewhat battered hat to a tramp who sells it to an old clo' man. Imagine the latter's feelings when Hawkins buys back the hat and takes out the money.

LENGTH ABOUT 465 FEET

Archie's Archery

Archie was not an archer but he managed to hit things—he certainly did manage to hit things.

LENGTH ABOUT 470 FEET

Released Monday, October 24th

Romance in the Rockies

A spirited Western story in which romance alternates with sensation all in unusually good scenic environment.

LENGTH ABOUT 990 FEET

Send for Free Catalogue of Our 1910 Machine

LUBIN MF'G. CO., 926 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO: 22 Fifth Avenue LONDON: 45 Gerrard Street, W.
BERLIN: 35 Friedrich Strasse

INTERNATIONAL FILM TRADERS

INCORPORATED

147-157 Fourth Avenue

German Savings Bank Building

New York

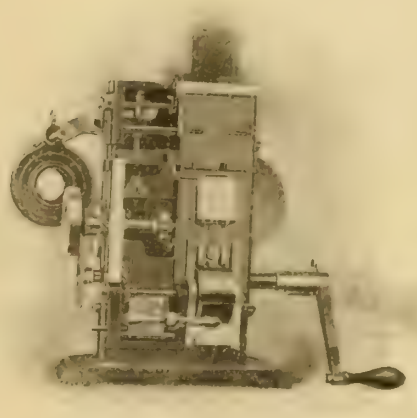
The Largest Dealers in

Second Hand Films

in the United States

The "STANDARD"

The Machine That Gives Results



FIREPROOF—FLICKERLESS

The Machine now being used by the City of New York at the Budget Exhibited, 326 Broadway, demonstrating to the public where the municipality's money is being spent.

Write for Illustrated Catalogue—Dept. W.

AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE CO.
101 BEEKMAN STREET - - - NEW YORK

where he places it on the pillow of the little man who unconsciously is the instigator of the crime.

The morning soon reveals the robbery at the rich boy's home and investigation is immediately commenced, detectives are called in and soon establish a line of clues which point to the guilt of the little basketmaker. Members of the poor family are all arrested and brought to the scene of the crime, where, though violently declaring their innocence they are detained.

At this juncture, the real criminal is so touched by the grief of his little friend that he bravely confesses his guilt and begs the forgiveness of his father.

The final scene shows the happy alleviation of the poor family's sufferings.

The film is a very strong lesson upon the subject of kindness and contains enough of the exciting element to hold the attention of an audience.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

HEARTS AND POLITICS.—The best political story since the presentation of The District Attorney and one that holds attentive interest every inch of the film. John Daly has been nominated for Mayor on the reform ticket. The Machine, grown bold with a false sense of security, has exceeded all bounds and Atwood, the Boss, knows that his only hope is to tangle the reformers. He sends word to Sylvia Hartley that she must get Daly out of the way and Sylvia smiles contentedly. Reformers are little versed in the wiles of professional politics and fall easy prey. A pretended accident in front of Daly's home as he is ascending the steps furnishes the excuse for an introduction the more piquant because of its unconventionality and soon Daly is madly infatuated with the pretty politician. She artfully encourages his hopes while she makes no definite promise and a couple of weeks before election she declares that she will not consent to marry him unless he will agree to give up politics. He assents and for a moment it looks as though the reform ticket would have no head, but in her haste to acquaint Atwood with her triumph Sylvia writes a note in Daly's office and does not know that she is using the top sheet of a carbon block. There are transfer sheets beneath and the letter is reproduced several times. These are found by May Belding, Daly's secretary, who is very much in love with her employer, and when the news of Daly's election comes he asks May to share his honors with him.

HAWKINS' HAT.—Mrs. Hawkins is a perfectly good wife, but she will insist on going through Hawkins' pockets now and then in search of loose change and her ideas as to what constitutes loose change are liberal in the extreme. Hawkins knows her habit, but having been married some time he knows better than to start an argument. It is much easier to be diplomatic than debative and when he comes home from a poker party with a wad of greenbacks that would make a square meal for a goat he hides the money in his hat and goes to sleep to dream of more jackpots. Mrs. Hawkins knows that he has been playing poker and she appoints herself an investigating committee. There are no results, however, and she goes downstairs to superintend the getting of breakfast. A tramp applies for something to eat and his hat is such a scandal that she gives him the old one of Hawkins'. Then the nominal head of the house comes downstairs and misses the hat. The tale of charity is told and Hawkins sprints up the street. The tramp has sold the headgear to a second-hand man so Hawkins loses no time in looking up the old clo' man and making a dicker for the hat. The vendor of hasbeens drives what he considers a shrewd bargain and Hawkins grabs the hat. When he snatches the lining out and draws out the roll of bills well how would you feel yourself if you were that old clo' man.

ARCHIE'S ARCHERY.—He didn't look as though his name were Archie. It might have been Archibald, but they all called him Archie and that ended it. Some of Archie's young friends were practicing archery and Archie thought he would try. He made a bull's eye the very first thing and he got all swelled up about it. Right smack in the center of the inner ring, and he had never before snapped a bowstring! You can't quite blame him for getting chesty, but that was no reason why the accidental hit should have sent him out to get the practice that makes perfect. He could not know, when he aimed at a sheet on the line, that the wash lady was on the other side, but in a moment she knew that there was someone like Archie, and she went to look for him. There were others who came to a sudden decision that they would like to see Archie, and in somewhat of a hurry at that. Archie did not know this until it was rather late to make a getaway, but he did by giving the bow to a tramp, and perhaps one of these days Archie will figure as the archery champion and make bull's eyes that are not beginner's luck and the result of shutting his eyes just as he lets the bowstring fly. On the same reel with Hawkins' Hat, another dashing little comedy, the release forms an exceptionally good subject in every way.

PATHE FRERES.

ONE ON MAX. This time Max appears in the character of a newly engaged man, dressing with particular care to make his official entry, as it were, into the bride-elect's family. Unluckily his shoes are a wee bit tight. He resigns himself to a momentary inconvenience, and, putting on his slippers, sallies forth to purchase a new pair of shoes on his way to his fiancee's home. But, alas, for the constancy of man. Max is soon making love to the wife of the storekeeper, who, out of revenge, screws a pair of roller skates tightly on to the boots with which he is about to shoe his customer. Thus equipped, he pushes Max into the street, and his efforts to maintain his equilibrium, and to capture his silk hat, which has rolled off, make a sight worth seeing. Failing to get the skates off, he takes a cab, into which he is assisted by the driver. Arriving at his destination he makes a preciptous entry. Once seated on a chair he refuses to move, but is persuaded to take his place among the dancers, where his erratic movements cause considerable alarm. At last he relates his adventure, and amidst bursts of general laughter, someone suggests that the obvious remedy is to take the shoes off.

JINKS WANTS TO BE AN ACROBAT.—An evening at a vaudeville show makes Sammy ambitious to become an acrobat. He chooses the street as being the most convenient place to commence in, and every possible means of practising is utilized by him, often with the most disastrous results. The wares displayed outside a china store are smashed, a pile of cans are brought to the ground, and innumerable other accidents of a minor nature occur. Ultimately, whilst balancing above an empty tub, Sammy falls inside and rolls down a flight of steps. He picks himself up unhurt, however, and a few minutes later is balancing himself on the bonnet of a standing motor car. Unfortunately the automobile starts off, and Sammy, with his legs kicking in the air, is borne wildly through the streets. People are knocked over and a general panic ensues, until the car, dashing into a store, comes to a standstill.

OUTWITTED.—The picture opens with a stone quarry at which John Sanderson reports for duty as the new foreman, and asks where he can find room and board. The proprietor instructs Bill Adams to take him to Farmer Jones. Bill goes with him to the farm, and after the necessary arrangements are made, John is introduced to Sadie, the farmer's pretty daughter. This makes Bill jealous, for he also admires her, although she has no use for him. Two weeks later we see Sadie bringing lunch to John and Bill. While the former is called aside for a few moments by the proprietor, who gives him a check to get cashed at the bank, Bill makes advances to Sadie. She repulses him and he then tries to kiss her, but John arrives back in time to knock him down. Bill swears vengeance and John, telling Sadie that he is afraid Bill will hurt her, gives her a revolver to protect herself with, and rides off on his bicycle to the bank. Sadie seeing that Bill mounts a wheel and follows, realizes that he means mischief, and also follows on her bicycle, and overtaking John, tells him of her fears. John cashes the check and straps the proceeds in a belt around his waist. Meantime Bill has gone to an old disused building and arranged with two outlaws to rob the foreman. Sadie, however, has overheard their plans and rides off and meets John. He hands her the belt with the money and Bill, who sees this, rides off to tell his confederates of the change. They all three then gallop after the girl, but John shuts the crossing gate behind her and at the point of the gun stops them, and sends the two outlaws about their business. With Bill, however, he has a bone to pick, and bidding him take off his coat he administers a severe drubbing, that he will remember for many a day, and that will prevent him for a long time from meddling with either John or Sadie.

HIS LIFE FOR HIS QUEEN.—It is 1780, and Marie Antoinette in her rooms at the palace of Versailles declares her intention of going to the masked ball at the Opera that night incognito. Accompanied by her maid, she attends, and, not being recognized in her mask, is approached by the chief of the police, who attempts to kiss her. Without thinking of the consequences, she raises her hand and strikes him. He orders their arrest and they are conveyed to headquarters, where they are received by a young officer, who insists that they unmask. He recognizes the Queen and at once allows her to leave, but before she does so he gives her a note in which he confesses to a love for her, which he has nurtured in secret. Safe once more in the palace, the Queen opens this note, and after smiling rather sadly at its contents, tears it up. The next scene shows the Queen in 1793 in her prison. The Revolution has swept through France, and her execution has been decreed. In her bread she finds a note that on the morrow on the way to the scaffold an attempt will be made to rescue her. The next morning, as she is about to ascend the cart that takes the convicted to the place of execution, a disturbance suddenly occurs, and the Queen recognizes the leader as the young officer who had freed her years ago. He is, however, quickly disarmed and strangled at her feet by the National Guard. For a second Marie Antoinette stoops over the inanimate form, and the next instant she is roughly pushed up the steps of the wagon and led off to her doom.

MYSTERY OF LONELY GULCH.—In the bar-room of Lonely Gulch an actor is entertaining the cowboys by showing them various impersonations, when the mail arrives, and he receives a letter from his sweetheart to the effect that she has got hold of an easy mark, a ranchman from Lonely Gulch. The bartender also receives a letter from the ranchman asking him to tell the boys that he is returning the following day with a bride who is an actress. The next morning the ranchman and his bride arrive on the coach and are given a great welcome. On the solicitation of his bride he offers the actor employment on his ranch and he accompanies them there. A week later the ranchman, with the cowboys of whom the actor is one, start off for town, but the actor, pretending his horse has gone lame, returns to the ranch, and getting back there, makes love to his sweetheart. The ranchman, who is suspicious, also turns and quietly follows and reenters the ranch. We next see the ranchman and his bride come out carrying a body and taking it to and hiding it in a cave. He then goes to the bar-room and announces that he intends to sell his ranch and go East. He soon arranges a deal with a neighbor and they go to the ranch to close it. The sheriff, who was in the bar-room, is, however, suspicious and, together with two deputies, follow at a discreet distance. On their road they hear a voice calling for help and finally locate it in the cave. Here they discover the body, still living. Meantime the ranchman and the purchaser have come to a final understanding as to the sale of the ranch, and the papers are just being signed by the ranchman and his bride, when the sheriff and his deputies enter with the real ranchman, and at the point of their guns tear off the disguise from the false ranchman and disclose the familiar face of the actor, who is arrested and taken away. The bride begs forgiveness, but is ordered to make herself scarce.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

A Wild-West show—they stranded went.
Says Hank to Bill—"The Army for us."
Togged all up in blue—with nary a cent,
Spoiling for an Indian fight—or Wild West fuss.

TWO BOYS IN BLUE.—The lure of the white-top and the music of the band is food for the bronco buster and he is happy with plaudits of the gathered throng. The grand entry is on and all is agog with excitement as Tom and Jerry cut their capers. Just then Sheriff Ketchem rudely announces he has an attachment for an unpaid feed bill at Hebron, Ind., and proceeds to "sew" the show up. So Bronco Bill's Congress of Celebrities are busted—broke and hard on the rocks.

Tom and Jerry retire gracefully with their tools in trade—two saddles. But as the cook tent was one of the things Sheriff Ketchem had planted on, there was no sign of the forthcoming bean soup, coffee and as well as other delicacies usually accompanying the cook top's repast. So the poor man's friend—the pawnshop holds out its welcoming hand to Tom's and Jerry's saddles. The loan made—the boys are out to see the sights. But they cost money and soon the duo are on the breakers again—when they are attracted to Uncle Sam's sign calling for recruits.

This seems to hold the key to the best excitement outside the rag and blue inclosure and accordingly they are assigned to a detachment that is detailed to put down an Indian uprising. The officer in charge soon finds he has found two real knights of the saddle and decides to send them scouting to locate the hostile tribe—they are soon surprised and find more real excitement than Bronco Bill ever dreamed of. The old water hole is destined to figure in operations, a message is received by the commander of the post that the men are surrounded and can only hold out six hours longer, signed by Capt. John Wells. Upon receipt of the message the scouts are sent to lead the cavalry against the Indians' stronghold—desperate fighting and final victory, one that has resounded through the pages of history and has made the army post memorable and even to-day Standing Rock has become a landmark of the great northwest reservations. When Tom and Jerry are decorated with honors they plainly show that this world isn't so bad after all.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

ON THE DOORSTEPS.—A lover's quarrel. All about smoking a cigarette. She insists upon smoking if he does. He objects to women smoking. This is all done good naturedly until he tries to assert man's supremacy over women by taking the cigarette from her and throwing it away. She gets real mad now, gives him back his engagement ring and tells him to go. He does, but no further than the doorstep of her home, where he determines to sit until she comes to him and asks him to return. The rain is pouring in torrents, and every time she looks out the window she sees her lover sitting on the step, drenched and miserable. She orders the servants to drive him from the house. He is attracting attention and creating scandal. The bire-lings go; the young "Spartan" bribes them to let him remain at his post, and they report to their mistress that it is impossible to get him to leave.

"What's to be done? It's disgraceful. I'll just tell mamma." So she goes to her mother and reports to her the condition of things. The mother goes down to the front door and calls a policeman, whom she asks to make the young man go home. The young fellow explains the case and the policeman simply laughs and moves on. Lovers' quarrels are out of his jurisdiction.

2\3 THE HEAT OF THE ARC

You're bound to get both light and heat from the arc of a moving picture machine. Necessarily one accompanies the other. But there's a great difference in the amount of heat given off in different methods of using an alternating current supply.

Using Alternating Current directly, you need a current of 60 amperes to obtain 4800 candle power.

By changing the supply for the arc, to Direct Current, 20 amperes gives 5000 c.p.

These figures are taken from a test in which the

G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier was used to rectify the alternating current.

Especially designed for moving picture machines this device eliminates two-thirds of the heat of the arc. Think what this means:

One-third the discomfort to the operator
One-third the chance of cracking condensers
One-third the consumption of carbons

The rectifier is the most effective transforming device on the market. It operates with little loss of power and requires practically no attention.

It is vital to your interests to learn all about this device. Sign and mail the attached coupon. Don't lose this opportunity to improve your winter service. Write today.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

Largest Electrical Manufacturer in the World

DEPT. 53-J

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. 2777

Without incurring the slightest obligation on my part, please send me your illustrated Booklet, telling all about the use and operation of the G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier. Mail me also an information blank to be filled out and return to you, so that you can advise me how much money I can save, and how much my light can be improved.

Signed.....

Theatre.....

City.....

W-3

Address: GENERAL ELECTRIC CO.
Dept. 53-J. SCHENECTADY, N. Y

Mamma goes back to bed and tells her daughter she must settle it herself. The young beau holds the fort against all comers—milkman, butcher, baker; and all the rest of the early risers stop, laugh, and go on their way thinking him drunk or crazy, but the young man sits on. His girl is frantic, tries to fight against herself and forget him. She can't—"He is wet to the skin and will certainly get his death of cold. Something must be done"—and she does it.

She goes down to her forlorn and water-soaked "Napoleon" and asks him to come in out of the rain. She is very sorry and it's all her fault. He comes in as quick as his stiffened and aching joints will permit him. They kiss and make up, even as you and I, and there's an end to it. The clock in the steeple strikes three; he looks at his watch. "Yes, three o'clock in the morning." They kiss again and he makes tracks for home and a change of clothing, and so happily endeth a lovers' quarrel. How foolish it all seems. But, after all, isn't it true?

THE LEGACY.—It came as a genuine surprise when old Mr. and Mrs. Jones inherited a large fortune with the distinct proviso that they occupy the swell town house of the deceased to properly sustain the social distinction and dignity of their acquired wealth.

With many misgivings and regrets they close the old farm house in which they have lived for over fifty years and start for the city. On the train they are very much "upset" by the novelty of things. Crossing the river on the ferryboat, they are astonished at the skyscrapers which loom up before them and which they have a sneaking feeling will fall over on top of them. A gentlemanly stranger on the boat who volunteers some information is looked upon with suspicion by the unsophisticated couple, who take an extra grip on their goods and chattels.

In the great city at last, they try to find their way unaided to upper Fifth avenue, where the inherited mansion is located. Unaccustomed to trolleys and elevated roads, they decide to take "shank's mare" and go plodding on, followed by a constantly increasing crowd of "ragtag and bobtail" as they are passing through the thickly populated tenement districts of the west side, when they are greeted as "Rubes."

Reaching one of the city parks, they seat themselves on a bench, heated and exhausted. By the end of the evening they become drowsy and the old gentleman takes off his boots and hat, while the old lady removes her bonnet and both making themselves comfortable they fall into a restful doze. Their comfort are disturbed by a policeman, who, rousing them and after questioning them, learns where they want to go, calls a taxicab, sends them in it and has no trouble in getting directions to their home among the upper ten.

They pass the butler and a stiff collared lackey opposite at the front door and both being rather, shall they do with much awe and trembling nervously offered the good old fashioned welcome as Mr. Jones wants to shake hands with, and treat friends which friendliness is received with coldness and contempt. The old folks are directed and will themselves back on the latest where every neighbor around the place is heard [illegible].

In the quiet of the elegant bedroom they feel like cats in a strange garret and don't know how to make use of the elaborate furnishings. Everything looks so grand "Say don't you bet the bed was meant to be used only admired, more like." The maid and valet appear upon the scene and insist upon dressing Mr. and Mrs. Jones for dinner. Mrs. Jones is too frightened to resist, but Jones says "By heck! I ain't no infant and nobody has put on my clothes but my mother and I can't so far forget myself as to allow any other fellow to deprive me of my manful right as a natural and free born independent citizen, and what's more I ain't going to rob another fellow of his manhood by allowing him to do it." The valet insists, and Jones submits with the remark "I don't mind a little help, but it ain't my style."

At dinner the butler and servants await their coming. Mr. Jones offers to shake hands with the help who stand as rigid and cold as icicles. When the old people are seated at the table they are waited upon like infants until the old gentleman tells his wife "They was bein' treated as if they'd reached their second childhood and couldn't feed their own faces."

The last straw comes when they are escorted to separate bedrooms. Mrs. Jones is snugly tucked in bed, and Mr. Jones is provided by the valet with a suit of pajamas, which he indignantly slams on the floor and exclaims "Gosh almighty! This is beyond all tolerance. I ain't never worn my clothes to bed yet, and I'm dang sure I ain't going to begin now. The old fashioned nightgown is good enough for me and anybody else that's got common sense enough to be sensible."

During the night the old couple manage to have a little private conversation, arrange to escape from all this "posky" style and nonsense, get their things together, stealthily leave the mansion and all its "vanity and vexation" behind them and return to the old home, where we leave them located and thoroughly satisfied to be content in the peaceful enjoyment of all its blessings, quietly musing

"What's the use of all this grand life and high situation,
With nary a pink or hollyhock a-blooming 'round the door?
Let's be content in our own life and station
Just where we've always been so happy and so poor."

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

HIRING A GEM. Dick Younghusband is in an unusually bad frame of mind, when, late for breakfast, he finds the victuals cold, the toast hard and the coffee merely luke warm. Angrily he calls Molly, the cook, scolds her roundly, and banging the coffee pot on the table, threatens to discharge her if she does not hereafter provide him with a warm breakfast. The fiery little lady listens with rising temper and when he is finally forced to desist in his upbraiding for lack of breath, throws off her apron, shakes her fist at him, and tells him where she can get another position.

Molly leaves and Mrs. Younghusband angrily scolds her husband for his impatience, and further adds that if Dick does not get her another cook he'll have no dinner. Younghusband laughs scornfully. A cook, indeed! He promises his wife to bring home a servant with him that evening without fail and hurriedly leaves for the office.

After an unusually busy day at the office, Younghusband recalls he has had no time to find a cook. It is after five o'clock and when he calls up several employment agencies the 'phone calls are not answered. In despair he is about to leave the office when Henry Little, a friend, enters. Younghusband informs his friend of his predicament and suddenly asks Little to make up as a female cook and thus help him to save the day.

After some argument Little resolves to play the part and after visiting a costumer's, where the young man is rigged out to resemble a real Irish cook, the two hurry to Younghusband's home.

The new cook is introduced to Mrs. Younghusband, who shows "Maggie" to the kitchen and gives him instructions about the supper. "Maggie" has some difficulty in preparing the meal, but the catastrophe comes in the dining-room when he tries to wait on the table. In his awkwardness "Maggie" almost demolishes all the tableware, but Younghusband is lenient and begs his wife to give the poor woman a chance.

Dick goes out to the kitchen to remonstrate with Little for his awkwardness, but this latter has found two bottles of beer in the refrigerator and

Mammoth Consolidation

The Cincinnati Film Exchange, 315-317 West 4th Street, Cincinnati, O., and the Buckeye Film and Projecting Company, of 309 Arcade Building, Dayton, O., have consolidated and incorporated for One Hundred Thousand ($100,000.00) dollars.

We have placed an order with the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company for every good reel of Independent Film that is being made, which is a guarantee that the exhibitors will get the best program that is possible to obtain at the lowest possible prices, consistent with a good Film Service.

Write, wire or call at either office if you are in need of a good real live Independent Film Service, that will get you the money. We have also secured exclusive control of the FRENCH FILM RESTORING COMPANY which is a guarantee that the Films will be free from rain and scratches, which usually appear in Films when they are only a few days old.

If you are in doubt as to whether we are buying all good makes of Independent Films, write to the MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY, 111 East 14th Street, New York, N. Y.

We also carry a full line of Moving Picture Machines, Roll Tickets, Carbons and supplies of all kinds, ready for shipment.

Money, Brains and knowledge of the Business makes us the LEADERS OF THE MOVING PICTURE GAME. Get busy don't let the junk house kid you any longer.

THE CINCINNATI-BUCKEYE FILM CO.

315-317 W. Fourth Street
CINCINNATI, OHIO

309-321 Arcade Building
DAYTON, OHIO

invites Dick to join him. Dick produces the cigars and a moment later when Mrs. Youngbusband enters she finds her husband and "Maggie," that latter with his feet cocked upon the table, smoking and drinking and laughing over the fun.

In a rage Mrs. Youngbusband drags her unlucky spouse from the room and "Maggie" left alone, soon finds company in the neighboring policeman, Pat O'Rourke. But "Maggie's" dress catches on fire from the cigar he had been smoking and not even the bucket of water O'Rourke douses him with puts out the flames. Mrs. Youngbusband and Dick enter to see "Maggie" running out of the door and headed for the lake.

The final scenes show "Maggie" running into the lake and being rescued by the valiant O'Rourke.

HANK AND LANK. Hank and Lank have not experienced a good feed for several days, and, on the lookout for a meal or a accident, pass by the Summerfield residence just as Mr. and Mrs. Summerfield, carrying suitcases and handbags hurriedly lock the front door and leave. A sign informing callers of their absence during the Summer, is conspicuously placed in the window.

After the couple have departed, Hank and Lank, who have been covertly watching them, come on the scene, scrutinize the sign, and with the happy thought that possibly the absent occupants may have left good food in the larder, try the front door, but find it locked.

Not without hope they slip around the house and after trying several windows find one unlocked. Lank raises the sash and after helping Hank through, follows closely after.

The window has admitted them to the kitchen and they lose no time in cavorting about the larder and the ice box. Their search is successful as Hank has found a large, juicy steak, while Lank has returned from the dining room with liquor and cigars.

Hank starts a fire in the stove and after filling the room with smoke succeeds in burning out something fairly palatable. The two, though somewhat annoyed by the smoke, sit down to an enjoyable meal.

The scene changes to the outside of the Summerfield home, showing the open window and volumes of smoke pouring from it. A passerby sees the smoke and thinking the house on fire rushes to a fire box and turns in an alarm.

The engines hurry to the scene and a stream of water is turned into the open window. Hank and Lank, inside, swept from their feet by the sudden torrent, seek refuge under the tables and chairs until the firemen turn off the water and leave. Then, gathering up the remains of their repast, they leave the house.

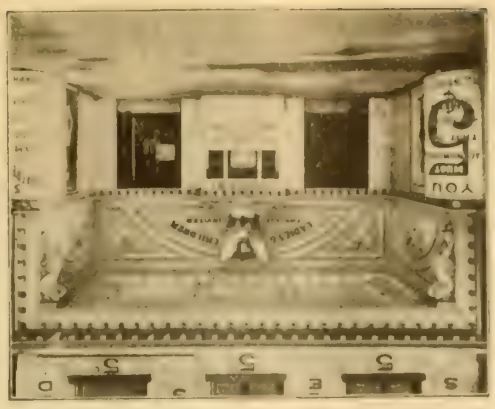
PALS OF THE RANGE. The scene opens in the bunk house of the Lazy K ranch, where we see Jack Hartley and his pal Jack Smythe. Hartley has just received a letter from the East, in which his mother asks him for money. Hartley is much depressed. He is broke and sees no immediate prospect of recouping his fortunes. Smythe, learning of Hartley's dilemma, offers his roll to his pal, who gratefully accepts it.

Some time later the two boys meet Clara, the daughter of a neighboring ranchman, and both fall in love with her. For a time it seems a fair field and no favor, but at last she seems to show preference for Smythe. The two boys discuss the matter at the bunk house, and decide to write her letters of proposal and abide by her decision. They write and mail their letters, and she replies, accepting Smythe.

Hartley goes for the mail, and his weak nature asserting itself, he surreptitiously opens the letters before returning to the ranch house. His own letter is superscribed "Dear Jack," and reading it he finds that he is rejected. The other letter, accepting Smythe, is headed "To My Sweetheart," and Hartley sees the possibility of changing the letters in their respective envelopes and so making Smythe believe that he is the rejected one. He puts his plan into operation, and Smythe, upon receiving his letter of rejection, immediately announces his intention of going prospecting into the desert. He leaves at once, never suspecting the treachery of his pal, and the girl, believing herself jilted, is easily persuaded to marry Hartley.

After the wedding the latter's conscience troubles him to such an extent that he confesses his miserable deed, and Clara, turning upon him in indignation and disgust, demands that he at once go into the desert and bring Smythe back to her. Cowering before her indignation, he goes in search of his pal.

Smythe, prospecting in the burning desert, is beset by Indians, and although he escapes with his life, they get his horse and pack mules. He makes a running fight of it, holding them back with difficulty, and, at last, exhausted, and almost dead of thirst, he is about to give up the unequal fight when Hartley arrives. Hartley at once rides to the defense of his pal and together they hold back the savages for a time, but Hartley is wounded. He realizes that both of them cannot escape, and urges his pal to take the horse and make his escape. Smythe at last does so, and Hartley, covering the other's retreat, is killed by the attacking Indians, but not before he knows that he has saved the life of his pal and so made restitution for his treachery.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

THEATRES DESIGNED EVERYWHERE

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

THE DECORATORS SUPPLY CO.

2549 Arch Avenue :: CHICAGO, ILL.

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS.

Theresa, N. Y.—A new moving picture theater will open in this town.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—The theatrical company that made an appeal for a license for the use of the auditorium in the Columbus Institute has not yet been granted.

Northampton, Mass.—Gilbert Edwards, has sold the Lyric Theater to James O'Neil and William O'Leary.

Archibald, Penn.—The New Nickette on Main street which has been in the course of erection is at the present time nearly completed.

Sase. Frank McGloin, has purchased a new moving picture theater in this city.

Harrisburg, Penn. Walter Earneioin, who built a new moving picture theater at Union and Brown streets will be ready to open about October the 15th and under the proprietorship of E. H. Condran.

Milwaukee, Wis. Max Kautak secured a permit for the erection of a first-class moving picture theater which will be situated on Lincoln avenue near Sixth and will cost about $4,500 when completed.

Augusta, Me.—A new moving picture theater is being erected in the old Roberts store for Fowle and Falconi.

Palmer, Mass.—C. S. Ruggles opened the Pastime Moving Picture Theater and are doing a first rate business.

Newport, N. Y.—The Palatine Theater have opened their doors to the public.

Fishkill, N. Y. The old Jackson Store Building, corner of Main street and Schuck avenue has been converted into a moving picture show.

New York City.—At the Franklin Theater, the moving pictures of the Johnson Jeffries contest were shown with William McCarney a fifht promoter delivering a lecture as the pictures were shown.

Allentown, Pa.—The Dreamland Moving Picture Theater, here, has opened again.

Danville, Ill. O. Jarodski, will open a new moving picture theater in the town which will be located at 117 East Main street.

San Diego, Cal.—A new moving picture theater is the latest in the amusement line to open in this section which will cost the proprietor about $15,000, and be situated on Third street.

Mankota, Minn.—The American Amusement Company, who control the Wonderland and Unique Theaters of this city have been successful in securing the services of I. L. Stone, a well-known theatrical manager, who will take charge of both houses.

Beloit, Wis.—Frank McCarthy and Roy M. Kathan are making arrangements for the erection of a high-grade moving picture theater in Edgeton.

Newton, Iowa. Fred Palre has bought a moving picture show in Orange City.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—C. W. Tiede has purchased the Grand Moving Picture Theater from Mrs. Buchheim.

Milwaukee, Wis. H. S. Miller applied for a permit to remodel his store at 544 Twelfth street, converting it into a moving picture theater. The changing will cost $1,000. It requires the slanting of the floor and the making of six exits.

Green Bay, Wis.—Henry Goldman will open the Comet Theater in the Kemnitz building on North Washington street within a day or so.

Houston, Texas. The new moving picture show known as the Electric Theater on Pearl street has thrown open its doors.

Bridgeport, Conn.—N. C. Lund will erect a moving picture show at the corner of Clinton avenue and State street.

Jersey City.—Arrangements have been made and granted for the erection of a moving picture and vaudeville theater which will be located at the northwest corner of Summit avenue and Cottage street.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—A new moving picture theater will be erected on the north side of Madison road between O'Brien and Cinnamon streets.

Benwood, W. Va. Frank Smith and Norman Yoho have opened a picture palace in the Yockabush property on Main street.

South Bethlehem, Penn.—A new moving picture theater is being planned for this vicinity which will be situated at 24 East Broad street.

New York City.—A new moving picture theater is being erected at the north side of Spring street, west of Mott street for John Gardner, which will cost about $10,000.

New York City.—A new moving picture theater is also being built at No. 1894 Third avenue which will cost about $5,000.

Chicago, Ill. M. Dunkurardt, manager and proprietor of a moving picture theater at 54 West Seventy-ninth street has sold it to Charles Kleine.

Columbus, Ohio.—The Columbia Opera House has been converted into a high-grade moving picture theater.

Redaway, Penn.—Vaudeville and moving pictures are being run at the Opera House in this city.

Eveleth, Minn.—The Bijou Theater in this town, which has been conducted by a large theatrical syndicate have closed and will reopen shortly with moving pictures and illustrated song slides.

LICENSED RELEASES.

BIOGRAPH.

Sept. 5—A Summer Idyl (Dr.) 991
Sept. 8—Little Angels of Luck (Dr.).....998
Sept. 12—A Mohawk's Way (Dr.).....991
Sept. 15—In Life's Cycle (Dr.).....997
Sept. 19—A Summer Tragedy (Dr.).....987
Sept. 22—The Oath and the Man (Dr.).....997
Sept. 26—Rose o' Salem Town (Dr.).....998
Sept. 29—Examination Day at School (Dr.)....991
Oct. 3—The Iconoclast (Dr.).....992
Oct. 6—A Gold Necklace (Com.).....576
Oct. 6—How Hubby Got a Raise (Com.).....416
Oct. 10—That Chink at Golden Gulch (Dr.)—998
Oct. 13—A Lucky Toothache (Com.).....570
Oct. 13—The Masher (Com.).....415
Oct. 17—The Broken Doll (Dr.).....997
Oct. 20—The Banker's Daughter (Dr.).....989

EDISON CO.

Sept. 23—Almost a Hero.....980
Sept. 27—Over Mountain Passes (Sc.) 275
Sept. 27—The Footlights or the Farm (Dr.)....725
Sept. 30—Ononko's Vow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 4—More Than His Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Bumptious Plays Baseball (Com.)....
Oct. 7—The Farmer's Daughter (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—The Song that Reached His Heart (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 14—The Chuncho Indians (Edu.).....250
Oct. 14—The Stolen Father (Dr.).....750
Oct. 18—The House of the Seven Gables (Dr.).995
Oct. 21—A Wedding Trip Through Canada to Hongkong (Dr.) 1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 28—Hank and Lank—They Dude Up Some (Com.) 307
Sept. 28—Curing a Masher (Com.).....660
Oct. 1—Patricia of the Plains (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—All on Account of a Lie (Com.)....1000
Oct. 8—The Bearded Bandit (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—Hank and Lank—They Get Wise to a New Scheme (Com.) 302
Oct. 12—Pap's First Outing (Com.).....698
Oct. 15—The Cowboy's Mother-in-Law (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 19—Hank and Lank (Uninvited Guests) (Com.) 372
Oct. 19—Hiring a Gem (Com.).....621
Oct. 22—Pals of the Range (Dr.).....1000

KALEM CO.

Oct. 5—The Engineer's Sweetheart (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 7—Big Elk's Turndown (Dr.).....930
Oct. 12—45 Minutes from Broadway (Com.)...892
Oct. 14—Winona (Dr.) 990
Oct. 19—The Tyranny of the Dark (Dr.).....990
Oct. 21—The Education of Elizabeth (Com.)..1000

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Sept. 12—The Greenhorn and the Girl (Com.)..990
Sept. 15—Mrs. Rivington's Pride (Dr.).....500
Sept. 15—Resourceful Robert (Com.).....450
Sept. 19—Zeb, Zeke and the Widow (Com.)....990
Sept. 22—Love's Old, Sweet Song (Dr.).....990
Sept. 26—The Sheriff's Capture (Dr.).....990
Sept. 29—The Path of Duty (Dr.).....990
Oct. 3—The Baggage Smasher (Com.).....990
Oct. 6—Woman's Vanity (Com.).....600
Oct. 6—The Golf Fiend (Com.).....350
Oct. 10—The Clown and the Minister (Dr.)....990
Oct. 13—Liz's Career (Com.).....990
Oct. 17—Hearts and Politics (Dr.).....980
Oct. 20—Hawkins' Hat 500
Oct. 24—Archie's Archery (Com.).....450

GAUMONT.

G. Kleine.

Sept. 24—The Reserved Shot (Dr.).....741
Sept. 24—The Times Art Out of Joint (Com.)..252
Sept. 27—The Sunken Submarine (Dr.).....646
Sept. 27—Too Much Water (Com.).....351
Oct. 1—The Diver's Honor (Dr.).....591
Oct. 1—A High-Speed Biker (Com.).....401
Oct. 4—The Little Acrobat (Dr.).....466
Oct. 4—Her Fiance and the Dog (Com.).....527
Oct. 8—The Dunce's Cap (Dr.).....896
Oct. 8—A Skier Training (Sc.).....100
Oct. 11—The Lovers' Mill (Com.).....252
Oct. 11—The Three Friends (Dr.).....654
Oct. 15—The Romance of a Necklace (Dr.)....995
Oct. 18—Grandmother's Plot (Dr.).....835
Oct. 18—Phantom Ride from Aix la Bains (Scenic) 163
Oct. 22—The Cheat (Dr.).....958
Oct. 25—The First Gray Hair (Dr.).....654
Oct. 25—The Amazon (Com.).....348

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

G. Kleine.

Sept. 14—The Tramps (Com.) 525
Sept. 21—A Corsican Vendetta (Dr.).....699
Sept. 21—Scenes in the Celestial Empire (Sc.)..269
Sept. 28—The Quarrel (Dr.) 607
Sept. 28—Reedham's Orphanage Festival 1910 (Sc.) 394
Oct. 5—The Dishonest Steward (Dr.).....699
Oct. 5—City of a Hundred Mosques, Broussa, Asia Minor (Sc.) 296
Oct. 12—Foiled by a Cigarette (Dr.).....991
Oct. 19—In the Shadow of the Night (Dr.)....502
Oct. 19—Tunny Fishing off Palermo, Italy (Ind.) 500

G. MELIES.

Sept. 8—Baseball, That's All (Com.).....950
Sept. 15—In the Mission Shadows (Dr.).....950
Sept. 22—The Salt on the Bird's Tail 950
Sept. 29—A Plucky American Girl (Dr.).....950
Oct. 6—Billy's Sister (Dr.) 950
Oct. 13—Out for Mischief (Com.).....950
Oct. 20—Uncle Jim (Dr.).....950

PATHE FRERES.

Oct. 8—An Indian's Gratitude (Dr.).....990
Oct. 10—The Stigma (Dr.).....630
Oct. 10—Betty is Punished (Com.).....351
Oct. 12—A Summer Flirtation (Com.).....990
Oct. 14—Werther (Dr.) 892
Oct. 15—Aeroplanes in Flight and Construction (Ind.) 680
Oct. 15—The Aviation Craze (Com.).....243
Oct. 17—One on Max (Com.).....531
Oct. 17—Jinks Wants to be an Acrobat (Com.)..397
Oct. 19—Outwitted (Dr.) 783
Oct. 19—Around Pekin (Scenic) 213
Oct. 21—His Life for His Queen (Dr.).....918
Oct. 22—Mystery of Lonely Gulch (Dr.).....950

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

Sept. 26—The Old Swimming Hole.....1000
Sept. 29—A Kentucky Pioneer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Cold Storage Romance (Dr.).....565
Oct. 3—My Friend the Doctor (Com.).....
Oct. 6—For Her Country's Sake (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—The Sanitarium (Com.).....1000
Oct. 13—In the Golden Harvest Time (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 17—The Foreman (Dr.).....990
Oct. 20—Two Boys in Blue (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—The Ghost of the Oven (Com.).....585
Oct. 24—O! You Skeleton (Com.).....365

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Sept. 27—Her Adopted Parents (Dr.).....988
Sept. 30—A Home Melody (Dr.).....907
Oct. 1—The Bachelor and the Baby (Dr.)....
Oct. 4—Ransomed; or, A Prisoner of War (Dr.) 998
Oct. 7—The Last of the Saxons (Dr.).....1007
Oct. 8—The Sage, the Cherub and the Widow (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—Brother Man (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Actor's Fund Field Day (Com.).....
Oct. 14—On the Doorsteps (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Legacy (Dr.).....
Oct. 18—Auld Robin Grey (Dr.).....991
Oct. 21—Davy Jones' Domestic Troubles (Com.).1000
Oct. 22—Clothes Make the Man (Com.).....667
Oct. 22—A Day on the French Battleship "Justice" (Scenic) 335

URBAN-ECLIPSE

CURRENT RELEASES

Fully described on another page.

OUR POSTERS
Are successful in every way.

"The First Gray Hair"
ABOUT 654 FEET

Release of Oct. 25, 1910

The above scene is from the 348 foot Comedy Gaumont to be released October 25, 1910

"THE AMAZON"

We print a bulletin regularly which tells about our films and usually contains remarks of general interest. It is mailed free.

Importations by George Kleine 52 State Street CHICAGO

AND GAUMONT

Advertising Slides

If handled right you can make your rent money out of advertising slides. We make them for every line of business from 50 cents up :: :: ::

"Campaign Slides are Vote Getters"

Slide with candidate's picture and announcement 50 cents ::

ERKER BROS. OPTICAL CO
604 Olive Street, St. Louis
- Moving Picture Theatre Supply House —

BUY FROM THE PIONEER!

Eberhard Schneider's Miror Vitae Product is used by all first class Trust and Independent Manufacturers. Complete stock of unrivaled Film Making Machinery, Projectors, Cameras, Perforators; Printers, negative and positive Film stock; Tripods, Tilts, Measurers, Menders, Cleaners, Travellers and Laboratory developing outfits, Chemicals Moving Picture Theatre Supply, special lenses, films and slides, Grade "Best." My 25 years experience is yours. Prompt business deal. Expert repairing. From 1st October on see me in my new large quarters, 219 Second Ave., near 14th Street, New York.

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

Monday, October 17.

Lubin—The Broken Doll (Dr.) 997
Lubin—Hearts and Potatoes (Dr.) 999
Lubin—One on Mary (Com.) 1001
Pathe—Jinks Wants to be an Actress (Com.) 997
Selig—The Lumberman (Dr.) 993

Tuesday, October 18.

Edison—The Hour of the Seven Gables (Dr.) 993
Gaumont—Grandmother's Plot (Dr.) 997
Gaumont—Phantom Ride from Aix la Bains (Scenic) 1005
Vitagraph—Auld Robin Gray (Dr.) 993

Wednesday, October 19.

Essanay—Hank and Lank Undaunted Guests (Com.) 972
Essanay—Hiring a Gem (Com.) 991
Kalem—The Tyranny of the Dark (Dr.) 999
Pathe—Outwitted (Dr.) 987
Pathe—Around Pekin (Scenic) 1000
Urban—In the Shadow of the Night (Dr.) 992
Urban—Tunny Fishing off Palermo, Italy (Indus.) 1000

Thursday, October 20.

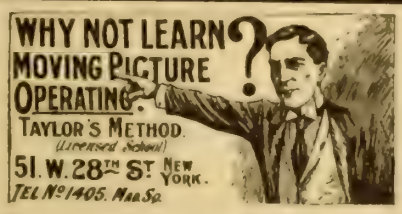
Biograph—The Banker's Daughter (Dr.) 984
Lubin—Hawkins' Hat (Com.) 1000
Lubin—Archie's Archery (Com.) 1000
Melies—Uncle Jim (Dr.) 1000
Selig—Two Boys in Blue (Dr.) 1000

Friday, October 21.

Edison—A Wedding Trip Through Canada to Hongkong (Dr.) 1000
Pathe—His Life for His Queen (Dr.) 998
Kalem—The Education of Elizabeth (Com.) 1000
Vitagraph—Davy Jones' Domestic Troubles (Com.) 1000

Saturday, October 22.

Essanay—Pals of the Range (Dr.) 1000
Gaumont—The Cheat (Dr.) 998
Pathe—Mystery of Lonely Gulch (Dr.) 996
Vitagraph—Clothes Make the Man (Com.) 995
Vitagraph—A Day on the French Battleship "Justice" (Scenic) 997



Correspondence Course. Special rates to the trade, send for free illustrated catalogue.

School class meets every morning and afternoon, with F. H. Richardson of Chicago, as chief instructor. Evening classes meet every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We positively guarantee you a $15 position.

We have a Powers' Cameragraph No. 5 in A-1 condition for $85.00 and an Edison Exhibition Model Machine for $60.00

We carry a large line of electrical supplies and furnish everything for the theatre.

F. C. TAYLOR
49 West 28th Street New York City
Phone 1405 Madison Square

Mechanical School For Operators

Conducted by Mr. Al. Kupky at 110 Third Avenue, is open to operators desiring a further knowledge in repairing and setting up all makes of Moving Picture Machines in a machine shop.

Complete Course $10.00

$5.00 STARTS YOU

Call and Investigate

JUSTICE MACHINE WORKS
110 Third Avenue New York City

Lang's Rewinder No. 2
Price, $5.00 Net
Send for latest catalogue
Lang Manufacturing Co.
OLEAN, NEW YORK

A GREAT WHITE WAY

for 75c per day. This small sum will run two ALBA Flame Arc Lamps for five hours. They will flood the front of your Theatre and the adjacent street with a volume of attractive light (equal to 4,000 incandescent lamps) that will prove an irresistible magnet for pleasure seekers for blocks in each direction.

They will surround your theatre with an atmosphere of good cheer that will make passers-by want to pass in.

Sold and guaranteed by the importers of the BIO Carbon—enough said.

Write our nearest office for catalog.

CHARLES L. KIEWERT CO.

39 Courtlandt Street, New York
421 Frick Building, Pittsburg
58 Plymouth Court, Chicago
114 Huron Street, Milwaukee
195 Fremont Street, San Francisco

Independent Film Stories.

YANKEE

SOLVING THE BOND THEFT. A sudden decline in stocks created a stampede in Wall street. Many stock jobbing firms tottered on the brink of collapse, among them Brown & Swain, whose clients numbered among them some of the most substantial investors in the metropolis. On the day of the avalanche, Swain frantically asks his partner to raise sufficient money to tide them over. Brown insists nothing can be done as funds are exhausted. At this juncture, Col. Jones calls to deposit with his friend, Brown, $150,000 worth of bonds for safekeeping. The Colonel is given a receipt for the same and departs. Swain, who has witnessed the transaction, endeavors to persuade Brown to use these bonds temporarily towards recovering their losses, but is met with a prompt refusal, and Brown secretes the bonds in a private compartment in the firm's large vault.

Swain, who has access to the vault but not to Brown's private secret compartment, being driven to desperation engages a noted safe-cracker and crook, Billy Valentine, to burglarize the vault and secure the bonds.

Brown discovers his loss and sends for his old friend, Pierce, the Yankee Detective, to unravel the mystery. The message arrives shortly after the death of the old sleuth, who was killed at the post of duty, but his daughter, Nell, decides to make the journey and takes up the case instead.

Brown looks upon the girl with much disfavor and refuses to place the case in her hands. Nothing daunted, she bribes the office boy to remain at home on the pretense of being ill and she impersonates a supposed brother and reports for work in his stead.

Valentine, the crook, calls at the office of Brown & Swain to secure from the latter the money promised for securing the stolen bonds. Nell recognizes him as an old offender whom her father had sent to Sing Sing, five years before. Swain tries to put Valentine off by promises, but the latter forces the broker to turn over the bonds, at the point of a gun, insisting he will hold them until the money promised is forthcoming.

Nell shadows Valentine to his haunt, the home of an old hag, in the disguise of a Salvation Army lass. She is captured by Valentine's accomplices and made prisoner. During the night, while the old hag is stupefied by drink, Nell manages to escape by burning the ropes with which her hands and feet were tied, in the flame of a candle. In the meantime, Valentine has received a letter from Swain directing him to the office and stating his money is ready. Nell attempts to reach the office first and is successful, arriving in time to see the bonds delivered and Valentine paid. Here the plucky girl shows her wonderful presence of mind by locking Swain in the huge vault when he steps inside to secure some papers. She then rushes out to arouse the police and accompanies them to Valentine's home just in time to capture both he and his gang.

Returning to the office, Nell finds the door locked. Becoming suspicious, she climbs a fire-escape to an adjoining roof and reaches the window of the brokerage office just in time to prevent the distracted Brown from taking his life. Explanations follow and the vault is opened in time to turn Swain over to the waiting police.

NESTOR.

THE BOYS OF TOPSY-TURVY RANCH.—To neglect his duty toward a bunch of hungry cowpunchers was what On Ching, the cook, had he been sober, would have carefully avoided.

Experience had long since taught him this. Unfortunately the Chink was not sober and therefore failed to notice a large hole in the bag of salt which was emitting a steady stream into the soup.

The boys were pounding loudly on the table. On Ching quickly filled the dishes and trotted in, but scarcely had he gotten back to the cook-house than the boys, who had taken one taste of the soup and risen in a body, were upon him. Forcing the remainder of the soup down the Chink's throat and throwing the dough he had been kneading over his head, they kicked him out, bag and baggage; then, after the excitement was all over, sat in gloomy silence.

It was thus that the boss, James Bedlow, and his daughter found them. Where could he get another cook on such short notice?

Suddenly a happy thought seized Florence: She had been to cooking school and here was an opportunity to display her ability. Snatching up a large cook-book, she disappeared in the direction of the cook-house amid the jubilant shouts of the boys.

An hour passed—still no dinner; then, as despair was settling upon them, the door opened and Florence, hot, but happy, appeared.

Her heavily loaded tray looked very tempting—from a distance—and there was still more to come. As she returned with the third tray, however, she found the room empty, and tears of anger and mortification rose to her eyes.

Had the boys peeped into the cook-house and seen the poor child's many troubles during that strenuous hour—the dog running away with the roast, the cats in the cream, and noted that her hands and dress were burned in many places, they surely would have choked down the sodaless biscuits and raw potatoes, likewise the steak, even though it was burned to a crisp. But being ignorant of all this, the boys lost no time in making good their escape and were mounting to ride over to the only restaurant in town when two tramps hove into sight. This chance to dispose of Florence's cooking was promptly and eagerly seized upon, after which the hungry men galloped away.

At the saloon and restaurant all might have gone well had not Big Bill gotten into an argument with the bartender then, all supplies were refused. But the boys were not to be again outdone, quickly they whipped out their guns, packed up what food and drink they desired, tossed the money on the bar and backed out.

The cowpunchers were preparing to enjoy their feast in the bunk-house when Florence appeared to announce Parson Conn and his good lady.

Hastily they stowed their supplies in the woodbox and lowered it out of the window, and although the old parson only remained long enough to offer up a prayer, sing a couple of hymns and take up a collection, it seemed an eternity before the boys were once more in possession of their precious wood-box.

As the cowpunchers removed its cover, they fell back prostrated at their hard luck. Florence's burned steak, raw potatoes and stone-like biscuits met their eyes, for in coming back to return these delicacies, the tramps had espied the box and carefully substituted the one for the other. At that very moment they were sitting under a tree with the Chink, whom they had met on the way, cheerfully disposing of roast chicken, pie and choice whiskey.

ATLAS.

A TOUCHING MYSTERY.—After a sojourn in Europe, Pa and Ma Belmont, with their pretty daughter Hazel, return to New York. Among the passengers who disembarked at the dock there appeared a strange-looking East Indian who carried a mysterious bundle. He approached the Belmonts and explained that he was anxious to show his collection of Oriental jewels and novelties to possible American buyers.

Pa Belmont extended his card and suggested that the Yogi call at the family residence at an early date. A few days later, mother and daughter were eagerly inspecting a rare and odd collection of Oriental curiosities which the Yogi brought.

Among the lot, they came upon a pearl-studded casket in which reposed a beautiful necklace having a peculiarly shaped locket attached. This, the Yogi explained, was a lucky charm and would bring good fortune to the wearer. Ma Belmont being slightly superstitious, was ready to purchase the trinket, but Pa objected, first, because the price asked was exorbitant, and again, because he did not believe in hoodooisms. Naturally Ma and daughter were disappointed and angry, and the Yogi likewise evinced his wrath by vowing vengeance as he left the room.

After completely wearing herself out by sobs and tears, Ma fell asleep and dreamed the Yogi appeared in a cloud of vapor and produced the wanted necklace, which he mysteriously transferred to her neck, locking it on with a small padlock. Then he disappeared as suddenly as he had come. Smilingly she seated herself in a comfortable chair, when lo! the chair vanished and precipitated her on the floor. Other articles of furniture also disappeared as she touched them. Screaming with fright, she alarms the household, and one by one they rush in, only to vanish mysteriously as Ma touches them.

Frantically she dashes from the house and down the street. Everywhere she goes there follows the elimination of people and objects. A street car, a train of cars and even a huge sight-seeing auto on Riverside Drive vanish at her touch, leaving astonished passengers in a tumbled heap on the pavement.

At intervals, the Yogi appears in a cloud of smoke and beckons her on. At last they reach the same ship on which she arrived home, and just as she is about to follow her spirit-guide into the sea, she awakes—in her own room.

ECLAIR.

SAVED BY HER DOG.—The handsome Collie, who is the hero, shows himself strong and exceptionally intelligent, while the setting is decidedly pretty. The Duchess of Moran, a widow with one little daughter, refuses the offer of marriage of an adventurer, and the latter finds it necessary to make other plans. He instructs a party of roughs, and at night they enter the girl's bedroom and carry her off to a boat waiting at the seashore. The mother discovers the loss, and remembers the dog, the child's inseparable friend and companion. He is put on the scent, which leads to the seashore, where he plunges into the water and makes for the boat. He soon approaches; the girl recognizes him, and encourages him until he is near enough to be helped into the boat, when he immediately seizes the villain by the throat and disables him. The girl then attaches a rope to the dog's collar and sets him to pull the boat back to shore. Meanwhile the adventurer has had an interview with the Duchess, and threatens the death of the child unless she consents to the proposal. The anguished mother has almost given way, when the child with the dog and a policeman burst in, and the ruffian is captured while the glad mother listens to the tale of the child's escape. A pretty head-and-shoulders view of the girl and her handsome companion concludes the film.

THE ABSENT-MINDED DOCTOR.—Dr. Giddybrains goes to visit one of his patients. Upon arriving at Mr. Larue's, he finds that that gentleman is very ill indeed, and advises his patient to go to a hospital. Accordingly he promises to send an ambulance, and makes a memorandum in his pocketbook as a reminder.

Upon leaving the house, Dr. Giddybrains notices that his clothes are getting rather shabby, and so he pays a visit to his tailor. While there, the tailor reminds the doctor that he owes him 500 francs, and the doctor promises to send a check just as soon as he reaches his office, carefully jotting down a reminder in his notebook.

Upon reaching home, our good friend writes a letter to the proper authorities, requesting them to send an ambulance, but poor Giddybrains' head has become so confused owing to his great desire not to put the letter in the wrong envelope, that he asks the authorities to send the ambulance to the tailor's, and sends the check to his patient, Mr. Larue. The poor tailor is hurried off to the hospital despite his protests, and Mr. Larue receives the 500 francs. The receipt of this good fortune, acts better than medicine upon the sick man; he immediately feels better, and goes out for a walk. He decides, with the utmost delight, that he will spend the money on a convalescent trip.

Meanwhile, the tailor has obtained his release from the hospital, and immediately rushes around to the doctor's, where the mystery is revealed. The doctor and his tailor immediately set off after Mr. Larue, but in vain; they reach the station just as the train has left—and the sick man has started upon his unexpected health trip, blissfully ignorant of the disturbance he has left behind.

CINES.

THE LAST OF SAVELLI.—Antonio Savelli, the only son of Mario Savelli, is on the point of marrying a young lady, Margherita del Vasto, when he meets Aricina, a young country girl, sister of Lamentano, who distrusts the young nobleman and will not hear of a love affair between him and his sister, forbidding young Savelli his house.

Antonio succeeds in obtaining admittance to the home of Aricina, during her brother's absence, but while there, endeavoring to persuade the girl to forget all discretion and fly with him, Lamentano is heard returning. Antonio makes a hurried exit by another way, but, in his haste, leaves his glove on the floor of the room.

Lamentano at once guesses the truth, and is greatly enraged at his sister for disobeying his commands. He decides to keep a strict watch on his sister and the villainous young lover. Soon afterwards he has a suspicion that there will be another meeting, and instead of leaving the house, as his sister anticipates, he secretes himself in the room where the meeting will most likely take place. He is not disappointed; soon the lover appears; Lamentano watches and becomes more enraged each moment. At last he entirely loses his self-control, rushes out from his hiding place, and, in his anger, kills Antonio, last of the Savellis.

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

THEIR CHILD.—Ellen Stokes is a loving wife and mother, but she has one fault—extravagance. On the day that her only child is playing the host at a birthday party, Ellen's husband informs her that he is practically ruined, and places the fault at her door.

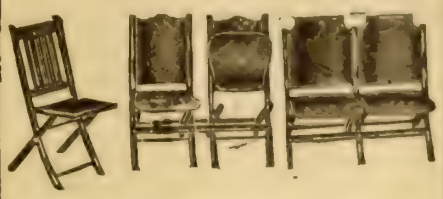
Ellen, conscience-stricken, declares that she will aid her husband, and tells him that she will induce her rich uncle to aid them. But when she talks to him on the subject, she finds that he is not disposed to aid her. Soon after his refusal, a friend of the family drops in, finds Ellen in tears, learns of her trouble, and offers a loan which she finally accepts.

The woman's husband is of a jealous nature and when Ellen gives him the money, he asks if it came from the other man. She hastily denies it, and says that her uncle was the one. The husband takes the money, and later finds that his wife has deceived him. In anger he leaves the house, taking their only child with him.

When Ellen finds that she has been deserted, she listens to the pleadings of the other man and is about to elope with him, when the baby, Tom, unexpectedly appears. He has run away from his father, and trudged through the streets, alone, to rejoin his mother. The woman clasps her child in her arms and decides to live for him in the future.

The mother takes her child to humble lodgings, the whereabouts of which are unknown even to her husband. There she tries to make a living for herself and him by sewing, but is unable to do so. She has given the last crust of bread to the little one, and is herself in a starving condition, when the baby boy himself comes to their rescue by starting out on a business career, selling papers in the street. In this way the wolf is kept from the door for a little while longer, and the little fellow, while plying his trade on the street corner, is met and recognized by his father. With his son as his guide, the repentant husband, who now realizes his unjust action, goes to his wife, and with the baby as a mediator, the two become reconciled.

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

Moving Picture Plots Written

I furnish plots for moving picture makers. All kinds. Write me what kind you need. My plots take. You pay me at your established rate.

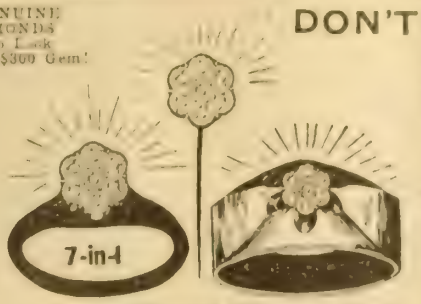
T. C. HARBAUGH, Journalist

Box 100 Casstown, Ohio

7 GENUINE DIAMONDS Set to Look Like $300 Gem!

DON'T SEND A CENT

Greatest Genuine Diamond Jewelry Innovation and Sensation In Years. "A $300 flash for $30" cash.



$30 AFTER you have examined the goods in your express office!

Patented 1909.

DESCRIPTION—Each ladies' ring, men's ring, men's stud or scarf pin and ladies' earscrew is set in platinum with SEVEN PERFECT BLUE WHITE GENUINE DIAMONDS, imported direct from Amsterdam by us. The setting of platinum is firmly held in 14k gold and the work is so marvelously ingenious that the seven diamonds seem to blend, GIVING ALL THE FIRE, BEAUTY AND BRILLIANCE OF A $300 DIAMOND. Not the old, flat cluster effect, but the raised setting, TIFFANY STYLE. If you want the most wonderfully beautiful bit of jewelry on the market to-day, at absurdly low cost, send us a postal card, (but no money), ordering pin, stud or ring (giving size of finger with piece of string), and we will ship at once. Open the package in your express office. If not all we claim for it, keep your money, refuse the goods, and we will pay the express charges both ways. Choice of any article, set with 7 genuine diamonds set to look like one $300 other sizes at $40, $50, $60.

DIAMOND IMPORTERS STRELITZ BROS. EST. 1874

Columbus Memorial Bldg., 103 State Street, CHICAGO

Showmen This is Your Opportunity

We have application for rental from exhibitors in unsold territory exceeding $10,000.00 and hundreds of letters from other exhibitors who are anxious to show the pictures on a percentage basis. This assures quick money to the man who buys State rights.

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

Write or wire quick the State you want, and if open will quote you price.

An Exclusive Proposition that is Exclusive

Every purchaser of a State right for the Wild West and Far East pictures is required to furnish a surety bond of $1,000.00 to guarantee that the film will be exhibited only in the State purchased. We guarantee you protection.

With the 3,000 feet of film you can show in any theater the complete BUFFALO BILL WILD WEST and PAWNEE BILL FAR EAST exactly as it is exhibited in the open arena. You can give a $1.00 show at a low price of admission.

Elegant seven-color lithograph posters, fine assortment of large size photographs for lobby frames, heralds, cuts, lecture, etc.; in fact, everything to help you get the money.

BILL THE TWO BILLS

BUFFALO BILL AND PAWNEE BILL FILM CO.

CARE OF MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES CO.
111 EAST 14TH STREET
NEW YORK.

EXHIBITORS: If you want the Buffalo Bill—Pawnee Bill Film write us and we will refer to the proper party.

OH, WHAT A KNIGHT! May Brandon is a young woman of the present day who finds that the course of true love can sometimes run too smooth. She is engaged to the man of her choice, but no one objects. In fact, there is not the slightest opposition to her marriage in any quarter. And being a woman, she does not like it.

Perhaps she would have been married in the orthodox way had it not been for a dream she had. In her sleep she found herself a beautiful young woman, persecuted because she was loyal to the Knight she had selected. Her father was obdurate, and finally practically made her a prisoner in his gloomy old castle. But her sweetheart called with a rope ladder. They escaped, and after a number of thrilling adventures, were married, and presumably lived happy forever afterwards.

When May awoke, she was more discontented than ever. She flouted her fiance, returned his ring and swore she would never marry him. But finally she told him of her dream, and he won forgiveness by promising to run away with her like the Knight of her dreams.

Being a man of his word, he did. But the romance all faded out of it. The adventures they passed through were not to the woman's liking, and her experience convinced her that swashbuckling knights are as much out of date as are stage coaches.

IMP

THE COUNT OF MONTEBELLO.—Gerald and Percy, whose ardent friendship and bitter rivalry caused all the trouble in "Fruit and Flowers" and "The Widow," are found where they were left at the conclusion of the latter picture, in their hall room, Percy endeavoring to nurse a damaged optic back to health by means of a raw pork chop, and Gerald preparing to fill his empty stomach by cooking the chop that fell to his share.

A letter is brought in announcing the pleasing fact that Percy has inherited a tidy sum of money and, a la Damon and Pythias, they proceed to enjoy it together and move into luxurious bachelor quarters where they are skilfully waited upon by a well-trained valet.

They next are seen on a tennis court, where they are the center of attraction to a group of eligible Summer girls, but Gerald and Percy are not to be caught again—not they. But alas! the heiress appears and—well, they forget their good resolutions and open another impetuous amatorial campaign and are once more deadly rivals. They each propose and are both rejected.

Retiring to their expensive apartments, they are plotting vengeance upon the fair but haughty one, when the strains of a grind organ smite upon their ears. Both seized by the same idea, they dash forth, drag the Italian musician into their room and engage him for their dark plot.

They purchase for him costly raiment, and discovering that an afternoon reception is being held at the home of their inamorata, they seize him and forcing their way past the sour-visaged footmen, present him as the Count of Montebello to their unwilling hosts.

Their base plan works, however, and although he makes many blunders, he is received with great eclat. Now, he is supposed to make love to the haughty heiress and marry her, so that the two conspirators may hand her a hearty laugh, but, alack! he falls in love with the chic French maid and upsets their plans. Their plot is discovered and a counterplot is secretly put into action by the clever heiress, who proceeds to announce her engagement to the Count, much to the joy of Gerald and Percy. The wedding day arrives and the ceremony is performed. Then the two plotters denounce the Count as an organ-grinder and begin to laugh. But the laugh is quite a brief one, for the bride's veil is raised, exposing the face of the petite maid, and a seeming old maid aunt removes her disguise and stands revealed as the heiress.

Again our young friends are thrown into the street and returning sorrowfully to their bachelor quarters they are relieved of their last dollar by the Italian bridegroom who collects his fee. The landlord then orders them out for non-payment of rent, and back to the hall room they wander, where they relieve their hunger by devouring bologna sausage and dry bread donated by the sympathetic little slavey.

MENDELSOHN'S SPRING SONG.—Felix Mendelsohn taking a stroll near his home in the Austrian Tyrol, in the early pring, receives the inspiration for his famous "Spring Song."

The first notes of the song are furnished him by a hunter blowing his horn; he receives his idea for the second strain from the crying of a child; the third strain is brought to him in the yawning of some sleepy laborers. Continuing his walk, he comes upon some peasant girls singing in a cabbage garden and from them obtains more material. The finale of the third strain he gets from a quarrel between the forewoman and one of the girl laborers, which quarrel he aids in prolonging for his benefit. The final strains come to him as he listens to two peasant lovers, the man playing a violin, the girl singing in unison. Taking the violin from the man, to whom he gives his card, he proceeds, playing as he goes. Coming to a beer garden, he meets two of his friends who aid him in his work. Finally, surrounded by the many followers he has picked up—the huntsman, the mother and child, the peasant girls and the lovers—he completes the piece and plays it, when all join in singing it under his leadership.

THE HOBBLE SKIRT. Miss Limelight, the actress, receives a letter from a Sick Baby Fund Committee advising her that she has been appointed a member of the committee to collect money for the organization and requesting her to appear at the Baby Fund Bazaar in her hobble skirt.

She writes, accepting the appointment, and informs them she is sending her hobble skirt by messenger and will appear later. Her maid employs "Happy Mike" to act as the messenger and sends him on his way. "Happy," grasping the opportunity to replenish his depleted exchequer and incidentally enjoy a little excitement, arrays himself in Miss Limelight's habiliments and shows up at the bazaar in all his glory. He is the "hit" of the entertainment, until Miss Limelight arrives and exposes him, when, doing a graceful dive through an open window, he disappears from view. But the irate members of the Fund rush from the house and pursue him. After various adventures, he is finally nailed up in a barrel by a kind-hearted storekeeper and sent rolling down the hill, as he hopes, to freedom, but is finally overtaken in his mad flight, stripped of his borrowed finery and receives his just desserts.

LUX FILMS.

THE TYRANT. A rich man offers to buy a little boy, but the offer is refused. The offer is too good to refuse, however, and the boy is eventually sold to the rich man. Twelve years elapse and the boy has grown to a handsome young man. He is well treated by his master, and this arouses the jealousy of the slave-driver, who brutally ill-treats him. The master departs on a journey, and during his absence the slave-driver opens a desk and commences to rob his master. He is observed by the young slave, who has concealed himself behind a curtain, and, unwilling to see his master robbed, he springs out and accuses the driver of robbery. The latter slashes at him with his whip, but the other closes with him and a fierce struggle ensues. The slave-driver calls for help, and the slaves rushing in, the young man is secured, taken to the whipping post and flogged. But the master returns unexpectedly, and interrupting the flogging, asks for an explanation. Freed from his bonds, the slave, dashing at his tormentor, takes from his tunic the proofs of the latter's villainy, and tells his master all. The latter orders the slave-driver away, and as a reward makes the young slave a free man. The latter is now a favored servant, and in passing through the slave market with his master, is confronted with a slave whom he recognizes as his father. Quickly the master is informed, and he completes his good actions by purchasing the man, who is led off by his son.

GILSON AND THOSE BOYS.—Mr. Gilson, a testy old gentleman, is seated in a restaurant, when a party of shoeblacks appear and attempt to shine his boots. Indignantly he shakes them off, and stalks away. The scene appears so amusing that a gentleman offers £1 to the boy who first succeeds in shining Mr. Gilson's shoes. The offer is eagerly accepted, and the next morning as Mr. Gilson, attired in spotless white trousers, appears, a gang of ragged urchins spring out and violently attempt to shine his boots. Everywhere they follow and pounce on him, until at length he is seized on a bridge from whence he falls into the river. He is dragged out and again the attempt is made. At length Mr. Gilson arrives home, but his adventures of the day have left such a violent impression upon him that he dreams his boots gather themselves together and race across the room preparatory to being cleaned.

CHAMPION.

DOINGS AT THE RANCH.—Mr. and Mrs. Jack Gordon are prepared to have a great time up the canyon where they are going for a two weeks' camp. But, alas! for the plans laid by men, just as they are about to start off, Wiry Lee brings in a special delivery letter. It is from Jack's mother, apprising him of a visit from his uncle, aunt, cousin and sister. In fact, they would reach the ranch on the heels of the letter.

The disappointment and chagrin is too overwhelming for Mrs. Jack and she packs up and goes home to her mother, leaving him to receive and entertain the folks as best he may.

Happening in for a friendly call, Ned Lillis, a cowboy chum, finds poor Jack in the depths of despair. Jack tells him of the predicament: his relatives about to call to meet his wife, and she has gone to her mother, and he a prospective heir at that. Was ever anyone in such cussed luck?

Ned, not being equal to the task of leading him out of the difficulty, is about to depart, when, like a flash a great inspiration dawns on the perplexed husband. Ned will have to dress up in Maud's clothes and impersonate his wife. Of course, Ned is horrified at the bare idea, but is soon won over to the scheme after Jack has illustrated the amount of fun to be gained from it.

They hurry up to his wife's dressing room, and their efforts to get Ned into woman's clothes is screamingly funny. In the midst of the toilet the visitors arrive and Jack leaves Ned to complete his makeup alone.

While interrogating him regarding his wife, whom they had never seen before, she (Ned) bounces into their midst arrayed in a most gorgeous ball dress. Her introduction to the family and her acknowledgements constitute a masterpiece of farcical art, as does her bearing at the dinner-table, where the jollity runs riot.

After dinner, the supposed wife is discovered by her uncle in the smoking room with her feet perched upon the table and a long black cigar between her teeth, smoking with keen enjoyment.

The tide of merriment rolls on under the impetus furnished by the ludicrous old uncle and his inane son, who both, in turn, make love to their relative's wife.

The crucial moment is turned when the real wife returns and finds Jack in the arms of another woman. Then begins a merry time for poor Jack, whom they harrass, demanding an explanation, until the cause of the trouble rushes amongst them. This is just what all desire and each makes a wild and determined grab at the offending lady's hair. Lo, and behold! Each draws back with a string of variegated puffs. The head of the culprit is that of a man.

The older folks take umbrage at the deception and leave the ranch in a huff. However, Jack's sister, who enjoys the joke and besides thinks that Ned is a dandy old boy, decides to stay a while longer, whereupon all four pack up and take the trip up the canyon together.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

BISON.

THE LURE OF GOLD. Dick Bennett has decided to seek his fortune in California, and, accompanied by his chum, Frank, calls to bid his fiancee good-bye. She is the daughter of Frank's employer, who is the president of a bank. He and Frank leave the room, permitting the lovers to indulge in an affectionate farewell.

Grace calls frequently at her father's office, and Frank falls in love with her. One day, while alone with her, he shows her some kodak pictures of Dick, but she does not evince much interest, as she reciprocates Frank's love. Grace looks so charming that Frank cannot resist the temptation of kissing her. She appears wounded and shocked at first, but in answer to Frank's profuse apologies she turns her cheek to him again and admits her love. Her father enters at this moment, and in his anger discharges Frank, who goes West and joins Dick. After untold hardships the boys find a gold mine, from which they extract many nuggets. They start back to civilization, become lost and suffer terrible privations. Almost dying of thirst, they are compelled to abandon the gold and stagger on. At night Frank falls asleep, and Dick, whose mind has already begun to give way, starts back for the hiding place of the treasure. The next day Frank is found by a band of prospectors and they rescue Dick, who has completely lost his reason. After convincing himself that there is no hope for his recovery, Frank marries Grace.

THE WRONG TRAIL.—"To town 12½ miles. Warning! Desert trail—Take the other road." These sign boards at the cross roads Louise exchanges, aiming to have her uncle take the wrong road and perish in the desert. Three months previous, believing himself to be dying, he makes a will in her favor, giving no consideration to Helen, the younger sister. Shortly after he recovers and Louise is anxious to get him out of the way. Raving in delirium, with lacerated hands and ravished for thirst and hunger, the old uncle is blindly groping his way in the merciless desert. Meanwhile, Helen, alarmed at the uncle's failure to return, sets out in search, and a young prospector, recently come to the camp, helps her take up the trail. Coming to the cross roads the exchanging of the sign boards is detected and a handkerchief, unwittingly left behind by Louise, fixes her guilt. The uncle is resuscitated and taken back to the ranch house as Louise is mounting her horse to depart forever. The scene closes with lusty cheering of cowboys and Helen in the arms of the young prospector.

DEFENDER

THE HEART OF A COWBOY.—An aged tourist, traveling with his daughter, Helen, is suddenly taken ill and immediate medical assistance is required. Helen discovers an inn in the vicinity to which she helps her stricken father. Here, after a short illness, the tourist passes away goes off to tour the unknown waste in the land of shadows. Helen is compelled to work out the board bill which they have incurred for the Mexican owner of the hostelry. To the inn comes a stranger, an American cowboy, daring and venturesome and as is the custom of his ilk, he at once proposes to shake dice with the Mexican for a drink. The Mexican loses, and in the hope of retrieving his fortunes, proposes to shake for their horses. Again he loses and again bets, this time wagering Helen against all the money the cowboy possesses. The cowboy is again victorious.

To the victor belongs the spoils but the cowboy's intentions toward the girl are honorable, and his purpose is to send her back to her country and her people. It is a two days' journey to the railroad station, and en route the cowboy, by little attentions and considerate acts and words, leaves a very strong impression on the girl. When they finally arrive at the depot, the cowboy finds he has not sufficient money to pay her fare, and sells his horses to obtain the necessary amount. He has placed her on the train, taken her hand in his for the last time, for the last time looked into her eyes, and has returned again to loneliness and solitude. The girl, however, once he has left her, feels a strong desire to return to him to stay with him, to receive of him the attentions and ardent solicitude which he had shown her. Back she goes—finds him bowed with grief because she had gone out of his life—gives him the glad tidings of her change of course, and as he presses her hands strongly in his own, a little sunshine steals into both their souls.

Classified Advertisements

[Classified advertisements, three cents per word, cash with order; 50 cents minimum; postage stamps accepted.]

SITUATIONS WANTED.

AT LIBERTY Piano Player and Trap Drummer. Both sing illustrated songs, three years in picture business. Members of A. F. of M. Address, Trap-Drummer, Armory Apartments, Brattleboro,

AT LIBERTY Operator; willing to go anywhere. Southern States preferred. Address, L. D. B., care Moving Picture World.

AT LIBERTY Operator or Manager and wife, singer and pianist. Both first-class and nine years' experience. Prefer to work together and will leave city if necessary. Exceptional team with highest credentials. M. P. World can recommend. Address, RELIABLE, care Moving Picture World.

AT LIBERTY—First class operator. Six years' experience. Strictly sober and reliable; best of references. Mass. and Conn. licenses. Age 33. E. A. HALL, 50 Columbia St., Swampscott, Mass.

A-1 OPERATOR who guarantees good work wishes position. Wife is expert vaudeville and picture pianist. Address G. E. GORDON, 401 South Fifth street, Columbia, Mo.

THEATER MANAGER or manager and singer. Competent man of wide experience with original and first-class ideas. Have been managing Summer house; now disengaged. Desires permanent connection with concern controlling one or more picture theaters. W. L., care of Moving Picture World.

THEATER FOR SALE.

FOR SALE Picture theater, 35 miles from Chicago. No competition; stand rigid investigation. $1,000.00. Address, E. A. O., 428 So. Harvey Avenue, Oak Park, Ill.

FOR SALE—New Motion Picture Theater. Must sell quick on account of other business. Best one in the city. SCENIC THEATER CO., 316 West 4th Street, Waterloo, Iowa.

FOR SALE Vaudeville and picture theater; own electric plant; complete in every detail. E. C. SAWYER, care General Delivery, Dayton, Ohio.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED AT ONCE—First class Pianist for vaudeville and moving pictures. Must be sight reader and able to transpose. Would consider combination Pianist and Trap Drummer with complete traps. Husband and wife preferred at reasonable salary for permanent position. LYRIC THEATER, Charlottesville, Va.

WANTED High class male baritone Singer of good appearance for illustrated and special songs. Must have good pronunciation and good expression. In picture house seating four hundred. No Sunday shows. None but best talent need answer. Must help on floor and know how to handle crowds. No mashers wanted. A. L. BROWN, Orpheum Theater, Lansing, Mich.

WANTED AT ONCE—Singer for Motion Picture Theater. Temperate and must understand music and one who does not need transposing. Answer immediately, stating salary expected. LYRIC THEATER, Shenandoah, Pa.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOR RENT—124 EAST 14TH STREET. VERY LIGHT THIRD LOFT, 20 FEET BY 80 FEET. RENT, $45.00 AND $70.00. CALL, J. WALLACH SONS, CIGAR STORE.

WANTED—Set Trap Drums. State price and condition. ROBERT FOURNIER, Lyric Theater, Northfield, Vt.

WANTED TO BUY—One pin machine, complete. FOR SALE or exchange film like new. King Edward Funeral, 350 ft.; Roosevelt's Return, 350 ft.; Paris Flood, 700 ft.—3c. per foot. BOX 402, Kemmerer, Wyo.

PANAMA CANAL—170 slides, 100 colored. Authentic lecture. Want managing partner with machine and capital. Address, PANAMA, White River Jct., Vt.

FOR SALE—November 1st, 200 folding chairs. Cost 65 cents each; sell 35 cents. Good condition. T. F. KINIRY, Dreamland, Bellows Falls, Vt.

FOR SALE—Two Edison machines; one-pin movement; first class condition; cheap. H. F. HARTEL, 112 Third Ave., New York City.

MOVING PICTURE CAMERA for sale. Taking standard films. Want Cinephone and Talking Pictures. Address IRA FENTON, Watsonville, Cal.

Andrews OPERA CHAIRS

Over 75 per cent. of the finest theaters in the United States and Canada are furnished with them. They are used in 318 of the 408 moving picture theaters in Chicago.

To meet the growing demands for

LOW PRICED OPERA CHAIRS

we have originated a number of styles which, though inexpensive, are characteristic of

ANDREWS QUALITY

Write to Department K for our large Catalogue No. 21, illustrated in colors, which will guide you when contemplating the purchase of opera chairs.

THE A. H. Andrews Co.

CHICAGO ESTABLISHED 1868
NEW YORK SAN FRANCISCO
ST LOUIS SEATTLE

174-176 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAM OF INDEPENDENT FILMS.

Monday, October 17.

Eclair Dr. Geoffroy's Conscience (Dr.).....659
Eclair An Indian Chief's Generosity (Dr.)....321
Imp Mother and Child (Dr.).....
Yankee The Copper and the Crook (Dr.)....

Tuesday, October 18.

Bison The Lure of Gold.....982
Powers Sleepy Jones (Com.).....
Powers The Devil (Com.).....
Thanhouser Oh, What a Knight! (Com.)....1000

Wednesday, October 19.

Ambrosio Tweedle Dum's Sleeping Sickness (Com.).....384
Ambrosio Excursion of the Chain of Mont Blanc (Scenic).....532
Atlas The Cat Came Back (Com.).....
Atlas Imperfect Perfectos (Com.).....
Champion Stolen by Indians (Dr.).....950
Nestor The Boys of Topsy Turvy Ranch (Com.).960

Thursday, October 20.

Defender The Heart of a Cowboy (Dr.).....
Imp The Fur Coat (Com.).....995
Lux The Tyrant (Dr.).....577
Lux Gilson and those Boys (Com.).....347

Friday, October 21.

Bison The Wrong Trail (Dr.).....1000
Cines (Eclair) The Last of the Savelli (Dr.).800
Solax A Child's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Thanhouser Their Child (Dr.).....1000

Saturday, October 22.

Columbia Breaking Home Ties (Dr.).....
Great Northern The Artist's Luck (Dr.).....
Itala Foolshead Between Two Fires.....500
Itala The False Coin 500
Powers Hearts of Gold (Dr.).....995

UNBREAKBLE SLIDES

Patent applied for

The only manufacturers of non-breakable slides.

WHY: Because we fill all orders promptly. This is no fake ad. We deliver the goods. Try us. Give us your order and see.

Song slides, glass $4.00, unbreakable, $5.00 a set
Announcement slides, glass $30.00 a 100
" " unbreakable 40.00 a 100

All work first-class and work guaranteed.

Send for catalogue of song and announcement slides

THE PARIS SLIDE CO.

932 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.

JOS. C. HUFFMIRE, Eastern Agent.
140 ELDERT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For Rent—6 reels films with signs and slides, $12. For Sale—50 reels perfect condition films, $10 to $16.50 per reel. Perfect song slides $1.50 per set. Steel Slide Carriers, can't burn, won't break, 75c. Tickets, 9c. per 1,000.

LIBERTY FILM RENTING CO.,
105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

ADVERTISING : ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES

Genre Transparency Company
507 N. Clark Street : : : Chicago

Canadian Exhibitors

Looking for a first-class film service, write the Crystal Palace Film Exchange for particulars. We handle both Licensed and Independent films and can give you a right up-to-date service. We own and operate the most successful Moving Picture Theaters in Canada.

Located at

141 Yonge Street, Toronto
331 St. Lawrence Blvd., Mont.
27 King Street East, Hamilton

Agents for Powers and Edison Machines

Crystal Palace Film Exchange
141 Yonge Street Toronto, Can.
269 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, Can.

EXCHANGES!

Have you tried our process for renewing your old films

IF NOT

Send us a reel and see what we can do

IF

Your second run reel is in good condition it will help rent your new film

Shipments of fifteen reels returned same day received

Old Reliable Film Renovating Co.
22 Randolph St. :: Chicago, Ills.

Write for References from 75 Exchanges

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY.

Oct. 3—Through the Ruins of Carthage.....660
Oct. 3—Behind the Scenes of Cinema Stage...320
Oct. 10—The Carnaille (Dr.).....670
Oct. 10—The Order Is To March (Com.).....295
Oct. 17—Dr. Geoffroy's Conscience (Dr.).....659
Oct. 17—An Indian Chief's Generosity (Dr.)...321
Oct. 24—Saved by Her Dog (Dr.).....185
Oct. 24—The Absent Minded Doctor (Com.)...515

CINES.

Eclair.

Sept. 23—Tontolini as a Ballet Dancer (Com.)..236
Sept. 30—Giovanni of Medici (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Giorgione (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—The Mad Lady of Chester (Dr.).....965
Oct. 21—The Last of the Savelli (Dr.).....800

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

Oct. 1—Bird's-eye View from World's Highest Buildings (Sc.).....235
Oct. 8—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 8—The Storms of Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Saved by Bosco (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Willie Visits a Moving Picture Show (Com.).....
Oct. 22—The Artist's Luck (Dr.).....

"IMP."

Oct. 13—The Garden of Fate (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 10—Jes' Plain Dog (Dr.).....500
Oct. 10—A Game of Hearts.....500
Oct. 17—Mother and Child (Dr.).....990
Oct. 20—The Fur Coat (Com.).....995
Oct. 24—The Count of Montebello (Com.).....1000
Oct. 27—Mendelssohn's Spring Song.....500
Oct. 27—The Hobble Skirt (Com.).....500

LUX FILMS.

Oct. 6—Auntie in the Fashion (Com.).....301
Oct. 6—Mother's Portrait (Dr.).....531
Oct. 13—Runaway Star (Com.).....413
Oct. 13—Bill and the Missing Key (Dr.).....534
Oct. 20—The Tyrant (Dr.).....577
Oct. 20—Gibson and those Boys (Com.).....347

NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

Sept. 21—Strayed from the Range (Dr.).....963
Sept. 28—Where the Sun Sets (Dr.).....976
Oct. 5—The Golden Hoard (Dr.).....930
Oct. 12—Silver Plume Mine (Dr.).....970
Oct. 19—The Boys of Topsy-Turvy Ranch (Com.).....960

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. ("Bison.")

Sept. 23—A Cattle Rustler's Daughter.....1000
Sept. 27—A Cowboy for Love.....989
Sept. 30—The Ranch Raiders.....915
Oct. 4—Young Deer's Return.....985
Oct. 7—The Girl Scout.....969
Oct. 11—A Cowboy's Daring Rescue.....975
Oct. 14—The Prayer of a Miner's Child.....985
Oct. 18—The Lure of Gold.....982
Oct. 21—The Wrong Trail.....1000

ITALA.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Oct. 1—Foolshead Employed in a Bank.....554
Oct. 1—Foolshead Is Presented with a Football.....431
Oct. 8—Mrs. Cannon is Warm.....388
Oct. 8—Foolshead Fisherman.....470
Oct. 13—Mysteries of Bridge of Sighs at Venice.908
Oct. 15—Paid Boots and Stolen Boots.....608
Oct. 15—A Pearl of Boy.....281
Oct. 20—The Calumny.....805
Oct. 22—Foolshead Between Two Fires.....500
Oct. 22—The False Coin.....500

AMBROSIO.
(By N. Y. M. P. Co.)

Sept. 21—The Last Friend.....521
Sept. 21—Molly at the Regiment.....425
Sept. 28—The Virgin of Babylon.....908
Oct. 5—The Pit that Speaks.....620
Oct. 5—Tweedle Dum's Duel.....343
Oct. 12—The Betrothed's Secret.....645
Oct. 12—Tweedle Dum on his First Bicycle....269
Oct. 19—Tweedle Dum's Sleeping Sickness.....384
Oct. 19—Excursion of the Chain of Mont Blanc.532

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS.

Oct. 8—Within an Inch of His Life (Dr.)....
Oct. 11—A Man and a Girl (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Simpson's Skate (Com.).....
Oct. 15—A Woman's Wit (Dr.).....
Oct. 18—Sleepy Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 18—The Devil (Com.).....
Oct. 22—Hearts of Gold (Dr.).....993
Oct. 25—The Plot that Failed.....
Oct. 25—The Lord and the Lady.....

SOLAX COMPANY.

Oct. 21—A Child's Sacrifice (Dr.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 16—The Stolen Invention (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Not Guilty (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 23—The Convict.....
Sept. 23—A Husband's Jealous Wife (Com.)...
Sept. 30—Dots and Dashes (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 4—Leon of the Table d'Hote (Com.)...1000
Oct. 7—Avenged (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Pocahontas (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Delightful Dolly.....1000
Oct. 18—Oh, What a Knight! (Com.).....1000
Oct. 21—Tacit Child (Dr.).....1000

DEFENDER FILM CO.

Sept. 15—A Game for Life (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—An Attempted Elopement (Dr.).....
Sept. 22—The Cattle Thief's Revenge (Dr.)....
Sept. 29—A Schoolmarm's Ride for Life (Dr.)..
Oct. 6—Wild Bill's Defeat (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—The Tale the Camera Told (Com.).....
Oct. 20—The Heart of a Cowboy (Dr.).....

CHAMPION.

Aug. 17—Cowboy's Pledge (Dr.).....900
Aug. 24—The Sheriff and His Son (Dr.).....900
Aug. 31—The Cowboy and the Easterner.....1000
Sept. 7—His Indian Bride (Dr.).....
Sept. 14—A Wild Goose Chase (Com.).....930
Sept. 21—The White Princess of the Tribe (Dr.).....900
Sept. 28—A Western Girl's Sacrifice (Dr.).....900
Oct. 5—The Cowboys to the Rescue (Dr.).....900
Oct. 12—How the Tenderfoot Made Good (Dr.).950
Oct. 19—Stolen by Indians (Dr.).....950
Oct. 26—Doings at the Ranch (Dr.).....950

YANKEE FILM COMPANY.

July 25—Ungrateful Daughter-in-Law.....985
Aug. 1—U. S. Revenue Detective.....900
Aug. 8—Broker's Daughter.....970
Aug. 15—The Heroic Coward.....975
Aug. 22—The Gang Leader's Reform (Dr.).....990
Aug. 29—Who Killed John Dare (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—Judge Ye Not in Haste (Dr.).....900
Sept. 12—Captured by Wireless.....1000
Sept. 19—The White Squaw (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Yankee Girl's Reward (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Women of the West (Dr.).....950
Oct. 10—The Monogramed Cigarette (Dr.)....
Oct. 17—The Copper and the Crook (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—Solving the Bond Theft (Dr.).....990

ATLAS FILM COMPANY.

Aug. 24—A Bully's Waterloo.....200
Aug. 31—Unsophisticated Book Agent (Com.)..450
Aug. 31—Turning the Tables (Dr.).....450
Sept. 7—The Snorer (Com.).....952
Sept. 14—Animated Powders.....450
Sept. 14—Monkey Shines.....500
Sept. 21—Trailing the Black Hand (Dr.).....950
Sept. 28—Levi the Cop (Com.).....
Sept. 28—The Laugh's on Father (Com.).....
Oct. 5—When Cupid Sleeps (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Curing a Grouch (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The S. S. Mauretania (Sc.).....
Oct. 19—The Cat Came Back (Com.).....
Oct. 19—Imperfect Perfectos (Com.).....
Oct. 23—A Touching Mystery (Dr.).....

CAPITOL FILM CO.

Sept. 10—The Messenger Boy's Sweetheart.....
Sept. 17—Round Trip $5.98 (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Bill Mason's Ride (Dr.).....700
Oct. 8—All's Fair in Love and War (Dr.)....
Oct. 15—A Shot in the Night (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Why they Signed the Pledge (Com.)

RELIANCE

Oct. 22—In the Gray of the Dawn (Dr.).....
Oct. 29—The Armorer's Daughter (Dr.).....

COLUMBIA.

Oct. 1—Rip Van Winkle (Dr.).....920
Oct. 8—Jealousy (Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Tracked Across the Sea (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Breaking Home Ties (Dr.).....
Oct. 29—In the Web (Dr.).....

For Rent to Licensed Theatres

ORIGINAL

JOHNSON-KETCHEL FIGHT

2500 FEET

The greatest picture of a knockout ever snapped by a camera. Exclusive American Rights controlled by the Johnson-Ketchel Fight Pictures Co.

A. J. GILLIGHAM, Mgr.
103 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich.

NEW SLIDES

For the Following Songs—JUST OUT

Maybe you're not the only one who loves me.
Sweet Red Roses.
Now She's Anybody's Girlie.
Love Dreams.
O-O-Ohio.
Oh, You Dream.
You Stole My Gal.
I'm Just Pinin' For You.
Beloved.
There's a Girl up in the Moon.
On Mobile Bay
He got Right up on the Wagon
Fifty Years Ago
Love Me Again
"Its Moonlight all the Time on Broadway."
"Spoonlight."
I Love You Dear.
Band, Band, Band.
When the Summer Days Are Gone.
Only a Chain of Dasies.

DeWITT C. WHEELER
120 W. 31st St., N. Y. City

For Sale—1,000 ft. reels film, $5 to $25; Edison, Power's, Lubin used machines, $60; new $100; Model B. gas outfits, $25; song sets, $1.

For Rent—Film, $1 and $2 per reel weekly. Will buy gas outfits, machines, film.

H. DAVIS - - - Watertown, Wis.

¶ Put in our Easels and Poster Frames and watch your attendance grow.

¶ We make mechanical attractions, Electric signs, or anything special in the theatrical line. ¶ Ideas developed—Low Prices — Best Work — DON'T DELAY but write to-day.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
717-719 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs Also seating for Out-of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W.

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York Office: 150 Fifth Avenue
Boston Office: 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Want Chairs Quick?

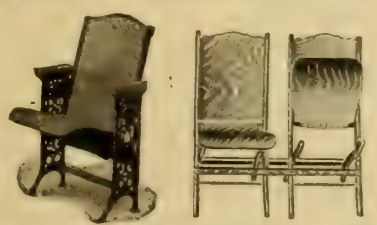
Stafford chairs excell all others. We use no three-ply veneers. Why? Not good enough! Five ply is best, and that is why we use them.

Chairs like cut IN STOCK and GUARANTEED

Ask for Catalog No. 385

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO. ILLINOIS

Opera and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for pictures show use.

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
NORTH MANCHESTER - - INDIANA

I WANT a High-Class Man to take charge of my Booking and Shipping Department. Must be thoroughly acquainted with Independent Films and must know how to handle the trade. Splendid opportunity for the right man. No amateurs need apply.

Don't be afraid to tackle old Gen. Flimco, Mr. Exhibitor. He's a puff-ball, a hot-water bag, a monumental bluff. All he needs is calling! Right now he is actually quaking with fear because he has pulled off some stunts that seems likely to get him into trouble. Ever since I published his famous and infamous Denver letter in which he told an exhibitor he could "crush him very quickly," exhibitors everywhere have been jumping to the Independent ranks. It has been one of the grentest achievements of my career and I don't hesitate to say I'm busting with pride over it. My renting business is away above the high-water mark but still I want you, you, you, you, you! And when I get you I'll give you a film service that will bring a perpetual cash smile to your frontispiece. I've got the goods, old top, I've got the goods.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

Headquarters: 196-198 Lake Street, Chicago
Minneapolis Portland Omaha Salt Lake City Evansville
The biggest and best film renter in the world

THE ENTERPRISE MODEL B

Portable Calcium Gas Outfit

Is the only Substitute for Electricity for projecting Motion Picture or Stereopticon views and is the

Only Satisfactory Portable Outfit

because it operates by WATER PRESSURE, IS CONSTANT, REGULAR AND RELIABLE and has no complicated spring valves to corrode, choke up and otherwise get out of order. Is patented.

"OXONE" in SQUARE CAKES Is most Satisfactory for the production of Oxygen Gas. Send for particulars.

For Sale by Dealers

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. MANUFACTURERS AND SALES AGENTS 564 and 572 W. Randolph St. CHICAGO

ANNOUNCEMENT

To stop, once for all time, the silly rumors to the effect that Miss Florence Lawrence is working for some other film manufacturer, the "Imp" Company publishes the fact that its contract with Miss Laurence does not expire until a year from next March. Even if we wished to let her go, or if she wished to leave the "Imp" Company, it could not be done, as the contract provides that neither party can break it or violate any of its conditions. This ought to settle the doubts of all who may nave become confused by the rumors they have heard.

Independent Moving Picture Co. of America.
102 West 101st Street, New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.
All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

A SWELL 3 REEL SHOW

1 Reel Johnson Training Picture

2 Reels Johnson-Jeffries Fight

(An impersonation which can be shown in any city.)
All three for the price of the fight pictures alone.

Exclusive Rights for Ohio of the
Nelson-Wolgast Fight Pictures

WRITE FOR DATES AND PRICES

The Toledo Film Exchange Co.
319 Superior St., TOLEDO, O.

UNIFORMS AND CAPS FOR Moving Picture Theatres

Catalogues, Samples and Prices for the Asking

James H. Hirsch & Co.
Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO.

Film Service for All Classes

PRICES TO SUIT ALL

INDIANAPOLIS CALCIUM LIGHT & FILM EXCHANGE
114-116 S. Capitol Ave. Indianapolis, Ind.

Imperial Film Exchange

144 NORTH 12th STREET PHILADELPHIA

To the Trade:

WE have opened an exchange in Philadelphia, and we have a large stock of Association Films, which is good to you, Mr. Exhibitor, if they are in good condition. Our stock is A1, and if we are misrepresenting, you are invited to our exchange to examine our stock. These films have not seen the service, and that is the reason they are in good condition.

SONG SLIDE PRIMER

Oh, see the HAPPY SINGER.
Is she a HAPPY SINGER?
She is a HAPPY SINGER.
Why is she a HAPPY SINGER?

Because she has just received tremendous applause after singing the latest catchy songs, illustrated by beautiful song sets, complete from Title to Chorus.

FROM WHO? FROM US.
WRITE FOR OUR LATEST PROPOSITION
Chicago Song Slide Exchange
Sixth Floor, Portland Block
107 Dearborn Street Chicago, Ill.

SWAAB

The Pioneer Film Exchange of Philadelphia
and
Largest Dealer in Machines and Supplies

Agent for
Power's Cameragraph
Lang's Rewinder
and
Cary Coated Carbons

The Trade Supplied. Licensed Films Only

SWAAB FILM SERVICE CO., Inc.
338 Spruce St. Philadelphia, Pa.

Opera Chairs

The Strongest Made
Most Attractive Designs
Permanently Noiseless

More of our chairs used than all others combined. There are reasons. Large stocks constantly on hand, and we can make prompt shipments of rush orders.

Write for Catalog V

American Seating Company

215 Wabash Avenue CHICAGO
19 West 18th Street NEW YORK
BOSTON PHILADELPHIA PITTSBURGH

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

STEREOPTICONS, SLIDES, ACCESSORIES.

Chas. M. Stebbins
1028 Main Street,
KANSAS CITY, MO.
Large Line of Edison Goods
Established 1899.

Solax Film

OLD SOL:—"Gentlemen, accept my warmest thanks for your kind reception, your quick appreciation of my SAMPLES and the MANY STANDING ORDERS given me."

BREVITY

is the SOUL of WIT, and ALL KNOWING ONES, who SEE THE SOLAX SAMPLES, briefly and concisely say:
" THEY ARE NOT THE USUAL THING."

REMEMBER

Friday, October 21st, - - Solax's First Release

A "Child's Sacrifice"

SOLAX COMPANY

147-157 FOURTH AVENUE, - - NEW YORK
Corner of 14th Street
Factory and Studio. - FLUSHING, L. I.
SOLD THROUGH THE SALES CO.

WE ARE NOT RENTERS

but the Largest New and Second-hand Films Dealers in the United States, both Independent and Association. New Film, from 4c. per foot up, Second-hand Film, from $5.00 per reel up, Second-hand Power's Machine, like new, $115.00, Song Slides, at $2.00 per set up, ⅝ x 6 Electra Carbons Pink Label $19.00 per 1000. Complete List sent free upon request.

UNITED STATES FILM BROKERS & IMPORTERS
41 Union Square West Broadway and 17th Street New York City

SPECIAL ROLL TICKETS

The Big Ticket. Any Printing Any Colors.

5,000	$1.25	20,000	$4.60
10,000	2.30	25,000	5.50
50,000	$7.50
100,000	10.00

Get the Samples Stock Tickets, 6 Cents

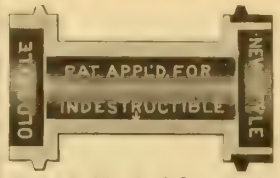
NATIONAL TICKET COMPANY - - - Shamokin, Pa.

JUST ONE MORE WEEK



300 SAMPLE SPROCKETS

Upper or Lower, each $1.25

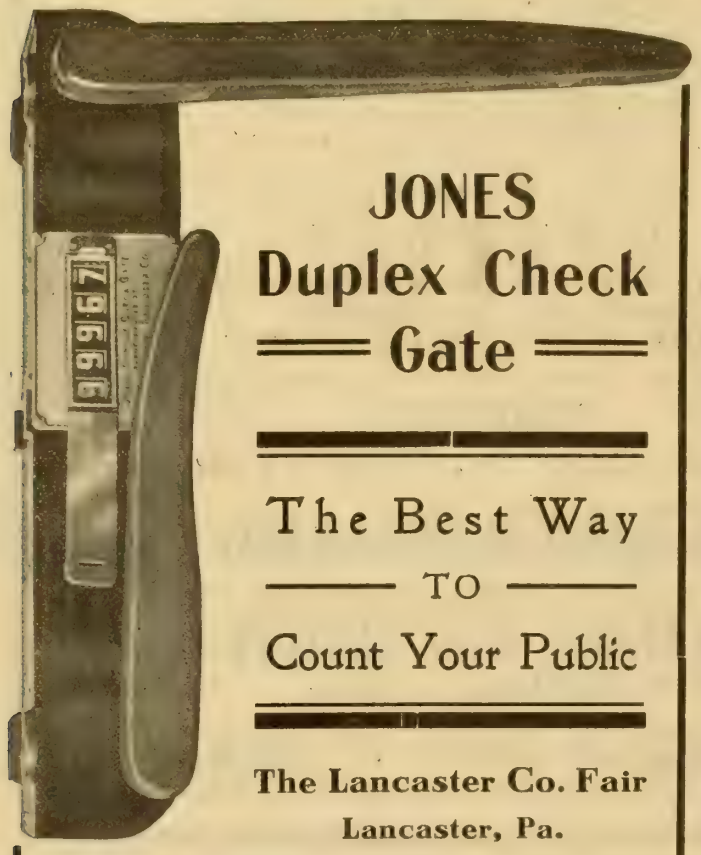
JUST TO INTRODUCE MY IMPROVEMENT

E. W. LAVEZZI

3042 N. Ashland Ave. Chicago, Ill.

ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES, 1 CENT EACH.

Up-to-date theaters use them for announcing future programs, for song chorus slides when the chorus slide is missing, for business advertising slides—in fact, for anything you desire to say to the audience. They are written on colored gelatin with a pen and ink or typewriter. They look well. Anyone can make them. Takes three minutes to make a slide. For three dollars ($3.00) cash with order, I send by express (charges not prepaid) as follows: 24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. F. H. RICHARDSON, No. 6 Bradhurst avenue, New York City.



JONES Duplex Check Gate

The Best Way TO Count Your Public

The Lancaster Co. Fair
Lancaster, Pa.

bought six gates for main entrance. Thursday, September 29th, more than 50,000 persons passed through these Jones Duplex Check Gates.

A PERFECT COUNT SMOOTH OPERATION

Manufactured by

JONES Change Register Co.

INC.

18 Broadway :: NEW YORK

SONG SLIDES

L I D E NON-BREAKABLE—NON-INFLAMABLE L I D E

Colored Song and Announcement Slides

Patent Applied For

Just the kind of a slide you have all been waiting for. Guaranteed against breaking from heat or the careless operator. Send for list. Made and sold only by the original inventors. None others genuine.

NORTH AMERICAN SLIDE CO., 143 North 8th Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SONG SLIDES

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In order to complete our files and a number of bound volumes, the publisher of the Moving Picture World is anxious to obtain at least a dozen numbers of the following issues, and for each number received will give a three months' subscription to the World. Kindly let us hear from you promptly. Vol. I., No. 1; Vol. II., No. 10; Vol. II., No. 11; Vol. III., No. 12; Vol. III., No. 23; Vol. III., No. 25; Vol. IV., No. 1.

ATTENTION NEW YORK ALIEN OPERATORS.

All New York Nineteen Hundred and Ten licensed cards, alien and non-alien, will be allowed by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity to remain in full force and effect until one year from date of issue. This means that, for instance, a card issued in March, Nineteen Hundred and Ten will expire March, Nineteen Hundred and Eleven.

W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Inc.

The oldest and largest Independent Film Exchange in New England

Mr. Exhibitor: When you see your receipts drop, call on us

If you are unable to call, drop us a line and we will convince you that our service is the service you want to increase your business

Don't forget the name and address

W. E. Greene Film Exchange
INCORPORATED
228 Tremont Street Boston, Mass.

Columbia Film Co.

101 Ranch Productions

FOR THE EAR OF THE EXHIBITOR

101 Ranch is the Biggest Proposition on the Continent

Therefore we will produce pictures there which will have the same standing in the picture world as 101 has in the Ranch World.

The Western Drama

will be our theme and every element of Western Life will be used to back the effort.

1st Release of 101 Production, Nov. 5th

The Heroine of 101 Ranch

Release of Oct. 22nd
Breaking Home Ties

Release of Oct. 29th
In the Web

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Selling exclusively through The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.

ROUGH-HOUSE FOR

NESTOR FILMS

"RARELY EQUALLED—NEVER SURPASSED"

DAVID HORSLEY, German Savings Bank Bldg., 4th Ave. and 14th St., N. Y.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

DISCOVERED America 418 Years Ago. WHEN Will The "HOLDING BACK" EXCHANGES DISCOVER That It PAYS to Be On NESTOR'S LIVE LIST? The EARLY DISCOVERER Catches NESTOR FILMS AND The CUSTOMER—Ae; Thre's The RUB!

For Release Wednesday October 19th, 1910

The BOYS of TOPSY-TURVY RANCH

THE COMEDY OF THE YEAR

960 FEET AND A BURST OF SUNSHINE IN EVERY FOOT

NESTOR REPLIES:

Hundreds of EXHIBITORS have written telling of many difficulties they encounter in GETTING NESTOR FILMS, as there are EXCHANGES that HAND OUT EXCUSES instead of NESTORS.

DON'T deal with the SLUGGISH, PROCRASTINATING EXCHANGEMAN. LET him DISCOVER the value of your patronage by taking your TRADE to an EXCHANGE HANDLING NESTOR FILMS—the FILMS that EVERYBODY WANTS.

READ THIS!

"Am running NESTOR FILMS in ALL my PROGRAMS. Am showing to the LARGEST CROWDS of any house in the city, and ALL CALL FOR NESTOR PICTURES. Accept my CONGRATULATIONS.

HERMAN KAISER, Prop.

Lyric Theatre, Boise, Idaho.

SCENE FROM "THE BOYS OF TOPSY-TURVY BRANCH"

"The Boys of Topsy-Turvy Ranch"

is the sort of comedy that happens but once in a blue moon it abounds with UPROARIOUSLY FUNNY situations and will POSITIVELY CHOKE your theatre with people, who will go home CHOKING WITH LAUGHTER.

ROUGH-HOUSE for "THE BOYS OF TOPSY-TURVY RANCH!" ROUGH-HOUSE as you have never ROUGH-HOUSED before, and DON'T LET UP until you GET THIS SCINTILLATING, BOX-OFFICE CHOKING FILM.

NOW IN FULL SWING!!!

Our monumental machinery for sending out NESTOR'S BULLETINS has begun revolving and is NOW IN FULL SWING. There's no reason why you shouldn't GET NESTOR'S WEEKLY BULLETIN.

NESTOR FILMS Are Sold Through THE SALES CO.,

111 East 14th Street, New York

Complete List of Exchanges Buying Nestor Films

No Rough-House Needed Here to Get Your NESTOR FILMS

ANTI-TRUST FILM EXCHANGE	79 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
APPLEGATH, L. J., & SONS	145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
BOSTON FILM RENTAL CO.	665 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
BUCKEYE FILM & PROJECTING CO.	309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.
CANADIAN FILM EXCHANGE	Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C.
CLINE, EUGENE	59 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO.	Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
CO-OPERATIVE FILM EXCHANGE	320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.
DIXIE FILM CO.	720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans, La
EAGLE FILM EXCHANGE	143 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
EMPIRE FILM EXCHANGE	150 E. 14th St., New York City
GAUMONT COMPANY	154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
GLOBE FILM SERVICE	1073 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
GREAT EASTERN FILM EXCHANGE	21 E. 14th St., New York City.
GREENE, W. E.	228 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE	415 Ferry St., Pittsburg, Pa.
INDEPENDENT WESTERN FILM EXCHANGE	Swetland Bldg., Portland, Ore.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	196 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE	1517 Farnam St., Omaha, Neb.
MICHIGAN FILM & SUPPLY CO.	1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE	Globe Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	61 W. 14th St., New York City.
PARAMOUNT FILM CO.	428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE	934 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE	155 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
STEINER, WM., FILM EXCHANGE	110 4th Ave., New York City.
SWANSON-CRAWFORD FILM CO.	723-34 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
SWANSON, WILLIAM H	301 Railroad Bld'g., Denver, Colo.
UNITED MOTION PICTURE CO.	112 Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla.
VICTOR FILM SERVICE	Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland, Ohio.
WICHITA FILM & SUPPLY CO.	112 N. Market St., Wichita, Kan.

THIS WEEK'S ADDITION:

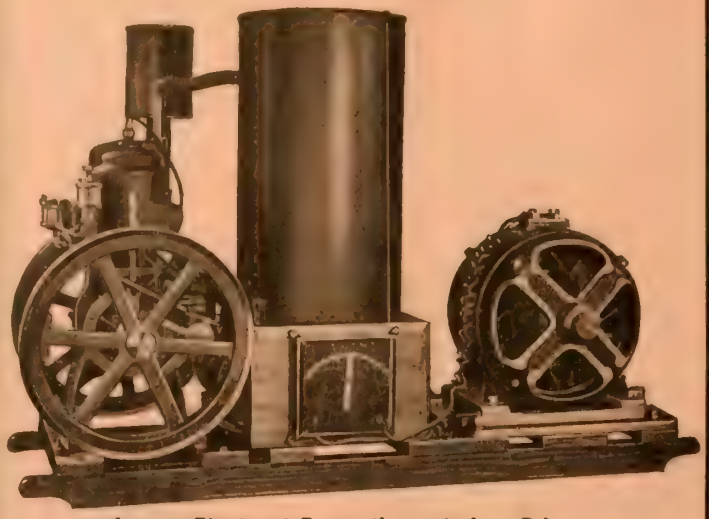
H. & H. FILM SERVICE, Chicago, Ill.

This List, with necessary changes, will positively appear in The Moving Picture World each and every week

Step Lively! Get on NESTOR'S LIST. Don't wait for the Exhibitor to tell you to GET ON

Electric Light Plant Complete

$167.16



Larger Plants at Proportionately Low Prices

Including the celebrated DETROIT KEROSENE ENGINE and DYNAMO OF SUFFICIENT CAPACITY TO FURNISH CURRENT FOR YOUR ARC AND EIGHTY 4 c. p. lamps for illumination.

Total cost of operation from 5 to 25 cents per day. Gives you better light than you can buy. Gives you the same light in the afternoon as at night. Can be operated by a ten year old child.

Can Make Immediate Shipment

DETROIT ENGINE WORKS 406 Bellevue Avenue, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A.

LUX FILMS

The World's Best—Bar None

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES

Split Reels give variety, and your patrons want variety. Add to the popularity of your program by showing the Lux release every week. Order this one TO-DAY. Take No Other.

The Tyrant

Length 577 Feet—Drama

Gibson AND Those Boys

Length 347 Feet—Comedy

Released, October 20, 1910

Do not Forget the Free Colored Lithos.

R. PRIEUR

10 E. 15th Street, New York City

Telephone Call, 3124 Stuyvesant

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company

LUCIEN PRÉVOST

MECHANICAL ENGINEER

Formerly Chief Designer of Pathé Frères

OFFICE ADDRESS, 54 Rue Philippe de Gerard, Paris

WORKS : : 25 Bd de la Chapelle, Paris

Cameras

Perforating and Printing Machines (NEW PATTERNS)

Cleaning, Measuring and Joining Machines

Louise M. Marion

Novelty of Illustrated Poems

which have made a great hit is again booking for the coming season, in and out of town.

Miss Marion has many new and beautiful illustrations, patriotic and otherwise, made from life models, also most attractive painted posters, and can introduce violin music when desired. Terms reasonable.

Address

L. M. MARION, 321 West 23d Street, New York City

FOR SALE

Formula

FOR THE BEST

Film Cement

A Money Getter Or Money Saver

For N. I. or Regular Stock

Address

HEIDELBERG

Care of M. P. World

COWBOY AND INDIAN

Frontier Celebration, Held at Cheyenne, Wyoming

Reviewed and Participated in By COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Exclusive Motion Pictures of the "WEST AS IT WAS"

Said the Wyoming Tribune

"The presentation of the so-called "Cowboy Carnivals" as seen in various travelling exhibitions, put on in stereotyped form by tired performers, gives one but a shallow insight into the excitement that pervades the atmosphere of these wonderful motion pictures, and those judging the "West as it Was" by these poor presentations cannot even imagine the feats of daring and recklessness displayed by these Real Actors in these Realistic Motion Pictures of the Wild and Wooly West."

The Only Western Frontier Films Worth While

Pronounced by everyone seeing them, better than anything the Trust or Independents have ever made.

Genuine--No Show Actors--Realistic

THE FOLLOWING TERRITORY HAS BEEN SOLD:-

Ohio—Michigan—Indiana—New York (except the Greater City)—Texas Pennsylvania—Oklahoma—Oregon—Louisiana—Kansas—Colorado—Washington—Utah—Entire Canada, and Contracts for many other States will be closed this week.

Before the Territory You have Your Eye on is Sold

Wire us for price. Get the best Western Shows ever purchased in Moving Pictures since the Art began.

EXCLUSIVE PROPERTY OF

THE TOURNAMENT FILM COMPANY

TOLEDO, OHIO

EXHIBITORS—Write us for the dates you want and we'll turn them over to the purchasers of our exclusive territory.

Baseball Extra!

O, YOU BASEBALL FANS! LOOK!

The National Baseball Commission has granted the Essanay Company the Exclusive Rights to Motograph

The World's Championship Baseball Series of 1910

Philadelphia Americans vs. Chicago Nationals

AT CHICAGO AND PHILADELPHIA

The film will be released shortly after the final game to be played at the Chicago National Club's Park. WIRE YOUR EXCHANGE FOR THE RELEASE DATE.

HOORAY! HANK AND LANK ARE HERE AGAIN!

Release of Wednesday, Oct. 19th

Hank and Lank

(Uninvited Guests)

Length Agprox. 372 Feet

If you are not getting every issue of the Hank and Lank series—kick!

GET THE POSTER

"PALS OF THE RANGE"

Release of Wednesday, Oct. 19th

Hiring a Gem

Length Approx. 621 Feet

Farce comedy of the style that has made the Essanay famous.

Release of Saturday, Oct. 22nd

PALS OF THE RANGE

Length Approx. 1000 Feet

Watch for this big Western feature. A great dramatic story of unusal excellence. Read the description and book quick. GET THE POSTER.

Write Today for The Essanay Guide. Get Essanay Posters at Your Exchanges

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

LONDON
5 Wardour Street, W.

435 North Clark Street
CHICAGO, ILL.

BERLIN
35 Friederich Str.

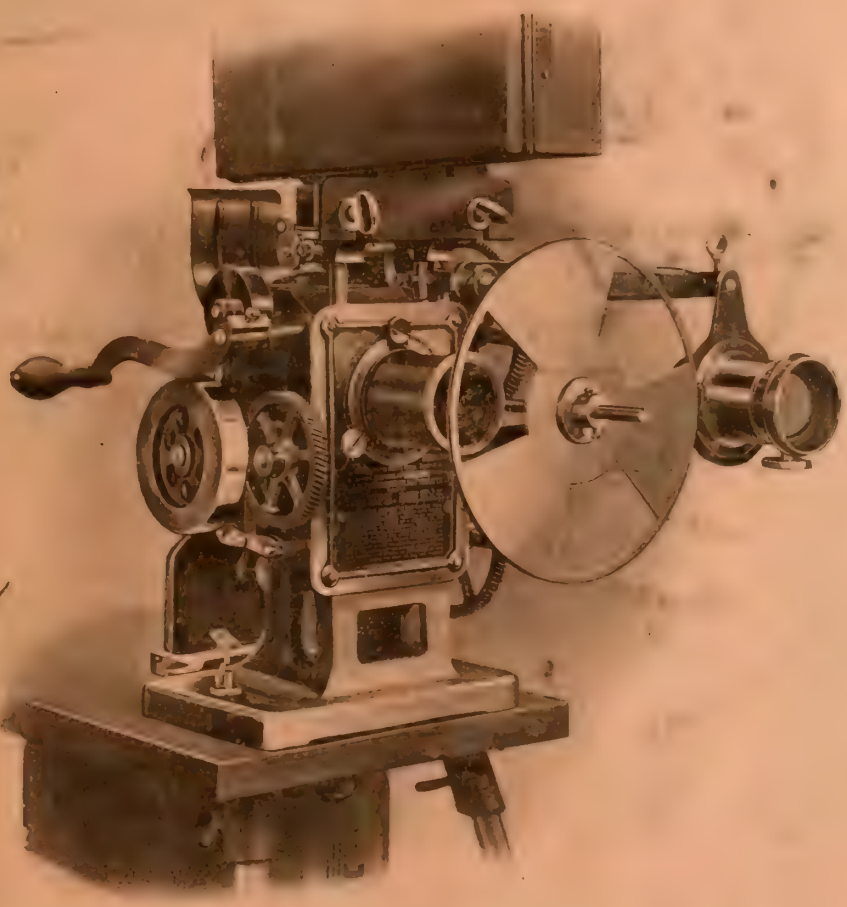
Vol. 7., No. 18 October 29, 1910 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

THE ORGAN OF THE PHOTOPLAY AND ALLIED INTERESTS

NEW YORK

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6



THE PERFECT MOTION :: PICTURE MACHINE ::

The choice of particular exhibitors from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"I have been using your No, 6 Cameragraph for the past six months and it has given thorough satisfaction. It has stood the test of twenty-five reels a day without any expenditures for repairs. This I consider remarkable. It is devoid of flicker and runs steadily."

GEO. W. DELMORE,
(Dated) Bowdoin Square Theatre.
Oct. 13th, 1910, BOSTON, Mass.

"We now have seven No. 6 machines. I think them the best on the market. I never hesitate when anyone asks what I think of a No. 6."

J. C. MANNING,
(Dated) I. A. T. S. E. No. 175.
Oct. 4th, 1910, TACOMA, Wash.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE G DESCRIBING ALL MODELS

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 NASSAU STREET, : : : : NEW YORK CITY

For Thirteen Years the Leading Manufacturers of Motion Picture Machines

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" IS COMING!

The Thanhouser 2-A-Week

Say "THANHOUSER" to the Exchange Man and You'll Get

The Picture With THAT Dog!

MISTRESS AND MAID

is a story that may have ended "Maid and Mistress" had a schemer in skirts succeeded in reversing the order of things as she planned. For the servant in the tale was jealous of her mistress' wealth and beauty, and spent her days plotting to bring her pretty employer to harm. Finally she hit upon a scheme that—ALMOST worked. Then a wonderful Newfoundland dog stepped in to checkmate her, AND SUCCEEDED! Your audiences will love that dog. Arrange NOW to show him SOON.

RELEASED TUESDAY, NOV. 1

APP. LENGTH, 1,000 FEET No. 156 CODE WORD, MAID

"MISTRESS AND MAID"

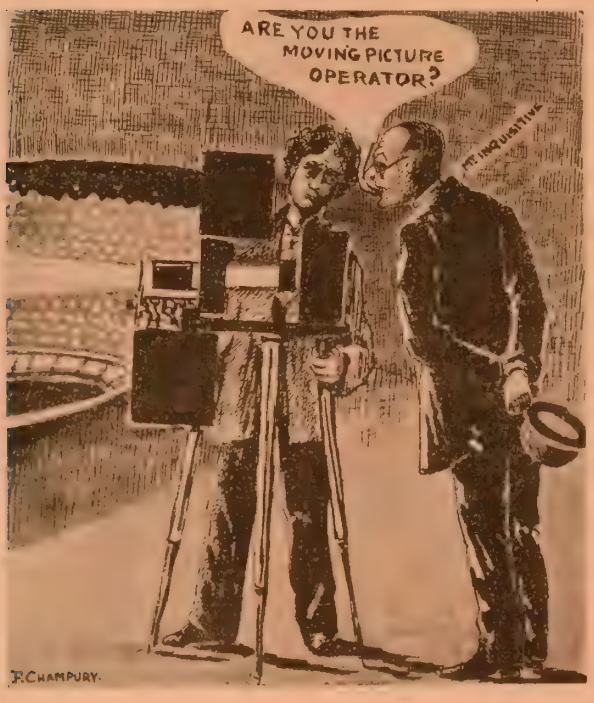
RELEASED FRIDAY, NOV. 4

One of Those "Thanhouser Patriotic!"

THE AMERICAN AND THE QUEEN

is a ROYAL creation from an AMERICAN studio. But that should'nt reflect on our PATRIOTISM! The fact is that the picture AROUSES patriotism. Primarily its purpose is to make you yell for "Old Glory" AND THEN to entertain you. The entertainment feature is totally secondary to the patriotic part. This release will demonstrate that Fourth o' July is'nt the only day for a PATRIOTIC DEMONSTRATION.

APP. LENGTH, 1.000 FEET No, 157 CODE, WORD, QUEEN



WATCH OUT! WATCH OUT! WATCH OUT!

PAUL Release Extraordinary & Thanhouser Masterpiece VIRGINIA

IS COMING! IS COMING! IS COMING!

FIVE ONE DOLLAR PRIZES FOR FIVE BRIGHT REPLIES TO MR. INQUISITIVE

Mr. Inquisitive entered a theatre and fate took him to the balcony, where he watched the moving picture man at work. Finally he walked over to the machine for a closer view and, burning with inquisitiveness, said to the chap at the crank: ARE YOU THE MOVING PICTURE OPERATOR? What do you think the operator replied? Send in your "think" and if its appropriate enough to be classed with the five best, we'll send you a one-dollar bill. A postal card will do for your answer, only be sure you write plainly. The winning answers will be published in the Thanhouser News of Nov. 5.

THE ABOVE IS ONE OF THE FEATURES OF THE THANHOUSER NEWS, the "Exhibitor's Guide", which is sent FREE OF CHARGE to all who can show connection with the Moving Picture business. Drop a card to EDITOR, THANHOUSER NEWS, NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

THANHOUSER COMPANY

NEW ROCHELLE, NEW YORK

Banner for All Releases on Sale by B. B. SIGN CO., Cleveland, O.

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" IS COMING!

THREE POINTS WE EMPHASIZE!

1. QUALITY! 2. QUANTITY! 3. FREEDOM!

We offer to Exhibitors the Best Moving Pictures in the World, in such quantities and varieties that any theatre in the country can make up therefrom a pleasing program. The spirit of competitive worth prevails in the Sale Co. The Exhibitor is free to select his own program and to secure his service from the renter giving him the BEST. The Exchange buys the films the Exhibitor demands. No one dictates where you shall get your film, what brands you shall use, nor how old it must be before you run it. If you are not Independent can you answer this simple question: WHY?

PROGRAM

EVERY MONDAY

ECLAIR—Eclair Film Company
IMP—Independent Moving Picture Company
YANKEE—Yankee Film Company

EVERY TUESDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company

EVERY WEDNESDAY

AMBROSIO—New York Motion Picture Company
ATLAS—Atlas Film Company
CHAMPION—The Champion Film Company
NESTOR—David Horsley

EVERY THURSDAY

ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
IMP—Independent Moving Pictures Company
DEFENDER—Wm. H. Swanson
LUX—R. Prieur

EVERY FRIDAY

BISON—New York Motion Picture Company
CINES—Eclair Film Co.
THANHOUSER—Thanhouser Company
SOLAX—Solax Company. 1st Release, October 21

EVERY SATURDAY

GREAT NORTHERN—Great Northern Film Co.
COLUMBIA—Columbia Film Co.
ITALA—New York Motion Picture Company
POWERS—The Powers Company
CAPITOL—Capitol Film Co.
RELIANCE—Carlton Laboratories.
1st. Release, October 22.

List of BUYING EXCHANGES, October 22nd, 1910

CANADA.

Applegath, L. J. & Sons, 145 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
Canadian Film Exchange, Calgary, Alberta.
Gaumont Company, 154 St. Catherine St., Montreal, Que.
Kinetograph Co. (for Canada), 41 East 21st St., New York City.
Canadian Film Exchange, Vancouver, B. C.
Great Western Film Co., Kennedy Bldg., Winnipeg, Man.

CALIFORNIA.

California Film Exchange, 1065 Mission St., San Francisco.
Miles Brothers, 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Pacific States Exchange, 734 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Western Film Company, 108 East 4th St., Los Angeles.

COLORADO.

W. H. Swanson Film Exchange, 301 Railroad Bldg., Denver.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Paramount Film Exchange, 428 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

GEORGIA.

Consolidated Film Exchange, Rhodes Bldg., Atlanta.

ILLINOIS.

Anti-Trust Film Co., 79 So. Clark St., Chicago.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St., Chicago.
H. & H. Film Service Co., 98 Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St., Chicago.
Standard Film Exchange, 155 E. Washington St., Chicago.
Chicago Film Exchange, 40 Jackson Blvd., Chicago.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film and Supply Co., 122 No. Market St., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 720 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston Film Rental Co., 665 Washington St., Boston.
W. E. Green Film Exchange, 228 Tremont Ave., Boston.

MARYLAND.

Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.
B. & W. Film Exchange, 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 400 Sykes St., Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.

MISSOURI.

Bijou Film & Amusement Co., 1222 Grand Ave., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 1310 Walnut St., Kansas City.
Swanson Crawford Film Co., Century Bldg., St. Louis

NEBRASKA.

Laemmle Film Service, 1317 Farnam St., Omaha.

NEW YORK CO.

Albany Film Exchange, 418 Broadway, Albany.
Victor Film Service, 39 Church St., Buffalo.

NEW YORK CITY.

Exhibitors Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave., City.
Empire Film Exchange, 150 East 14th St., City.
Great Eastern Film Exchange, 21 East 14th St., City.
Paramount Film Exchange, 61 West 14th St., City.
Peerless Film Exchange, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Hudson Film Exchange, 138 East 14th St., City.
Wm. Steiner Film Exchange, 110 Fourth Ave., City.

OHIO.

Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Co., 309 Arcade Bldg., Dayton.
Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Co., 315 West 4th St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, 319 Superior St., Toledo.
Victor Film Service, Prospect and Huron Sts., Cleveland.

OREGON.

Ind. Western Film Exchange, Swetland Bldg., Portland.

OKLAHOMA.

United Motion Picture Co., 112 Main St., Oklahoma City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film & Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St., Philadelphia.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia.
Ind. Film Exchange, 415 Ferry St., Pittsburg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Co-operative Film Exchange, 320 Atlas Block, Salt Lake City.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Globe Bldg., Seattle.

Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co., 111 E. 14th St., N. Y. City

RELIANCE FILMS

"WHERE SEA and SHORE DOTH MEET"

Released Saturday, Nov. 5th

BEAUTIFUL water scenes, exquisitely tinted and toned. The storm and the rescue of the shipwrecked sailors startingly realistic. The meeting of the rivals in love—one a rescuer and the other exhaustedly battling for life—intensely dramatic and touching. Hate conquers and the dying man disappears in the angry billows. Overpowering remorse, intensified by the horrified revulsion of the Girl, shatters the mind of the coward who ends his torment in the bosom of the ocean. Acted by the "Reliance" ALL-STAR COMPANY.

Exhibitors: Send us name of your theatre and address and we will place you on our mailing list for FILM FANCIES, a beautiful 16 page book issued weekly, containing synopses of our films, pictures of our stock company, halftone engravings and other interesting matter.

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES

1 UNION SQUARE : : : : : : : : NEW YORK CITY

"Oh You Baby Imp!"

Only one year old, but the liveliest, huskiest, best loved pet in the whole moving picture business. The first Imp was released a year ago the 25th of this month and in the succeeding 365 days the reputation of Imps has spread with lightning rapidity over the whole civilized world. Did you ever hear of such a growth? And do you now realize why we say that if you don't get Two Imps Every Week you are not getting what you are paying for. Rear up on your hind legs if necessary and fight, brawl, kick and scratch till you get Two Imps Every Week. Our next stunt will be entitled

"THE IDOL'S EYE"

A wierd drama telling the story of a famous diamond abstracted from an image of Buddha, and the exciting efforts of a Hindu to recover it. It is better than any $2 drama you ever saw. It will be released Monday, October 31st, and you simply must have it! And right after that, we release

"WILLIE"

The kind of comedy that tickles your funny bone and fattens your cash box simultaneously. "Willie" is the biggest surprise of several seasons. If you don't laugh right out loud in your own theater you can put the Sphinx out of business as the original marble heart. "Willie" will be ready on November 3. Begin storming your exchange with letters right this very day and demand both Imps every blessed week.

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP AMERICA

Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.
102 West 101st Street, New York
Carl Laemmle, Pres.
All "IMP" Films are sold through the Sales Co.

MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY

INTERNATIONAL FILM TRADERS

INCORPORATED

147-157 Fourth Avenue
German Savings Bank Building
New York

The Largest Dealers in Second Hand Films
in the United States

Little Giant Carbon Sharpener

$3.50

Will save 25 per cent. of your carbon expense.

New principle—two knives which can be removed instantly for sharpening.

SPECIAL
6/8 x 12 Pink Label Electra Carbons $4.00 per 100. Moving Picture Machines, Dissolving Stereopticons $45.00 up. Oxy-Hydro Gas. Gas Making Outfits; all Supplies and Repairs.

ERKER'S St. Louis, Mo.

WRITE NOW
TO THE Union Film Exchange

for Prices on Independent Film Service, Moving Picture Supplies and Accessories.

UNION FILM EXCHANGE
210 N. Third St. HARRISBURG, PA.

HALLBERG
THE ECONOMIZER

SAVES two-thirds on electric bill and makes BIG CUT on the first cost of your complete equipment.

I carry stock of all makes M. P. Machines, Opera Chairs and Supplies.

Free Catalogue No. W-50

J. H. Hallberg, 36 East 23d St. New York City

... Special Notice ...

THANHOUSER

Releases Friday, November 4th

Ten Nights in a Bar Room

DEMAND IT!

THANHOUSER CO., New Rochelle, N. Y.

"A CLAUSE IN THE WILL"

(THE MARRIAGE)

A CLAUSE HAS OFTEN BEEN THE CAUSE AND A CAUSE OFTEN DRAWS

"A CLAUSE IN THE WILL" will be the cause that will draw them into your house.

OUR NEXT RELEASE

"A CLAUSE IN THE WILL"

Is a very pretty little drama with a sprinkle of comedy that would make a sphinx smile. It's worth getting. Don't overlook it. Bear in mind the release day,

Thursday, October 27th

DEFENDER FILL-EMS

SOLD THROUGH THE SALES COMPANY
Wm. H. SWANSON, Gen. Mgr.

111 E. 14th Street NEW YORK CITY

P. S. What's your seating capacity? You'll need some extra camp chairs when you run this reel. Here's a tip, get them.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Owing to the number of requests, we have replaced our release for October 22d

Why They Signed the Pledge

With a Feature Reel—

The Locket

The strongest production of the year. Exchanges buying Capitol Films are doing the largest business.

READ THIS

CATITOL FILM COMPANY,

GENTLEMEN—I received your poster of "All's Fair In Love and War" and have run your "Bill Mason's Ride" and "$5 98" with success. Would not know how to get along without your films. Yours truly, Fred Duplecy.

STILL ROOM ON OUR MAILING LIST

Capitol Film Co., Washington, D.C.

SIG G. BOERNSTEIN, Gen. Mgr.

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

Excellence in Photography, Stories, Acting and Scenic Effects

Released, Saturday, Oct. 29

Adventure of a Millionaire

A rejected suitor dresses up a "bum," and introduces him as a millionaire; and the girl falls in love with him. Then the plotter gives his scheme away. The supposed "bum" proves to be really a young millionaire, who had disguised himself to go slumming. Nothing "chestnutty" about that story. Is there?

Released, Tuesday, November, 1st

The Sheriff and "Miss Jones"

A Western Comedy Drama

A young lover, wrongly accused of a crime, is disguised as a woman, and the Sheriff falls in love with him and proposes marriage.

Mental Science

A Comedy That is Different

A young man masters Mental Science, and, by will-power, wins all that he desires in a way that makes audiences roar.

THE POWERS COMPANY

241st Street and Richardson Avenue, : New York City

SALES COMPANY SOLE DISTRIBUTERS

Want people to stop at your door? Get one of our handsome Lobby Displays for $5.00

ATLAS ASTONISHED

The reception accorded the NEW ATLAS FILMS utterly eclipses our wildest expectations, Exhibitors and Exchanges are voicing their approval in every incoming mail.

Here's 2 on 1 Which Means Added Attraction

OUT NOVEMBER 2

TURNING OF THE WORM

THAT DOG-GONE DOG

Both comedy, one with a delightful moral and the other Just Ripping Fun.

COMING. MELODRAMA

ATLAS FILM COMPANY

10 East 15th Street : : : : : : : New York City

GREAT NORTHERN

Stands for Quality!

Release for Saturday, October 22nd

THE ARTIST'S LUCK

A pictorial production of absorbing interest that will appeal to everybody.

Release for Saturday, October 29th

WHO IS SHE?

This film production is similar in plot and story to that of the successful play "MADAME X," which has been running in the U. S. for the past year, creating more than ordinary interest. "Who Is She?" is a wonderful picture, splendidly enacted by REAL actors and will surely establish a new record of success in the moving picture field. It means capacity houses for every exhibitor who features it. BOOK THIS HEADLINER NOW!

Many Big Headliners Coming! Watch for Them!

EXHIBITORS: Did you receive our new "Time Table?" If not, write for one at once. Sent Gratis.

Help insure your business by having Great Northern films on your programme. No programme is complete without one.

ALL FIRST CLASS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES HANDLE OUR PRODUCTIONS

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO., 7 East 14th St., New York

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

Eclair Films

The Cream of Perfection

For Oct. 31st—A Two Subject Reel

The Little Mother

Length, 635 Feet

A Refreshing Drama! Something out of the ordinary: Sweet—Winning—Beautiful in Sentiment; Delightful Throughout.

Manufacture of Cheese at Roquefort

Length, 330 Feet

A Most Interesting Educational Film. Bound to please and interest.

Cines Films

For October 28th

The Pretty Dairy Maid

Length, 480 Feet

A sweet tale of Provincial life; a pathetic little drama in which every phase is attractive.

Tontolini in Love

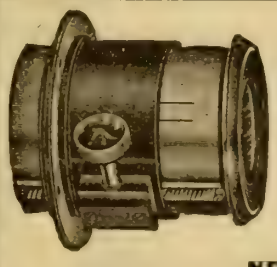
Length, 480 Feet

A Vivacious Piece of Comedy—A Source of Amusement to old and young.

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY

NEW YORK: 31 E. 27th ST.
CHICAGO: 35 E. RANDOLPH ST

Sold only through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

Equal to "Electra"

It is a well-known fact that manufacturers and dealers of arc lamp carbons always claim equality with

"ELECTRA"

PINK LABEL

CARBONS

because they recognize that "Electra" Carbons are the standard. Why then experiment with the "equal to" when you can buy the genuine "Electra" Pink Label Carbons at reasonable prices?

ELECTRA

•TRADE MARK•

Hugo Reisinger

SOLE IMPORTER

11 BROADWAY NEW YORK

KINEMACOLOR

(URBAN-SMITH PATENTS)

is the only Process on the market to-day which reproduces and perpetuates the world's events in Natural Colors.

The American Company is now rapidly completing its plant.

Men of high type throughout the country are invited to negotiate for State rights.

Demonstrations will be made upon appointment at No. 516 Fifth Avenue, New York or at Executive Offices, Allentown, Penna., where our factory is also located.

The Kinemacolor Company of America
ALLENTOWN - - - PENNSYLVANIA

INDEPENDENT, COMPETITIVE, PROGRESSIVE

UTAH'S ONE BEST BET

Revier Motion Picture Company

TRADE

MARK

WITH THE LARGEST PLANT IN THE WEST

OUR MOTTO

"See Trust Films if You Must, but Try Our Releases First."

The natural scenery of the Mormon State is the equal of any the world over for the production of motion pictures.

Ample capital is available and people of long experience have charge of our production.

We Are Ready---Our Aim The Best
WATCH FOR OUR FIRST RELEASES

Offices:
Majestic Theatre Building
H. REVIER, President

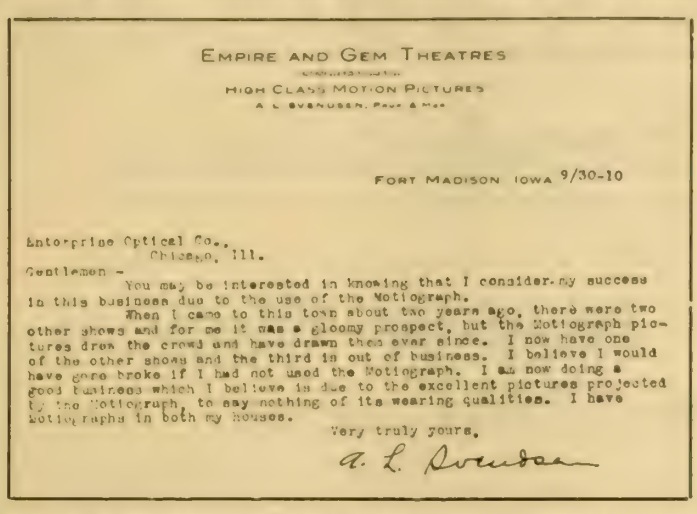
Salt Lake City, Utah

FACTORY:
Sugar House Station

Fairness to All, Privileges to None, Correspondence Solicited

EXHIBITORS WHO WISH TO MAKE THE GREATEST SUCCESS

IN THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE BUSINESS SHOULD USE



EMPIRE AND GEM THEATRES

HIGH CLASS MOTION PICTURES

A. L. SVENDSEN, Prop. & Mgr.

FORT MADISON IOWA 9/30-10

Enterprise Optical Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen -

You may be interested in knowing that I consider my success in this business due to the use of the Motiograph.

When I came to this town about two years ago, there were two other shows and for me it was a gloomy prospect, but the Motiograph pictures drew the crowd and have drawn them ever since. I now have one of the other shows and the third is out of business. I believe I would have gone broke if I had not used the Motiograph. I am now doing a good business which I believe is due to the excellent pictures projected by the Motiograph, to say nothing of its wearing qualities. I have Motiographs in both my houses.

Very truly yours,

A. L. Svendsen

THE

Motiograph

BY LONG ODDS

THE BEST

MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

Sales 2½ times greater than last year. Projects Better Pictures. Wears Better, and Is More Convenient for the Operator.

Write for Catalog and Prices.

MANUFACTURED AND JOBBED BY

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

J. H. HALLBERG, Agt.
36 E. 23rd St., New York City

EDW. H. KEMP, Agt.
833 Market St., San Francisco, Calif.

J. F. BROCKLISS, Agt.
London, Paris and Berlin

Petrosini, the Detective was undoubtedly one of the bravest sleuths ever detailed on an important case by the New York Secret Service Bureau. His exploits and adventures are known the wide world over. We've produced a wonderful film, whose story deals with the unraveling of a mystery in high society by an unusually clever Italian Sleuth who is noted for his many disguises and impersonations.

The Italian Sherlock Holmes

WILL BE RELEASED MONDAY, OCTOBER 31st

Beautiful photographic quality, exquisite tinting and toning, realistic action and a succession of notable scenes and situations make this a MASTER FILM long looked for by exacting buyers and users of the picture.

Our Bulletins Mailed to Any Address on Request

YANKEE FILM CO., 334 E. 32d St., NEW YORK

WRITE YOUR ORDER TO THE SALES CO.

Telephone 6170 Madison Square

Columbia Film Co.

101 Ranch Productions

101 Ranch is the Biggest Proposition on the Continent

Therefore we will produce pictures there which will have the same standing in the picture world as 101 has in the ranch world.

The Greatest of All Western Dramas

1st Release of 101 Production, Nov. 5th

The Heroine of 101 Ranch

Release of Oct. 29th

In the Web

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY

301 WEST 37th STREET - - - - NEW YORK

Selling exclusively through The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co

Moving Picture World

THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING COMPANY - 125 E. 23d Street, NEW YORK
(Beach Building) Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy

EDITORS: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F. R. P. S.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rica and the Philippine Islands.

ADVERTISING RATES: Whole page, $60.00; half page, $30.00; quarter page, $15.00; eighth page, $7.50; one inch (3¼ in. wide), $3.00; one inch (2¼ in. wide), $2.00; classified (no display), 3 cents per word.

TIME DISCOUNTS: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

WESTERN OFFICE: 160 Washington Street, (Post Building, Chicago). Telephone Main 3145.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 7 OCTOBER 29, 1910 No. 18

Summary of the Week.

To the Reader—Our Policy
The Tongue of Rumor ... 978
An Open Letter to the Exhibitor ... 979
A Plea for More Comedies ... 979
Forty-second Street's Opportunity ... 979
Outdoor Moving Pictures by Electric Light ... 980
Moving Pictures in Natural Colors—Second article. By Thos. Bedding, F.R.P.S. ... 981
The Pictural Drama as a Fine Art. By Louis Reeves Harrison ... 982
How a Brooklyn Priest Deals With the Moving Pictures 983
Picture Personalities—Miss Nellie Grant ... 983
The Dramatic Reader in the Moving Picture Field ... 984
Among the Philadelphia Shows ... 984
New Film Concern Floated ... 985
The Alien Operator ... 986
"Lux Graphicus" and the Operator ... 987
Pathe Passion Play Still a Drawing Card ... 988
Samuel S. Hutchinson ... 988
Operators' Column—Questions and Answers. By F. H. Richardson ... 989
San Francisco Notes ... 992
"Abraham Lincoln's Clemency"—A Pathe War Play ... 993
Comments on the Films ... 994
The Moving Picture as a Factor in Land Development ... 999
Chicago Notes ... 1000
Boston Notes ... 1001
New England Notes ... 1001
In the Mississippi Valley ... 1001
"Drumsticks," a Vitagraph Thanksgiving Photoplay ... 1002
Stories of the Films—Licensed ... 1004
Licensed Releases ... 1008
Stories of the Films—Independent ... 1010
Independent Releases ... 1014

NOTICE.

The new Western offices of the Moving Picture World, Rooms 307-309, Post building, 160 Washington street, Chicago, are now ready to receive World readers visiting Chicago. Mr. John M. Bradlet, Western representative of the World, will extend to every one a cordial welcome. They will find a complete file of manufacturers' catalogues and a bureau of information on films, theater construction, materials and supplies. They will also find desks and stationery for their correspondence, the services of a lady stenographer and a polite messenger boy to act as their guide or go their errands. We invite every exhibitor or person interested in motion pictures to make our Western office their headquarters when visiting Chicago.

To the Reader.

The absence of several former advertisers from the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the subject of comment. In explanation we beg to state that in several cases we have been compelled to refuse further credit, hence the use of the pruning knife. In other instances the advertiser has withdrawn because he "considered the policy of the paper inimical to his interests." This he had a perfect right to do. We also have equal right to maintain our policy. We wish to make it clear that no intimidation will cause us to deviate therefrom.

This paper is the servant of the public—not the mouth-piece of private or corporate interests. We owe to our subscribers a duty that means more to us than immediate personal gain. If we refuse to say that black is white it is because we honestly believe and know that black is not white. If, for a consideration, we should allow ourselves to be tempted to persuade our readers to the contrary, we should not deserve their support and would not be serving the best interests of the business as a whole, which is the mission of this paper, and the only motive that dictates its policy.

The Tongue of Rumor.

Last week in New York the air was thick with the exudations of that "lying jade"—Rumor. Had we put into print all that we were told and that we heard with regard to film men and matters while the last issue of this paper was being prepared, we should have had to issue a forty-page supplement containing the "news" as it was told us by all and sundry. We might have scored an evanescent journalistic success, but we should have disrupted an industry, an achievement not within the sphere of our ambition. It is the aim of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to conserve, consolidate and promote the best interests of the moving picture business. Therefore, realizing the responsibility of our position as the only representative, authoritative and independent trade paper in the country, we paid little or no serious heed to the many rumors of which we were made the point of convergence.

Many of these rumors concerned the Patents Company and the businesses affiliated to that company. We were assured that this, that or the other manufacturer had gone, or was going, "independent." "Then," added our informants, oracularly, "there will be something doing at 80 Fifth avenue." Much to the surprise of our informants, we manifested, and, indeed, felt, very little concern as to whether this, that or the other manufacturer had "gone independent." We think this a matter for the individuals most concerned. It does not largely concern the industry as a whole whether any particular house is either "licensed" or "independent." Eighteen months ago, the subject might have created interest of a kind. To-day it is of minor public importance. The business will go on just the same whether A or B is "licensed" or is "independent."

Then, again, there are rumors as to injunctions against certain recent entrants into the independent moving picture field. Upon inquiry of the persons alleged to be in danger of being injuncted, we find that they are pursuing the noiseless tenor of their way, as if nothing were happening to disturb their serenity. They are making good pictures, and selling them—a subject which is of more interest to us and our readers than these wearisome threats of litigation. Litigation or no litigation, the moving picture business will go on. It is not in the control of, or controllable by, any one individual or groups of individuals in this or any other country. It is not, cannot be and never will be a monopoly.

Though she is poetically styled a "lying jade," Rumor may, as a rule, be safely compared to smoke, which implies the existence of a fire somewhere. We do not attach cardinal importance to the rumors that reach us, yet we think them worthy of something more than mere passing notice; especially when, accompanying these rumors, there are issued statements and opinions regarding the situation which indicate the mental bent of those who make them. For example: During the past few days we have heard more or less authorized representatives of "licensed" interests state that they do not regard certain independent manufacturers as recognizable "competitors." If we could elevate our eyebrows and shrug our shoulders in print we should do so. Just fancy the mental attitude of a man in business who sees another man establish a prosperous and progressive business, deluding himself by saying that he could not regard the new man as a "competitor" (?). This reminds us somewhat of the old story of the man who was improperly put in the stocks. "Oh, but," said a legal friend who was passing, "they can't do it. They cannot put you in stocks." "But they have, for here I am," said the unhappy victim of the mistake; "they can do it." "They can't," was the rejoinder." "They have done so," was the final reply. Equally so, for any man in the moving picture manufacturing business to-day to say that an existing independent business is not a competitor is equivalent to shutting one's eyes to facts, or to the action of the ostrich who buries his head in the sand, as if to shut out from his mind what is going on round about him.

The rumors of which we have just slightly taken cognizance have been prevalent for some time past, and we have felt it our duty in the interests of our readers to bring them to the notice of several level-headed, dispassionate men in the business. Their conclusions were and are that the status quo will be preserved. Things will go on pretty well much as they are going now. "Licensed" interests will take their proper logical place as a mere part or section of the business. It is too late to talk preponderance. Equally so the independent side will progress just in the ratio of its merits—otherwise the quality of its pictures—a condition of things to which the "licensed" side is also subject and subservient. The "licensed" side has no prescriptive right to predominance or any special privilege or any special preference. The making and selling of moving picture films is just like any other business. It meets the public demand. So long as it satisfies that demand it will go on like any other business. The public, and through them the exhibitor, has no special respect for a product because it is "licensed" or "independent."

Rumor, of course, has also been busy about ourselves and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We do not at all feel called upon to discuss these rumors. We have only to say that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, as a factor in the great moving picture industry, will go on just the same, irrespective of any entrants to its pages, or any exits therefrom. The future of this paper lies in the hands of its responsible conductors, who, like other business men, propose to conduct their business according to the fundamental principles of any business, namely, just in the manner that they think best for the success of that business.

Enough of rumor just now. If necessity calls, we may possibly revert to the subject next week. Meanwhile, the reader will be interested to know that authentic reports of a new and powerful factor in the manufacturing field are reaching us. These reports point to the formation of a third party; a competitor with the Patents Company and the Sales Company. This third party, according to information supplied to us, promises to be just as powerful as either of the other parties. It is to be backed up by enormous capital and the best available skill. Above all, it has a market ready waiting for it—a market just as great as that possessed by either the Patents Company licensees or the Sales Company. The dissatisfaction of both Patent Company exhibitors and Sales Company exhibitors has been taken advantage of by the organizers of the third party. The scheme afoot is to interest some thousands of exhibitors financially and otherwise in the great new company, so that when the exhibitor is showing his picture he will have the satisfaction and profit of practically handling pictures of his own selection and manufacture to his public. In other words, this great co-operative scheme, for such it is, should give the exhibitor a keener interest in the pictures and enable him to exercise some personal influence in the selection of his program.

We may say that the information contained in the concluding part of this article has been based upon careful inquiries made by responsible representatives of this paper who have covered the country for the last few weeks gathering reliable information on other subjects which we may find it our duty to communicate to our readers in succeeding numbers of this paper.

An Open Letter to the Exhibitor.

Many exhibitors have sent us copies of their local newspapers containing articles which they have had reprinted from the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—articles which were written for, and have had a very salutary effect in contradicting, the biased or ill-informed maligner of the moving picture. We wish to see many more of our readers make free and liberal use of any of our articles for newspaper purposes, and so that they may not have to mutilate their own file of the WORLD we will cheerfully furnish duplicate copies when requested for newspaper purposes.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD steadfastly and quietly pursues its own way of watching out for the best interests of the business and never misses a chance to reply both publicly and privately to ignorant zealots or notoriety seekers who rush into public print. The WORLD claims full credit for silencing the upstart Anti-Immoral Moving Picture Association and also for showing the light to our worthy news contemporary of similar patronymic. Our efforts in behalf of the photoplay must not be taken to be palliative, for we have no sympathy for the manufacturer who to-day will issue subjects unfit for a family theater in the strictest sense of the word. Our sympathies are with the exhibitor, who is helpless in the selection of his program in the existing state of things, and who has to bear the opprobrium of press and pulpit and loss of patronage from people who are influenced thereby. Therefore, Mr. Exhibitor, in all fairness to yourself and in justice to your profession, do not hesitate to draw the attention of the editors of your local papers to dispassionate articles on the picture play by men of standing and education, whether they appear in this or any other paper.

Finally we ask the exhibitors to write us in regard to the programs they are receiving. Letters or names will not be published unless we are authorized. We ask them to pay close attention to the effect the program has upon their patrons and advise us of the reception accorded to the various kinds and makes of films and the audible comments made by the spectators.

By collecting the evidence of public opinion and presenting it to the manufacturer in the proper manner, we hope to be able to at least aid the exhibitor in securing a desirable program if he cannot have it of his own choosing.

A Plea for More Comedies.

A MOVING PICTURE WORLD representative has been asked by a considerable number of exhibitors to say a word or two regarding comic films. These men wish to have it known that they find it almost impossible to put a show together that has a good share of light comedy in it. The writer himself has recently spoken to patrons in different picture theaters. The result of these conversations showed that both managers and patrons are in accord in this matter. It looks as if more comedies could be profitably produced by the different manufacturers. It has also come to light that the Independent film makers are producing more comedies; many Licensed film managers also state that the comedies are of better quality, as well as more plentiful.

It is generally conceded by those most competent to judge that the very great percentage of the moving picture frequenters wish, primarily, to be amused. They wish to relax for the moment. The ordinary mortal has sufficient vexations and difficulties during his business day and, accordingly, wishes to forget the darker side of things, even when shown with a silver lining, as most dramatic films are. A good percentage of the films made lately have been too serious, in the writer's judgment. Some, in fact, have bordered on gloom and sorrow.

Let no one think that we are even attempting to say anything against the dramatic film—quite the contrary. A good dramatic picture, well brought out, technically and photographically, is something to be desired in any moving picture entertainment. The writer knows that good comedy films—really laborious ones—are very difficult to produce. It seems, however, that a special effort could be made in this direction. The demand for Lubin and Essanay films at the exchanges tends to show that comedies have even more chance of being picked by managers than dramatic films. If you speak to managers hereabouts you will find that they are often forced to choose comedies, even in preference to a drama that is better in every way, in order to introduce some laughter into their shows. Many managers have often excused the presence of poor comedies in their shows on the ground that, if they had not taken that film, the show would have been wholly a dramatic one. Comedy-dramas, which have reached the highest point of excellence up to date in Biograph, Vitagraph and in Imp films, are also much in request in all moving picture theaters. Therefore, it is advisable to make more of these subjects from a merely commercial point of view, without considering the general benefit to this great industry. Manufacturers of cinematographs, please take notice. It seems from close questioning of the matter, that the introduction of vaudeville into most of the houses is due to this scarcity of comedies. As the acts, however poor, often have comedy of a low sort in them, they take the place that really belongs to comedy. More comedies is one way of driving that usurper Vaudeville from houses devoted to photoplay.

Forty-Second Street's Opportunity.

Returning American visitors to London talk Leicester Square and its picture houses. As they talk our eyes wander to the New York analogue of Leicester Square. For Leicester Square, London, we may explain to the American reader, is just about the center of things in the British metropolis. Just as Times Square and Forty-second street are practically the center of things in New York City. But in our eyes the London center transcends in interest the New York center. For the former has its modern and very much up-to-date picture houses, whilst the latter has not yet risen to its opportunities.

Yet, Forty-second street, as we have recently discovered, has its moving picture house. But it is one of those small, neat, box-like edifices which are only too common in New York. It is not the Picture Palace that we want to see raising its ornate head near the Great White Way. It is not the ideal picture house which we have so often desiderated.

Is there room for such a house round about Forty-second street? Unquestionably! A house comparable in sumptuousness to some of the picture palaces in the larger American cities outside New York? We unhesitatingly say there is. We have made inquiries on the subject amongst all classes in New York, and are confident that if somebody with the necessary capital and enterprise would come along and give New York at Forty-second street a veritable picture palace, such as we have in mind, it would prove a remunerative investment.

The other night we were in the company of Mr. Edmund Russell, the distinguished painter, who was convoying a party of lady guests round the city. They desired to see a picture show. Mr. Russell gratified their desire, and they were enthusiastic of what they saw, and, like Oliver, wanted more. One of Mr. Russell's guests was a distinguished lady of title, and, oddly enough, when they reached the theater they visited, in the same row as themselves sat two other ladies of the rank of Countess—a somewhat unique experience for the picture house—to hold in its ten-cent seats three ladies of title.

We do not wish to assume the priggish attitude of dwelling upon the fact that three lady visitors to a moving picture house near Broadway bore titles. Far from it. But the moral that we want to draw from this interesting circumstance is that the moving picture house has the potentiality of attracting the best and most cultured classes of society to its doors; a point that we have insisted upon time after time in our pages; a point, moreover, that is not sufficently realized by the conductors of moving picture houses. We write in generalities, of course. These people do not seem to realize that if in, or round about, Forty-second street a suitable house be erected which people of refinement, taste and wealth may visit, an almost unlimited mine of patronage is to be tapped. The picture, in fact, so far from being the poor man's entertainment exclusively, appeals to all classes. All classes, therefore, should be catered for. And this is Forty-second street's opportunity.

As we write this article, we have news that a project is afoot for erecting a sumptuous picture house on Forty-second street. We hope the project will take shape. If it does, it will help dignify the picture and will result, we are convinced, in financial success. Wake up, Forty-second street!!

Outdoor Moving Pictures by Electric Light.

A Columbia Record.

The night side of life has engaged the attention of photographers ever since the gelatine-bromide of silver process became practicable for negative making. The rapidity of this process has rendered it practicable for a photographer of considerable technical skill to make still photographs of almost any outdoor subject, provided there be sufficient artificial illumination in the field of view. It is perfectly possible, and indeed the thing has been done, to photograph a scene at night, let us say Fifth avenue or Madison Square, showing the lights as they appear to the eye, together with sufficient detail in the shadows of the picture to make a presentable photograph. The formula for success is, roughly, a well-backed plate to obviate halation; long exposure, extending sometimes as much as an hour; and careful development. Stationary photographs made according to this formula are very frequently seen reproduced in the magazines.

For the same purpose, magnesium and electricity are employed for making rapid, if not instantaneous, exposures at night. One of the simplest ways of making a night photograph by electricity, is to take advantage of the illuminating properties of lightning, which, after all, is only electricity. The camera is focused on a given scene, the lens uncapped, and then it is recapped, after a flash of lightning has illumined the scene. On development you get a true photograph by electric light.

Stationary photography at night time, therefore, is fairly common, and, as we have said, fairly practicable. But what about moving picture work? How far is this practicable? and under what conditions? The question has been answered by I. W. Ullman, of the Columbia Film Company, New York, who, so far as we can discover, is the first to produce a moving picture of a night subject by electric light. Recently Mr. Ullman found himself in Kansas City, which city was in a celebratory mood. The "Priests of Pallas" processions were being held. These processions, if we understand them aright, are something in the nature of New Orleans "Mardi-Gras" or Carnival processions. They have emblematic floats, and all other appendages of great spectacular processions. It occurred to the authorities of the event that it would be desirable to secure, if possible, a moving picture at night time of the procession, and our friend Mr. Ullman was appealed to. Not without trepidation, but with considerable enterprise, he undertook to make a moving picture at night of the "Priests of Pallas" procession as it passed through the streets of Kansas City. We applaud Mr. Ullman for his daring and enterprise. Offhand, we should have said that it would have been exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to make a satisfactory moving picture of a procession at night, unless a great blaze of illumination were available. Even so, Mr. Ullman got busy, and managed, before turning the handle of his camera on the procession, to have under command two very perfect sources of light as follows:

At a suitable place along the line of parade a platform about 20 feet high was erected at one side of the thoroughfare. On this was strung 60 flaming arc lamps, drawing 25 amperes each, in two rows, backed by a monster curved sheet-tin reflector. To be exact, this parabolic reflector was 70 feet long and 6 feet high. Across the street was another embankment of light almost as powerful. Over all was stretched a canopy of white canvas to reflect the light downward, so that for the space of about 100 feet the street was as brilliantly lighted as on a moderately clear day. The actinic value of the light was fully attested by the fact that the local newspapers published the next day snapshots made by their reporters at this point.

After Mr. Ullman had made his exposure he developed a test strip and was gratified to find that he had got a well-exposed negative. Upon his return to New York City, the entire 600 feet of film were developed. The result is a highly satisfactory picture of the Kansas City procession by night.

We have seen the results and are surprised at their good photographic quality. It would be ridiculous to say that they are not distinguishable from daylight results. They are. But, nevertheless, they do not suffer on that account. You have, as it were, all the floats and other objects in the procession, silhouetted against the black background of the night, making a very effective picture. As we have said, to the best of our recollection, this is the first time a successful moving picture at night time, with electricity as the illuminant, has been made. We think Mr. Ullman is deserving of the highest credit and congratulation for his achievement.

The picture is private property, but we hope that arrangements can be made whereby such a unique subject can be shown in moving picture theaters, where we are sure it will create great interest. When a night subject, made in the stationary camera, is shown on the screen, it always excites great interest. We imagine that a like reception awaits moving pictures made at night.

This is an illustration, if illustration were needed, which shows that the possibilities of moving picture photography are far from being exhausted. The field for this class of work is a wide one, albeit it must be an expensive one. Yet there is a great wealth of subjects which can only be obtained at night time out of doors, and which the progressive enterprise of the film makers may obtain for us as occasion arises. For example: All of us know Coney by day in the pictures, but how much more interesting would it be to see Coney by night in a moving picture? So on down the list! Suitable subjects are inexhaustible. We congratulate Mr. Ullman and the Columbia Film Company on the success of their experiment, which was carried out under exceptionally trying circumstances and conditions.

Moving Pictures in Natural Colors.

Second Article.

By Thomas Bedding, F. R. P. S.

I concluded the first of this series of articles (see page 800, October 8) by briefly summarizing the points of the Urban-Smith and Friese-Greene Processes. These are adaptations of the well-known theory of tri-chromatics first enunciated by Prof. James Clerk Maxwell in the year 1861. If the reader has possessed himself of any of the text books listed in the previous article, he will know what this means, so that it is unnecessary for me to give a long description of it. I shall in fact assume that I am addressing a section of the readers of this paper who are cognizant, to some extent, of the underlying theories of the processes described.

Broadly speaking, the tri-chromatic theory underlies most of the experimental possibilities in the making of moving pctures in natural colors. For example: from Drac, a European experimentalist, comes an enormously valuable suggestion which, so far, has not been availed of, but which to my mind contains the germ of great possibilities. In the optic axes of the lens of the taking camera, he uses a series of prisms which split up the light or rather the image into definite sections of the spectrum. In other words, like Mr. Ives in his beautiful Kromscop, he makes records of the three primary parts of the spectrum. The development of this idea along practical lines seems to be obvious. If your negative contains three records: that is to say, the image is split up into three parts, then it is perhaps feasible to make your positives contain these three records and to project them at such a rate or in such a manner behind properly selected color filters, as to give on the screen the appearance of the subject in natural spectrum colors. Mind, I am merely recording the suggestion of an experimentalist which looks to me perfectly feasible. As I said in the first of these articles my object is to publish such data as in the hands of competent experimentalists will lead to perfection or rather completion of their ideas.

In contradistinction to Drac's system which is primarily an optical one, we come to two or three systems which rely chiefly upon a chemical adaptation of tri-chromatics. It has been suggested to use three films, each sensitized for a particular region of the spectrum and exposed behind suitable screens. The images are then developed and fixed, treated with hydrogen peroxide which has the effect of bleaching the dyes, leaving the images free to take colors applied. This looks a somewhat arduous, and not altogether practicable method of getting color, but it contains the germ of a good idea, namely: the sensitizing of the film for particular regions of the spectrum—an idea more or less in the mind of Drac. Indeed, it will be seen that both methods predicate the use of the tri-chromatic theory.

But "there is another way," to quote the cook books, in which the tri-chromatic theory can be availed of, and that is by inhibition. Here the colors are obtained roughly, by what is virtually a transfer process. You make your negatives behind the screen for a particular color or sensation. Then you transfer to that color, your green and your red obtained from gelatine images on paper. This means that your gelatine paper has been sensitized by bi-chromate of potash and an impression made from the original negative. To make this practicable it would be necessary to use a pan chromatic emulsion with an adjusted filter for the red sensation. The blue and yellow sensations would be obtained from dyeing on paper as roughly outlined.

When he was in this country last year, Mr. Williamson of Brighton, England, showed me some specimens of a very promising process, consisting of using alternate red and blue images, obtained by dyeing an ordinary positive. These, when projected, showed that there was an idea in the process which could be developed along familiar lines.

Each of the processes just briefly described is more or less practicable: that is to say, they produce results of a promising nature. Each has a germ which can be developed under proper conditions. What are those conditions? They are chiefly of a commercial or factory nature. It is one thing for an investigator or an experimentalist to work out a process, and another to make it practicable, or commercial. That is the crux of the matter. Inventors and experimentalists overlook it. Manufacturers with plants in which they have invested capital of greater or less amount are chary of altering or tearing out those plants to accommodate a new process of manufacture. Any process of making moving pictures in natural colors must, therefore, be a factory process. It must be capable of being adapted to any existing plant involving no considerable alteration or disturbances in it. I pointed out this fact before. I am aware that there are many experimentalists devoting their attention to the making of moving pictures in natural colors, and as one interested, I would like to give them this advice, namely to study the factory end of matters before proceeding with or completing their work. A few weeks or even a few days in a moving picture plant will tell them what is wanted. Unfortunately, inventors and experimentalists seldom think of these things. The results are many abortive processes which, though beautiful in themselves, contain the germs of good ideas but are not practicable in the factory.

I hope the reader who is interested in this subject will carefully read this article for the hints it contains. There is not one of the processes that I have specified which is incapable of being worked out to a definite conclusion. I do not want to hark too much on the first person, singular, in fact I am endeavoring to use the "I" as little as possible—but, as I said in a former article, I have given this subject many years of attention, and I can see possibilities invisible to under-educated imposters who are monkeying with a subject which they will never understand on this earth. More than that, having been made worldly wise by experience I am not giving away all that I know, nor do I mean to. But I am sincerely trying to arouse interest in the subject which is for the general good and advantage of the business.

THE MOTIOGRAPH IN CALIFORNIA.

The Enterprise Optical Company manufacturers of the "Motiograph" announce that they have appointed Edward H. Kemp as their representative for the State of California. Mr. Kemp was formerly representative for the Chas. Beseler Company, of New York, and possesses a thorough knowledge of the technicalities of the optical projection line. There is no doubt that Mr. Kemp will successfully look after the interests of the exhibitors and the Enterprise Company as well.

The Pictural Drama As A Fine Art

by LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

Any art which seeks and finds expression through beautiful methods is a fine art.

In criticising motion pictures from a fine-art standpoint, I take the ground that they are being produced, now and then, of high artistic quality. I have written pages upon pages of generous appreciation designed to encourage those who are taking pains and showing quality in a personal effort to raise the average of motion-picture performance. Why? Because I believe that impartial and intelligent criticism will help to raise the average quality of production to the ultimate benefit of everyone interested directly or indirectly in the business. The trouble is that only now and then are patrons of picture shows enabled to enjoy screen exhibits of undoubted merit. The average of quality must be raised to insure the permanence of this form of entertainment, and that average is a long ways below what it should be. Take, for instance, the program of first releases shown at the Union Square Theater last Tuesday, when there was an Edison, a Gaumont, a Kalem and a Vitagraph subject thrown on the screen.

Some of these companies have already demonstrated their ability to put forth pictural dramas of high merit, and I have praised some of their best efforts to the skies, but the average quality at this show was disheartening. I have watched in vain to discover a Kalem subject that stands out above "the usual thing," but their work, while showing some signs of improvement, is almost uniformly dull. I may have missed some especial effort of theirs, but those I have seen have been so utterly inane that the audience settles down to endure boredom when the Kalem sign is shown on the screen. The effect of one poor picture is to lower the quality of the others, excite resentment in the audience against pictures in general, but the Kalem was not the only dull picture shown Tuesday.

What does the audience want?

The easiest way to answer that question to yourself is to ask yourself what do you want when you go to a theater? You go there to be entertained or enlightened or both. You do not go to the theater to see something morbid, stupid or silly. According to your own judgment, are the pictures, now being shown, satisfactory? What do you hear on every side about the general quality of these performances? This form of entertainment draws because of the low price of admission, the audiences are generous on that account, but the quality can be raised at no additional expense to the producers so as to insure permanence of public favor. The quality can best be raised when the faults of to-day's products are intelligently criticised and remedied in future productions. Interest in the pictural dramas is purely visual, and it must be treated from two standpoints, that of the picture and that of the play.

We feel a delight in the telling of the pictured story, in the thought it expresses, and a second delight in the symbols of that thought, in its method of expression. There must be some sort of a story to tell in a pictural drama, the action must get under way as soon as possible, and it must lead up to something of value or interest. Because of the pictural delights, the telling may be greatly embellished by beautiful scenery, or enhanced by appropriate settings, then the whole should be characterized by harmony, not self-contradictory. Consistency is always a jewel.

There is no excuse for the Kalem "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," especially under such title, and the sub-title indicating that it starts at Larchmont. Larchmont would be a beautiful place to start a story, the finest suburban yacht club in the world has its house there, and the scenes in front of the club house during the July races are well worth photographing. The settings in the supposed villa are such as no dweller in Larchmont Manor would use in his coach house. There are numerous fast trains in the morning, running express from Mount Vernon to the Grand Central station, there are trolley cars and telephones, there are cross-country trolleys to other lines, but the denizen of Larchmont who has missed his train is depicted as using a hand car and a hay wagon to get to "taown." The man who tried to put that over would probably run for a Broadway car for fear it was the last one "daown taown." All this strained and artificial effort led to a dull finish.

I do not like to depreciate the Gaumont production because the settings were correct, if gloomy, and the play was one of French life, but it was dull. A girl played sick in order to marry one of the farm hands, and her father consented. Not much of a play in that, any way it can be put. The Gaumont people have shown such exquisite taste in exteriors, many of their products taking front rank as examples of the artistic, that they should bring their dramas up to their settings.

The Edison play was more ambitious. It attempted to show the blighting influences of evil acts in succeeding generations, and Hawthorne's gloomy theme, in "The House of the Seven Gables," grew so gloomy with excessive sub-titling that people hitched around in their seats and rubbed their faces wearily, while the man next to me actually went to sleep. Sub-titles should enforce the action, but they tire the spectator when they are required at every change of scene to explain the action.

"Auld Robin Gray," by the Vitagraph Company, did not dissipate the gloom, but IT WENT OVER. The poem, written nearly a century and a half ago by Lady Anne Barnard, is so strong and simple that it has survived the ages and is as beautiful as ever. In this case the exquisite poem enforced the action. It was gracefully presented in original and artistic designs and lent itself fairly well to a photoplay. The poem itself, and the fine acting, reached out into the sympathetic affections of the audience, and, in spite of the general gloom, it was closely watched and applauded at the end.

Of the four plays only one was decidedly poor, but only one was satisfactory to a very generous audience.

No one of the plays was demoralizing, and I was glad of that. I think the public is justified in doing away with any widespread influence injurious to children and to those who are not fortified by education and development to resist degenerating influences. Next to questions of self and family maintenance, there are no live problems of deeper interest to the mass of people throughout the country than those which pertain to the welfare of our children. We must listen to the voice of the people, and then any play that excites disgust in even a minor proportion of the audience is not worth producing. An appeal to what is best in human nature is worth hign consideration for the soul that is in it, as well as for the strong establishment of motion pictures as a factor for good in our evolution as a people.

We are all interested in

"Fictions in form, but in their substance truth,
Tremendous truth, familiar to the men
Of long past times, nor obsolete in ours."

How a Brooklyn Priest Deals With the Problem of Moving Pictures.

That motion pictures can be made a great factor for moral uplift besides being a medium of instructive entertainment is the belief of the Rev. James J. Durick, of the Church of Our Lady of Good Counsel on Putnam avenue, near Ralph. In order to impress this fact upon the members of the congregation Father Durick has invited his parishioners twice a week to see the proper kind of pictures in the Parish Hall, Madison street, near Ralph avenue. Tuesday night the first entertainment was given and a large crowd filled the hall.

In adopting the above plan, Father Durick is to be commended for his twofold work of standing by all that is good in the moving picture, and doing his utmost to eliminate the bad. In this respect he becomes an example to the critic who seeing only the evil fights against the good also. In further explaining his stand for developing all that is best in the use of the cinematograph, Father Durick says:

"There was nothing left for us to do but to fight the evils of the moving picture show with its own weapons. Moving pictures have caught the attention of the public. No other form of entertainment is so much patronized. It would be all right if they kept showing clean pictures, but the pity of it is they don't. Even the so-called respectable shows contribute to the evil. They do not boldly show immoral pictures, because they know at once that the public censor would get after them. But you go into one of these places and at first you are amused and instructed. Suddenly, before you know it, a picture which insidiously reveals vice and suggests vile things flashes out. Sometimes it is broadly vulgar and brings the blush of shame to the girl or woman who is present, but who hides her embarrassment by joining in the laugh of the coarser ones present. Gradually the young people become accustomed to this form of entertainment and their moral sense becomes blunted.

"I was determined in our parish to fight this state of affairs. I think moving pictures are too good a medium to be debased in this manner. Our people have promised to back me up. The pictures shown will be the best and many of them will teach lessons of patriotism, bravery and duty; and instead of demoralizing our young people will make them better citizens. Of course, we shall have the funny side of it too. It would not attract the young people so much if it were not amusing. Yes, and we shall have illustrated songs just like the ordinary moving picture shows."

Another Brooklyn [illegible] has taken up the case of moving picture exhibitions at Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street, thus emphasizing the recognized value of the moving picture. This is also a lesson to those exhibitors who are not careful either in the selection of their subjects or the manner in which they conduct their places of exhibition, proving as we have often stated: that while such carelessness may for a time hurt moving picture places in general it ultimately becomes a boomerang which hits the exhibitor alone and others take up the good side of the work while he "goes to the wall."

Picture Personalities.

Miss Nellie Grant.

The echoes of the success of the silent play, "L'Enfant Prodigue," are still heard in the land. People are talking about the work of individual performers in the play. The star, Mme. Pilar-Morin, was ably seconded in the performance by, amongst others, Miss Nellie Grant, who played the part of Phrynette. Phrynette was the blanchisseuse for whom Pierrot left his happy home. And then Phrynette, as everybody knows, threw the boy over. The part of Phrynette was played with verve and vivacity and Miss Grant achieved a great personal triumph in the work. Miss Grant is an experienced picture play actress. She has been associated with the Biograph Company and the Edison Company, as well as the defunct Cameraphone Company; so that her moving picture experience stood her in wonderfully good stead when she came to face a critical New York audience at the Liberty Theater.

There is a great deal of the method of Pilar-Morin in Miss Grant's acting. She is more mercurial than the average American actress. She has plenty of versatility and go. She impresses us as being distinctly Hibernian in temperament. We hope this will be accepted as a compliment; we mean it as such. We look forward to other opportunities for studying Miss Grant's work in moving pictures. She is a consummate actress, which is more than can be truthfully said of the majority of "actresses" in moving pictures.

In private life Miss Grant is the wife of one of the best known producers in the moving picture field, and if we may be permitted the liberty of saying so, the very opposite in character of the somewhat erratic Phrynette. We had some difficulty in persuading her to take her proper place in our gallery of picture personalities, but then true merit is always modest. We wish Miss Grant the greatest success in her work.

AMONG THE PHILADELPHIA SHOWS.

Philadelphia is the home of beautiful picture houses—no picture palaces. Superb and imposing abodes for the "Photoplay" and ten-cent vaudeville are scattered all over the city in surprising abundance. We have some very fine theaters in New York, and also in Chicago; but in Philadelphia there are many. Market street is the Fourteenth street of New York, and the State street of Chicago, though I think that Market street is more representative in picturedom than either of the others. Outside of its magnificent department stores, nothing is more conspicuous on Market street, than the row of playhouses, especially so at night, with their glaring signs, garlands and arches of decorative lights. Some of these places are very elaborate, perhaps too elaborate from an artistic point of view. There is too much of decorations, and too little of architecture; too much of gingerbread gewgaw and too little of style. Take, for instance, and compare the Palace and the Victoria. They are the most expensive houses in Philadelphia, if not in the country, and the cost of their construction was about the same. The Palace—Lubin's Palace, as we used to call it—is a very swell affair and worth $675,000, and always mentioned as the finest moving picture theater in the world. But, to my personal taste, there are other theaters I decidedly would prefer, and among them is the Victoria. The Palace is one of those "overdressed" affairs that spells moving picture very loudly. It has all the decorative plaster work that is possible to get, on and in the place, besides, I do not like the superstructure; it is flat, big and square, like a sign board. Then several of the smaller theaters are more proportionate, as, for instance, the Royal and the Casino—all three built by the same people. Now, take on the other hand, the Victoria, it is of very attractive appearance, dignified and tasteful in proportions, inside as well as outside. Walking on the other side of the street I noticed the building and thought it might be a new Keith & Proctor 25, 50 and 75 cent variety house. Well, it is a ten-cent house, and one of the finest in the country, I think! Market street is practically owned—the theatrical part, of course—by the Moving Pictures Company of America, a corporation of $600,000, operating a number of theaters in different parts of the country. They have six theaters in Philadelphia, of which five are on Market street—Palace, Savoy, Casino, Royal and Victoria, and the Lubin Auditorium on Eighth street. Felix Isman, a prominent real estate man in Philadelphia, holds considerable stock in the company, also Jules E. Mastbaum and S. Lubin. Officers of the concern are Jules E. Mastbaum, president; Joseph A. Mastbaum, treasurer and Maurice Wolff, secretary. The general manager is Louis Block. The firm has its offices at 1214 Market street or in the Palace Theater building. I called on Mr. Block and was received very cordially by this genial and accommodating gentleman. Of course, I inquired about the Victoria, and was told the theater was opened the first of October, 1909. The cost of construction was around $125,000. The ground rent is naturally most expensive, and I was informed that they paid a handsome lease on the property, though not quite as high as that of the Palace. Mr. Block would not commit himself to any figures, but if the Palace is worth $675,000, and $100,000 subtracted as the cost of the building, $575,000 will be the value of the property, and a fair estimate might be calculated as to the size of the lease.

The Victoria seats 1,100 and the Palace 1,000. They are running exactly the same class of program, giving one and a half hours' show. The vaudeville is furnished by a local concern, Bart McHugh, and the pictures, of course, by the Lubin Film Service. They had a superior show at the Palace but I was rather disgusted with some of the presentations at the Victoria. Among other features was the Royal Italian band or something like it. I am very fond of music and play a little myself, but O! my! for the music of that Italian band. I always had the impression that Italians were born musicians, but not those gentlemen from Sunny Italy. It sounded more like the proverbial German band giving a concert once in a while in the back yard, but no German band ever made such a noise as these Italians. The drummer seemed to play the leading part and exhibited wonders in beating on drums and cymbals, making a noise like a fusillade. The conducter also played a very ample part in the entertainment. He danced a Salome dance all by himself and knocked his cornetists once in a while on the head with his baton, kicked down his stand with the music on the floor, tried to pick it up, tried once more, and kept on for about ten minutes trying to get hold of that music under profuse applause from the audience. I drew a sigh of relief when the torture was over and a picture was flashed on the screen.

Cheap vaudeville is no attraction and decidedly not when at the expense of the better film service. I know at least one man in Philadelphia of the same mind, his name is W. F. Boogar, proprietor and manager of the Dreamland Theater, 835 Market street. Mr. Boogar is a pioneer in the business, and opened the first moving picture theater on Market street. Mr. Boogar has faced the game from all points of view and also had vaudeville as an attraction in his theaters.

"It isn't worth while," he said, "I used to put on four acts of good stuff in this place and charged ten cents, because everybody else did, but it was a mistake and I found it out purty quick too, and now I give them four reels and nothing else, and charge five cents and I am making more money than I ever did. But I get a good picture here and that is what the people want. I run my theater from nine o'clock in the morning and people are standing outside waiting to get in; continuous performance until twelve o'clock at night and full house all the time."

It was full house all right when I was in and people standing in waiting to get a seat and the picture was good, exceptionally so, remarkable for its steadiness, brilliant light and sharp definition. The Dreamland is a very ordinary fashioned theater seating 399; long and narrow with a machine throw of 135 feet. It had a self playing piano in the front as a barker, badly out of tune But the limit was the orchestra, six pieces, making a racket like the tam tam of a side show. Oh, Mr. Boogar, it's a shame with those pictures!

Philadelphia has beautiful theaters, as I said, but vast improvement could be made in their general management, and especially so on Market street. Some of the small theaters look dirty inside in spite of their elaborate exterior and interior decorations. Several were running junk film and appropriate music was heard in very few. Of all the theaters I visited none was using sound effects to the pictures and only one mirror screen in all Philadelphia, I was told by a film exchange man, and they had to tear down the front of the building to get it in. In my opinion the mirror screen is a valuable acquisition to a five-cent theater and a considerable improvement to the picture well worth the expense and well worth the trouble of putting it in.

The most characteristic thing about the Family Theater, also on Market street, is a phonograph. It almost brought tears in my eyes—you never hear these phonographs nowadays—it reminded me of those dear old times when there was easy money in the moving picture game and you started "the biggest show on earth" with a seventy-five dollar Kinetoscope, a store room, some rented chairs and—a phonograph! A phonograph with a monster horn barking "Not Because Your Hair Is Curly" or some other sweet siren song of days past by luring the strolling pedestrian to spend his nickel on a flickering rain storm. But the Family had a good phonograph and good, clear pictures and is a very neat place by the way.

A few blocks from the Family is the Savoy also a licensed house and, as previously mentioned, operated by the Moving Picture Company of America. The Savoy runs three reels and one illustrated song, also the illustrated song singer sang a ballad without the slides in full dress suit on the stage. The Savoy has a small stage but it is very elaborately decorated. That's about the only thing elaborate about the Savoy. Yes, they had a very good pianist playing appropriate music to the pictures. The projection was far from elaborate, the light none too good, the shutter was loose which finally resulted in a breakdown, and the film looked as if it was two years old, dirty and scratched.

Next house was the Bijou Dream, running Independent service. Of course I do not expect to see first runs all over the program, though I think that exclusive houses on Market street could afford the very best in a picture service with people pouring in from eight o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night and crowded houses all the time. I can't help making a comparison between the loop theaters of Chicago and the Market street theaters of Philadelphia. All day and night theaters as you might call them, catering to transient patronage. Some people might have the idea that it matters little what show you are putting on if you have the outside attractions to get the crowds in. That is my impression of some of the Philadelphia shows, and I think generally the loop theaters of Chicago give a better show and are managed far better than those of Market street. But back to my story about the Bijou Dream: it's a straight picture house, not even illustrated songs. The night I was there only two reels were shown.

Well, from the Bijou Dream, I went to the Palace and saw a very good show, the vaudeville offerings decidedly better than at the Victoria, and a feature act of "Musical Barbers" that made good

I was invited over to Germantown avenue to see two of the finest ten-cent houses in Philadelphia—"The Germantown" and "The Great Northern." I owe this to Mr. Greenbaum of the Calehuff Film Service. He said it was a treat, and indeed it was!

I stopped at 5508 or on the premises occupied by the Germantown Theater. Yes! it was a magnificent house of attractive design; spacious and well equipped inside. The Germantown is owned and managed by Stumpfig & Son and was opened the first of April this year, I was informed by Mr. Stumpfig, Jr. I had quite a little talk with Mr. Stumpfig, Jr.—a very pleasant and capable young fellow, enthusiastic and optimistic about his work and naturally quite proud of his theater. "Yes we spent quite a lot of money on this place," he said; "the building stands us $65,000 outside of the lease."

The Germantown has a seating capacity of 1,500. Admission charged is ten cents, with the exception of the twenty-five first rows at twenty cents. Five acts of vaudeville open and close with pictures. Three "Powers" machines and a "Klegel" spot light equip the operating booth, in charge of an experienced operator. The vaudeville attraction is furnished by Krauss Booking Agency, Philadelphia, representatives for the United Booking Offices; the film service by Lewis M. Swaab.

After enjoying a very good show at the Germantown I went to the Great Northern—a unique creation I had been told, was very much out of the ordinary and perhaps the most beautiful house in Philadelphia. The exterior was nothing extraordinary—from the general style of the five and ten cent theater maybe—it was more like a regular theater in a small city. The box office was something distinctly novel. It had the shape of an old-fashioned windmill, one of those things you see by the dozen in Holland. I entered the place and really this was something unique. The walls represented the exterior of an old colonial mansion or perhaps an old monastery—its walls covered with vines and roses, the windows half open and a balcony winding around the entire building. The ceiling was covered with a network of green and spread with hundreds of different-colored electric light bulbs in the shape of flowers, garlands of flowers winding down the pillars and a fountain was splashing merrily at each side of the orchestra. It was very pleasing to the eye and you could hardly help the impression that this was something that spoke of refinement and of a class above the regular ten cent theaters. Another characteristic feature about the place was the number of exits. I counted not less than nine—four facing Germantown avenue and five leading into Broad street. What this means for the assurance of the patrons is readily understood.

A number of new theaters will open in Philadelphia in the very near future. The Jumbo Theater on Front street and Gerard avenue, seating eighteen hundred, operated by the Jumbo Amusement Company, will open the fifteenth of October. A very handsome theater costing about $60,000.

The Nixon is another place seating 2,000 located at Fifty-second and Market streets. Wm. Freihopfer is the proprietor. Will open November 15 at a cost of $75,000.

Still another large place is under construction at Kensington and Allegheny avenues, seating 2,100. M. C. Walsh is the proprietor and intends to open December 1.

G. P. VONHARLEMAN.

THE DRAMATIC READER IN THE MOVING PICTURE FIELD.

More Boston Influence on the Picture.

In an article devoted to Mrs. Clement of Boston and her work which we printed in the "World" a few weeks ago, we congratulated that lady on the means she adopted for supplementing the moving picture at the theater which she so ably manages, stating that she presented one act plays, monologues with music, etc. The result is that the Bijou Theater at Boston enjoys a national reputation for the refined manner in which it is administered. Its success is the envy of many other theater managers throughout the country.

It will be also remembered that time after time we have advised theater managers to supplement the picture with good lectures, dramatic readings, recitations and the like. Of the value of this suggestion Mrs. Clement seems to be also aware, for she has engaged the services of Mme. Bona, a distinguished dramatic reader to whom we made reference in the World a few weeks ago. Mme. Bona is appearing at the Boston Bijou with such conspicuous success that she is bound to enhance her already great reputation. She is one of the most accomplished dramatic readers in the world.

The other evening before Mme. Bona's departure to Boston we had the opportunity of being present at a reception especially arranged to give her an opportunity of displaying her wonderful dramatic and elocutionary gifts. The reception, a large and fashionable one, was held in the salon of the Van Cortlandt Hotel, one of the most refined of New York's many hotels.

The lady's program was an extensive and varied one. She gave Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily" with wonderful conviction, gradation and dramatic effect. She also included in her program such charming comedy themes as "A Lesson with a Fan," "A Newport Romance," "A Little Wild Rose," etc. These are but a few extracts from her wide repertoire with which she is delighting Boston audiences this week.

We hope this excellent example set by Mrs. Clement will be widely followed, and that the best available talent, dramatic, musical, singing and the like will in future be employed in the moving picture theaters of the country wherever it is necessary that the picture should be supplemented. There has been a really remarkable entry of gifted artists into the moving picture field this last year or so, and not the least noteworthy of them is this lady, Mme. Bona, who is making such a striking success at Boston. Mme. Bona we may inform the readers of this paper, is known as "the girl with the golden voice." "She does not sing to you, but talks to you." If we are any judge of such matters, she has a fortune in her voice.

NEW FILM CONCERN FLOATED.

[Communicated.]

The National Film Mfg. & Leasing Co., capitalized at $1.000,000, has been incorporated during the last few weeks with the object of manufacturing and releasing twelve reels weekly and operating exchanges throughout the United States. Their product will be handled exclusively by their own Exchanges. They already have acquired options on several exchanges, and a mammoth factory is planned, which is said to be the largest in the world. It will contain every modern facility for producing the highest class of films.

Four directors will be employed to produce two reels each week. The other four reels will be foreign negatives, imported and printed in this country.

A large banking concern of Wall street is financing the enterprise and many prominent men are rumored to be interested in the undertaking. A prominent amusement promoter of New York, identified with several of the largest amusement enterprises, it is rumored, will become president of the new corporation.

Several Western capitalists have interested themselves in the enterprise. Secrecy has been maintained regarding the personnel of the officers connected with the company, and except for the information that A. J. Clapham, formerly of San Francisco, and now president of the Acme Film Company, is treasurer and temporary director in charge, no further data is obtainable.

A 20-acre farm on Long Island, containing a variety of landscape and water scenery is to be acquired for studio and factory purposes. Another studio in California will be maintained to obtain the real Western atmosphere.

The new company has been planned with the object of overcoming the obstacles and antagonism now being met with by the Patents, and Sales Companies.

THE ALIEN OPERATOR.

We were honored last week with a visit from Samuel Solomon, representing the alien operators in New York. Mr. Solomon explained that he had not been duly elected by the alien operators and also stated that he had no credentials from them. He came to us as a representative sent by a "higher power," perhaps, in his own opinion, he was sent by a "divine" power. In other words, he wasn't sent at all, he just "came" to us because the spirit moved him.

The alien operators in New York began to realize that their bread and butter was at stake, through the passing of a recent ordinance; they began to do some tall thinking. The trouble was that they did too much thinking without any action to suit the thought. The more they sat and thought, the worse matters got, and still nothing was done. They all realized and agreed with each other that it was up to somebody to "start something," but the something still remained stationary.

As in all crucial moments in the lives of men, a leader at last arose from the ranks. From the ranks of the alien operators arose Samuel Solomon. Way down in his heart he had a vague feeling that something ought to be done. He had waited patiently for something to turn up. Unskilled in parliamentary lore, he refrained from rushing in where angels fear to tread, hoping that the right man would come to the front and espouse the cause of the alien operator in proper fashion. It took him some time to realize that he himself was the Moses of the persecuted cult. They were waiting for him to come, while all the time he stood in their midst.

Not being hampered by any committees or sub-committees, Mr. Solomon proceeded with dispatch to bring matters to a head. He went first to a printer and there had "struck off" a certain placard that summoned all alien operators in the city of New York to assemble on a certain day in a certain place, and there make public protest against an unjust ordinance of the city that deprives an alien of the right to operate a moving picture machine, no matter how competent he may be. After that he went and hired a hall.

An immense gathering of some three hundred alien operators was the reward of Mr. Solomon's unselfish work. The meeting, while large, was not quite as successful as had been hoped, because, as stated before, the new leader had neglected his early parliamentary training, and a few slight omissions on his part were more to be regretted than censured. For instance, he had overlooked the matter of providing any speakers to address the assembly. He had also not considered the advisability of having a chairman to preside, and moreover, did not seem to realize that no meeting can accomplish much without a block and gavel.

The sponsor for this well attended meeting had a vague inward assurance that the speakers would bob up of their own accord, somehow or in some fashion. He had felt from the beginning that, given the main essentials, namely, the time, the place and the boys, that something was sure to happen and in this feeling he was right. After a dull sickening silence of about twenty minutes, someone with good lungs wanted to know what in ——— they were all there for, and why in ——— something wasn't said or done. At this point Mr. Solomon arose to explain that it was the same sentiment that had prompted him to print the placard that had brought them all together. He tried to make it clear to them that his idea in bringing them together was to have an informal discussion.

The informal discussion began at once. But instead of discussing the rights and wrongs of the alien operator, they began to discuss Mr. Solomon. While they were discussing him they were also cussing him. Perhaps the only reason that can be given for the leader not losing heart at that critical time, is because with all of them talking at once he could not understand what they were saying. They were filing out of the place indignantly, one by one, and at last the leader was left alone, talking to the naked air.

The operators had not even given their leader the credit of having good intentions, but he still remained stout of heart. More placards were printed and another meeting was announced. This time Mr. Solomon was not to be caught with his overalls at half mast. He had seen his mistake, and for the second meeting had promised to have prominent speakers and plenty of them, and he kept his word. In fact there were more speakers than listeners. By the strange perversity of fate the second meeting was the exact reversal of the first. The previous session was all operators and no speakers, while the later one was all speakers and few operators. Well might the dauntless leader pause and scratch his head. Once more he arranged another meeting, which proved worse than the other two. And then at last, he did what he should have done at first. He came to the Moving Picture World and asked for our advice.

To us it appears that the psychological moment was allowed to slip by at the first gathering. The first indignation meeting is usually the best, no matter what the trade or trouble may be. That is the proper time for a "touch," as it were, and, speaking broadly and roughly, money is the only thing that is going to do any good in this case. The horse is stolen, so there is no good in locking the stable door. The only thing for the alien operators to do is to put up some money and hire an expert cowboy to go out and lasso the horse and bring him back to the barn.

The alien operators cannot expect the citizen operators or the operators' union to get all worked up over this thing because the shoe doesn't pinch them at all. The best you can expect from outside sources is moral support or apathetic approval; don't expect any money because you haven't any good reason to expect any from anybody but yourselves, and if you can't get together and hand up for your own protection you don't deserve much help from others.

Mr. Solomon has done all he can, and we consider him a brave, self-sacrificing young man. He is not qualified to handle a movement of this kind by himself, but he deserves a lot of credit for what he has done and has tried to do. Our suggestion is for the alien operators to make another try. Get together once more and don't leave it all to one man. Form an Alien Operators' Protective Association. Get all you can at the first meeting and then get the rest by good sized weekly dues. Remember you have to hire a lawyer, and a good one. You have to give him enough money to make it worth his while to bother with the case—$50 won't do it, neither will $250. The lawyer who is able to do any good is one who must be paid for his time and his brains, and $500 is no more than right if he wins out. Only, for goodness sake, don't hand that to some shyster who will stall you for a couple of years telling you the case is coming on fine. Make him do the work first.

Our experience with nullifying unjust laws is to have them declared unconstitutional through the chancery court. This is a simple case, the only hard part being the long wait. In the meantime don't be "pikers;" this case is like a bad tooth, you may let it go for a while, but sooner or later it must be pulled out, so you may as well start saving at once to pay the dentist.

It is to the efforts of Samuel Solomon that the alien operators have obtained the concessions in the following letter:

CITY OF NEW YORK.
Office of the Mayor.

October 5, 1910.

Gaetono Garafalo, Esq.,
426 East 119th street,
New York City.

Dear Sir—Referring to the communication of September 22, signed by yourself and others, the Mayor directs me to state that he has been informed by the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity that it has been decided that all 1010 cards which were issued to moving picture machine operators prior to the enactment of the law requiring a license would be good for one year from the date of issue. It is stated that this will in some cases extend the time of employment for some of the operators who are not yet citizens, from one to six months. Respectfully,

(Signed) ROBERT ADAMSON,
Secretary

"Lo! the poor Indian!" or, I should say, "Lo! the poor operator!" Before me as I write is a little letter from an operator with whom, it seems, your Lux Graphicus is not popular. This gentleman suggested that instead of writing about the things that I do on this page, I should devote at least some attention to the operator. He seems disgruntled with me for writing about Bohemia; moving pictures of sport; Broadway and the theaters; the Vitagraph girl; and other things that have recently figured on the screen. I will gratify my operating friend's desire and say something about the operator this week, though possibly what I have to say may not be all honey.

* * *

Operators are an unorganized and an unorganizable class. The reason is not far to seek. They are neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring: that is, professionally or industrially regarded. Operating is neither a business nor a profession, like bricklaying, bread-selling, or law. An operator is an indefinite and an indefinable kind of worker, a casual unit in the great army of more or less unskilled workers; hence the difficulty that I have hinted at in organizing them. But I am pleased to see that efforts more or less successful are made to conduct operators' unions for mutual and co-operative purposes. I wish these movements every success. They mean well, but if they fail to accomplish much, it is for the reason I have given, namely, that in the cosmos of labor and industry, the operator is a kind of wandering atom.

* * *

What is the genesis of the average operator? How does he originate? Who made him an operator? Where did he acquire his knowledge? True, municipal authorities demand that he shall have a license, but does that make him proficient, skilled, and qualified? Does that make him a mechanic, a tradesman, a professional man? What does it make him? These are a few questions that I would like intelligent operators to reply to, if they think fit, through the pages of this paper.

* * *

I have more sympathy with operators than my correspondent seems to credit me with. I realize the difficulties of their position. But those difficulties are inherent. The ordinary moving picture exhibitor or theater manager has not yet reached that stage of sympathy when he looks upon an operator as in a category parallel to that of a plumber, a bread-seller or a lawyer. He does not regard him as a mechanic, a tradesman, or a professional man. He treats him as a casual atom. There lies the difficulty and the crux of the position. How is the lot of the operator throughout the country to be improved? His calling made more remunerative and put on a plane as satisfactory as that of other artisans? The answer is: By union, of course. If there were a union of the operators of the various States or groups of States, or cities or groups of cities, if the world of operators were organized or in perfect agreement, something might be done to better their lot.

* * *

But before this can be done, we must arrive at a certain standard of knowledge which all operators should possess. They must be qualified, and the qualifications must be vouched for by competent authorities. Inefficient men must be excluded from their ranks. This goes without saying. A skilled operator is the making of a picture show; a bad one mars the show.

* * *

I know something of the difficulties of organizing or attempting to organize unskilled labor. In Great Britain, for a long time, I devoted my time, thought, and energies, to endeavoring to organize photographic operators for purposes of mutual advancement. The scheme failed, because the men failed—they did not rise to the level of their opportunities. The consequence is that the photographic operators of Great Britain, like those of the United States, are still unorganized. Then I organized, or rather attempted to organize, four or five thousand professional photographers in Great Britain into a solid body. Six or seven hundred of them only joined the association. Result: professional photography is still far from being a profession in public esteem.

So my operating correspondent will see that whatever is disagreeable in his position can only be remedied by himself either individually or collectively in connection with others of his kind. Writing to Lux Graphicus and saying unkind things to me won't alter matters. I am Lux Graphicus, because I am. Lux Graphicus. I have devoted years and years to study of various sorts to chemistry, physics, optics, photography, literature, newspaper work and many other things. That has made me Lux Graphicus. If my operating friend will work as hard as I have done, and do, and live like me, that is to be still open to learn, I am convinced that he won't write me any more absurd letters. He will be too busy at work. Work, after all, is the panacea for many ills in this life.

* * *

Work makes the man, and want of it the inefficient man. Nothing in this world is accomplished without work. Work made the world what it is. It will make the world better. There is not a single operator who reads this page, or who writes to my friend Mr. Richardson, week by week, who possessing the necessary health, strength and brains, cannot make himself a better, a more efficient operator, by work, by assiduous study of the mechanics, the optics, the electricity, the manipulation of his projector. Let him use his brains: and work. If he will do this he will make himself a better operator and a better man; the Trouble Department will cease to be Trouble Department. It will be the Information Department—a department contributed to by men so interested in their work that they are constantly making new discoveries, giving their brother operators useful hints and generally doing something towards the uplift of their calling. At present the operators are taking all from the Moving Picture World, and giving very little in return.

* * *

I am not an operator! But I have had considerable experience in working the oxyhydrogen lantern in England, not professionally, but in an amateur way. So I know at least some of the conditions to success. Then I have unequalled opportunities of observing operators at work in this country. And I have no hesitation in saying that in ninety cases out of a hundred, where bad pictures are shown, the fault is due to inefficiency on the part of the operator.

* * *

How, then, generally speaking, can one enthuse over operators when there are so many indifferent workers in their ranks? From what class in the community are operators drawn? During a few months' stay in the service of the Cameraphone Company, I had opportunities of observing scores if not hundreds of would-be operators who went to that company for instruction. Frankly, not more than three or four per cent. of these hundreds of men had sufficient intelligence to acquire the rudiments of the work they applied for. They had mistaken their vocation. 'Tis true, tis pity; pity 'tis 'tis true.

* * *

If I wrote for months on this subject, I do not think I could say anything more that has a profitable bearing on the matters. I do not think anybody else can. But from the purely personal point of view, I would like to say that I am not a socialist, not a communist, not a collectivist. In my philosophy, everything depends upon the individual: the man, in the circumstance in which he is placed. Where an operator has the opportunity and the ability to make himself proficient and does not do so, he is deserving of reprobation; where he seizes his opportunity and succeeds in improving himself, he is deserving of commendation. I hope these paragraphs have convinced my operating friend that I have his interests, and the interests of his class, at heart. I would like him and them to feel that I am in thorough sympathy with them, wish them well and would do anything in my power to help them.

* * *

But, with one part of my operating friend's letter, I join issue: He wants more space in the World devoted to operators. I think there is too much already. There were three pages last week. There have been four some weeks.

which in my opinion is quite enough, if not too much. The readers of the Moving Picture World are drawn from many classes. These pages are read by men of science, manufacturers, exchanges, many thousands of exhibitors, and others, besides operators, besides enormous numbers of the general public, theatrical people, vaudeville people, even little children. So, it will be seen, that as a class the operator gets his proportion, if not more than his proportion, of space and attention. The operator is, to a very large extent, a spoilt child in the moving picture field, whom I and others would love much more than we do, if he did not so often spoil his employers' pictures and disgust the public. When the operators cease to do this, it will be time enough for any one of their number to write unkind things to me and assume to dictate what subject I should discuss on the screen. So, now be good boys!

THE PATHE PASSION PLAY UNDIMMED IN POPULARITY.

It has never been the privilege of the writer to pass a more profitable evening or one which has left a more enduring impression in a moving picture theater than it was his good fortune to spend last Sunday at the T. N. F. Theeater in Flatbush. Pathe's beautiful sacred pictures of the life of Christ, accompanied with a lecture that was nothing short of a sermon, and sacred music, occupied the whole evening for one exhibition. The beauty, sweetness and pathos of these pictures can only be imagined and is as impossible to describe as to portray in our humble language the transcending beauties of the life of the great Master. You must simply see it to appreciate it. William Robert Goss, who renders the accompanying lecture or sermon, has a voice of ministerial quality and sympathetic tones and his words flow on in harmony with sweet music and the beautiful scenes. As you sit there the spell of the great Life is cast over you. You forget the workaday life out of which you have stepped and which will engross you on the morrow, and for the moment you are far away in the sunny East. Time, too, has turned backward and retraced his steps some nineteen hundred years. Now you are in the peaceful hills of Judea with the shepherds tending their flocks. The Bright Star appears and then you journey with the shepherds to Bethlehem. In a humble manger you behold the Christ-child looking very much like a real baby as he kicks his dimpled little legs and tosses his tiny arms.

From this point you follow his life course into the land of the pyramids, back again to Bethlehem, in the carpenter shop among the doctors, working miracles, entering Jerusalem in triumph, on the road to Calvary as He reels under the weight of the cross, and last of all the Resurrection and Ascension.

The settings are beautiful and there is no lack of proper background or local color. The part of the Master is played with a dignity and grace that have made the Passion Play at Oberammergau famous. As you take your leave after the conclusion of the performance you carry with you the same feeling as on leaving your church after a beautiful and impressive service. Let the maligners and libelers of the moving picture go and see Pathe's "Life of Christ" on the screen, and if they have a spark of Christianity and love of their fellow-men left in their hearts they will fall upon their knees before closing their eyes that night in sleep and utter a prayer for the moving picture that it may live forever.

A. H. MILLER.

PRIVATE PICTURES.

The moving picture has become a valuable addition to private functions and in private life. Not only are wealthy people entertaining their guests by exhibitions in their own homes on a generally extensive scale, but they are also having pictures made of themselves, their surroundings and their children. While there can be without doubt many interesting private scenes and subjects of great value to those people who can thus enjoy this new reproductive pleasure, the chief value lies in the living portraiture of the children. The Kodak, a most handsome and valuable friend in its day is to be superseded in this particular. The early days of the children of the home as recorded by portraits are one of the most valuable possessions of almost every family. The new and great advantage of the animated picture can readily be appreciated and it is not surprising that where the opportunity can be afforded there will be an ever increasing use of the private moving picture preserving alike for the young as the old faithful life pictures of the family and friends.

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON.

S. S. Hutchinson, the president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is known throughout film circles as an exceptionally capable and shrewd film man. He has been identified with the motion picture industry virtually since its inception. For a period of two years he was the president and general manager of the Theater Film Service Company of Chicago and San Francisco. He is now, and has been for over a year, the president and general manager of the H. & H. Film Service.

Upon the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company and their announced policy in connection with the exchanges and the exhibitors, Mr. Hutchinson, on account of his prominent connection and his known executive ability, was considered as being one of the strongest allies of the Patents Company and he informs us that he was offered franchises in several locations. Upon a consideration of the situation, and the monopolistic tendencies of the new faction in the field, Mr. Hutchinson deemed it advisable to confine his attention to his own interests.

At the inception of the General Film Company, Mr. Hutchinson sold out to the powers that then were, his interest in the Theater Film Service for a cash stipulation which is still talked of by film men in the Central States. He retained his controlling interest and took active charge of the H. & H. Film Exchange, which he has voluntarily taken over to the Independent side.

Mr. Hutchinson's advent in the Independent field is hailed by the Independents as an acquisition. His knowledge of the film business, his appreciation of the wants and necessities of the exhibitors, and his personal knowledge obtained directly from the exhibitors as to what they require, will prove to be one of the greatest assets of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

P. A. POWERS LAID UP FOR REPAIRS.

We regret to learn that P. A. Powers is in a St. Louis hospital, where he is slowly recovering from a serious accident. Mr. Powers, accompanied by his secretary and Mr. and Mrs. Talbot, of St. Louis, were in an automobile that overturned en route to the aviation field. Mr. Powers was the most seriously injured of the party and had a very narrow escape from death.

Mark M. Dintenfass cannot understand how his advertising man left out the name of his October 26 release in his advertisement last week. Exhibitors soon advised him of the slip and he desires to say that the title of the film is "Doings on the Ranch"—a 950-foot comedy.

TROUBLE DEPARTMENT
QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
CONDUCTED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Good Dope from Kansas.—Winfield, Kan., writes as follows: "I note in the Moving Picture World of October 1, an article from Leroy Bickel, Ardmore, Okla. A most excellent program indeed was that of friend Bickel, but I was certainly amused when I read your answer to him. There are altogether too many who overlook what might be called the main spring of the whole works. I was reading to-day an article by one Clyde Martin who goes on to tell about how bad the music is in most of the houses, what small salaries are paid piano players and others, etc. I quite agree that good music of the right kind is the proper thing. Let the music, however, be the best the world can produce, put just exactly the right kind of a man at the door and the most attractive girl in town at the box office, don't allow anyone to look for a seat but have plenty of ushers that are courteous and know their business. Having done all this, go and pick up most any kid who can turn a grind stone, put him in the operating room and see what kind of a show you have. On the other hand, secure a really good and competent operator and your show is complete. Now supposing after the first reel is run your operator for some reason walks out of the booth—quits. The show stops right then and there, doesn't it? But supposing, on the other hand, the ticket seller and the ticket taker and all the ushers and the piano player quit and go home, but the operator sticks around. The manager could sell and take the tickets, the operator would put on the show and the dimes would keep right on coming in. There are too many managers who overlook the relative importance of the piano player and other employees and the operator. I have seen them fairly tear their hair when the piano player and singer quit, but if the operator quit they only say, 'Well, let him go.' Maybe the reason they do not say any more than that is because he is such a poor one and they hardly think it worth while to say anything."

Friend Winfield's letter is just a trifle mixed and he hasn't the best possible way of putting the thing, perhaps. But his ideas are correct. Given an A No. 1, first-class operator and good films, it would be quite possible to put on a show that would satisfy the public temporarily at least, if the piano player, singer, ushers and everybody else but the manager and operator quit. That is absolutely true, and that it is so is proven by the fact that right here in New York City, within five blocks of my own home, there is a ten-cent house running with absolutely nothing but pictures and a piano player, and nothing very extra in the way of a piano player at that. But they have an operator that is par excellence, and the house is jam full all the time. It is neither right, fair, nor just on the part of the manager to praise everybody else in the house and practically ignore the work of his operator, provided, of course, the operator's work be worthy of praise. The sooner managers themselves wake up and attach the proper degree of importance to the matter of good projection, the sooner will good projection become a fact in the photoplays of America.

* * *

San Francisco Has a Blow-out.—The editor of the Trouble Department is in receipt of a neatly gotten up invitation card from the San Francisco Moving Picture Operators' Union, No. 162, reading as follows:

"You are cordially invited to attend a

PRESENTATION SUPPER AND JINKS given by the Moving Picture Operators' Union

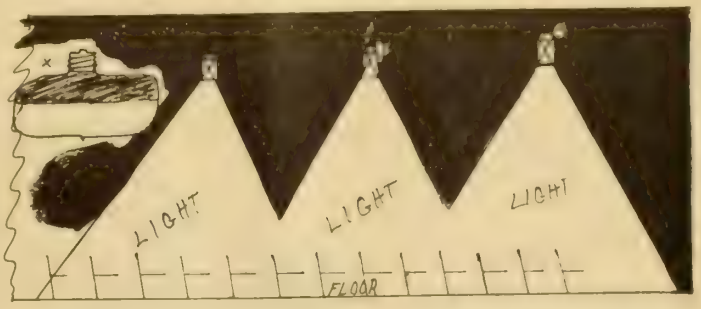
In honor of the Trophies presented by Messrs. Carroll & Tilton, and Messrs. Chas. Brown & Sons, and won by this Union in the Labor Day parade.

The Time.....Midnight, Wednesday, October 5.
The Place .....Chutes Cafe.
The Girl .....In Moving Pictures."

Many thanks for the invitation, 'Frisco. I would really like to be present. I am quite sure I would enjoy the supper and know I would simply dote on the "Jinks." (Whatever that is!) But inasmuch as you overlooked the matter of a railroad ticket and my aeroplane chauffeur has the gout, I guess you will have to excuse me this time.

Lighting the Interior.—El Paso, Tex., writes as follows: "I have seen considerable in the public press here lately about light theaters and I understand that pictures are being successfullly projected in some houses where it is 'light enough to read a newspaper.' Will you kindly tell me how this is done? Please be as explicit as possible in the matter, as I am contemplating installing a house in San Antonio before long and I want it to be strictly up to date in every way. Is it necessary to use one of the patent screens in a light auditorium?"

No, El Paso, it is not necessary to use one of the patent screens in order to have a light auditorium, although, of course, with the mirror screen the picture will naturally show up to better advantage. The lighting of the auditorium of a theater without having the light affect the projection is a very simple matter, yet one that seems to be but little understood by theater managers. The writer ventures the assertion that he can light any moving picture theater so that a man seated within 10 feet of the screen can read an ordinary newspaper with comfort, provided he has reasonably good eyesight. In lighting an auditorium, there are two problems to be considered and two only. First, the keeping of all direct light rays from the screen; second, the shading of the light so that it will not shine in the eyes of the audience as they look forward toward the curtain. This may be accomplished by the use of metal screens, such as those shown in the appended sketch. These screens should be four to six inches in diameter. They may be either cone shaped or shaped like an inverted tin bucket, types of both being shown in the diagram. They should have considerable depth and be painted white on their interior surface. The light is hung within the metal screen and placed up far enough inside the screen so that the light rays from screen (A) will meet the light rays from screen (B), about four to five feet from the floor. The type of lamp to be used is the broad, flat globe with a silvered top. That is to say, the globe is of the shape shown at "X" in the sketch, the top or shaded half being covered with silver which reflects all the light straight downward. The shield must be so shaded and the lamp hung at such distance within it that it will not be visible to the eyes of the audience as they look forward. This means, of course, that they cannot be placed too far apart on the ceiling, say not to exceed 6, 8, or possibly 10 feet, according to the height of the ceiling. Lights thus shielded will amply illuminate the auditorium without in any appreciable degree affecting the picture, nor will it interfere with the audience, as is the case where ground glass or plain white globes are set in the ceiling behind cross beams. I think that a few minutes' study of the sketch will enable anyone to understand exactly what I mean. I also believe that by just a little bit of experimenting as to the shape and size of shield best adapted to the individual house, anyone can apply this system of lighting successfully. The shields may be made of polished brass, enameled metal or any other suitable opaque material.



* * *

Wants to Go South.—New York City writes as follows: "I am a constant reader of the 'World,' especially the Trouble Department, and write to ask your advice. I am an operator who believes he knows the business fairly well. Would like to know what chances are in the South for getting a position, as I am compelled to go south for my health some time within the next month. Not being a millionaire, I shall have to work when I get there. Also please let me know which states in the Southern group require an examination."

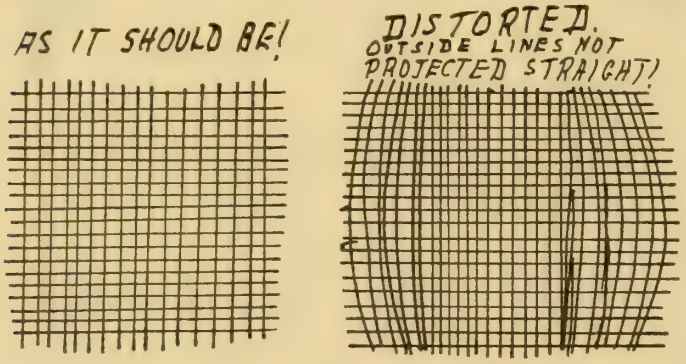
It would be entirely puerile for me to attempt to give you advice in such a matter as this, New York. There is altogether too much depends on the individual. In this I do not refer altogether to the matter of ability. One man will go into a strange town and "land a job" immediately, whereas another having the same, or perhaps superior ability, will be a long time catching on. However, should any of our Southern readers wish to employ a Northern operator, I shall be glad to hear from him and forward your address. I do not know which of the Southern States or cities require operators to pass an examination.

* * *

A Splendid Letter.—Alfred S. Cory, Somerville, N. J., contributes the following: "Friend Richardson: a word about why a picture will be out of focus on one side when the machine is located to one side of the screen and yet not out of focus either top or bottom when the machine is much higher than the screen, shooting downward.

"A motion picture projecting, or objective lens, is practically the same as the photographic lens, called rectilinear lenses, in that they possess, in a considerable degree, the fault of astigmatism. Now to bore a little further into this matter, let me say that astigmatism in a lens renders it unable to portray both vertical and horizontal straight lines perfectly straight at the same time. Neither would a rectilinear take a true picture of concentric circles. From the definition above, it would seem that you could never tell whether the lens was going to err on sides or top and bottom, since it may be set in any position or in various positions from time to time. Exhaustive experiments, however, made by far more able men than I, have proven that the rectilinear almost always errs on the sides. (See diagram.)



"Now, Mr. Richardson, a lens of rectilinear type does not err enough to be noticeable except to the initiated, or unless compared with work done by a corrected lens, except that by improper use undue strain is put upon it. A machine placed to one side of the screen puts a strain on the lens at the weakest point of its defining power.

"And, now, for a remedy: As the lack of refinement in the rectilinear style of lens (any ordinary projecting lens) is chiefly in the edges, the outside of both front and back combination should be slightly diaphragmed down by cutting two accurate rings about 3-32 of an inch wide, of black opaque paper. The outside diameter of the ring should be such as to fit the lens mount tight. These rings pasted around the edge of the front or outside surface of back and front glasses will give you a glass of smaller diameter, but truer defining power. It would then throw a picture too big for your screen in some cases, but by moving the screen closer to the machine (a matter for experiment) the size of the picture of course, could be reduced to its original limits with added refinement in definition and greatly improved definition on the otherwise 'off' edge.

"I am afraid there will be many unable to grasp this proposition but I have done the best I could to make it plain."

The thanks of myself and the readers of The Column are certainly due you, Friend Cory, for your very lucid explanation of this proposition. There is just one thing about it I do not understand and that is why the lens should give a larger picture at a given distance because of the diameter of the lenses having been reduced, and I think you are mistaken there. I frankly confess I do not know anything about this proposition myself, but as this matter of the picture being out of focus on one side seems to be a very common fault concerning which many letters reach me, I would recommend all those suffering from this particular trouble to experiment along the lines laid down by Neighbor Cory and report results.

* * *

Explanation of film Trouble.—Samuel Acri, proprietor and manager of the Central Hall Moving Picture Theater, Marietta, Pa., writes as follows: "I read with pleasure the Trouble Department every week and find same very interesting and instructive. In the issue of the 15th instant I note that Delhi, N. Y., has trouble with certain films which continually get in and out of focus. I have had the same trouble with some Biograph and Edison subjects and would like to give my poor opinion as regards the trouble and its remedy. I would run a Vitagraph or a Pathe and the focus would be as good as could be desired. I would then put on a Biograph or Edison, either one of which was simply awful in that the middle of the film never laid even with the slides, so that the entire picture could never be got in focus. I was sure it was due to the film being too hard, so that it would spring back and forth in the center of the aperture. My remedy is simple, but it proved effective. I cut out two pieces of asbestos the size of the reel and dampened the same with water (vinegar is better) and placed these on either side of the reel and put the whole business in a box for a few hours. The result was the film was flexible and laid perfectly straight over the aperture and I have had no trouble of any kind since. Whenever I get a film that buckles in and out over the aperture I proceed to moisten it as above set forth and that settles it. No more trouble. I hope this will benefit Delhi and possibly others. But care must be had that they do not get the asbestos too wet."

We are obliged to you, Friend Acri, for the solution of what has been a very puzzling proposition. I have had many complaints in this respect, particularly concerning the Biograph film, one or two as regards the Essanay, and none involving the Edison film. Of course, if this is what is causing the trouble, the remedy is simple. I would, however, advise those applying it to be very careful and not overdo the matter of moisture. I would also recommend managers and operators to examine the operating room moisture box described and illustrated in the Trouble Department issue of October 1. Such a contrivance should be in every operating room and if it was the film would be flexible and pliable instead of hard and brittle as much of it now is.

* * *

From Pittsburg, Pa., comes the following, which I have taken the liberty of toning down considerably and still it is bad enough: "Friend Richardson: I hope the following information will find space in the operators' Column, and that it will cause some of the brother operators to meditate. There was an ordinance passed in this city after the president of our local union went before the Board of Electricity and Bureau of Explosives insisting on a rigid examination. The authorities were supposed to make the examination strong enough to knock sixteen-year-old kids off the projection field. Well, after a considerable delay, Pittsburg operators were invited to appear and take the examination, each being given an application blank, in filling out which it was necessary to state age, nationality, etc. The examination consisted of questions made up from the following:

1. Why does a fuse blow out?
2. What is a magazine used for?
3. Why do they put films and slides in upside down?
4. What size wire would you use on projection circuit??
5. Why don't the authorities allow film cement in the operating room?
6. How should the operating room be wired to pass inspector's approval?
7. What is the lens for?
8. What causes condensers to crack?

These and a few more equally silly questions made up the examination. Several of our members appeared for examination and while waiting heard Mr. R. J. Dalley inform an applicant as to the nature of some of the questions. Moreover, it seems to be quite certain, at least in the case of a theater near the downtown section run by a woman, that this same Mr. Dalley helped get the operator through, although informed that he was under legal age of twenty-one. Moreover, it is a fact that while in most of the houses of the city section (downtown section I suppose Pittsburg means. Ed.) the operators have licenses; still there are a number of theaters running without licensed operators, with never an inspector around to see whether the operator has his card or not."

And thus the writer proceeds at some length and in considerable detail, winding up with, "Projection is very poor in Pittsburg, except in downtown houses. The Olympic is the house for good projection. This theater shows Independent film, while the Lyric, Family, Cameraphone and Civic (?) run licensed films, the latter house being the only one paying the union scale to the operator. Other places are doing nicely, but it is the same old story: Poor films and worse projection."

Naturally, one questions a letter of this kind and wonders whether or not it is the case of "man with a grouch" or bona fide. Careful reading of the letter in question, however, makes it appear to be the latter. If the Pittsburg Board of Examiners pretend to pass upon the qualifications of operators by asking a set series of question,s they might better go out of business, and do it real soon, too, for in that event their usefulness would very quickly end, if ever they had any. The Board of Examiners perform a very serious duty, in that it is up to them to say whether or or no a man shall have the right to earn his daily bread working at his profession. They have it in their power to deprive the bread winner of the family of the right to labor, and this power should be exercised only for good and sufficient reasons. Boards of examiners should, in the writer's judgment consist of (1) one expert moving picture operator; (2) one expert electrician; (3) may be either an operator or an electrician, preferably, however, the latter. Presumably the gentleman spoken of in the letter is one of the examiners, and if the charges made against him are true he should be put off the Board forthwith. Personally, the writer does not think this matter of examination has much, if any, effect one way or the other. His experience has been that in every city where examinations are held the thing is very largely a farce in that the examination does little to determine the applicant's ability in the field of projection, or even to determine anything more than the fact that he knows something about the electric current. If the Pittsburg Board has been wronged in this letter, they are welcome to space in this column to set themselves right. On the other hand, if conditions are as set forth, something should be done at once. This week there is a letter from President Woods of the San Francisco Local Union, which I would strongly commend to the careful perusal of all operators and managers.

* * *

Candle Power.—Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "As regards the article 'Candle Power' in October 8th issue, I am of the opinion that you will remain up the stump for some time to come. On looking into this subject, it is easily discovered that it would take a pretty wise man to help you. There is no known rule that can be applied to find the exact efficiency of the C. P. of an arc lamp, since so many things have a bearing on the matter. The quality of the carbon, length of arc, position of crater, diameter of carbons, temperature, ventilation for escape of gases, etc., all have a direct bearing on the result. Since the Board of Electrical Engineers of America have failed to set any fixed standard, I believe it is a question far beyond the wise ones."

It was not designed, Brooklyn, to discover the exact candle power of the projection lamp. What I had in view, and I presume the writers of other letters had in view, was the approximate candle power delivered under ordinary conditions with the consumption of a given amperage. This could be determined with a fair degree of accuracy in several ways, one of which was illutrated and described in our last issue.

Film Trouble.—Delphos, O., contributes the following; "I am having trouble in getting my picture focussed on one side. One side is as sharp as could be desired, while the other is blurred. I think it is caused by the tension springs. Kindly tell me how to set the springs, and should they be stretched to make them tighter? I have an Edison machine and the picture jumps and sways sidewise. Have had several arguments about condensers, have a 50-foot throw, but do not know how to figure the lens. I am using one 6½ and one 7½. Some say the 7½ should be behind and some say it should be in front."

Your tension springs should set squarely on the tracks of the aperture plate, and they may be tightened by bowing them out slightly with a screw-driver. Be sure that the tracks of your aperture plates are not worn. If they are, get a new aperture plate at once. If your machine sets to one side of the screen, that, no doubt, is the reason of the fault, and I refer you, in that event, to another article in this issue and recommend that you try the experiment as set forth therein. If your machine is square with the screen and your aperture plate and tension springs are all right, then be sure that your projection lens is clean. Take it apart and examine it carefully to be sure that there is no dirt inside the lens. A finger mark or a bit of oil on the lens will produce a blur. Be sure also that the machine sets square with the condenser. In one of these things you will probably find the fault. As to the condensers, you do not say what size picture you are throwing, and I can therefore offer you no advice except that if you are throwing a tolerably large picture your 6½ and 7½ ought to be all right. And I should use the 7½ next the lamp, although so far as projection is concerned I do not know that it makes any difference. The thin one, however, is less liable to break under action of excessive heat than is the thick one. On the other hand, if you are throwing quite a small picture your objective lens will be very long focus and you should have two 7½ condensers. Very likely, however, your 6½ and 7" are all right. In asking questions of that kind the length of throw and width of picture should always be given. Be sure there is no grain of dirt on face of your intermittent sprocket, as that will cause film to jump and that there is no side motion in intermittent sprocket since that would allow film to sway sidewise.

FROM PRESIDENT WOODS.

Mr. H. G. Woods, President Local No. 162, I. A. T. S. E., San Francisco, Cal., writes:

Mr. F. H. Richardson:

Dear Sir: For your article headed "Organization" in the last issue of the World, "hands across the continent," for "them's my sentiments, too."

The World is the only paper devoted to the moving picture interests that has ever admitted that the operator is even human, let alone trying to assist him, and well may the craft rise up and bless the name of Richardson.

In direct controversion to your ideas on unionism read the ideas of our English friends as editorially expressed in the Bioscope of September 8, this article having been inspired by the fact that the Operators' Union of San Francisco has found it necessary to appeal to the San Francisco Labor Council for protection against "fake" partnerships, wherein incompetent, inexperienced men, and even boys of sixteen, were calmly introduced as partners, therefore eligible to operate the machines to the exclusion of reliable men of mature years, and to the utter disregard of all that is due the public as to safety and a show that is worth the price paid for admission.

The editorial is as follows, and embodies the old stock phrases of those opposed to organizations of the common people for protection against the organized "interests," such as "blind interference," "power over its members," "paid officials," "freedom to work and be paid what one desires," and "freedom"—FREEDOM, forsooth—better the word SLAVERY.

"It appears that some of the proprietors of picture theaters in San Francisco recently inaugurated a plan, by means of which operators employed in the respective theaters would be given proprietary interests. In no fewer than 16 theaters the scheme works well, and all concerned are very pleased with themselves. But now comes the trouble. The Operators' Union, seeing in the new arrangement a wicked design on the part of the employers to 'sweat' their men, and perhaps employ non-unionists, declares against the scheme, and is ready to forbid its members to work at the theaters where this scheme is established. Here is yet another case of blind interference and wilful misrepresentation. What the Operators' Union really fears is lest its power over its members should be weakened, and they begin to think for themselves instead of getting paid officials to think for them. It's the old, old story—trade unionism versus freedom, freedom to think and work, and be paid what one desires. No matter how advantageous such a plan as that in force at San Francisco may prove to be, it is condemned without a trial merely because a few officials are afraid that if the scheme is a success their jobs have gone. This is not the explanation the union offers. I admit, but it is the real one; and the sooner the operators cut themselves adrift from the clinging bonds of the union, so much the better for themselves, for their occupation, and their interests." (Bioscope, Sept. 8.)

What this party really intended to convey was "so much better for the interests instead of their interests." Therefore, I say this article won't do, Mr. Richardson. It is false and misleading to begin with, since this union has never interfered with ACTUAL owners, though it has protested and will continue to protest against the practice of the owner, who, claiming to be the operator, hires a small boy to do the work in the box, also against all false partnerships created to defeat the ends of unionism and do away with the services of a competent operator.

There are also no paid officials, the executive officers of the union doing their shift at the crank the same as all other members, using their spare time toward maintaining the conditions established by us, the principal ones of which are CAPABLE MEN of MATURE YEARS only to be employed as operators, and as such men can not be had at the salary of the BOY CRANK PUSHER, the wage question naturally follows. That these principles laid down by us SIX YEARS AGO were and are correct is plainly shown by the fact that they are now being adopted by the authorities of nearly all large cities under the name of LICENSE ORDINANCE FOR OPERATORS.

Our executive officers and members have long ago learned that they must GIVE before they can expect to RECEIVE, and this principle has earned us the respect of the employers, who have seen that the union is quick to punish the operator who expects to receive without giving in return. In fact, I have always felt that our success is largely due to the fact that we have ever recognized that there are THREE interests to be consulted before conditions can be established, or in other words, THREE people have rights in the matter.

The right of the employer to faithful, conscientious service in consideration of reasonable compensation—BETTER service from the union man than he can obtain from the non-union man in consideration of higher salary demanded.

The right of the public to the best show that can be presented for the admission price paid, as well as the right to feel that life and limb are safeguarded by the presence of a reliable man—instead of a boy—in the operating room; also—my unionism will crop out—the right to spend his union earned nickel or dime where union conditions prevail.

The right of the employee who, provided he GIVES that which the other two demand, has the right to receive sanitary and comfortable surroundings, good tools to present the show demanded, together with reasonable hours and adequate compensation.

In order to carry out our idea of GIVING before RECEIVING we have for several years maintained a demonstrating room which has at the same time been a school for our members, and which has made better operators of us all. There have been many demonstrations both theoretical and practical, and many knotty problems threshed out, as well as much repair work done, particular attention having been given to new apparatus which has come upon the market, and, as whenever anything new is being shown, the owners and managers have been invited, I can safely say that much good has been done and a very friendly feeling created in thus bringing together the exhibitor who is ever on the watch for something new, the operator who will be expected to handle it, and the manufacturer or agent who desires to sell it. At least two picture machines and the Mercury Arc Rectifier, as well as numerous smaller devices, owe their start in this city to the Operators' Union, and if we had what is due us—which we haven't—we would have one of each of these permanently installed in our demonstrating room at the maker's expense.

To the operator I would say ORGANIZE, get a set of officers who will work honestly for you all the time, for nothing but the good of the cause, and who are willing to go without thanks when things are all to the good, and stand abuse when they are not; then SHOW the employers you are better operators than the unorganized, and AFTER you have shown them ask for your conditions.

It will take you some time and hard work, it has taken us SIX YEARS, to get the brass card UNION OPERATOR in the lobby of every place in this city where operators are employed, so do not get discouraged if you cannot do it in a few days, but KEEP AT IT and you will win in the end.

To you, Mr. Richardson, I am frank to say that I have had some doubts as to your sincerity in the past, but I am beginning to see that you have been working to a definite plan, and that the rubbing you have given the operators is just beginning to bring out the grain, so with my best wishes I would say, "GO TO IT, MORE POWER TO YOU."

W. G. WOODS,
Pres. M. P. Operators of San Francisco
Local No. 162, I. A. T. S. E.

Of such importance do I consider the foregoing letter that, lengthy as it is, it has been given space in its entirety. It must be clearly understood, Friend Woods, that the Moving Picture World, of necessity, serves the interest of all people connected with the moving picture industry. It is not and cannot be the organ of any particular class, either as pertains to manufacture, film service men, theater manager or operator. Personally, the writer is a strong believer in organization. He believes in some business organization as a controlling factor in the business as a whole. He believes in the organization of the film service men in order that they be in position to safeguard their interests. He believes in the thorough organization of the exhibitors to the end that they be able to conserve their interests, and last, but by no manner of means least, he believes in the thorough organization of the operator. He not only believes in the organization of the operator from the standpoint of the betterment of wages and conditions of labor, but he believes in it for the further reason that the history of the labor movement from the beginning has shown, and shown conclusively, that the standard of intelligence, the standard of morality, the standard of temperance and the STANDARD OF WORKMANSHIP have always and invariably been raised by the advent of the labor union in the field. This is true not sometimes, but always and all the time, provided, of course, the union exists long enough to become established on a firm, sound footing.

I am glad to know that the officials of the San Francisco union serve without pay. But it is very questionable whether such a scheme would be successful in a city like New York or Chicago, where there are between 500 and 600 theaters and something like 1,000 operators. The task would be too large for any man to successfully handle without giving it his whole time, in which case it would, of course, be necessary that he receive salary. The effort the San Francisco organization has made to educate its members in projection, and things pertaining thereto, is to be most highly commended. And it is along those lines that the union will do its greatest amount of good, in my humble judgment. Wages and working conditions will easily follow when the union has established the superiority of the work of its members.

I am glad also to see that President Woods recognizes the right of the public to be enabled to view good projection in return for their money. I am endeavoring to the very utmost of my ability to stir up operators and imbue them with a desire to know more about their business, to the end that the projection of moving pictures in America can be vastly improved over the crude work of the past, and to the further end that moving picture machines be placed in charge of capable, competent men of mature years, or at least of years sufficient to give them some sense of their responsibility to the public and to their employer.

I propose to keep hammering away in the future just as I have in the past, and I am sure I shall have the co-operation and good wishes of all men worthy of the name of operator; for the others, or their opinions, I care nothing.

In closing, I would recommend President Woods' letter to the most careful perusal of every operators' union in these United States, and would suggest to them the phrase, "Go thou and do likewise."

NOTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

Sacramento, Cal., will have a new picture show on the 15th. A. J. Stone is opening a new house on K street. The house will seat six hundred and be up-to-date in appointments.

* * *

C. B. Kaiser, secretary and treasurer of Local No. 152, I. A. T. S. E., Los Angeles, is visiting friends in this city. He reports that conditions are constantly improving in the Southern city since all operators are required to pass a city examiation

* * *

B. Mulvaney has resigned his position as traveling salesman for the Acme Film Exchange and will go on the road as advance man for the Jeffries-Johnson pictures. His position with the Acme will be taken by Mr. Craycroft, formerly in charge of the city booking department.

* * *

The Silver Palace Theater at Market and Third streets has been showing the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures the past week. Contrary to expectations, they were not bothered by the police department.

* * *

The Electric Theater on Union street has been remodeled in the past week, new opera chairs, a Pathe machine and a mercury arc rectifier having been installed. Dan Reardon now has one of the most up-to-date places in the city. He reports that business has improved about 100 per cent. since the changes were made.

* * *

Local No. 162, I. A. T. S. E. held a banquet at the Chutes last Wednesday night, the occasion being the presentation of the silver cups donated by Brown Bros. & Co. and the Carroll & Tilton Co., and won by the Local in the Labor Day parade. After the feed all adjourned to the Chute Theater, where stunts were indulged in till a late hour in the morning. Among those present were President Kelly and Vice-President Rosenthal, of the Labor Council; Messrs. Cohen and Alexander of the Department of Electricity; Chas. Brown, of Brown Bros.; Mr. Newman, of the Carroll & Tilton Co.; Mr. Kaiser, of Los Angeles; Mr. Lavega, president of the Oakland (Cal.) Local; Mr. Cassasa, president of The Musicians, and other prominent labor leaders.

* * *

The Exhibitors' Association are making plans for the publication of a little paper called Pictureland and devoted to news of nickelodeons and advance bulletins of films, to be distributed to their patrons.

San Francisco, Cal., October 10, 1910. F. R. C.

"Abraham Lincoln's Clemency": A War Story of More than Usual Merit.

The sentiment of the picture has received considerable attention in the pages of the Moving Picture World and occasional reference has been made to photoplays calculated to stir the emotion of the audience as in the spoken drama. In "Abraham Lincoln's Clemency" the Pathe-American Company have achieved this distinction to a marked degree. We were privileged to see the drama in the making and prophesied that it would be one of the strongest war plays ever produced. It is, and should be equally popular in North and South. The poetic sub titles and the realistic scenes and excellent action make an ensemble well calculated to advance the power and potency of the photoplay.

The wearied sentry found asleep at his post is sentenced to death.

Pardoned, he finally loses his life on the battle field while saving the flag.

THE STORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S CLEMENCY.

Without a murmur, he endured a service
new and hard;
But, wearied with a toilsome march, it chanced one night, on guard
He sank, exhausted, at his post, and the grey morning found
His prostrate form—a sentinel asleep upon the ground.

And this poor soldier, seized and bound,
found none to justify,
While war's inexorable law decreed that he must die.

'Twas night. In a secluded room, with measured tread and slow,
A statesman of commanding mein paced gravely to and fro;
Oppressed, he pondered on a land by civil discord rent,
On brothers armed in deadly strife—it was the President.

And yet, amid the din of war, he heard a plaintive cry
Of that poor soldier, as he lay in prison, doomed to die.

'Twas morning. On a tented field, and through the heated haze,
Flashed back, from lines of burnished arms, the sunlight's golden blaze,

The most noble of Presidents—Lincoln—revokes the death warrant

A youth—led out to die, and yet, it was not death, but shame
That smote his gallant heart with dread and shook his manly frame.

He slowly raised his head and saw,
Twelve comrades, sternly set apart to execute the law.
Then suddenly was heard the noise of steeds and wheels approach,
And rolling through a cloud of dust, appeared a stately coach.
The pardoned soldier understood the tones of jubilee,
And, bounding from his fetters, blessed the hand that made him free.

'Twas Spring. Though all combined to cheer a sylvan solitude,
Two threatening armies, face to face,
in fierce defiance stood.
A sudden shock which shook the earth,
'mid vapor dense and dun
Proclaimed, along the echoing hills, the conflict had begun.

The fallen: And of the first who fell in that unequal strife,
Was he whom Mercy sped to save when Justice claimed his life.
And in his last expiring breath, a prayer to heaven was sent,
That God, with his unfailing grace, would bless the President.

After peace was declared the generals of the opposing forces are summoned before Lincoln.

He rolls the two flags together and unrolls them as one, and North and South clasp hands.

"The Broken Doll" (Biograph).—The usual thing, but dished up with a dainty flavoring and artistic touches that whets the appetite for more of the same kind. Who would imagine that a film bearing such an innocent title would contain all the glamor of the wildest West, with bloodthirsty redskin bucks, dusky squaws, war dances, murder and pillage? It is all there to thrill the gallery gods; but—unusual thing—through it all runs a thread of human sympathy, delineated by the cleverest of child actresses and appealing to the sentiments of the most intelligent audience. The story is strong in its simplicity and has been handled with great dramatic power. It tells of a frontier settlement that was saved from annihilation by the gift of a doll which won the affection of an Indian child. Resenting the ill-treatment she receives from the members of the tribe, the Indian child warns her friends in time of a hostile attack. She is mortally wounded by a stray shot during the conflict and as she lies down to die beside the grave she had prepared for the doll which had been destroyed by a cruel Indian, one cannot restrain a feeling of exultation that she has passed beyond the cruel life she was compelled to lead. All through the piece the acting is convincing and the realism of some of the scenes is impressive. It is a film which will please any audience.

"The Chuncho Indians" (Edison).—An excellent picture of such little known country and people that it has all the charm of novelty, while conveying information in a very emphatic way. The picture is one of the South American group and is quite as good in every way as any that has gone before. The Chuncho Indians were formerly the most savage of all the known South American tribes, and inhabited the Parene valley in Peru. But in recent years, by a careful process of training, they have become civilized and are now cultivating coffee plantations and doing other useful work. All this is shown in the picture, together with picturesque scenery and beautiful vistas which have been seen by but few white men. Then an Indian's home is shown, with all the curious utensils about it. Altogether it is an acceptable educational picture, deserving careful study as the audience has opportunity.

"The Stolen Father" (Edison).—Here is a story that is out of the ordinary. It is not the usual thing by any means, and if one can see it without wanting to see it over again he must be of a certainty lacking in discernment. It is common enough to see children stolen, but the novelty of actually stealing a father is so great that one's interest is aroused. The little girl who nurses the sick man back to life is worthy of more than passing notice. And then comes the mental struggle, in which her goodness triumphs and she writes the letter to the old man's friends which will probably cut her off from her new found friend and force her back into the fruitless search for work. But events do not shape themselves that way and the little girl is accepted as one of the family and away in the dim future the wedding bells are faintly chiming. The picture is so much better than the hackneyed subjects, the acting is so sympathetic and withal so natural, that one feels constrained to place this film well in the forefront of the series for the week. It proves conclusively that originality and good treatment of worthy subjects is possible and that the motion picture can become the charming photoplay it should be.

"On Her Doorstep" (Vitagraph).—A novel and graphic representation of a lover's quarrel. It all began over his attempt to assert his authority and tell her she couldn't smoke a cigarette. Then she gets real mad and gives back the engagement ring among other interesting things. He conquers by sitting down on her doorstep and staying there until she succumbs, invites him in and apologizes. It was a tough vigil, and in the rain, too; but he stayed on the job and was eventually winner in the unique contest. It is a good comedy and illustrates the oft-repeated assertions that good subjects are not exhausted. There are many others yet.

"A Cowboy's Mother-in-Law" (Essanay).—A good comedy which may contain a hint for other unfortunate wives who suffer from neglect. Where no real mother-in-law is available a made up one will do, and if the cure is effectual what difference does it make about the fake? The funny part is where the supposed mother-in-law makes the husband perform all sorts of stunts in the kitchen. There is almost a dangerous clash when the duped husband learns the true state of affairs, but he isn't quite quick enough and can't do what he would like. The film ends with the assurance that they probably lived happy ever afterward as the result of the husband's agreement. The picture is lively and never fails to make a favorable impression upon the audience.

"The Romance of a Necklace" (Gaumont).—In this picture are presented the most striking incidents in the life of Benvenuto Cellini, a sculptor, whose principal work, "Persee," is a masterpiece. The romance affects the daughter of a count of that time, who has other ideas for the girl. But through a series of vicissitudes the artist succeeds in winning the favor of Pope Clement V. and escapes the machinations of his enemies, instigated by the former lover of the girl, and their union is finally blessed by the Pope himself. This brief description does not do justice to the elaborate picture. Staged with skill and a thorough appreciation of those times, the film becomes not only interesting as a drama, but is a valuable teacher of history. Undoubtedly it is a faithful reproduction of the life of the times, since intrigue, murder and the tramp of marching men occupied the principal part of the attention of the men of the time. The acting is quite in keeping with the subject, and the photography has reproduced with much fidelity the excellencies of the staging.

"Werther" (Pathe).—A tragedy such as might come into the life of any man. Perhaps not all would commit suicide; yet in this instance suicide seems to be the only thing left for Werther to do after he discovers that his great love can never be reciprocated. Accordingly, he sends for pistols and probably goes upon the long journey from which there is no return. The film is tragic, as has been said, but the staging reaches a condition of perfection not always touched in these films, and the acting is in sympathy. The result is a finished picture which touches dramatic heights in its simplicity not often reached in the photoplay. Those who appreciate the highest type of acting and understand those subtleties which go to make up a dramatic picture of unusual power will accept this as one of the best pictures of the week. The writer is disposed to call it the best, but that is a personal opinion which may or may not be sustained by the opinion of others. It is out of the usual run, and for that reason deserves careful consideration from audiences wherever it is shown.

"Aeroplanes in Flight and Construction" (Pathe).—Many pictures of aeroplanes in flight have been given, but this is the first in which the building of flying machines has been illustrated. The picture reproduces the construction of the machines, and does it so clearly that the various processes can be understood, even by those not familiar with the building of machinery. And after watching the machine built the audience is treated to another unique exhibition, seeing it taken to pieces and packed in four trunks ready for transportation. This in turn is followed by a flying exhibition in which the aviators perform some interesting and startling feats for the delectation of the crowds.

"The Aviation Craze" (Pathe).—This might with truth be called the stunts of a crazy airship. It would be quite impossible to describe all the things the machine does. But it can be said with exact truth that seldom does a film produce such hearty laughter in New York audiences. Generally New Yorkers look on with much stolidity while the funniest things are being done, but in this instance they laughed as heartily as the unsophisticated country audiences. This is an achievement of which the producer may well feel proud.

"The Legacy" (Vitagraph).—A very human story, purporting to detail the experiences of an old couple who suddenly fall heir to a town house on Fifth avenue. The unsophisticated way in which the old people look at things and the strangeness of it all will appeal strongly to anyone whose heart beats responsive to the real comforts which are to be found in the simple life. It is all shown so life-like and seems so real that it is difficult to believe that it is only a picture. The way the old people escape from the grandeur has its human side, and one wonders if those who occupy these stately mansions, waited upon by people hired with

AMERICAN FILMS

Unquestionably the Best Films on the Independent Market!

We have shown our films to every Independent renter and exchange man in the United States and Canada.

Their opinion of our product is that it is equal, if not superior, to anything the Independent market affords.

All Independent exchanges will therefore purchase our first releases.

Release Days: Wednesday and Saturday

First Release Wednesday, November 2nd

"Romantic Redskins"

An Indian comedy-drama. Perfect photography. Perfect story. Perfect production.

Second Release Saturday, November 5th

"The Lure of the City"

A drama of intense heart-interest. A film that will take your audience by storm. Perfect photography. Perfect story.

Two Hundred Dollars in Cash Prizes to the Patrons of Your Show who View these Films—Write the Contest Editor.

Get our first two releases—note what an experienced organization means in the manufacture of Moving Pictures.

AMERICAN FILM FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Made by

THE AMERICAN FILM MANFG. CO.

BANK FLOOR, ASHLAND BLOCK : : : CHICAGO, ILLS.

P. S. Our Films are sold through the Distributing and Sales Company money, but wholly without emotion, are really living. Almost involuntarily one goes back to the old home with the old people and enters with them into its pleasures, and perhaps its sorrows. The little old farm house, with its simple furnishings and its homely surroundings, may house more of the realities of life than all the stately mansions along the avenue of the wealthy.

"A Lucky Toothache" (Biograph).—A good bit of comedy, but it is to be feared that should the toothache cure here indicated become general all men would turn dentists. Who was the lucky one, aside from Tom, the butt of everybody's jokes, no one seems able to determine. Anyhow the toothache stopped. Tom succeeded in implanting a resounding smack where you can see for yourself it did the most good, since the pain ceased and the sufferer made things jingle for a few minutes. And now the bells will shortly ring, proving conclusively that a girl seldom actually kills a man who has the effrontery to kiss her. Perhaps she considers another method of getting revenge more effective, and the punishment, if it is a punishment, longer continued.

"The Masher" (Biograph).—Here is a mixed comedy, illustrating the misfortunes of Hiram, who is taken for a masher, and through a long series of misapprehensions appearances are decidedly against him. He is arrested and locked up, and even his wife won't believe a word he says. He is, therefore, left to his fate, the really innocent suffering for the guilty. Well might poor Hiram declare that it is tough to have the name without enjoying any of the game.

"Liz's Career" (Lubin).—A novel conception well carried out. To have a country girl appear on the stage at an amateur night and be so exquisitely bad that she seems really good is a conceit that makes a good picture. Anyhow, Liz fools them for two months and is all the rage. Then she goes home and successfully raises the mortgage when the good deacon comes in his Christianlike spirit to foreclose. She also escapes being the third Mrs. Slocum, an alternative not altogether pleasant to contemplate. The picture is funny. It is a study in losing jobs, for instance. It would puzzle one to lose them any faster. But the denouement is such a surprise that the unpleasant things attending the opening are easily forgotten.

"Out for Mischief" (Melies).—One more story of two kids who start out to liven things up a bit, and with paint and brush infuse a bit of color into otherwise dull surroundings. If you can conceive all the pranks you ever undertook you can form some idea of what these youngsters do.

"In the Golden Harvest Time" (Selig).—Young men have a habit of becoming infatuated with dancers and actresses, in motion pictures at least, and this excellent film presents one more instance of this malady. But happily the man's eyes are opened early and he returns, repentant, begging the forgiveness of his old sweetheart, which of course is granted, and the mellow chime of bells can be heard in the distance. The setting for this picture is attractive. It is the golden harvest time, and the scenes are reproduced with fidelity. The pictures alone, without considering the story, are worth seeing. The two together make a combination which it would be difficult to surpass. While the story emphasizes the folly of some young men, as it offers this heart interest, it is not particularly strong, merely carrying one from place to place on its thin thread.

"Hearts and Politics" (Lubin).—With battles for supremacy at the ballot box going on almost everywhere a picture of this sort should be popular. Here is an instance where reform is nearly defeated by means of a woman who almost induces the leader to withdraw from politics, leaving the way clear for his rivals. The girl's oversight, in writing a note to the boss on a pad with a carbon sheet in it is responsible for the failure of the plan. This incident is new. A blotter was used not long ago to prove a marriage, but this carbon duplication is very new and very modern, but the way it is handled makes it an important feature of the play. And, of course, that disturbs the course of love which was going so smoothly. The leader does not withdraw and reform wins. While, perhaps, no incident ever occured exactly like this there are many political games which are quite as subtle and quite as effective as this love affair promised to be. This picture should be popular between now and election. It should be illuminating to both sides in the contests wherever they may be and whatever the contest may be about.

"One on Max" (Pathe)—A comedy which offers a novel situation in sending a young man to see his girl with roller skates on. Of course all sorts of comical and disturbing things happen to him on the way, and after he arrives. But the skates are fastened to his shoes and it is difficult to prescribe a remedy until some genius suggests that the shoes be removed. Happy thought which solves the difficult problem without further complications. Puerile comedy, but it evoked laughter.

"Jinks Wants to be an Acrobat" (Pathe).—An ambition of this character may be reasonable enough under ordinary circumstances, but when the would-be actor practices in the street to the detriment of everything within his reach it produces a series of amusing complications. The smashes that Jinks causes in performing his acrobatic feats create no end of merriment, as this sort of thing always does. Unquestionably the audiences occasionally enjoy a mix-up like this.

"The Foreman" (Selig).—A Western ranch picture of excellence, like all the ranch pictures that have come from the Selig studio. A new foreman wrongly accused and arrested escapes and with the aid of a girl succeeds in establishing his innocence and recovers the stolen money. The strength of this firm's ranch pictures lies in the fact that they reproduce what appear to be homely and actual scenes. They do not appear as though they were posed especially for the occasion. The stories work out as though the scenes were actually transpiring before the audience and so graphically are they presented that the spectator seems to have a part in whatever is taking place as an interested party. Acting and photography are alike beyond criticism, contributing their share toward producing an excellent picture.

"The Copper and the Crook" (Yankee).—To any one who knows New York this picture comes almost as a benediction. New York with its gangs, its hazing of new cops, the chases, the rough work and scores of other features that actually abound in New York's everyday life. It is all here, presented with an intelligence and sympathy which mark it as a production out of the ordinary. Not all ex-convicts get a chance like this one, but it makes men better to see something of this sort and it is a valuable suggestion. More ex-convicts could be helped in the same substantial way. And the cop. He is worth studying. He comes up from the life of that great, teeming East Side, one of the young fellows who have made modern New York. He makes the most of his opportunities and while his desire is an appointment to the police force he is typical of thousands of others who have done quite different things well. The entire picture is well worth seeing, and if one sees it with something of what it means in mind it will be all the more attractive. It is an intensely interesting human document.

"Grandmother's Plot" (Gaumont).—A pastoral which tells a pretty love story in a gentle way and shows how a grandmother intervened and saved the young lovers from lifelong regrets and sadness. The little girl, under the direction of the wise grandmother, who remembers her own youth, falls ill. The doctor, who has been instructed by the grandmother, recommends a prescription that will cure her; and the objecting father acquiesces with what grace he can summon. It is a pretty picture, with a bucolic setting and of excellent photographic quality, pleasing in all its details.

"Phantom Ride from Aix-les-Bains" (Gaumont).—A travelogue, taking the audience from Aix-les-Bains to Mount Revard. Some of the scenery is of remarkable stereoscopic quality, particularly the snow-clad hills. The film gives views of some of the loveliest points in Savoy. In the distance are glimpses of Aix-les-Bains and Lake du Borget, both familiar to very many American tourists. One has only commendation for the film. The photographic quality is as good as one sees in outdoor films and the operator selected his view points with unusual appreciation of the picturesque features of the scenery.

"Auld Robin Gray" (Vitagraph).—Beautifully adapted from the Scotch poem, and putting on the screen a simple love story which has charmed the hearts of thousands. Poor Jenny, believing her Jamie lost, yields to importunities and marries Auld Robin, only to have Jamie return to claim her. The parting scene between the two young people is dramatic in its simplicity. Moreover, the picture teaches a salutary lesson in these times of considering the marriage vow lightly. Though her heart goes with Jamie, Jennie sends him away with a last kiss, declaring that Auld Robin is a good man and she will try to be a good wife to him. Unfaithfulness to the point of separation is such a curse of modern life that this picture, emphasizing the virtue of constancy, even under circumstances which might appear to justify faithlessness, seems almost like transition to a different world. The Vitagraph Company has acted it with sympathy and the operator has secured excellent photographic quality. The picture will arouse the emotions and lead one to consider. The company deserves commendation for the excellence of the interpretation.

"Hank and Lank" (Essanay).—Once more the favorites appear, this time they haven't eaten as heartily as they might wish for a considerable time, consequently anything

Real Music That Really Fits the Picture

"MOTION PICTURE PIANO MUSIC"

FIFTY CENTS A COPY.

A Piano Book that contains descriptive Music to fit all probable Scenes, Actions, Characters, etc., shown in Moving Pictures. Composed and compiled by a Professional Pianist of twenty years' experience in Theatrical lines. Brimfull of practical suggestions for the inexperienced Pianist in a M. P. Theater. Descriptive Circular sent free upon request. Book will be sent promptly upon receipt of fifty cents. Address,

FRELINGER MUSIC COMPANY

LAFAYETTE, IND.

Drums, Traps, and all Moving Picture Show Effects

Our New Beautifully Illustrated Catalogue now ready and will be sent free to any address upon request.

LOUIS B. MALECKI & CO.

272 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.

The Pedal of the Hour

This latest invention eliminates all pedal worries. Produces natural arm struck tone. Ease of action phenomenal. Constructed entirely of metal. Strong and durable. Folds in space 9½ x 3½. Weight only 35 oz. Just the thing for vaudeville. Keep in touch with progress. Write for complete description and testimonials. We have everything you need for your line. We supply Chicago's leading picture houses with drums and effects.

LUDWIG & LUDWIG

134 E. Van Buren St., Room 610, Chicago, Ill.

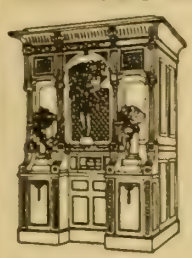
Xylophones, Orchestra Bells, Chimes, Forks, etc. Send for free illustrated catalogue.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

WURLITZER

Automatic Musical Instruments



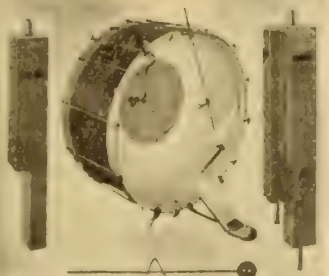
They do the work of expert musicians and reduce your operating expenses.

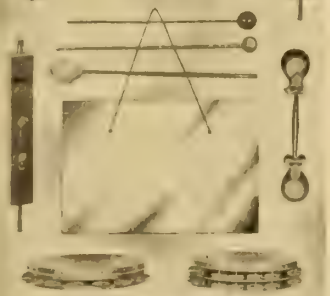
Wurlitzer is the world's largest manufacturer. We supply the U. S. Government with musical instruments. Write for big, new 84-page catalogue showing the only complete line of self-players, from a small electric piano to an automatic orchestra representing 35 musicians. Easy time payments.

Concert Pianorchestra.

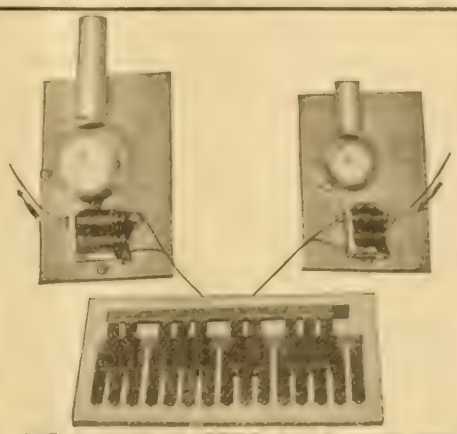
The RUDOLPH WURLITZER CO.

CINCINNATI, 117 to 121 E. 4th; NEW YORK, 25 & 27 W. 32d (bet. B'way & 5th Ave.); CHICAGO, 266 & 268 Wabash Ave., PHILADELPHIA, 1835 Chesnut; ST. LOUIS, 912 Pine; CLEVELAND, 206 Prospect Ave., S. E.; COLUMBUS, O., 57 E. Main.





WURLITZER



OUR PATENT ELECTRIC BELLS create great enthusiasm in Moving Picture Houses, play from a keyboard as a solo instrument, or as an accompaniment to songs. Twenty-five Bells, two octaves chromatic, including resonators, magnets and keyboard, $75.00.

J. C. DEAGAN

3800-3810 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Moving Picture Pianists

Are you "working up" your pictures? If not, why not? If so, you want some good melodramatic music. Send for free sample page of "Orpheum Collection of Moving Picture Music." Now being used and praised by many of the best houses in the country.

PRICE.....75 CENTS

Also latest cue music (series 1910) for 10 parts and piano.....$1.00

¼ discount on both numbers.

Clarence E. Sinn

1501 Sedgwick St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Sound Effects

In Picture Machine Theaters it is very essential that the imitations and sound effects are of the kind that can be depended upon. We make only practical and serviceable imitations that will give the exact reproduction of the original. We also manufacture Chimes, Tympani, Bells, Xylophones, Drums and accessories.

LEEDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

1055 E. Palmer St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

TO TRAP DRUMMERS

A Limited Time Offer

Special Offer $10.00 — Size Shell 8 x 14, Size Shell 8 x 15

Solid Maple, Rosewood or Walnut, 10 fine plated thumb screw rods, Kangaroo, Angora or Slunk Calf Drum Heads.

We ship with privilege of 6 days trial

E. P. ZEIDLER DRUM CO.

Dept. F. Cleveland, Ohio

Send for my large free catalogue of Folding and Parlor Organs, suitable for use in Moving Picture Theatres.

Address

J. C. KAY

4036 Ellis Avenue, Chicago

that indicates the presence of a meal is scrutinized with care. When they discover that the Summerford residence is closed they begin immediate investigations with a view to visiting the larder, where, perchance, the family have left something. Their efforts are rewarded with a steak and some desirable accompaniments. But they did not understand the operation of the stove and their attempts in this direction result in huge volumes of smoke which pour from the kitchen. The fire department is summoned and Hank and Lank get thoroughly washed once in their lives. After the deluge is over they ruefully gather up the remnants of their meal and depart, wetter, if not wiser. The humor in this picture cannot be described. It is in the action and the facial expression of the comedians and is of the character which precludes description. It must be seen to be understood and appreciated.

"Hiring a Gem" (Essanay).—A lively comedy based upon the current belief regarding the difficulty of keeping a cook. Younghusband succeeds in showing how smart he isn't, and to save him from disgrace at home he induces a friend to make up as a cook and go home with him. Then the fun begins, and before it is over Younghusband gets what is coming to him and the friend is nearly burned up. There isn't anything new in the piece, but the action is lively and the situations contain considerable humor of a rather rough sort. Of course this type of picture has its friends and the average audience will be apparently pleased with it, still they do not receive the applause which they formerly did. The humor in these films is scarcely the kind that takes best nowadays. The taste of audiences is changing and they appreciate humor which has less horseplay in its development.

"The Tyranny of the Dark" (Kalem).—A love story which has as its climax a scene in which a sister, blinded by an explosion of acid, learns that her fiance has fallen in love with her younger sister and renounces him, giving place to the younger one. Perhaps the film is stronger in its suggestion than it is in what it actually represents.

"Outwitted" (Pathe).—A drama by the American company of this house. It is the story of a foreman who is in love with his employer's daughter and has a very dangerous rival. The foreman has occasion to knock down the scoundrel for making undue advances to the girl and after that it is open war. Robbery is attempted, but is foiled by the girl and the outlaw band escapes, but the ringleader receives a drubbing which he is likely to remember indefinitely. There is life and animation about the picture, yet it is decidedly melodramatic in its tendencies. The fact that sin is punished and virtue rewarded is sufficient, perhaps, to justify its existence, but it must be confessed that it is not quite what might reasonably be expected from the Pathe house. The acting is good, but the actors have little opportunity. The technical work is clear, yet it is better than the subject which it develops.

"Around Pekin" (Pathe).—An excellent scenic production, giving a good impression of the city of Pekin. The views include the great wall of China, together with views of caravans, views inside the city, showing its swarming life and the type of its buildings and inhabitants, and the impressive ceremonies at the funeral of a mandarin. Sometimes one almost feels as though the scenes were actually transpiring before one and that impression is true of this picture. One acquires a clear idea of what the city of Pekin is like from seeing this film.

"In the Shadow of the Night" (Urban-Eclipse).—A story which teaches a strong lesson of kindness. It represents a little fellow stealing a purse to give to a poor child whose poverty had excited his charitable impulses. But, unfortunately, the poor family are arrested upon proof that they stole it and were it not for the manly confession of the real culprit, would go to prison. The father is touched by his son's lesson in kindness and sees that the basketmakers are relieved. Fortunately there is human interest enough in the film to keep it from being dull, otherwise the lesson it teaches might be lost.

"Tunny Fishing Off Palermo, Italy" (Urban-Eclipse).—Since the times of the Phoenicians the tunny fisheries of the Mediterranean have been important industrial features. The best fish now come from the north coast of Sicily and the picture represents the tunny fishery as it is conducted to-day. It is an interesting addition to the industrial films and illustrates a pursuit which is not generally known outside the country where it is followed. Considering the difficult character of the subject this is a good picture and is clearly a triumph for the operator who made it.

INDEPENDENT.

"Mother and Child" (Imp).—Domestic difficulties in which elopements form a conspicuous feature are not altogether alluring, unless they present some unusual feature which this one does not do. When a mother goes away like that, leaving sorrow behind her, why reproduce it on the screen? Probably the producer would say that such a picture will act as a warning against such things. But it is to be feared that it will do nothing of the sort, and when such griefs are exploited, excepting when the scenes possess unusual dramatic features, they are scarcely worth presenting to the public.

"The Prayer of a Miner's Child" (Bison).—The prayer of a little boy, heard by the sheriff, secures the release of a father arrested for appropriating a horse to get a doctor for his badly injured little girl. The principal interest is in the acting of the children. The picture has a Western setting.

"The Mad Lady of Chester" (Cines).—Not a particularly attractive story, though based upon an interesting complication. However, the ending is good, even though the fire caused serious injuries to the unfortunate squire from which he will never recover. Whether it is natural that a young woman should marry an old man under such circumstances is a question which perhaps need not be considered.

"Delightful Dolly" (Thanhouser).—A picture that will please the little folks. It details the adventures of a little girl who acts the part of a doll. And she does it so well that she deceives even the little girl who supposed she had a new doll. The result is that she is rewarded with the gift of the big dolly she coveted.

"Tracked Across the Sea" (Columbia).—A story of blood-stirring adventure, with sufficient romance to add heart interest and enough self-sacrifice to indicate humanity. The scenery will charm with its excellence, and the photographer has performed his part with discretion. While the subject is considerably different from previous releases by this company, it is not too much to say that it has maintained its former reputation and has produced a picture that should be popular with those who like action and real life in their pictures.

"The Storms of Life" (Great Northern).—A strongly dramatic picture, containing a love story which appeals straight to the heart, and one's sympathies unconsciously go out to the pretty heroine. The story is realistic, in some places too much so to be comfortable. The acting is in sympathy with the subject and the photographer has done his part well. The combination has produced a picture which will unquestionably prove its value by its popularity.

"Saved by Bosco" (Great Northern).—Here is a story which will interest largely because of the intelligence displayed by a dog. The work of animals in a motion picture is always interesting and this one seems to be especially well trained. Such intelligent action on the part of an animal will often please more than the acting of men and women. The effect in this instance is all that the producers could expect.

"Willie Visits a Moving Picture Show" (Great Northern).—A lively comedy representing Willie at a moving picture show, a henpecked husband, and—well, why go into details further? One's imagination will be quite as accurate a guide in determining what happened as long descriptions would. The curtain may, therefore, be drawn, leaving Willie to his enjoyment and the henpecked husband to his troubles. These hints are enough for the present.

"A Woman's Wit" (Powers).—One more girl is captured by bandits and carried away to their rendezvous. She is quick-witted enough to escape by bringing her lover and the sheriff to the cave through sending her horse with a message. Just why bandits should permit a prisoner to perform such an interesting operation isn't entirely clear. But according to the picture it is done, and the bandits are captured and the girl restored to her lover. The reasons why pictures of this type belong to the past have been pointed out before. We cannot have too few films which depend upon abducting girls for their interest.

"The Tale a Camera Told" (Defender).—A snappy comedy, telling the story of a young man who marries and seeks in vain his father's blessing. But the young woman in the case has been a college widow, and she not only succeeds in inveigling the old man into buying books, but also induces some flirtatious actions which registered by a faithful Kodak result in the old gentleman's capitulation. There is no great strength of drama and no important novelty exhibited in the setting; but the picture is acted with an abandon and enthusiasm which makes it attractive and develops much interest before it closes for these reasons. There is life and action, and these please, even if the story told is not particularly heavy or complicated

"The Garden of Fate" (Imp).—An elaborate picture dealing with the human desire for fame, love and, what comes last of all death. Each in turn is presented to a sculptor by Time, but only death is permanent. The others flee away, wrecked by an enemy. One easily falls into a reverie when looking at this picture, and more than the author intended can be seen in it. Each individual sees himself, his hopes, his ambitions; and his purposes are all reproduced and one after another fades. Probably everyone realizes that only death is sure, and when Time presents that flower the end is near. There may be faults in this picture, but its conception is such a faithful reproduction of what occurs in each person's life in one way or another that its reality prevents for a time any criticism one might offer. This picture deserves a better fate than to be given the flower of death at the end of the first day.

"Bill and the Missing Key" (Lux).—The harrowing experiences of a young man who has his key put down his back to stop a troublesome nosebleed. All his troubles come from this, and after sundry difficulties and numerous forcible ejectments he lands in a cell where he is shortly joined by the friend who put the key down his back. Well, the key is found, explanations follow, and, misfortune still determined to pursue him, he is thrown out of the cell by the disgusted officers. It would be difficult to imagine a more cruel fate. To be thrown out of everything, even a prison cell, is an experience which would be sufficient to discourage the most persistent rounder.

"Runaway Star" (Lux).—The riotous escapade of an actor. The funny part is the long chase he leads them through the familiar streets of Paris, where he encounters all sorts of things in his mad career in a chariot, but is eventually captured and fined for his foolishness.

"The Lure of Gold" Bison).—Unquestionably the lure of gold has caused the wreck of more than one man's reason. And when the situation is intensified by the actions of a fickle girl it is all the more interesting.

"Sleepy Jones" (Powers).—This is presented as a comedy, but in places it approaches perilously near tragedy. Sleepy distinguishes himself at the start by being unsufferably sleepy and lazy, but at last he shakes off his lethargy and develops an alertness that saves the husband of his old-time sweetheart from being a party to a robbery. Perhaps the comedy is where the wife bangs Sleepy over the head with a rolling pin, or some equally murderous weapon, because he whips her husband for abusing her. But in the end everybody apologizes to everybody else and apparently they all live happy ever after.

"The Devil" (Powers).—Here is a comedy that is a live wire. It involves the experiences of a gentleman who goes to a masquerade ball dressed as his Satanic majesty. He gets rather too much of the cup that does something besides cheer, gets into an automobile and the fun begins. His sudden appearance in altogether unexpected places creates consternation, and practically everyone who encounters him labors under the impression, intensified perhaps by a guilty conscience, that the real thing has happened to him. The funniest of all is the German woman fainting away and then lambasting her innocent husband under the impression that he has perpetrated a joke upon her.

"Oh, What a Knight" (Thanhouser).—Here is a romantic girl determined to have a genuine knight, like the mighty and valorous men of old, to come and carry her away from her prison in the gloomy old castle. She dreams it all out, but when they attempt to carry out the same scheme in the present workaday world their plans go awry and they discover that knights of old are as foreign to this age as they can well be, and she is forced, by the very perversity of things mundane, to accept her lover in quite the conventional way. As a travesty upon useless romance this film is a great success.

"Tweedledum's Sleeping Sickness" (Ambrosio).—A comedy which presents this favorite comedian in a new role and one which has elements of humor different from any he has hitherto essayed. He has a bad case of this malady, there is no question of this fact, but perhaps what happened to him will be a warning to others who may be similarly afflicted. Anyhow, his adventures are quite worth seeing.

"Excursion on the Chain of Mt. Blanc" (Ambrosio).—A picture which presents some thrilling sights not acted in the dramatic world. There are, too, many beautiful outdoor views which reproduce faithfully the scenery which predominates in that vicinity. The picture has been made with care, the selection of the view points developing some extremely interesting features, well worth seeing. In some respects it is as good as anything of this sort which has been attempted. To adequately present such pictures requires more ability in the selection of proper view points than many operators seem to possess. Unless a mountain, for example, is represented large upon the screen it loses its effect as a mountain. Not all operators understand that, but when they do, the scenery which is supposed to mean mountains of height are adequately represented and an accurate impression is conveyed.

"The Cat Came Back" (Atlas).—Here is a travesty upon the usual Nick Carter type of detective story which is lively and will make your audience wonder until the denouement unfolds the real explanation. It is nothing out of the ordinary to lose a bracelet. Cats have before been known to devour hamburger and other edibles left within reach. Further, cats have often been deposited in a bag and the aforesaid bag sunk in the deep water. Cats, too, have come back from such watery graves, but never before, probably, has a girl detective rescued a cat from drowning and found securely fastened around its neck the missing bracelet. There is a detective story that is different, yet perhaps it possesses quite as much common sense as those others which develop so many strange and altogether impossible mysteries. The tramp got away. The cat got back, and also got the rest of the hamburger. The cook got back her temper. Mrs. Brown got her bracelet. The amateur detective got her reward, and Baby Brown, who put the bracelet around the cat's neck, got—well, never mind what. He wasn't forgotten in the general distribution of favors.

"Imperfect Perfectos" (Atlas).—An imperfect perfecto is here represented that offers numerous comical situations, each one of which is certain to develop a laugh. It is one of the travesties which the Atlas people are offering regularly and succeeds admirably in its purpose to make the audience laugh.

"Stolen by the Indians" (Champion).—Another in the long list of Indian subjects which have recently come from the different studios. The usual story is reversed in this, however, since a white man is found as a chief and the call of the blood finally induces him to return to his people. There is a love story running through it, but it doesn't concern the boy stolen by the Indians, which is somewhat different from the usual thing. There are some interesting scenes, like the prairie schooner on its way and the Indian attack. Once both were common. Now they have passed away forever. Perhaps these producers are performing a service greater than is realized in putting these scenes in permanent form where they can be seen for many years to come. They cannot be seen any more on the plains. Sometimes one becomes rather tired of the great number of such pictures which are pouring from the studios, but if each one presents some feature which none other has shown it will contain something that will make its production well worth while. These phases of life are fast disappearing, or have entirely disappeared. To reproduce them is to put in permanent form for the instruction of future generations something which can never exist again.

"The Boys of Topsy-Turvy Ranch" (Nestor).—Any firm can be forgiven if it serves up a worn subject in such lively and altogether tempting fashion. The theme is the cookery on a ranch. It is rather rough on the unfortunate Chinaman who got too much salt in the soup, but it was worse upon the graduate of the cooking school who failed to make good. But through a succession of mistakes the cowboys lose the excellent repast they bought from the restaurant and later the Chinaman gets a share, as well as the tramps, upon whom the boys had foisted the cooking school results. There is fun enough in this, though of a rather boisterous type, to last indefinitely, yet the firm is to be congratulated upon succeeding in discovering something outside the ordinary run of affairs upon which to regale the audience.

THE MOVING PICTURE AS A FACTOR IN LAND DEVELOPMENT.

Picture Lectures a Big Feature at the Pittsburg Land Show. By Sydney Wise.

Moving pictures will form one of the big features of the National Land and Irrigation Exposition now being held at Duquesne Garden in Pittsburg and the projecting machine will prove one of the most important factors in the show. The Land Show has as its object the commendable effort of stimulating the "Back to the Soil" movement and will bring to the farmer, the homeseeker and investor authentic information concerning land openings and development and will give educational knowledge to the student and the layman regarding the wonderful progress now being made in the development and colonization of the vast tracts of re-

